

Digitized by the Internet Archive in 2023 with funding from Kahle/Austin Foundation

AMERICA

A·CATHOLIC·REVIEW·OF·THE·WEEK

---

VOLUME SIX

1912

FROM OCTOBER 14, 1911, TO APRIL 6, 1912, INCLUSIVE

---

NEW YORK

THE AMERICA PRESS

COPYRIGHT, 1912.

INDEX

VOLUME VI—OCTOBER 14, 1911, TO APRIL 6, 1912, INCLUSIVE

	PAGE
ABBEY's "Holy Grail" (Ed.)	591
Abyssinia's Partition	57
Aid Society for Missouri Penal Institutions.	215
Albania: Cholera in	4
Allen Outrage, The	592
Algué, Tribute to Father	352
Amaryllis for Show	618
American Policy in China's Crisis	433
Americans Warned in Mexico	505
Anglican Church Congress	105
Anti-Clerical Pamphlet Condemned in Canada	264
Appeal to the Pocketbook. (Ed.)	615
Argentina's Catholic Press. (Ed.)	353
Argentina's Misiones	503
Arizona and Lincoln's Birthday (Ed.)	447
Arnold, Miss Ethel M.	596
Art Ecclesiastical	23
Ashurst, Senator Henry F.	431
Asiatic Mission Aid	238
Australian Catholic Federation	455
Austria: Chronicle, 4, 28; 76; 100; 148; 196; 220; 244; 268; 298; 316; 364; 412; 436; 460; 484; 532; 580; 604; Eucharistic Con- gress at Vienna, 440; Resolutions of (Ed.), 16; Innsbrück's New Theologate	139
Aviators Killed	50
"Ayscough, John"	595

BACON, Ambassador, Resigns.....	337
Balm for Easy Consciences.....	131
Baltimore Secures Democratic Convention.....	237
Baptists and Russians. (Ed.).....	255
Barroso, Bishop.....	200
Bavaria: Chronicle,.....	172; 436; 508
Bavarian Elections.....	436
Beaumont College, Golden Jubilee.....	96
Beef Packers' Trial.....	365
Beirut.....	150
Belfield Reproved. (Ed.).....	185
Belgium: Chronicle, 243; 296; 316; 339; 363; 412; 435; 508; 532; 580; Catholic Scientists Honored, 420; Catholicity in Danger.....	576
Belgium's Crisis (Ed.), 398; Political Condi- tions, 366; Economic Progress.....	454
Bennett, Arnold.....	139
Bibles in Mexico.....	560
Biblical Institute Housed.....	575
Billot, Cardinal.....	142
Biron, The Hotel.....	127
Bisleti, Cardinal.....	167
Bonzano, Mgr. made Apostolic Delegate to U. S., 409; 422; Consecrated.....	551
Books, Immoral. (Ed.).....	198
"Bourgeoisie Convention." (Ed.).....	447
Bourne, Cardinal, 167; Return of (Ed.).....	448
Brann, Dr. H. A., on Newspapers. (Ed.).....	617
Brébeuf and Viel, Memorial to.....	239
Breviary Changes. (Ed.).....	329
Burrowes, Rev. Alexander J., S.J.....	455
Butt, Isaac, Catholic Practices of.....	20

C AMPBELL, Rev. R. J., Impressions of America	498
Canada: Chronicle, 2; 26; 50; 74; 98; 122; 146; 170; 194; 218; 242; 266; 292; 314; 338; 362; 386; 410; 434; 458; 482; 506; 530; 555; 578; 602; Brébeuf Memorial, 239; Com- mercial Conditions, 118; Grain Growers, 527; Protest Against Marriage Law, 39; Re- action of Boom, 94; Presence of Catholics on Mackenzie River	275
Canadian Campaign Documents. (Ed.)	64
Capital Punishment	413
Cardinalate, The	101; 238
Cardinals' Investiture, The New	201
Cardinals, The New	73; 97; 191; 193
Cardinals, Harper's Weekly on	611
Cardinal's Qualifications, A. (Ed.)	526
Cardinals, Sacred College of	173; 199; 235
Carroll's, Archbishop, Statue at Georgetown	420
Catholic Art Treasures. (Ed.)	520
Catholic Colonization Society	530
Catholic Indian Missions in Need	360
Catholic Missionaries in China	479
Catholic Oxford and Cambridge	360
Catholic Oasis in the Coal Fields	607
Catholic Press, 205; in Argentina (Ed.)	363
Catholic Social Work in Spain	511
Catholic Bible for the Blind	551
Catholic Statistics in England, 503; in Great Britain, 562; of the United States	623
"Catholic Youth"	525
Catholicism in Dutch Colonies, 563; in the In- dies	467

Catholicity and Citizenship (Ed.), 38; in Turkey. (Ed.)	377
Catholic University of America (Ed.), 520; Receives $50,000	167
Catholic Writers and Reviewers	244
Catholics and Labor Unions	53
Catholic, The Name "Roman"	42
Catholics and Non-Catholic Worship	125
Catholics' Reading	41
Censoring that is Ineffective. (Ed.)	184
Central America: Chronicle, 170; 292; Guatemala, 50; Knox in Panama, 505; Knox's Mission, 497; Nicaragua, 66; Panama	194
Central Labor Body Formed	362
Ceylon, Missions, 491; Catholic Activities, 394; Religious State of	108
Charbonneau's Decision on Religious	233
Charette, Gen. Athanas de	104
Child Labor Law. (Ed.)	40
Children's Bureau Proposed	410
Child Slavery	538
China: Chronicle, 4; 28; 51; 75; 100; 124; 146; 172; 195; 220; 244; 268; 299; 316; 337; 340; 364; 388; 412; 435; 460; 484; 508; 532; 556; 580; 604; Chinese Expelled from Siberia, 275; Educational Anarchy, 325; Catholic Missionaries, 479; Manchus' Missionaries, 367; Revolution, 275; United States Troops in, 337; United States Policy Toward	433
China's Republic. (Ed.)	678
Christ of Socialism, The	70
Christian Brothers' School in India	70
Christmas. (Ed.)	259
Christmas Magazines	112
Church Corporations	350
Church-Going Among Protestants	198
Church, Her Children's Poet	46
Church Property, Titles in Pennsylvania	345
Cincinnati Sisters of Charity	362
Circuit Court of Appeals	264
Civil Suits Against Ecclesiastics	284
Clough's Hexameters	117
Coler, Bird S., on Socialism in the Schools	174
College Rowdiness	257
Collier's. (Ed.)	602
Colombian Minister Changed	25
Columbus Day Celebration	88
Columbus Day, The Independent on	328
Common Cause, The, 154; (Ed.)	497
Commonwealth's Dangers, Cardinal Gibbons on "Compromise" in Education. (Ed.)	305
Congo Missions. (Ed.)	401
Congo Atrocities. (Ed.)	360
Congregational Singing	361
Congress: Message on Economy	600
Conroy, Mgr. Joseph H.	575
Conscience, Literary	257
Conway, Miss Katherine Decorated	611
Crime, One Reason of. (Ed.)	168
Crucifixion on the Stage, The. (Ed.)
Cummins, Wm. J., Convicted.

DALTON, John Patrick.....	336
Dances, Indecent. (Ed.).....	351
Dandurand, Père, O.M.I.....	143
Decay of Manners.....	226
Decrease of Immigration. (Ed.).....	252
Delcassé Humbled. (Ed.).....	188
De Mun's Return.....	301
Dèsy's Golden Jubilee, Father.....	238
Dickens, Charles, 389; His Career, 414; His Religion, 595; and the Little Sisters.....	521
Disintegration of the Jacobite Church.....	205
Divorce (Ed.), 65; A Socialist's Plea for (Ed.).....	14
Denmark's Catholic Progress.....	507
Donlon, Rev. Alphonse J.....	407
Dutch Colonies and Catholicism.....	563
"Dying Nun, The".....	67
Dynamiters Indicted.....	457

EARTHLY Counsel. (Ed.)	423
Easter. (Ed.)	614
Eaton's Bequests, Mrs. Cornelia.	610
Eccelesiastical Year of 1911. The	306
Eccelesiastical Province of England Newly Di- vided	167
Education Fails in France. (Ed.)	278
Education and Crime.	603
Effects of "Liberal" Scholarship.	91
Election Law Violated.	12
Election Results	12

	PAGE
Encyclopedia Britannica: Its Editor Replies, 62; On Catholic Marriage (Ed.) 110; and Deaf and Dumb, 144; 249; Discredited, 240; Disowned by Cambridge University, 247-250; and the Tablet (Ed.), 86; A Non-Catholic View (Ed.), 15; A Theologian's Troubles about, 17; Unreliable, 48; Last Word on	233
England in Egypt. (Ed.)	353
Equitable Life Building Burned	338
Ethics of Shopping. (Ed.)	257
Eucharistic Congress in Vienna, 440; Resolutions of (Ed.), 16; at Madrid	385
Eucharistic League, Students' (Ed.)	65
Eudists' Privileges	70
Eugenics, Catholic	438
Eugenics of the Church. (Ed.)	307
Eugenics for School Children. (Ed.)	399
Eugenics and Marriage. (Ed.)	615
Euthanasia	8
Evening Mail on Divorce	11
Evil Press, An	207
Execution of Criminals, Interference in the	213
"Extension's" Work. (Ed.)	449

FALCONIO, Cardinal: Address, 193; Farewell, 119; Georgetown University's Farewell to, 143; Letter on Entrance Fees at Mass, 45; Rome Residence.....	456
Farley, Farewell to Cardinal (Ed.), 136; 159; Welcome Home, 241; Welcome (Verse), 341; Voyage Home, 313; Reception to Cardinal, 288; 307; Home Coming (Ed.), 374; Extravagance (Ed.), 398; Gift to Foreign Mission Seminary.....	625
Federal Telegraph Favored.....	360
Ferrer Legend, The.....	558
Fessenden, William P.....	565
Fischer, Cardinal, and the Italian Government	383
Florida Keys Railroad.....	385
Fighting Within the Gates (Ed.).....	422
Fire Heroes, 351; (Ed.).....	562
Foreign Missions: Seminary for American Catholics.....	95
France: Chronicle, 27; 52; 76; 100; 147; 171; 196; 219; 243; 295; 315; 339; 363; 388; 412; 435; 484; 507; 531; 556; 579; 602; Attitude Toward Italian War, 13; Catholic Past of (Ed.), 63; De Mun's Speech, 443; Failure of Education (Ed.), 279; Feminine Movement, 612; Freemasons, 108; 515; French Chivalry (Ed.), 182; French Parliament (Ed.), 255; Lourdes' Spiritual Influence, 85; Paris Churches Multiplying, 272; Paris Clergy's New Departure, 517; Paris Sisters Saved by Workmen, 525; Poincaré, Raymond, 423; Poincaré's Ministry, 387; Stage Won Back.....	300
Fraternities, High School, Opposed.....	93
Frederick II, Bi-centenary of.....	388
Freemasonry and the Church. (Ed.).....	112
French Chivalry (Ed.), 182; Parliament, The (Ed.).....	255
Fry, Sir Edward, Discredited.....	264

Gaelic Movement .....	186
Gaelic Prayer and Poetry .....	333
Gallantry or Bravado, (Ed.) .....	111
Germany: Chronicle, 3; 98; 52; 76; 101; 124; 148; 172; 196; 220; 244; 268; 298; 316; 340; 363; 388; 412; 436; 460; 484; 508; 532; 556; 580; 604; Elections, 340; Ketteler Centenary, 126; 247; Political Situation (Ed.), 447; Protestant Modernism in Prussia, 513; Reichstag Opens, 436; Windthorst, 317; .....	341
Gibbons, Cardinal, Attends Juvenile Court, 119; on Dangers to Commonwealth, 1; Memorial Hall, Cornerstone, 26; Jubilee, 46; 49; on Peace Treaties, 119; Installation of Bishop O'Connell .....	622
Goldstein's Lectures Against Socialism .....	485
Gompers Attacks Socialists .....	169
Good Shepherd House Rebuilt in Wheeling .....	239
Great Britain: Chronicle, 2; 27; 51; 74; 98; 122; 147; 171; 195; 219; 242; 267; 293; 314; 338; 362; 387; 410; 434; 458; 483; 507; 530; 556; 579; 602; Catholic Statistics, 503; 562; England in Egypt (Ed.), 353; England's Monastic Ruins (Ed.), 424; Religion and Business .....	157
"Grace Church Papers" .....	404
Grannon, Dr., Honored .....	70
Guatemala .....	50

	PAGE		PAGE		PAGE
HARCOURT, Bernard	384	Luther and Dr. McGiffert. (Ed.)	182	Pope, The, Still a Sovereign? (Ed.), 16; and
Harlin, Justice	25	Luther's Precursors. (Ed.)	518	the Newspapers (Ed.), 62; Praises Ameri-	191
Hay, Bishop ("A Great Scottish Bishop")	352			cans	617
Hearn, E. L., Honored by the Pope	382	MCCORMACK, John M.	624	Porto Rico's New Institute. (Ed.)	160
Herbert of Lea, Lady	150	McDermott, Edward J.	287	Portugal: Chronicle, 4; 27; 51; 76; 99; 123;
Heresy Hunting. (Ed.)	160	Mackenzie River, Missions	275	148; 196; 219; 268; 298; 315; 388; 436; 459;
High and Low Church. (Ed.)	471	McNamara Brothers' Confess.	193; 217	508; 531; Anti-Clericals Rebuked, 288; Mon-
Higher Life, The	161	Madero Warned by the President	410	archists and Republicans, 155; Prime Minis-
History as Taught at Harvard	501	Maeterlinck's Philosophy	425	ter, 61; Portuguese Jesuits Protest, 214;
Holland: Chronicle, 4; 508; Papal Zouaves,		Magazine Transportation	25; 49	Portuguese Upheaval, 253; as a Republic
303; Catholic Journalism, 419; Zuyder Zee	612	Magennis, Mgr. Thos.	504	(Ed.), 576; Condition, 391; Prisons, 389;
"Holy Grail" (Ed.)	591	"Magnalia Naturae"	153	Religious Associations	439
Holy Name Rally, New Orleans	407	Maine, The (Ed.), 353; Blown Up by Mine,	577	Postal Service Profits	122
Holy Name Society	53	218; Buried, 553; Heroes' Burial	216	Pragmatism and the Higher Life	416; 441
Holy See and the Turkish War	576	Malabar Church, The	396	Freudergast, Archbishop, Receives Pallium
Homicidal Record. (Ed.)	206	Malabar Under Native Jurisdiction	367
Honduras Revolution Financed by Americans	385	Manchus' Missionaries, The	49	Freudergast, Comptroller, of New York City,	407; 430
How History Is Made. (Ed.)	567	Manila, Masonry in	489	and Catholic Charities. (Ed.)	329; 359
Hungary: Chronicle, 124; 220; 340; Catholic		Manitoba's Schools. (Ed.)	72	Presbyterian "Mass," 574; Abolished	567
Protest of Hungarians	564	Marquette, Father, Honoring Memory of	39	President's Veto, The	587
Hungarian Catholics Protest	564	Marriage Law, Canadian Protest Against	281	"Primerose"	65
Hurter, Rev. Father, S.J.	419	Martyr to Seal of Confession, A	49	Prince Jaime	408
Hyacinthe's Marriage, Père	473	Masonry in Manila	390	Problem of Catholic Mutes	407
		Mass in Presbyterian Churches	146	Process of American Martyrs	575
ILLINOIS Law Upheld	265	Maryland Boundary Dispute	504	Prohibition in Ireland. (Ed.)	401
Incarnation in the Church of England, The	400	Mohegan, Mother Mary	96	Protection of Girls	22
(Ed.)	256	Methodism, Statistics of	400	Protestant Churchgoing	418
Indecent Post Cards	467	Mexican Loyalty to the Church. (Ed.)		Protestant Modernism in Prussia	513
India and Catholicity	136	Mexico: Chronicle, 2; 25; 50; 74; 98; 122;		Protestant Praise for Catholic Missions in
Indian Wards, Our. (Ed.)	63	146; 170; 195; 243; 266; 291; 314; 338;		Africa	215
Ingersoll's Eulogist. (Ed.)	111	386; 410; 434; 458; 482; 506; 530; 555; 578;		Protestant Witness to Church's Unity (Ed.)	17
Ingersoll Monument. (Ed.)	482	602; Americans Warned, 553; Bibles in, 560;		Protest of Portuguese Jesuits	214
Initiative and Referendum	401	Education in Sixteenth Century, 33; Loyalty		Psychology, The New. (Ed.)	616
Innocent IV, Pope, on Female Suffrage. (Ed.)	129	to Church (Ed.), 400; Madero warned by		Public Schools Need "Repose." (Ed.)	472
Innsbruck's New Theologate	258	Taft, 410; New National Policy, 180; Rifles		Puffing a Blasphemer. (Ed.)	375
Ireland: Chronicle, 2; 27; 51; 74; 98; 123;		Sent to Americans	601	Pure Food Laws for the Press	463
147; 171; 195; 219; 242; 267; 294; 315;		Modern "Destitution." (Ed.)	185	Purveyors of Historical Scandals. (Ed.)	89
339; 363; 387; 411; 434; 459; 508; 531;		Modern Ithacans. (Ed.)	424
556; 579; 602; Gaelic Movement, 186;		Monastic England's Ruins. (Ed.)	384	"Q U O V A D I S ?" The Oratorio	598
Gaelic Prayer and Poetry, 333; Limerick's		Monserate, Father, Manuscript	582
Rejection of "Vampire Press," 251; Motu		Monsignori Lately Appointed in New York	470	RAILROAD Officials Killed in Wreck	386
Proprio in, 448; Prohibition in (Ed.)	401	Morality that Varies. (Ed.)	385	Randsell, Senator Joseph Eugene	431
Ireland, Archbishop: "Weapons of Mob-		Morgan's Art Treasures	448	"Realistic" Novels. (Ed.)	137
ocracy," 70; Jubilee of	221	Motu Proprio in Ireland, The	616	Referendum, The	97
Irenicon	556	Moving Picture Shows a Danger	617	Religion and Socialists' Platform	79
Irish Bishops' Pastoral	596	Mulry, Thomas M., Decorated	22	Religion in Japan	528
Irish Christian Brothers	556	Music in the Diocese of Pittsburgh, 263;		Religion in Politics	23
Irish Monthly	31	Sacred Music, 167; Teaching in Parish		Religion in the Schools. (Ed.)	206
Irish Pagans		Schools		Religious Garb and the Constitution	446
Irish Players, 78; 143; 159; 418; Opinions of		NATIONAL Civic Federation	535	Religious Parade in Philadelphia	119
195; 220; 243; 268; 297; 316; 363; 387;		"Nature Study's" Effect	404	Remedy for Faith's Decline, The. (Ed.)	591
Press, 11; Puffed by Catholic Papers	87	Naughton, Dr., Consecrated	383	Reprehensible Journalism (Ed.), 375; (Ed.)	424
Italy: Chronicle, 3; 28; 52; 75; 79; 99; 172;		Naval Review	97	Republican National Conventions	242
411; 435; 459; 483; 507; 531; 556; 579; 604;		Navarre, Most Rev. Louis André	504	Rifles Sent to Americans in Mexico	601
Biblical Institute, 575; Cholera, 83; Clerical		Navy Enlargement Recommended	194	Roosevelt Misled, 73; on Trusts, 145; in the
Conscripts, 203; "Iuta," The (Ed.), 399;		Neri, Rev. J. M., S.J.	624	Bowery. (Ed.)	256
Mayor Nathan's Trials, 492; Political Slate,		Nerinx's, Father, Care of Indians	449	Roosevelt's "Charter of Democracy"	482
421; Pope's Attitude Towards Turkish War,		New Breviary, The	359	Ruskin and the Church	347
155; Prime Minister, 106; Rome's Vicariate,		Newman's Ancestry. (Ed.)	473	Russia's Religious Intolerance	177
445; Exposition, 227; Taxing Priests, 37;		New Mexico a State	337	Russian Persecution of Catholics	320
Vatican Receptions, 349; War	123	Newspapers. (Ed.)	617	Russian Treaty Abrogated	241
Italian War	399	Newspaper Inaccuracy. (Ed.)	63	Ryan, Archbishop, Memorial to	288
"Iuta," The. (Ed.)		New York Church Corporations	112
JACKSON'S, Stonewall, Religion	619	New York City Census	266	SALTPETRE	622
Jesuit Gold Mines	263	Nineteen Hundred and Twelve. (Ed.)	278	Sands, Admiral James H.	130
Jewish Immigrants. (Ed.)	590	Nobel Prize in Spain, The	565	Schley, Admiral, Death and Career of	020
Jews and Jesuits. (Ed.)	279	Noon Hour Mass in St. Louis	288	School Fads	543
				School Rowdysim. (Ed.)	495
KAVANAGH, Mgr. Charles F.	504	O'CONNELL, Bishop, Birthplace of, 430; In-		Schwab Opposes Steel Bill	423
Keane, Archbishop	335; 407;	stallation	622	Sedulius	245
Kearney, Diocese of	505	O'Connell, Cardinal: Address, 574; Address		Sherwood Pension Bill. (Ed.)	257
Kelly, Eugene, Will	479	before President Taft, 597; Home-Coming,		"Sister Candide." (Ed.)	496
Ketteler and Windthorst Centenaries. (Ed.)	330	429; Japanese Well-wishers, 503; Return of		Sisters of Mercy Vindicated	383
Ketteler Centenary, 247; Socialism of Bishop	126	O'Doherty, Rt. Rev. M. J. (Ed.)	344	Slang. (Ed.)	351
Kipling's Verses on the "Cruel Sex." (Ed.)	86	O'Donovan's, Mgr., Jubilee	215	Social Centres. (Ed.)	269;
Knox, Secretary, in Panama, 505; Mission to		Old-Fashioned Mother, The. (Ed.)	208	Socialism, According to Marx, 392; Is it an
Latin America	497	Oratorio's Future	489	Economic System? (Ed.)	280; and Capital-
Krasinski, Anonymous Poet of Poland	113	Ospina, General Nel, Recalled	482	ism, 487; and Christ, 608; and Christian
		Oxyrhynchus Papyri	381	Marriage, 464; Gompers Attacks, 169; and
LABOR Movement in New York	227	PALMYRA Island Claimed by U. S.	409	National Municipal League (Ed.), 183; and
Labor Unions and Catholics, 53; and the		Panama Honors Knox	505	Private Property
Courts (Ed.)	233	Paris Churches Multiplying	272	Church (Ed.), 134; Attacked by Goldstein,
Lacomb, Rev. Albert, O.M.I.	383	Passionist Fathers in Brazil	335	485; Christian, 582; Conservative, 437; De-
La Farge, Suicide of	209	Peace and Arbitration. (Ed.)	183	fended by a Catholic (Ed.), 494; in Mil-
Lane, Miss Sarah	287	Peace Banquet	313	waukee (Ed.), 110; Not Christian, 231;
Latin America's Papers. (Ed.)	566	Peace Meeting Broken Up	241	Papers on, 187; Steffens and, 232; Aim, 149;
Latin Hymns	67	Peace Treaty Compromise	337	Red Flag (Ed.), 472; Success in Elections,
Lawrence, Mrs. Mary H., Bequests	600	Pensions	74	121; Zeal for the Press (Ed.), 38; Live
Lawrence: Strikes, 409; 433; 505; 557; (Ed.),		Persia: Chronicle, 143; 172; 195; 220; 244;		Issue Against, 520; Religion and	79
617; Lessons from (Ed.)	497	268;		Socialist Concept of Truth, 197; Furniture
Laymen's Retreats in Middle West	455	Personal Service. (Ed.)	299	(Ed.), 209; Literature Financed, 391; Plat-
Laymen We Need, The	490	Philippine Catholics in Protestant Dormitories	352	form and Religion, 79; Toleration, 209; Doc-
Leslie, Shane (Ed.)	64; 112; 137; 186	(Ed.)	89	trine of Violence, 222; Set Back
Liability Law Proposed	481	Philippines, 98; Masonry in, 49; Y. M. C. A.		Socialistic Politics. (Ed.)	351
Limerick's Chapter Restored	503	in, 154; Surrender of, 178; Cost of, 266;		Society of the Divine Word	541
Lincoln Memorial Dedicated	123	Must Be Kept	362	"Southern Cross" Praised	490
Lincoln Steffens, a Socialist	232	Picturesque Nonsense	543	Spahn's, Dr., Resignation. (Ed.)	519
Lister and Pasteur. (Ed.)	471	Pitney, Chancellor, Made Justice of Supreme		Spain: Chronicle, 76; 195; 244; 268; 297; 316;
Liszt's Centenary	70; 109	Court		339; 460; 531; Agrarian Problems, 6; Asso-
Literary Relic of the Japanese Persecution	401	Plays, Protest Against Bad. (Ed.)	39	ciated Press of, 271; Catholic Social Work,
"Little Tin Plate, The." (Ed.)	344	Poins, Do "Nice" Women Attend Bad?	87	511; Diocesan Conventions, 72; Elections,
Live Issue, The. (Ed.)	520	Poincaré, Raymond, 423; Ministry	587	228; (Ed.), 231; Eucharistic Congress at
Living Church, The. (Ed.)	258	Poisonous Matches Prohibited	601	Madrid, 335; Ferrer Legend, 558; Failure
Looking for Unity. (Ed.)	328	Poland	602	of Uprising, 59; Guardia Civil, 396; Gip-
Louisiana's Centenary	610	Polish Catholics in Conference	479	sies, 560; King's Clemency, 469; Nobel
Lowell's "Sir Launfal." (Ed.)	65	Polish Priests in Convention	527	Prize, 565; Prince Jaime, 408; in Morocco
Loyalty of the Laity	573	Political Economists of England	417	(Ed.), 88; Strikes and Taxes	36
Lugero, Rev. Angelo, Will of	23	Politics and "Papal Aggression"	167	St. Andrew's, Scotland	9
Luther and Divorce. (Ed.)	377	Pompili, Cardinal		Saint Patrick. (Ed.)	542
				St. Patrick's Day Precautions. (Ed.)	520

St. Peter Claver's Society.....	PAGE 455
State Ratification of Constitutional Amend- ments.....	442
Stearns, Rev. F. W., Conversion.....	215
Steel Trust, The Dissolution of, 73; Statement of.....	73
Steele, Rev. J. H., Conversion.....	599
Stonewall Jackson's Religion.....	619
"Studies," Reform in Elementary.....	525
Submarines, Yarn About.....	40
"Subsidizing" Catholic Institutions. (Ed.). .....	304; 305
Sun's New Owner.....	242
Sun Yat-Sen.....	383
Supreme Court: Liability Law Stands.....	361
Sweden.....	4
Swiss Laws Against Immoral Pictures.....	374
Sylvia, Carmen, Advice to Young Wives.....	11
Syndicating Servant Girls.....	273

T AFT, President, Tour, 1; 97; Attitude Toward Trusts, 1; Speech at Nazareth Academy, 24; Message to Congress, 217; Wool Message, 265; Special Message on High Cost of Living and Conditions in Alaska, 409; Appointments, 433; Lincoln Day Speech, 457; Reply to Roosevelt, 529; Warning to Americans in Mexico, 553; Visit to Boston, 577; Letter to the Pope, 599; Thanksgiving Day Mass, 215; Defends Catholic Indian Schools.....	430
Teaching of Jesuits, The.....	287
Ten Commandments, Better Observance of, 262; (Ed.).....	279
Tennyson and the Church.....	581
Thanksgiving Day (Ed.), 153; Proclamation.....	158
Theosophy in India.....	151
Third Term Problem, The.....	509
Tripoli, 32; 52; 123; Its War and the Church (Ed.), 135; Before Italian Parliament.....	540
Tripolitan Friar Exonerated. (Ed.).....	377
Troops, American, Ordered to China.....	337
Trusts and the Government, 145; Beef Pack- ers, 169; Indicted, 146; Prosecution of Combinations.....	1
Turkey and Catholicity. (Ed.).....	377
Turkey's Dilemma, 55; Domestic Danger.....	82

U NEMPLOYED, Care of the.....	102
United Mine Workers.....	362
United States: Chronicle, 1; 25; 49; 73; 97; 121; 145; 169; 193; 217; 241; 265; 289; 313; 337; 361; 385; 409; 433; 458; 481; 505; 529; 553; 577; 601; Arbitration Treaties Passed, 529; Chicago Packers Acquitted, 601; Circuit Court of Appeals, 362; Con- gress Opens, 217; Courts and Labor Unions (Ed.), 233; Election Law Violated, 98; Elec- tion Results, 121; Federal Telegraph Fa- vored, 360; Florida Keys Railroad, 385; In- itiative and Referendum, 482; Lawrence Strikes, 409; 433; 497; 555; 557; Liability Law Proposed, 481; Lincoln Memorial Dedi- cated, 123; Mississippi Steamboat Centenary, 235; National Civic Federation, 535; Naval Review, 97; Navy Enlargement Recom- mended, 194; New Mexico a State, 337; Nel Ospina Recalled, 482; Palmyra Island Claimed, 409; Patent Rights, 553; Peace and Arbitration (Ed.), 183; Peace Banquet, 313; Meeting, 241; Compromise, 337; Pensions, 74; Sherwood Pension Bill (Ed.), 257; Justice Pitney, 481; Philippines Must be Kept, 262; Cost of, 266; Surrender of, 178; Poisonous Matches Prohibited, 601; President's Veto, 587; Railroad Securities Commission, 241; Referendum, 97; Religious Carb and the Constitution, 446; Republican National Convention, 242; Rifles Sent to Americans in Mexico, 601; Senators Exon- erated, 601; State Ratification of Constitu- tional Amendments, 442; Steel Bill Opposed by Schwab, 433; Steel Trust Dissolved, 73; Steel Trust, Statement of, 73; Supreme Court, Liability Law, 361; Third Term Prob- lem, 509; Trusts and the Government, 145; Trust of Packers, 146; Trusts Prosecuted, 1; Virginia's Lawlessness.....	554
"United States Book of 1833".....	465
Unity, Looking for. (Ed.).....	328
Universities, Endowments and Students. (Ed.).....	209
University of Pennsylvania, The. (Ed.).....	375
Unnoticed Benefactors. (Ed.).....	376
Ursuline Convent, New Orleans.....	335

V AUGHAN, Father, Eloquence Explained, 408; Lecture for Laymen's Retreat League.....	430
Van Rossum, Cardinal.....	167
Villanova College, Gift to.....	479
Vincent de Paul Work, St.....	238
Vincentians in Alabama.....	335
Virginia's Lawlessness.....	554
W ALSH, David L.....	166
Wiley, Dr., Resignation of.....	554
Windthorst, 317.....	341
Winning Back the Stage.....	300
Wireless Triumph.....	26
When to Marry. (Ed.).....	567
White, George, Alumni Association.....	370
Whitman Myth, The.....	223

Women's Service and Suffrage. (Ed.).....	PAGE 616
Woman's Work. (Ed.).....	518
Workers for Boys in Their Teens, With, 81; 176; 265; 321.....	415

Y M. C. A. in Philippines. (Ed.).....	327
Year 1911 in Books, The.....	306

Z ADKIEL'S Almanac.....	404
--------------------------------	-----

SOCIOLGY

Armour & Co.'s Pensions to Employees.....	141
Boston's Italian Colony.....	118
Canada's Commercial Conditions.....	118
Catholic Charities.....	597
Church Directed Catholic Social Action.....	550
Correct Administration of Public Office.....	453
Directory of Catholic Charities.....	141
Errors of the Malthusian Theory.....	406
Large Families of the Poor.....	334
Laymen's League, The.....	141
Sentimentalism Toward Criminals.....	165
Socialism for Youth.....	175
Social Reform.....	502

ECONOMICS

Banks and Banking.....	191
British Shipyards' Output.....	428
California's Gold Mines.....	141
Canadian Grain Growers.....	527
Growth of a Ship-Building Concern.....	239
How Brazil Controls Price of Coffee.....	358
Immigrants, Their Spiritual Care.....	69
Influence of Panama Canal on Domestic Trade.....	478
Ireland's Undeveloped Coal Mines.....	44
Irrigating the Great American Desert.....	573
Means of Avoiding Money Panics.....	286
Manufactured Exports in 1910.....	142
Protecting Girls.....	22
Reaction in the Canadian Boom.....	94
Shipbuilding on the Thames.....	381

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Anti-Socialism Propaganda.....	96
Belgian Catholicity in Danger.....	576
Catholic Art Guild for Men.....	192
Citizenship Neglected.....	120
Catholic Schools for Deaf Mutes.....	480
Discredited Britannica, The.....	240
Falconio, Cardinal, Residence of.....	456
History at Harvard.....	552; 624
Instructions for Deaf Mutes.....	456
Kentucky's Catholic Lieutenant-Governor.....	432
Mass in Presbyterian Churches.....	336
New York Papal Zouaves.....	240
Patens or Patines.....	192
Pedagogic Fads for Catechism Classes.....	144
Perverting St. Augustine.....	384
Preserving Catholic Ideals.....	480
Total Abstinens and Prohibition.....	240
School of Social Science.....	96
St. Francis' Mission Burned.....	504
Socialism; Its Propaganda at Harvard.....	504

BOOKS

Across China on Foot.....	90
Actibus Humanis, de.....	163
Acts of the Apostles for Children.....	500
Afrikanische Spiegelbilder Von Otto C. Art- bauer.....	42
Agatha's Hard Saying.....	426
All Sorts of Stories.....	189
American Catholic Who's Who.....	42
American Dramatist.....	353
American People.....	522
Analecta Bollandiana.....	571
Animal Secrets Told.....	91
Annual Reports of the Forest, Fish and Game Commissioners of the State of New York for 1907-1908-1909.....	117
Annus Liturgicus.....	620
Aspects of Islam.....	355
Babylonia and Assyria: Aspects of Religious Belief and Practice.....	65
Ballad of the White Horse.....	354
Being.....	354
Bildenden Kunst..... Deutschland während des Mittelalters, Die.....	547
Book of Roses, A.....	164
Brady, Rev. Francis X., S.J., A Memoir.....	571
Brevior Synopsis Theologiae Moralis et Pas- toralis.....	283
British and German East Africa.....	284
Brownings, The.....	379
Business of Salvation, The.....	331
"Cantate".....	620
Catecismo Mayor, el.....	92
Catholic Directory.....	235
Catholic Encyclopedia, Vol. XII.....	425
Catholicism and the Modern Mind.....	594
Character.....	620
Chats by the Fireside.....	427
Christian Ethics and Modern Thought.....	475
Christian Mysteries.....	92
Classical Philology, History of.....	546
Contra Modernistas.....	569
Crux of Pastoral Medicine, The.....	476

Curia Romana Segun la Novisima disciplina decretada por Pio X. Juan B. Ferreres, S. J.....	PAGE 67
Daffodils.....	116
Daily Readings from St. Francis of Sales.....	620
Devotion to the Holy Angels.....	117
Dixie Book of Days.....	91
Do-Re-Mi-Fa.....	548
Early Christian Hymns.....	524
Eirenic Itinerary, An.....	210
Elementos de Ciencias Fisicas y Naturales.....	499
Elevations to the Sacred Heart.....	211
England, A History of.....	525
English-Irish Phrase Dictionary.....	259
Espousales y el Matrimonio Segun in Novisima Disciplina, Los.....	67
Everyman's Religion.....	163
Father Lacombe, the Black Robe Voyageur.....	402
Ferrer's Life, Trial and Death.....	211
Five Great Philosophies of Life.....	524
France and the French.....	162
Frequent Communion for Busy Men.....	92
Fresh Flowers.....	620
Garibaldi and the Making of Italy.....	115
Geist und Regel.....	403
Genius and Other Essays.....	331
German Centre Party, The.....	331
Gesellschaft Jesu, Die.....	403
Gibbons, Life of Cardinal.....	165
Girls' Clubs and Mothers' Meetings.....	620
Glanze de Hostie, Im.....	547
God in Evolution.....	331
Golden Spears, The.....	188
Golden Treasury.....	620
Good Women of Erin.....	378
Great Days of Northumbria.....	379
Greek Epic, Rise of the.....	18
Hadji Murad.....	620
Holy Communion.....	595
Holy Mass, Popularly Explained.....	427
Home of Evangeline, The.....	139
Hosting of Heroes.....	524
Human Efficiency.....	570
Ichneutae or "The Trackers".....	189
Imitation of Christ.....	19
Innocence of Father Brown, The.....	210
In Northern Mists.....	235
Inseparables, The.....	139
Intimacies of Court and Society.....	591
In the Early Days.....	547
Ireland Under the Normans.....	89
Jesus All Holy.....	620
Joan of Arc's Recantation.....	474
John Lingard, Life and Letters of.....	498
John Poverty.....	260
Katechisen für die vier oberen Klassen der Volksschule.....	139
Katechetik.....	355
Kindness.....	620
Kirchenmusikalisches Jahrbuch. XXIV Jahr- gang.....	403
Kirchliches Handbuch. H. A. Krose, S. J.....	42
Knight of the Green Shield, The.....	426
Latter Day Converts.....	499
Leaves of the Tree, The.....	426
Leben der Ehrwürdigen Mutter Maria Salesia Chappuis, Das.....	499
Lectures on Poetry.....	451
Lihermann, The Life of Ven. Francis.....	283
Life Everlasting, The.....	9
Life of Union with Our Divine Lord, The.....	92
Lights of English Literature.....	42
Lilies.....	90
Little Apostle on Crutches.....	548
Little Company of Mary.....	620
Little Gray Songs from St. Joseph's.....	570
Little Uplifts.....	117
Lives and Times of the Popes.....	164
Living Witness, The.....	548
Louvain American College, The.....	91
Manresa.....	356
"Marie Clare".....	595
Masses for the Dead.....	117
Matrimonial State, The.....	67
Matthaus.....	548
Mein Lichtlein vor dem Tabernakel.....	547
Miracle on American Soil, A.....	19
Modern Europe, A History of.....	114
Monkeyfolk of South Africa, The.....	163
Moral and Religious Challenge of Our Times, The.....	475
Mother.....	260
My Ragpicker.....	92
My Ship.....	475
My Adventures Among South Sea Cannibals.....	594
Narratives of Early Maryland.....	163
Narratives of Early Pennsylvania, West New Jersey and Delaware.....	564
Neptune's Isle.....	404
Newman, Life of John Henry Cardinal.....	461
Night of Fires, The.....	570
Nunc Dimittis.....	189
O'Connell, Sermons and Addresses of Car- dinal.....	593
Obedience of Christ, The.....	235
"Our Daily Bread".....	116; 356
Our Priesthood.....	189

	PAGE		PAGE
Padagogische Grundrissen .....	451	Boutroux, Emile: William James .....	498
Paon d'Email, Le .....	450	Bowen, Clayton R.: The Resurrection in the New Testament .....	331
Papacy and Modern Times, The .....	450	Brearely, Harry Chase: Animal Secrets Told .....	91
Pastor and Socialism, The .....	427	Brisson, A.: Das Leben der Ehrwürdigen Mutter Maria Salesia Chappuis .....	499
Pesant Sage of Japan, A .....	548	Brode, Dr. H.: British and German East Africa .....	284
Pioneer Catholic History of Oregon .....	210	Bruneau, Father Joseph, S.S., D.D.: Our Priesthood .....	189
Pioneer Irish of Onondaga .....	233	Buckingham, Evelyn M.: Poverina .....	571
"Plucking of the Lily" .....	571	Buckler, Rev. Reginald, O.P.: Spiritual Per- fection Through Charity .....	595
Poverina .....	571	Chapman, J. J.: Neptune's Isle .....	404
Poems of Henry Van Dyke .....	260	Chen Huan-Chang, Ph.D.: The Economic Prin- ciples of Confucius and His School .....	476
Practical Handbook for "The Study of the Bible" .....	474	Chesterton, Gilbert K.: The Ballad of the White Horse, 354; The Innocence of Father Brown .....	210
Prayer Book for Children, The .....	189	Choiseul, Madame La Comtesse de: "Le Pur- gatoire" of Dante .....	378
Presidential Campaign of 1860 .....	19	Coloma, Luis, S.J.: John Poverty .....	260
Primitive Catholicism .....	282	Corelli, Marie: The Life Everlasting .....	92
"Proscritos" .....	548	Cox, Rev. Charles: Short Readings for Re- ligious .....	211
Psychology Without a Soul .....	282	Cox, Eleanor R.: A Hosting of Heroes .....	524
"Purgatoire" of Dante, Le .....	378	Crosnier, Rev. Alexis: Latter Day Converts .....	499
Queen's Promise, The .....	476	D'Arcy, Charles F.: Christian Ethics and Modern Thought .....	475
Reason of Life, The .....	163	Dalgairns, John Bernard: Holy Communion .....	596
Recherches sur les Superstitions en Chine .....	260	Dane, Stevens: Through the Break in the Web .....	92
Resurrection in the New Testament, The .....	331	Dease, Alice: Good Women of Erin .....	378
Revolutionary Function of the Church .....	568	Delamore, H. E.: The Little Apostle on Crutches .....	548
Right and Might .....	91	Desmond, Humphrey J.: Little Uplifts .....	117
Rochejaquelein, Life of Madame de la .....	379	Dever, Rev. Daniel A.: The Holy Viaticum of Life as of Death .....	67
Sacred Drama .....	525	Dewbarn, Charles: France and the French .....	162
San José en la Vida de Cristo y de la Iglesia .....	284	De Tunzelmann: The Superstition Called So- cialism .....	187
Schönheit der katholischen Moral, Die .....	42	De Waal, Von Anton: Mein Lichtlein vor dem Tabernakel .....	547
Selected Essays .....	548	Dianda, Gilberto: El Catecismo Mayor .....	542
Sermons and Lectures, Mgr. Grosch .....	19	Dimmler, E.: Matthaus .....	96
Short Readings for Religious .....	211	Dingle, Edwin J.: Across China on Foot .....	590
Sincere Christian, The .....	499	Doiben, Digby Mackworth: Poems .....	593
Social France in the XVII Century .....	41	Donahue, Daniel Joseph: Early Christian Hymns .....	524
Socialism and the Workingman .....	426	Doré, Henri, S.J.: Recherches sur les Super- stitions en Chine .....	260
Socialism, Papers on, 187; the Nation of Fatherless Children .....	114	Drane, Augusta T.: Sacred Drama .....	525
Songs of Oriel .....	138	Dresser, Horatio W.: Human Efficiency .....	570
Sorrow for Sin .....	476	Dwight, Dr. Thomas: Thoughts of a Catholic Anatomist .....	92
Spiritual Calendar, A .....	427	Dwight, Walter, S.J.: "Our Daily Bread" .....	116
Spiritual Perfection Through Charity .....	595	Du Bose, William Borchert: The Reason of Life .....	163
St. Anselm, Archbishop of Canterbury .....	116	Earls, Michael, S.J.: Stuore .....	138
St. Anthony of Padua .....	403	Eguia, Constanio, S.J.: Proscritos .....	548
St. John Capistran .....	163	Erzberger, M.: The German Centre Party .....	331
St. Patrick .....	345	Farnum, Mabel F.: The Wounded Face .....	476
St. Paul, Further Notes on .....	138	Ferreres, Rev. Juan B., S.J.: La Curia Ro- mana, 67; Los Esponsales y el Matrimonio .....	67
St. Paul V .....	163	Fite, Emerson David: Presidential Campaigns of 1860 .....	19
St. Teresa's Autobiography, 19; Works .....	404	Fitzgerald, Rev. Vincent, O.F.M.: St. John Capistran .....	163
St. Vincent Ferrer, O.P. .....	403	Fitzsimmons, F. W.: The Monkeyfolk of South Africa .....	163
Stevenson, Robert Louis .....	92	Fletcher, C. R. L.: A History of England .....	524
Stoff und Methode der Lebenskunde für Schulclassene .....	91	Fontseré, Dr. Eduardo: Elementos de Ciencias Físicas y Naturales .....	499
Stuores Diplomatic and Military .....	66	Frins, Rev. Victor, S.J.: De Actibus Humanis Fullerton, R.: Socialism and the Workingman .....	123
Stuore .....	138	Gallerani, Father: Jesus All Holy .....	620
Summula Philosophia Scholastica .....	284	Gatterer, Rev. Michael, S.J.: Katechetik, 355; Annus Littergicus .....	620
Superstition Called Socialism .....	187	Gaughan, Jessie A.: The Plucking of the Lily Goldstein, David: Socialism the Nation of Fatherless Children .....	114
Tempest of the Heart, The .....	594	Gray, Mary Agatha: Tempest of the Heart .....	594
Thoughts of a Catholic Anatomist .....	92	Genzberg, Ascher: Selected Essays .....	54
Through the Break in the Web .....	92	Grosch, Mgr.: Sermons and Lectures .....	19
Through the Desert .....	523	Grove, A.: Lilies .....	90
Tractatus de Quatuor Evangelis .....	595	Gruender, Rev. Hubert, S.J.: Psychology Without a Soul .....	282
Travels at Home .....	281	Guibert, Rev. J.: Kindness, 620; Character .....	620
Troilus and Cressida .....	571	Haile, Martin: Life and Letters of John Lin- gard .....	498
Viaticum of Life as of Death, The Holy .....	67	Hall, Clayton Colman, LL.B., A.M.: Narra- tives of Early Maryland .....	163
Vida Espiritual, La .....	91	Hanum, Franz: Die Schönheit der katholischen Moral .....	42
Wargrave Trust, The .....	491	Hay, Bishop: The Sincere Christian .....	499
William James .....	498	Hickey, Rev. J. S.: Summula Philosophia Scholastica .....	284
With Christ My Friend .....	548	Hodges, Geo.: Everyman's Religion .....	163
When Toddles Was Seven .....	116	Hogan, Rev. Stanislaus M.: St. Vincent Fer- rer, O.P. .....	403
When Well-Informed Protestants Speak Their Convictions .....	319	Holmes, John H.: The Revolutionary Func- tions of the Church .....	568
Where the Shamrock Grows .....	139	Houston, E. Gibson: The Lights of English Literature .....	42
Wonders of Ireland, The .....	388	Hughes, Katherine: Father Lacombe, the Black Robe Voyageur .....	402
Wounded Face, The .....	476

AUTHORS

Adams, Charles Francis: Studies Diplomatic and Military .....	66
Andrews, Matthew Page: The Dixie Book of Days .....	91
Anizan, Abbé Felix: Elevations to the Sacred Heart .....	211
Anthony, C. M.: St. Anthony of Padua .....	403
Archer, William: Life, Trial and Death of Francisco Ferrer .....	211
Artbauer, Otto C.: Afrikanische Spiegelbilder .....	42
Bannan, Theresa, M.D.: Pioneer Irish of Onondaga .....	233
Batiffol, Mgr. Pierre, Litt.D.: Primitive Cath- olicism .....	282
Bearne, David, S.J.: Do-Re-Mi-Pa .....	548
Benson, Arthur C.: The Leaves of the Tree .....	426
Bernard, Rev. E., S.J.: A Miracle on Ameri- can Soil .....	19
Bigger, P. Urban, O.S.B.: Im Glanze der Hos- tie .....	547
Blunt, Rev. Hugh F.: Poems .....	355
Bonney, Edwin: Life and Letters of John Lingard .....	498
Bonomelli, Rt. Rev. Jeremias, D.D.: Christian Mysteries .....	92
Bosch, Mrs. Hermann: When Toddles was Seven .....	116
Boudon, Archdeacon: Devotion to the Holy Angels .....	117

Hugon, Cecile: Social France in the XVII Century .....	41
Husslein, Rev. Joseph, S. J.: The Pastor and Socialism .....	427
Hyde, William De Witt: The Five Great Phil- osophies of Life .....	524
Jacob, Rev. Joseph: Daffodils .....	110
Jastrow, Morris, Jr.: Aspects of Religious Be- lief and Practices in Babylonia and Assyria .....	65
Jessup, G. H.: Where the Shamrock Grows .....	139
Johnson, Francis H.: God in Evolution .....	331
Joyce, P. W.: The Wonders of Ireland .....	378
Kennedy, Rev. John J.: The Inseparables .....	139
King, Henry Churchill: The Moral and Re- ligious Challenge of Our Times .....	475
Kipling, Rudyard: A History of England .....	524
Klarmann, Rev. Andrew: The Crux of Pastoral Medicine .....	476
Krose, H. A., S.J.: Kirchliches Handbuch .....	42
Kruchen, Von Edward: Stoff und Methode der Lebenskunde für Schulentlassene .....	91
Krus, Rev. Franz, S.J.: Padagogische Grund- fragen .....	451
Kumpfmüller, Dr. Joseph: Geist und Regel .....	403
Lang, Andrew: The All Sorts of Stories .....	189
Le Bronz, Anatole: The Night of Fires .....	570
Leamy, Edmund: The Golden Spears .....	188
Lee, G.: Life of Ven. Francis Libermann .....	283
Lewis, David: St. Teresa (Translation) .....	19
Lintelo, Julius, S.J.: Frequenz: Communion for Busy Men (Translation) .....	92
Low, Maurice, A.M.: The American People .....	522
Loyola, Mother Mary: The Prayer-Book for Children .....	189
McKenna, Rev. L., S.J.: English-Irish Phrase Dictionary .....	259
McRee, Silas: An Eirenic Itinerary .....	210
Macdonald, Duncan Black: Aspects of Islam .....	355
Mackail, J. W.: Lectures on Poetry .....	451
Mark Twain (Samuel Clemens): Travels at Home .....	281
Maucourant, Abbé F.: The Life of Union with Our Divine Lord .....	92
Maude, Sophie: Right and Might .....	91
Maxwell Scott, Hon. Mrs.: Life of Madame de la Rochejaquelein .....	379
Meschler, Rev. Maurice, S.J.: La Vida Espiritual (Translated into Spanish); San José en la Vida de Cristo y de la Iglesia (Trans- lated into Spanish), 284; Die Gesellschaft Jesu .....	403
Michael, Von Emil, S.J.: Die Bildenden Künste in Deutschland während des Mittelalters .....	547
Mills, J. Travis: The Great Days of Northum- bria .....	379
Montor, Chevalier Artaud de: The Lives and Times of the Popes .....	164
Morin, Paul: Le Paon d'Email .....	450
Moses, Montrose J.: The American Dramatist .....	353
Muff, Celestin, O.S.B.: Katechesen für Klassen der Volksschule .....	139
Mulholland, Rosa: Agatha's Hard Saying .....	426
Murray, Gilbert: The Rise of the Greek Epic .....	18
Nagle, Rev. E.: Sorrow for Sin .....	476
Nansen, Fridtjof: In Northern Mists .....	235
Noll, Rev. John F.: When Informed Prot- estants Speak Their Convictions .....	139
Norris, Kathleen: Mother .....	260
Norton, Grace Fallow: Little Gray Songs from St. Joseph's .....	570
O'Connell, Cardinal: Sermons and Addresses .....	593
O'Hagan, Dr. Thomas: Chats by the Fireside .....	427
O'Hara, Edwin V.: Pioneer Catholic History of Oregon .....	211
Orpen, Goddard Henry: Ireland Under the Normans .....	89
Otten, Rev. Bernard J., S. J.: The Business of Salvation .....	331
Parr, Olive Katherine: My Heaven in Devon .....	189
Peck, Harry T.: A History of Classical Phil- ology .....	546
Peeters, Rev. Romualdus: Tractatus de Quatuor Evangelis .....	595
Petit, Father, S.J.: My Ship .....	475
Picirelli, Jos. M., S.J.: Contra Modernistas .....	569
Poland, William, S.J.: The Matrimonial State .....	67
Prevot, Very Rev. André: Fresh Flowers .....	620
Pringle, A. L.: The Home of Evangeline .....	139
Quin, Malcolm: Catholicism and the Modern Mind .....	594
Rannie, Douglas: My Adventures Among South Sea Cannibals .....	594
Reid, Christian: The Wargrave Trust .....	451
Rickaby, Joseph, S.J.: Further Notes on St. Paul .....	138
Riguet, Abbé, St. Patrick .....	345
Rother, Rev. Aloysius, S. J.: Being .....	354
Santiago, Rev. Father J.: Manresa .....	357
Schuyler, Rev. Henry C.: The Obedience of Christ .....	235
Schwill, Ferdinand, Ph.D.: History of Modern Europe .....	114

Ségur, La Comtesse de: The Acts of the Apostles for Children.....	500
Seisenberger, Dr. Michael: Practical Handbook for the Study of the Bible.....	474
Sienkiewicz, Henryk: Through the Desert.....	523
Singenberger, John: "Cantate".....	620
Sloan, Rev. Patrick J.: With Christ My Friend	548
Stackpoole-Kenny, Mrs.: The Knight of the Green Shield.....	426
Stedman, Edmund Clarence: Genius and Other Essays.....	331
Strong, Isobel: Robert Louis Stevenson.....	92
Tanquary, Rev. A.: Brevior Synopsis Theologiae Moralis et Pastoralis.....	283
Tolstov, Leo: Hadji Murad.....	620
Trevelyan, George Macaulay: Garibaldi and the Making of Italy.....	115
Van der Heyden, Rev. J.: The Louvain American College.....	91
Vandeur, Very Rev. Eugene: The Holy Mass Popularly Explained.....	427
Van Dyke, Henry: Poems.....	260
Waggaman, Miss M.: The Queen's Promise.....	476
Waller, Mary E.: My Ragpicker.....	92
Ward, Wilfrid: The Life of John Henry Cardinal Newman.....	461
White, James Terry: A Book of Roses.....	164
Whiting, Lillian: The Brownings.....	379
Will, Allen S.: Life of Cardinal Gibbons.....	164

EDUCATION

Catholic: Catholic Attitude Toward State Schools, 550; Convent Education's Charm and Power, 285; Educational Association's Report, 236; Education Association's Pittsburgh Meeting, 261; Sixteenth Century Education in Mexico, 33; Traditions in Secondary Education, 452; Women of Italy Support Religious Education, 428; Franciscan Sisters in Cuba, 359; High School Movement, The, 452; Irish Christian Brothers, 596; Jesuit Colleges in Middle West, 118; Necessity of Catholic Education, 621; Newark's Catholic Schools, 94; New Academy of St. Francis Xavier's, Cincinnati, 333; Parochial Schools Victorious in Altoona, 357; Philadelphia's Parochial Schools Report, 140; Religious Education, 621; Report of Catholic University, 261; Rights of Pennsylvania Parish Schools Referred to Supreme Court, 236; Catholic Services of the Religious Institutes, 405; Syllabus for Catholic Schools, 20; Religion in Schools (Ed.), 206
Catholic Colleges: Sisters of Providence Praised, 93; Jesuit Colleges' New Rectors, 47; Marquette University, 68; Progress of Holy Cross College, 409; Seismological Work of American Jesuit Colleges, 190; St. Charles College's New Course of Studies, 115; Springfield Priests Plan to Assist Holy Cross, 236; Trichinopoly's Jesuit College, 165; Christian Brothers' Schools in India, 70
General: Anti-Clerical, France, 227; Classic Ignorance at Harvard, 427; Commercial Education's Improvement, 140; Cost of College Athletics, 405; Crane's, R. T., Opposition to higher Education, 38; Effect of Coeducation, 160; Dr. Hall's Opinions, 526; Failure of American Education, 380; General Failure of French Education, 279; German University Students, 69; High School Fraternities Opposed, 93; History at Harvard, 624; Horace Mann School Suppresses Fraternities, 140; Philippines, 333; Key to Progress, 212; Misstatement in U. S. Commissioner's Report, 549; Morals of Our Public Schools, 190; Non-Catholic Colleges Endowed, 405; Old-Time Classical Methods—Present Problems, 261; Protest of Catholic Students in Normal School, 621; Public Schools in the Philippines, 478; Purpose of Common Schools Perverted, 357; Sex Hygiene for Children, 477; Socialism in the Schools, 117; Socialist Ranter Rebuked, 381; Reform in New Jersey's School Policy, 525; State Education in New South Wales, 571; Statistics Showing Inefficiency of Our Schools, 169; In Effort to Over-Educate, 333; Value of Debating Societies, 597; Vocational Studies, 68; Vocational Training,

43; 357; West Point Examinations, 69; Year 1911 in Education, The, 308; Atlanta's Presbyterian Parish School, 357; Christian Education.....	117
---	-----

SCIENCE

Accidents in Mines.....	552
Air's Action on Coal.....	168
Alloy Corrosion.....	599
Alloys for Hardening Platinum.....	168
Atmospheric Waves.....	71
Cancer and Cigarettes.....	499
Chilled Steel and Reinforced Concrete Indestructible.....	288
Coal Consumption Increasing.....	143
Conductivity of Iron at Different Temperatures.....	120
Continuity of Matter, The.....	168
Copper Wire Tables.....	47
Creosote's Effects on Wood.....	168
Deflocculation.....	408
Diamonds Made from Ordinary Illuminating Gas.....	479
Distillation of Coal.....	335
Earth Not Homogeneous.....	335
Excessive Fuel Consumption by Railways.....	408
Fruit Respiration.....	71
Fuel from Nile Vegetation.....	503
Gas Mantles.....	502
Heat Losses in Stored Coal.....	47
High Pressure Gas for Melting Metals.....	238
Hypochlorites.....	24
Improved Panoramic Camera.....	238
Incandescent Lamps with Metallic Filaments.....	239
Iron in Concrete Rustless.....	288
Iron's Effect on Water.....	455
Jesuit Earthquake Observatories.....	431
Lightning Rods.....	24
Longitude Determined by Wireless.....	120
Low Carbon Steel.....	336
Mars' Color, 599; Topography.....	143
Metric System Adopted in Various Lands.....	479
New Code of Symbols.....	120
Oil for Heavy Seas.....	502
Oxygenation of Water by Sunlight.....	120
Potash Deposits, Domestic.....	71
Precautions Against Fires.....	455
Preserving Furs from Moths.....	239
Pulp-Wood Consumption.....	431
Purifying Illuminating Gas.....	239
Quicksilver's Productions.....	143
Radio-Telegraphy.....	599
Seismic Data, 335; Waves.....	623
Self-Burning Limestone.....	455
Spectograms.....	599
Steel from Magnetic Ores.....	552
Suphalium.....	552
Surface Brightness.....	335
Time by Telephone.....	623
Velocity of Waves at Sea.....	552
Wear of Wheel Tires on Public Roads.....	46
Wind Velocity.....	143
Wireless Triumph.....	26
Wireless Weather Reports.....	71

CORRESPONDENCE

Austria: Rev. Hugo Hurter, S.J., 419; Tyrol—ese Christmas.....	302
Belgium: Catholic Scientists Honored.....	420
Brazil: Confiscation of Convents.....	156
Ceylon: Its Religious State, 108; Religious Confusion in Malabar.....	541
China: Educational Anarchy, 324; Revolutions Cuba: Politics, 133; Intervention.....	275
England: "Britannica" Disowned by Cambridge, 250; "Britannica" Unreliable, 48; Religion and Business.....	468
France: Attitude Toward Italian War, 13; Christianity and Revolution, 493; Count de Mun's Speech, 443; Feminine Movement, 612; Freemasons, 108; 515; Paris Clergy's New Departure, 517; Paris Sisters Saved by Workmen, 525; Perversion of Youth, 395; Spiritual Influences at Lourdes.....	157
Holland: Catholic Journalism, 419; Dutch University, A 467; Papal Zouaves, The, 303; Zuyder Zee, The.....	85
Honolulu: Characteristics.....	612
India: The Curse of the Caste System.....	277
Ireland: Limerick's Rejection of "Vampire Press".....	133
Italy: Cardinal Farley's Visit to Naples, 373;	251

Close of Rome's Exposition, 227; Conscription of Clerics, 203; Franciscans' Curia, 131; Municipal Council of Rome, 276; Nathan's Trials, 492; New Curia for Franciscans, 131; Prime Minister, 106; Privilegium Fori, 323; Political State, 421; Vatican Receptions, 349; Vicariate of Rome, 445; War with Turkey, 35; 83; 155; 371.....	540
Jamaica: Bigotry, 229; Catholic Societies, 517; Y. M. C. A.....	443
Japan: Attitude Toward Christianity.....	491
Norway: Catholic Holiday.....	349
Mexico: New National Policy.....	100
Philippines: The Y. M. C. A.....	154
Portugal: Monarchists and Republicans, 155; Prime Minister, 61; Upheaval.....	253
Russia: Expulsion of Chinese from Siberia.....	60
Spain: Diocesan Conventions, 372; Elections, 228; Letters Rogatory, 204; "Guardia Civil," 396; King's Clemency, 469; Politics, 181; Strikes and Taxes, 36; Uprising Fails.....	59
Sweden: An Unexpected Champion.....	107
Turkey: Adana, 36; Persecution of Sisters, 517; War's Effect.....	370

PULPIT, PRESS AND PLATFORM

Aiding Catholic Schools Constitutional.....	573
Anti-Catholic Violence at Goa.....	95
Book Racks in Churches.....	551
Canadian Marriage Annulment Case.....	429
Catholics and Science.....	119
Civil and Religious Liberty.....	597
England's Hour of Lawlessness.....	551
Features of Catholic Press.....	550
French Canadians Advised.....	573
Gibbons, Cardinal, on Bishop O'Connell.....	622
Heretics Punishing Heresy.....	95
International Catholic Defense Union.....	236
Justification of the Holding of Private Property.....	478
New Breviary, The.....	359
Shrine of Holy Family Church in Chicago.....	45
Vaughan, Rev. Bernard, Sermons in Boston.....	214
"Weapons of Mobocracy".....	70

OBITUARY

Agius, Most Rev. Ambrose, O.S.B.....	264
Agueros, Victoriano.....	71
Allen, Rev. Edward, S.J.....	216
Ascheberg, Rev. Alexander, S.J.....	408
Blake, Hon. Edward.....	564
Boff, Rt. Rev. Felix M.....	600
Boven, Rev. Antony, S.J.....	624
Burtzell, Rt. Rev. R. L.....	431
Byrne, Rt. Rev. William.....	384
Connolly, Rev. John, S.J.....	168
Cruise, Sir Francis, M.D.....	552
Dunn, George.....	600
Eberschweiler, Rev. Charles, S.J.....	120
Evans, Rear Admiral.....	313
Frieden, Rev. John P., S.J.....	216; 239
Gillespie, Rev. Cornelius, S.J.....	428
Gillet, Rev. Henry, S. J.....	47
Griffin, Martin I. J.....	143
Harkins, Rev. John J.....	432
Justin, Brother (Stephen McMahon).....	528
Kelly, Rt. Rev. Charles J.....	108
Kelly, Eugene.....	384
Knabenbauer, Rev. Joseph, S.J.....	216
Licking, Rev. William G., C.S.S.R.....	408
Le Moine, Sir James MacPherson.....	480
Mary of St. Benedict, Mother.....	576
McCabe, Mrs. Mary.....	264
McNamara, Padre Antonio.....	408
Melville, George W., Admiral.....	578
Montillot, Rev. John, S.J.....	624
O'Callaghan, Very Rev. Cornelius T., D.D.....	72
O'Mahony, Very Rev. Canon.....	584
Palma, Rev. Richard de, S.J.....	432
Porcile, Very Rev. Eugene H., S.P.M.....	336
Reed, W. Max.....	240
Robinson, Prof. Wm. C.....	144
Ryan, P. F.....	504
Ryan, Rt. Rev. Roger.....	408
Sheeran, Rev. F. M.....	384
Sole, Rt. Rev. Don Manuel.....	576
Sands, Rear Admiral James Hoban.....	96; 131
Smith, Charles F.....	24
Squiers, Herbert E.....	50
Taché, Hon. E. E.....	600
Van de Vyver, Rt. Rev. Augustine, D.D.....	72
Verdaguer, Rt. Rev. Peter.....	96
Victorine, Rev. Mother.....	72
White, Mgr. Wm. J.....	23

AMERICA

A CATHOLIC REVIEW OF THE WEEK

Vol. VI, No. 1

(Price 10 Cents)

OCTOBER 14, 1911

($3.00 a year)

Whole No. 131

CHRONICLE

The President's Tour—President Taft and Trusts—Danger, Says Cardinal—Nation Honors Admiral Schley—Mexico—Canada—Great Britain—Ireland—Italy—Germany—Austria—Spain—Holland—Portugal—Sweden—China—Cholera in Albania .....1-4

QUESTIONS OF THE DAY

Art and Religion—Spain's Social and Agrarian Problem—Euthanasia—St. Andrew's, Scotland—Notes .....3-11

FURTHER OPINION OF THE IRISH PLAYERS

.....11-12

CORRESPONDENCE

Japanese Attitude Towards Christianity—Attitude of France and a Possible War.....12-13

EDITORIAL

Our New Volume—A Plea for Divorce—Non-Catholic View of the Britannica—Is the Pope

Still a Sovereign?—Resolutions of the Eucharistic Congress—A Protestant Witness—Reprehensible Advertising .....14-17

A THEOLOGIAN'S TROUBLES ABOUT THE BRITANNICA

.....17-18

LITERATURE

The Rise of the Greek Epic—The Presidential Campaign of 1860—"A Miracle on American Soil"—Literary Notes—Books Received....18-20

EDUCATION

Course of Study and Syllabi Arranged by the New York Catholic School Board for the Elementary Schools of the Archdiocese.....20-22

MUSIC

Teaching of Music in Parochial Schools of New York .....22

SOCIOLOGY

Catholic Women's League of Chicago for the Protection of Young Girls.....22

PULPIT, PRESS AND PLATFORM

"Penn" Denounces Opposition to a Political Candidate on Account of His Religion.....23

PERSONAL

Survey's Tribute to Mgr. William J. White...23

ECCLESIASTICAL NEWS

Requests to Pennsylvania Churches—Lecture Course in Vienna on Ecclesiastical Art—President Taft Addresses Nazareth Academy Students, Kalamazoo, Mich.....23-24

SCIENCE

Lightning Rods .....24

OBITUARY

Charles F. Smith.....24

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

Not the Publishers of the Book.....24

CHRONICLE

The President's Tour.—Entering the State of Washington on October 7, President Taft finished the first half of his tour and touched the first state bordering on the Pacific ocean. From the time he left Beverly, Mass., on September 15, the President journeyed 6,456 miles, traversing fifteen states and making more than one hundred speeches on various subjects. The President stood the trip remarkably well. Even the high altitude of Colorado, Wyoming and Utah failed to dampen his ardor, and he seems to have withstood the inconvenience of three weeks in sleeping cars better than younger men in his party. It is easy to believe that President Taft has made personal friends wherever he went. He is easy and simple and kindly, and these qualities appeal to every one. "His speeches all sound sincere," says the New York Globe. "What he has done he did because he thought it wholesome for the country. In refusing to do certain things he acted upon the same motive. In his official conduct he has done almost nothing with his eye on the grand stand."

President Taft and Trusts.—At Pocatello, Idaho, President Taft made what may be taken as his final answer to the criticisms directed by certain business interests against his declaration that the Attorney General must pursue without discretion prosecutions against combinations existing in violation of the Sherman law. Under his oath of office he had no discretion, he declared, in the prosecution of such combines, and could not withhold prosecution just to help business. He said that he recognized the harm to business that such prosecutions would bring, but said that such prosecutions must go on, and that business must reform itself and come out of the toils of reform and the evil of unlawful combination to a future tranquillity and prosperity.

Danger, Says Cardinal.—Cardinal Gibbons, in the course of a notable sermon at the Baltimore Cathedral, touched on some of the great public questions of the day. Here are some suggestive quotations from his utterances: "The election of Senators by the votes of the people involves the destruction of a strong bulwark against dangerous popular encroachments." "I have sufficient confidence in the moral integrity of our Legislatures to be convinced that the great majority of them have never bent the knee to Mammon." "To give to the masses the right of annulling the acts of the Legislature is to substitute mob law for established rule." "Far less menacing to the Commonwealth is an occasional corrupt or incompetent judge than one who would be the habitual slave of a capricious multitude and have his ear to the ground trying to ascertain the will of the populace." "Every change, either in the political or religious world, is not a reformation. 'Better to bear those ills we know than fly to others we know not of.'"

Nation Honors Admiral Schley.—The sudden death of Rear-Admiral Winfield Scott Schley, which occurred in New York City on October 2, ended the career of one of the most conspicuous figures of the Spanish War of 1898, and of one of the many distinguished men who have shed lustre on the American navy. Admiral Schley was born in 1839, near Frederick, Md., and though not a Catholic, received his early training at St. John's College, then under the care of the Jesuit Fathers. He was appointed to the Naval Academy in 1856, and was graduated at the head of his class four years later. His whole career was filled with stirring events. He served under Farragut in the Gulf of Mexico. In the Asiatic squadron he showed great bravery in the attack on Corean forces that had captured an American ship. In 1884 he volunteered for the relief of the Greely Polar Expedition and rescued Greely and six survivors on Cape Sabine. In 1891 he was in Valparaiso at a critical time, and acquitted himself with credit. At the outbreak of the Spanish-American War he was assigned to the Flying Squadron, which sailed from Hampton Roads in search of the Spanish fleet. At the battle of Santiago Sampson was absent and Schley was the ranking officer. Admiral Dewey gave it as his personal opinion that Schley was in absolute command and entitled to the credit due for the glorious victory, which resulted in the total destruction of the Spanish ships. The Admiral was buried with military honors in Arlington National Cemetery, on the Virginia heights, overlooking Washington. Secretary Meyer, Admiral Dewey and members of the Supreme Court, the diplomatic corps, the executive branches of the government and both houses of Congress attended the funeral.

Mexico.—Instead of the usual reports of threats and bodily violence indulged in by the dominant party on election day, rumors of bribery are rife. There seems to be a determination to declare Pino Suárez vice-president elect, whatever may have been the will of the voters. Political prophets are reminding Madero that the overthrow of Diaz was caused by his obstinacy in placing Corral in the vice-president's chair.—General Bernardo Reyes is to edit a newspaper in San Antonio, Texas, which was the favorite resort of Maderist sympathizers before the success of the revolution. Reyes says that the revolution was a failure, as far as it was intended to secure the rights of the citizens.—The government has captured several consignments of arms which were being smuggled into the country. How many have escaped its vigilance?—General S. G. Cuéllar, of the regular army, who lost a hand during the revolution, has been elected President of the lower house of Congress. His chief competitor had been a very active agitator against Diaz.—Madero has given notice that he will propose certain changes in the law governing elections so that greater freedom and security may be enjoyed by the voters. The secret ballot has not been in use.—Two women were permitted to cast ballots in the capital. They presented themselves as messengers of their husbands who could not attend.

Canada.—The latest returns show that in the Province of Quebec 38 Liberals were elected, 25 Conservatives and 2 Nationalists. Several recounts still in progress may change these figures slightly. Of the Conservatives 20 are claimed as Independent and ready to vote against the Government, should its policy prove too Imperialistic, or should it yield to Orange pressure and undertake legislation against Catholic rights.—McGill University has a very high idea of its mission for the uplifting of Canadian youth, and is constantly begging large sums to avert the calamity which must fall on Canada should it be hampered in the least degree in the fulfilment of its mission. Its students, recognizing their duty in the matter, are always ready to show the fruits of the University's training. Our readers have not forgotten the riots of last term. The new session opened with a parade of students, who had then bidden farewell to Lord Strathcona, a large contributor to the uplifting machine. Howls and yells, the attacking of street cars, the destruction of property and a sorry attempt at resisting the police, enlivened the parade of the young dependants upon public bounty. A few whose legs were not as long as their companions', were arrested. The Principal of the University expressed the strongest disapproval of what he called very moderately the students' folly. The uplifting process includes an annual theatre night, in which the students are helped to a higher moral plane by the contemplation of one of the latest Broadway successes. They will soon, with the University's approval, dwell upon the moral lessons to be learned from "The Fair Co-Ed." Let us hope it will improve their manners.

Great Britain.—Two thousand cases of peaches from the Wenatchee Valley in the State of Washington were delivered in London in excellent condition and found a ready sale. They were the first Pacific Coast peaches to reach the English market, and were only thirteen days in transit.—The sales recorded in the Estate Mart during the year amounted to nearly 6 millions, sterling, an increase of 2 millions over those of last year.—In noticing the death of Arabi Pasha, the papers generally use a favorable tone very unlike that which they used toward him thirty years ago. According to one account, apparently worthy of belief, his repatriation was due to the intercession of the present king, who, making the tour of India, as Prince of Wales, received him, then in exile in Ceylon, and was so impressed with his story as to promise to do what he could to obtain his return to Egypt.

Ireland.—The railway companies have agreed to take back 90 per cent. of the strikers, and the remainder as soon as places can be found for them. They refuse to recognize extern organizations, and the men give up their claim to discriminate against non-union traffic, or any other. The workers on the Great Midland and a majority on the other lines declined to obey the orders of the English Executive, unless it also ordered a sympathetic strike on British railways, and the disposition is general to reject such dictation in future. The London Telegraph and the Daily Mail commend the shrewdness of the Irish workmen in disobeying the unjust orders of the London society. Others contrast the peaceableness of the Irish strikers with the turbulence of those in England. The six Dublin M. Ps. had much to do with arranging the terms. The Dublin Chamber of Commerce has initiated an Employers' Union, with the object of securing protection against strikers, and promoting legislation "to prevent strikes and lock-outs without notice and until both parties have submitted their differences to arbitration."—The Language Procession in Dublin was as imposing as usual, though the strike interfered with some of its exhibits. Dr. Hyde, the principal speaker, said the Gaelic League should now wage unrelenting war on the National Board of Education, the most deadly and persistent enemy of the Gaelic Revival and of national sentiment. On the same day Bishop Gilmartin, in an elaborate analysis of the Intermediate educational system, said it has to be reformed from top to bottom.—The resolution taken at the Belfast Unionist meeting, to establish a "Provisional Government" in North-East Ulster, in the event of Home Rule being enacted, has not received much sympathy from the Unionist press, and the Irish Times denounces it as giving away their case, inasmuch as it provides for Home Rule in one province, while opposing it in the others. Mr. Moore, M. P., and others having spoken in a violent anti-Catholic vein, despite the warning of the Duke of Abercorn, that "the religious argument" would injure their cause in England, Mr. Sykes, M. P., a Catholic Unionist, protested against this method of conducting the campaign, and declared that if the leaders did not officially condemn such tactics, many Unionists would decline to take part in it, and no Catholic could remain a Unionist.—Mr. T. W. Russell announced in Tyrone that the Home Rule measure will be thorough in its character and financially satisfactory, fully restoring "the sovereign right of Ireland to make its own laws." Mr. Russell defeated the Unionist in a close contest. The election of Mr. Gladstone in Kilmarnock by a largely increased majority on an exclusively Home Rule issue is regarded as strengthening the hand of the Government.—Sergeant Charles O'Connor, K. C., has been appointed Attorney-General for Ireland. He was born in Dublin, 1855, educated in the Jesuit College of Tullabeg, and named Solicitor-General, 1909. Sir Redmond Barry, whom he succeeds, is not, as was stated, the only Catholic Lord Chancellor since Lord O'Hagan, Chancellor Naish having also filled that office.

Italy.—Whether Tripoli was bombarded or not the press dispatches up to October 3 were unable to say, so conflicting were the reports. It is of interest to know that the only Italians who remained in the city were the Apostolic Prefect, Mgr. Rosetti, and a few Franciscan friars, who refused to accept the offer to withdraw.—Later reports confirmed the news that the city had been bombarded, but as late as October 5 no landing had yet been effected. On the other hand the intelligence came, through Turkish channels, that the battleship Conte di Cavour had been blown up by a mine in the harbor of Tripoli and went down with all on board; that England had been requested to intervene, and also that Bostani Effendi, the Turkish delegate at the Council of the Union of the Interparliamentary Union, which met at Paris, had suggested that Turkey should offer directly to Italy to arbitrate. The session of the Council was stormy, the Italian delegate threatening to withdraw.—On October 7 the news came that Tripoli was under the government of the Italian Rear Admiral Borea d'Olmo, but that Constantinople was in a ferment, and that the press called for a determined resistance. As many as 800 Italians have left that city, and disturbances are occurring in Asia Minor. The bombardment did no harm to the city proper, and the number of casualties was very small. The Turks remained passive during the attack.

Germany.—Germany, previous to the outbreak of the war between Italy and Turkey, had made every possible effort to secure a peaceful settlement of the controversy. At Rome and at Constantinople the German Ambassadors were directed to labor unintermittently in the cause of peace. Even when the war had broken out the entire statecraft of Germany was constantly employed to bring it to a speedy conclusion. According to the English "Chronicle" the German Ambassador at Constantinople proposed to the Sultan a cession of Tripoli to the Italian Government, in which case the Emperor promised to provide for a suitable compensation to be made to Turkey. Many of the German papers have bitterly opposed what, without mincing matters, they call "the robber policies" of Italy. Germany, however, has throughout observed the most perfect neutrality, although she refused officially to proclaim this, on the plea that the war would soon be ended.—The recent balloting in the fourth Düsseldorf precinct, necessitated by the death of a member of the Reichstag, has finally resulted in a complete victory for the Socialist candidate, Haberland, over the candidate of the Centre Party, Dr. Friedrich. The precinct had been constantly carried by the Centre Party in all previous elections. Unfortunately the National Liberals in their animosity against the Catholic Party had made common cause with the Socialists in their attack upon it, and had helped in the campaign of slander and defamation against it. They professed that they would withdraw from the elections, but their influence threw an added weight into the Socialist scale to give it the preponderance. During previous elections a great number of the Liberals had always cast their vote for the Centre Party. Their cooperation with the Social-Democrats in an active press campaign bodes evil both for themselves and for the Centre. Principles have already been sacrificed, and it is to be feared that the same bitterness will manifest itself on the part of the Liberals in other cities as well when the regular elections take place. The retaliation of the Centre Party can but heighten the confusion to the delight of the Social-Democrats.

Austria.—Considerable indignation is expressed at the Italian military activity along the coast of Albania. It is rumored that an Austrian fleet may be dispatched to Prevesa if the Italian warships insist upon landing their troops upon the Albanian shores. A series of conferences have already taken place between the Archduke Franz Ferdinand and the Foreign Minister, Count von Aehrenthal.—Of the late Austrian riots the Tägliche Rundschau, a National Liberal organ, writes: "The blood which flowed in the streets of Vienna must be laid to the account of Social-Democracy." At a meeting held in the suburbs of the city Comrade Müller had declared in his speech, "thousands of windows will be broken on the morrow." Many of the mob, it is known, came prepared with stones and inflammable material. Socialist leaders had listened compacently to the cries for revolution and for Portugal. When they saw, however, how serious the disturbance threatened to become, they tried in vain to allay it. They found that it is easier to conjure up a spirit than to put it down.

Spain.—The complete collapse of what promised to be a violent revolutionary attack on the form of government is hailed with unfeigned delight by the dynastic newspapers. Premier Canalejas displayed unwonted and unexpected energy, and the people in some of the large cities where trouble was feared did nothing to provoke disorder.—The Spanish situation in Morocco is made more trying by the action of a santón of great local celebrity, who has proclaimed a religious war and is summoning all good Mussulmans to the banner of the Prophet.

Holland.—The municipal election last month in Rotterdam resulted in a decisive victory for the Conservative candidates. The anti-religious clique that has ruled the city for so long has lost its control of the municipality. The Council will now be made up of 27 Catholics and orthodox Protestant members against 19 Liberals and Socialists. Rotterdam is the second city of Holland in number of population, and the first in commercial importance.

Portugal.—The first anniversary of the birth of the so called republic was celebrated by gentle reminders that the country had not been transformed. One newspaper remarked that the wife of one of the cabinet ministers used to buy a hat now and then for ten or at the most fifteen dollars; now she spends thirty or forty dollars every few days for the same purpose, "and she has not inherited anything."—The custom house receipts for July, 1911, were four hundred and thirty-eight million dollars less than they were for July, 1910. The causes assigned are popular discontent with the government, the emigration of wealthy people, and the withdrawal of capital from business.—Reports of spasmodic attempts to restore the monarchy seem to indicate the absence of a master mind to direct the royalists, who were so easily overwhelmed at the outset because they were without a leader.

Sweden.—The elections which took place in September show a decided gain for the Socialists. Returns for 204 seats out of 234 show the following results: Right, 61; Left, 87; Socialists, 56.

China.—The enterprises to be undertaken in Manchuria with the "Four-nation loan" are the following: 14,000,000 silver dollars for colonization, reclamation of waste lands, the laying out of pastures and general agricultural industry; 4,000,000 in planting forests and opening up agricultural industry in Heilungkiang (the extreme Northern province); 2,000,000 in opening up mines, especially gold ones; 20,000,000 for the reform of the currency system in the three Eastern provinces. Of the £400,000 paid in advance, £300,000 were spent on plague prevention measures, and the remaining £100,000 on the promoting of sugar mills and general industrial works.—The Government has contracted to purchase 3,000 tons of brass from Japan for minting copper coins of the new currency.—Four officials, with Chen Kin-tas at their head, have proceeded abroad to study the currency system of different countries.—The opium conference announced for July was indefinitely postponed.—A widespread epidemic is reported among the tarbagans of the Amur district.—Dr. Jordan, President of Leland Stanford University, has stirred up the diplomatic corps of Tokio by the "intemperate and offensive" language he used with regard to Russia. President Jordan is making a series of addresses on the peace movement.

Cholera in Albania.—News received from a traveler in the Turkish provinces north of Greece indicates that the Ottoman Empire has more to fear from the cholera than from the Italian warships cruising in the Adriatic. The tourist was sailing down the Albanian coast ten days ago, when the vessel anchored off the pest camp of what was left of two Turkish regiments. He states that 800 of the soldiers had died in the preceding fortnight. Turkish authorities have imitated the Italian officials in their efforts to keep secret the extent of the plague in their country, and with better success. On his voyage down the Dalmatian and Albanian coast the writer reports that out of sixty-two hours the trip lasted, thirty-six hours were spent at anchor off the little ports, none of which the ship was allowed to enter. Official reports of cholera in this region have been very meagre, only a few cases having been listed.

QUESTIONS OF THE DAY

Art and Religion

In his recent lectures to art students in London Sir W. B. Richmond regretted the neglect of biblical subjects by modern painters, and attributed their inferiority to the fact that they no longer sought inspiration from the most stimulating and nobly suggestive book in all literature. The same conclusion, premised with more spiritual insight, may be gathered from the late John La Farge's lecture on Millet, in the Art Institute of Chicago. It is no new discovery; nor need one be an art critic to know that we have left artistic greatness a few centuries behind us, and that then it almost invariably sprang out of the Bible.

But the mere study of the Bible, however intent, will not create a school of da Vincis in London, Chicago or elsewhere. The decay of art was coincident with the apparent glorification of the Bible. Protestantism rose up, Bible in hand, protesting that it had rescued it, the only source of true religion, from the repressive grasp of popery, and proceeded to scatter it broadcast through the world. Yet Protestantism never succeeded in giving to biblical subjects the artistic expression which the unbiblical papists had achieved. It could get the Bible by heart, but it could not get the heart out of the Bible. This alone might lead one to suspect that there is something wrong with Protestantism; that its discovery of the Bible's worth is as much a myth as Luther's discovery of the book itself. It has, in fact, abandoned its claims, and having lost faith in the Bible's religious inspiration is beginning to look to it for inspiration in art. Not even art will it find in that way.

Back of our admiration for Greek artistic achievement is our wonder that pagans could have done so well; for with the medieval masters in mind we unconsciously seek a religious motive in the highest grade of artistic excellence. And in this we are right; we find it even among the Greeks. In Greece's golden age religion, such as it was, was an active energizing principle, and the artist who adorned Pantheon or temple had to strain after something beyond the earth. Gods and goddesses were his theme, and to typify a man he deified a hero. When Greek sophistication supplanted the old beliefs, art seemed to have lost motive and material. Religion, art and literature—if we except the literature of philosophic enquiry—flourished, decayed and died together. Then or later artistic genius never soared high unless religion impelled and sustained its flight.

But even in their masterpieces the Greeks fail to inspire to what is noblest in thought or achievement. Great in technique and representation of types, they caught the face of nature in some of her phases, but little of her soul and never her soul at the highest. They carved and limned finely what they knew; but mercy, purity, charity, spiritual tenderness, humility with its heroisms, hope and faith divine, were unknown to their brush and chisel, for these were not pagan virtues. They were flowers that grew, after Greece's glory had departed, in Bethlehem, Nazareth, Calvary; and scarcely had their seeds been scattered through the earth by the breath of Pentecost, than they struggled for rude expression in the frescoes and sarcophagi of the Catacombs—rude in technique but noble in the attempt, not always unsuccessful, to picture loftier ideals than had entered into artists' dreams.

When Christian virtues and ideals were free to go into the open, free from Roman persecution, Byzantine formalism and the pall of barbarism which the inpouring of heathen tribes spread over Europe, the fulness and richness of art for the first time dawned upon humanity. It was no sudden effulgence of glorious light. The great builders, sculptors, painters, metallurgists of the Middle Ages were not a galaxy of genius that burst unheralded on the world. Giotto, commonly deemed the first of the Great Masters, became so by adorning the great church that had been raised to honor the great saint of Assisi. The life and character and the favorite text of St. Francis, "Ye creatures of the Lord, bless the Lord!" broadening his scope, lent variety and freshness to his treatment; but otherwise he was following the example of centuries. He was but a step beyond Duccio, who again had only slightly advanced on his predecessors.

The Church was the centre of all art. The effort to provide the Saviour with a fitting house for Sacrifice and Sacraments created architecture; the desire to adorn it created sculptors, woodcarvers, metallurgists, painters, workers in pictured glass, tapestry, mosaics and every kind of art and handicraft. Their theme was Christ the Saviour, foreshadowed in the Old Testament and realized in the New; and they brought to their work the spirit in which the monks illuminated the Bible: both gave the best human setting in their power to God's House and God's Book. The monks were artists and builders too, and the first art schools were the monastic workshops. There men learned to build and carve and mould and paint, and find their models in the Bible.

At first they followed the fashion of Byzantium, but soon the ardor of their faith and the fresh spirit of the new Christian peoples broke through the rigid, restrictive formalism by which the Eastern Emperors kept art and theology in chains. Then arose glorious temples to house a tabernacle and uphold a cross; and the life of the Master, taken out of the Bible, caught from the lips of the preacher and the mystery player and from the example of His servants, was carved in choir and aisle, and limned on wall and window and frescoed dome. Christ, from crib to cross, from grave to glory, was the central theme; around Him were grouped His prophets, martyrs, confessors; but always nearest to Him and dearest to the artist was the Virgin Mother who bore Him.

For centuries schools of craftsmen wrought in His service in Rome, Ravenna, Florence, Padua, Siena, Cluny, Canterbury, Antwerp, wherever a church or monastery rose; and they wrought for love. Like the monastic illuminators, they generally left no name, sought no reputation; they labored for the glory of God and their soul's salvation. Faith and skill fused and grew together, age improving on age and artist on artist, till at the end of the 13th century Giotto completed the course, founding in the frescoes of Assisi the school of artistic perfection; and fittingly his most perfect pictures were "My Lady Poverty" of St. Francis and "Poverty, Chastity and Obedience," the counsels of religious perfection.

From Giotto and the Van Eycks to the new school of the Renaissance, religion was the inspiration of greatness in every field of artistic and intellectual endeavor. Theology, the science of Christian belief, informed men's minds and evoked their powers. St. Thomas formulated it, Dante poetized it, the builders glorified it in "poems of stone," and artists illumined it on fresco and canvas with "the light that never was on sea or land." "Frescoed theology" is the aptly descriptive summary of the works of the Great Masters. Take away what was inspired directly or indirectly by Catholic faith and devotion, and nothing great is left.

Protestantism rose, and at once wherever it flourished artistic progress was cut off as with a knife. Christian art had grown around the altar, and Protestantism's first work was to tear the altar down, literally as well as figuratively. The Crucified Christ, the Madonna, the carved and pictured glories of the saints it destroyed or maimed, wherever it could reach them, in England, France, Germany, the Netherlands, and, though it has occasionally sought, it has never found inspiration to replace them. Landseer, Hogarth and Reynolds could paint animals and ordinary persons with marvelous fidelity to nature, but they are inferior to Giotto, the Van Eycks and others of the Catholic masters, who conceived all creatures as ordained according to their natures to glorify the Lord. Michael Angelo, when asked by Francis of Holland what was his master principle, said it was to regard all things created as imitations of the Omnipotent. This was not the viewpoint of the Reformers who, having failed utterly in the higher reaches of art, labeled as "Dark" the marvelous ages which were illumined by the brightest galaxy of artistic craftsmen and intellectual giants that ever appeared in the history of man.

Since the rise of the Oxford movement what is best in Protestantism has been going back in art and literature as in theology to the models of the Middle Ages. Overbeck, an ardent Catholic, set it the example in Germany, and Millet in France, where the conditions had long obtained which had cramped art and religion in the Byzantine empire. "In France especially," says La Farge, "the Church had little to do but what the State granted, even in art. But the State had long ago laid its hand on art, as on everything else it could regulate. The military organizations of Napoleon reached after him into the domains of art and literature, and the great educational mechanisms are the means of controlling the powers which are the freest functions of men."

Overbeck and Millet, breaking through the formulas, restored religious art and suffered for it. If "in Millet remains the feeling which marks the great works of the Middle Ages, in which the soul of old France established a form as important as the Greek," it is because he breathed a like atmosphere. A Norman peasant's son, religion encompassed him from childhood. "His people had," says La Farge, "the respectability of admitted poverty," the dignity of mind induced by religious practice and the consciousness that to be poor and to have to endure and toil was a special gift of God. Named after the Saint of Assisi, he was waked at morn with the call: "Wake up little Francis; already the birds are singing the glory of God." In the evening the family read together St. Augustine, St. Jerome's Letters, Fénelon and Bossuet; and his uncle, a peasant priest, who often labored with him in the fields, taught him to know and value the Bible. Reared in the spirit of "My Lady Poverty," he was akin to Giotto, a Catholic peasant of another day and race, but of like inspiration and atmosphere. Millet went out into the world, and for a while, in order to find a market for his pictures, followed the free fashion of the time; but soon his soul revolted against such work, and he began to paint his brother peasants toiling and praying as he knew and felt, and so brought back a glimpse of the Middle Ages. Like the early religious workers, he had slight reward. "He painted to the end in difficulties, but he managed to bring up a family and live a life which does honor to man."

An American artist, who is interested in wax-painting, recently discovered in Europe a medieval book which describes the process of preparing wax as a medium of color. Having prescribed the ingredients and their due proportion it continues: When you have everything ready make the Sign of the Cross, recite devoutly the Our Father, Hail Mary, the Invocation to the Holy Ghost—and it adds a series of other prayers especially composed for the occasion—then mix and boil, and during the fusing process pray earnestly to God for a happy result.

The lesson is, as Sir Wm. Richmond lays down, "Back to the Bible"; but prayerfully and reverently. Back to the Bible as it was known and loved and lived in the ages that produced its nearest artistic interpreters; in other words, Back to the Ages of Faith.

M. KENNY, S.J.

Spain's Social and Agrarian Problem

In Spain, as in all, or nearly all, Latin countries, we suffer from a complaint which eats into the very vitals of society and corrupts or destroys it. That complaint is politics. Among us, politics may be defined as a low game in which ambition and selfishness play for prominent and paying positions, which, when once obtained, give the winner an opportunity to further the interests of his kindred, his friends and his followers. There is no clash of ideas or platforms or principles; it is a struggle for place, for salary, for gain. The interests of the nation count for little or nothing; great social problems attract nobody, worry nobody. The politicians have one aspiration, one consuming thought, and that is to rise, and once having reached the summit, to remain there and live.

Spain is essentially an agricultural nation. Her life, her wealth and her prosperity are in her fields. More than half her population of nineteen and a half millions live by agriculture. All those engaged in industry and commerce when taken together do not equal the number of those who till the soil. Now, how do the farm laborers live? They are always on the threshold of misery. By far the greater part, we would almost venture to say ninety per cent., cannot depend upon having steady work, and even if they could, their wages are sufficient to enable them to live but not to lift their families out of a condition of chronic misery. What, then, is the daily wage of a Spanish farm laborer for his ten, twelve or sometimes more hours of toil? In most of the country and during the greater part of the year, he receives for his toil and sweat one peseta, or at most one peseta and fifty céntimos, that is, twenty or thirty cents in American money. Although the purchasing power of money is notably greater in Spain than in the United States, still this sum is far less than is strictly needed for the support of a family that is often large. The consequence is that the farm laborer is poorly nourished, seldom tastes flesh meat and lives in an unsanitary hovel. His children get little schooling, for they must help eke out the family income while they are still young; and his wife has to do hard work for the same purpose. In a word, the Spanish farm laborer hardly leads a human life. This explains why so many emigrate. Last year, two hundred thousand left their country. Over three million Spaniards are now living outside Spain. They could not live at home, for hunger drove them forth.

Happily for us, Socialism has not yet penetrated the country districts. Thus far, the spirit of insubordination, protest and rebellion which has invaded the factories and workshops of our large centres of population has not made its appearance among our humble tillers of the soil, and may it never come! Staid, sober-minded and industrious, they bear the hardships of their wretched lot with no sign of disorder, agitation or turmoil to ruffle the calm of our smiling fields. But the day when the wild gale of the city sweeps through our hamlets and our farm laborers combine in societies of resistance, as do the workers in factories, the social cataclysm will be frightful; for always and everywhere the harshest and direst revolutionist has been hunger.

Are Spanish officials and politicians ignorant of this? We do not know, but if they are not, they pay no heed. For almost a century, our public men, those who devote themselves to politics and live by politics, have done nothing but scramble and wrestle for power, wrangle about forms of government, pile up decrees and decrees in the official Gazette, fight mighty, but bloodless, battles over spending the public revenues, and tickle the fancy of the people with so-called political reforms, which are at the same time silly, unnecessary and useless. It is a problem of bread, of work, of education, which Spain has faced for a hundred years. Some of our statesmen meet it with twaddle about changing the form of government; others rage against the Church and the religious sentiments of the nation; while nearly all combine to multiply crack-brained laws.

In this country, where millions and millions of pesetas are spent yearly just for the sake of 'furnishing' salaried positions for the sons and nephews and other relatives of the members of the cabinet, and of keeping up thereby a bureaucracy which is the ruin of the nation, there are no available funds for utilizing and developing our agricultural wealth, by building roads, by extending irrigation works and thus bringing under cultivation vast tracts of land that now lie idle, and by establishing agricultural loan institutions for the benefit of the small farmer, who is so often the victim of the usurer's cruelty and inhumanity.

It is our opinion that this seeming obliviousness and neglect of the all-important agricultural question on the part of our statesmen is to some extent, and perhaps to a great extent, deliberate and systematic. Let there be a positive improvement, an increase in the economic well-being of our rural population, and there will follow logically and necessarily a change in our political customs, a change not at all to the advantage of the professional politician. The thing is clear. When our farm laborers begin to receive remunerative wages, when their economic redemption is effected, they will be able to energize their rights as citizens and freemen; they will vote for the candidate of their own choice, and they will no longer cast their ballot for the man pointed out by their employer or overseer.

To keep the rural voter in wretchedness is to guarantee the sway of the soul-driving professional politician. To raise the economic, intellectual and moral level of the farm laborer is to jeopard the supremacy of the political "boss." It follows, therefore, that there exist strong selfish reasons for keeping the farm laborer in the dependent position of the serf of the glebe of former times.

Against this sad state of affairs, which explains so many anomalies and contradictions in Spanish life, (for example, why in a country as profoundly and essentially Catholic as ours, our politicians are developing an anti-religious scheme wholly at variance with Catholicism) only one protesting voice has been heard, and that is the voice of the Church; the Church, and none other, has undertaken a steady campaign for improving the lot of our rural population.

It is now ten years since the Catholic social-agrarian movement was begun among us, and its development has been wonderful. The clergy, who formerly gave no thought to this work, now take it up as a sort of apostolate. To their zeal and abnegation it is due that in the major part of Spanish dioceses there is hardly a town or a parish without its agricultural syndicate or cooperative store, or insurance and benefit society, or some similar organization for the good of the rural population. Two marked effects have resulted from this action on the part of the clergy. The countryman has been benefited and helped on without being corrupted by the city Socialists; and the relations between priests and people have become more intimate and friendly. It has been made evident that besides looking after the supreme spiritual interests of humanity, religion in its ministers strives to make this every-day life less burdensome for the poor, the disinherited, the lowly.

It is true that the country priests now find themselves reduced to such poverty that little can be expected from them in this matter; but their abnegation, their self-sacrifice and their devotedness to their charges have enabled them to achieve prodigies in the relief of the temporal needs of the poor. If the farm laborers ever do come to be freed from the fetters that now bind them down in ignorance and wretchedness they will owe their social and economic liberation, not to politics, not to the State, not to ministries, but to the Church, to Catholicism, to religion.

NORBERTO TORCAL,

President, Spanish Associated Press.

Euthanasia

A good many years ago, so the story runs, an evangelist undertook to convert a far western town; and he began by begging money for the necessary expenses of his work from the chief men of the place. Entering a large business house, he addressed its head: "I have come to bring Christ to this city." The merchant expressed his gratification at such good news, whereupon the evangelist added: "I want you to contribute to the expenses." "Certainly," said the other, "How much do you expect from me?" "A hundred dollars." "A hundred dollars for bringing Christ hither!" rejoined the merchant. "For such a purpose I could not give less than a thousand." He opened his cheque-book, took up his pen, and the evangelist's eyes glistened. As he was apparently beginning to write, he said: "You have your credentials, of course?" As the evangelist seemed nonplussed, he added: "You know, when the Apostles brought Christ to a benighted city, they often confirmed their preaching with miracles. Perhaps you are ready to work one or two." "The age of miracles is past," replied the evangelist. "Well, then," answered the merchant, "a certificate of mission from some authorized source will do just as well." "I am a minister in good standing," began the evangelist. "To be sure," was the reply, "Your conference or assembly, or convention will guarantee you. But who will guarantee the guarantors? Christ is brought to me every Sunday by my parish priest. He has his mission from the Archbishop. The Archbishop has his from the Pope, who, as the Vicar of Christ, has his from our Lord himself. Perhaps you can show something similar?" "Sir," answered the evangelist stiffly, "I have an inward call, invisible to man." "Then I fear you must be content with my inward, invisible cheque. Show me at any time an evident, visible mission, and you shall have my evident, visible cheque for a thousand dollars. 'Business is business,' you know. Good morning."

The itinerant evangelist is not the only self-appointed teacher. Editors and proprietors of the daily press usurp the teacher's functions. They are ready to do all our thinking for us and to furnish us with ready-made, "hand-me-down" opinions on science, politics, literature, and especially on morals and religion. The other day a man and a woman killed a sick person with chloroform. They said that she was a hopeless consumptive and they chloroformed her to put her out of her misery. The morality of their act had to be settled, and the newspapers undertook the task. Reporters set about interviewing lawyers, physicians, college professors, a minister or two, and the views of all were published for the instruction of the public.

It might have occurred to the newspaper men that none of those they quoted, not even the Emeritus President of Harvard University, has any title to speak with authority on moral questions, and that they might have interviewed aviators, jockeys, professors of legerdemain and Admiral Ching Pih Kwong, just as profitably. That no such idea crossed their mind shows clearly how incompetent they are with regard to the office they usurp, and sets a thoughtful man reflecting on the tremendous dangers threatening society by reason of that usurpation. Some of the persons quoted spoke reasonably enough, as far as they went; which, though it makes one esteem their common sense, is no sign of their authority in the matter. Others, on the contrary, talked glibly of useless suffering, showing that, notwithstanding their assumption of wisdom, they had not grasped the very elementary notion, that the wiser one is, the more he shrinks from calling anything useless. Moreover, they were guilty of a shameless begging of the question in assuming physical suffering to be an unmixed evil, and that the full and final decision as to how far it is to be tolerated is entirely within man's competence, points on which the whole question turns, and on which the general opinion of mankind is wholly opposed to theirs. Let us see what natural and supernatural morality have to say on the subject; but before doing so let us remark, since so many are ready to settle the question on utilitarian or humanitarian grounds or on mere sentimentality, the practical danger that pity for the suffering may be a wicked pretext to cover the real motive of taking their lives, as appears to have happened in the case that has raised this discussion.

Natural reason tells us that our life is not in our own power. We originate life neither for ourselves nor for others: we, therefore, can neither end it for ourselves nor for others at will. The beginning of life, its course and its ending are in the hands of the Creator of life and Lord of death. Only One could say: "I have power to lay it down," and He could say it, because He could add: "I have power to take it up again." This doctrine is confirmed by the fact, that the Creator of our nature has implanted in it an instinct to conserve it in ourselves and to respect it in others, against which one must contend who imperils his own life lawfully, or justly takes that of another. This reminds us that the very ones who ignore the fact that man is not the master of life, when there is question of chloroforming the sick, urge it extravagantly when declaring against capital punishment; and in both cases they are governed by sentiment instead of reason. When one is guilty of such a crime as makes his life a forfeit, the supreme authority can and must execute justice upon him: no utility nor convenience, however great, whether public or private, can deprive one of the right of living or release him from the obligation of life.

As a general rule, one is not obliged to be heroic. Hence it is lawful to relieve by honest means the sufferings that go before inevitable death. But to call these sufferings useless, to say they demand the relief of accelerated death, is a piece of sensuality contradicting the common sense of mankind. We may make life as agreeable for ourselves as we can lawfully: we should aim at making it such for others. But we cannot change the nature of things. This world is not the home of perfect physical ease. They, therefore, use it best who use it with fortitude, one of the noblest things in man. To the individual this virtue brings contentment. More than this, it is not the least of the elements of social stability, which requires the patient endurance of imperfections inseparable from things human, until they can be corrected prudently and justly in a way that becomes men. There is, therefore, a close connection between that life-long cowardice which dreams of ending suffering by anticipating death, and the rash attempts to cure social defects violently and lawlessly, which we see multiplying in the world to-day. Both are overt acts of pusillanimous rebellion against the Creator of human nature in its manifold limitations.

Above such conclusions of natural reason rises the sublime Christian doctrine of suffering. Reason could go further. But it could never tell us how God in the beginning created man free from suffering, which came into the world by sin. This intimate relation between the physical and the moral evil lies at the root of Christian teaching that the former is purified when it is accepted as the penalty of the latter. And because, to free us from sin and to restore us to what we lost through it, God, clothing Himself with our flesh, took to Himself its sufferings, He raised these to so glorious a height, that without suffering the perfect following of Jesus Christ is impossible. Hence the Christian will bear his afflictions in union with the sufferings of Christ. Moreover, as the height of our glory in heaven depends on the closeness of our union with Christ on earth, we can see with St. Paul in the light of faith, how little are the sufferings of the moment compared with the exceeding glory they work for us; and, therefore, on the summit of Christian perfection attained by the saints is found the love of suffering inseparable from the love of our Lord Jesus Christ.

What the philosopher sees as cowardly rebellion against God, and the Christian recognizes as practical blasphemy, people without either philosophy or religion, call euthanasia, a dying well!

HENRY WOODS, S.J.

St. Andrew's, Scotland

With unusual pomp and circumstance the University of St. Andrew's, in the second week of September, celebrated the five hundredth anniversary of its foundation. In connection with the educational work of the Church before the Reformation, the fact is worth remembering that of the four Scottish Universities of to-day, three were founded in Catholic times. The University of Edinburgh is the only exception, but even that seat of learning owed its inception to the last Catholic Bishop of Orkney, who by his will, not only left certain sums to be applied to the education of the sons of poor gentlemen at the Scottish Universities and—be it remarked—also for the education of young gentlewomen, but likewise bequeathed eight thousand marks for the foundation of a college in Edinburgh. With this money the site for the University buildings was purchased in 1581. To these four Universities, naming them in the order of their foundation, St. Andrew's, Glasgow, Aberdeen and Edinburgh, Andrew Carnegie, in 1901, gave the munificent sum of $10,000,000.

St. Andrew's, which though smaller, may be called the mother of them all, was founded by Bishop Henry Wardlaw, in 1411. The University came into existence at a time when all over Europe there was a deep-seated belief that such institutions were needed as the pioneers of culture, the nurseries of true doctrine and a bulwark against heresy. This is the language of the London Times, which furthermore says that: "Its founder was one of those cosmopolitan ecclesiastics, fortunately then common, who did much of the secular civilizing work of their time. Faithful Churchmen, they had a wide outlook and many interests; they were able men of affairs, had lived in several lands, knew colloquially more than one tongue, and had often been entrusted with the conduct of important State business. They were proud to be the patrons of learning and science as then understood. Not, probably, a statesman of the rare attainments and noble attractive character of Bishop Elphinstone, who a little later founded Aberdeen University, Bishop Wardlaw was among the wise and enlightened of his generation. It is only just," adds the writer, "that we should turn for a moment to the memory of those who five hundred years ago lit in a dark place that light which has burned brightly ever since." From such a source this is a remarkable tribute to the churchmen who, not only in Scotland, but in Germany and France, were pioneers in university education and civilization. It is alike creditable to the fairmindedness of the enlightened Englishmen of to-day and just acknowledgment of the successful labors of Catholics, who with the shattered fragments, and the precious remnants of disastrous periods of persecution have, with the aid of Protestant writers, themselves pieced together the story of those times and established the claim of the Church to be the enlightener and civilizer of Christendom.

It is in nothing derogatory to the loyalty of the churchmen in Scotland in those early days when the University of St. Andrew's was founded that they espoused the cause of the Antipope Benedict XIII, Peter de Luna by name, whose patronage and encouragement they secured in Pontifical Bulls issued in 1413. The entire faculty of the University were quick to give adherence to Martin V a few years later. Under the aegis and with the aid of Bishop Wardlaw faculties of theology, canon law and arts were opened, and at first, as in Paris and at Oxford, churches and religious houses constituted the meeting-places of the University. The first college, founded by Bishop Kennedy, was dedicated to the Holy Saviour. The three principal masters were provided with parishes in the neighborhood of St. Andrew's, and the revenues of another parish went to meet college expenses. In virtue of a charter procured by Bishop Kennedy and confirmed by Pope Pius II, St. Salvator's became a collegiate church, as well as a University College. The second college, St. Leonard's, was founded by Archbishop Stuart and Prior John Hepburn, and the third, the College of St. Mary, was begun by Archbishop Beaton, continued by his nephew, Cardinal David Beaton, and completed by Archbishop John Hamilton.

The name of Henry Wardlaw, Bishop of St. Andrew's, is mentioned in Scotland with love and veneration to-day, and it is a pleasure to record that at the recent celebration every respect was shown for the Catholic Church, and for the part it played in the first period of the University's history. The program of the celebration included a series of fourteen historical tableaux, illustrating the beginnings of the University and some of the more striking events in its later history. More than half of them represented Catholic episodes, such as the arrival of the Papal Bulls; the Royal Confirmation by James I and Queen Joan; the three colleges, introducing Catholic personages, Sovereigns, Archbishops, clergy and friars. The dresses and vestments were a perfect reproduction of the costume of the period, both ecclesiastical and secular. "The tableaux," says the English Catholic Times, "were a lesson to all who had eyes to see and minds to think of what they owe to Scotland's ancient religion." Those who were familiar with the early history of the University would recall the jubiliations with which Benedict's Legate was received when he arrived with the Pontifical Bulls, which were to mark the beginning of the fifteenth century as an epoch in the intellectual history of Scotland. A solemn service of thanksgiving followed, and the evening was devoted to festivity, bonfires in the streets, songs and dances, testifying to the joy and enthusiasm of the people. On the next day a magnificent procession took place, in which four hundred of the clergy, secular and regular, joined, besides clerics in minor orders and novices.

It is unnecessary to add that beginning with the era of the Reformation the University of St. Andrews has steadily declined. Its revenues were seized by the Crown and the nobility, and an institution that had flourished through the generosity of the Bishops and higher clergy of the ancient Church was reduced almost to the point of extinction. But on that period we have no intention to enter.

The only discordant note in the recent celebration was struck in the speech of Lord Rosebery, who on that occasion was installed as Rector of the University. The speech itself is admittedly a work of high literary merit, and a competent critic calls it, "finely imagined and inspiring." In order to make history live again the orator borrowed a figure from "Gulliver's Travels," and pictured the first Rector of the University as a "Struldbrug," one of the race encountered in the Island of Luggnagg, who were doomed to immortality without immortal youth, and invited his hearers, dreaming with him, to imagine what the Struldbrug Rector would have seen and what he would have to tell them if he were present that day. He would have seen countless tragedies, said Lord Rosebery; he would have seen the passing of statesmen and princes; he would have seen countless material changes; and he would have seen the University, sometimes plundered, sometimes ruined, but containing an indestructible principle of life which enabled it to survive. "He would have seen the great Church which overshadowed Scotland full of wealth, power and renown, fall like the walls of Jericho at the blast of the trumpet, which would also blast (sic) the material prosperity of St. Andrew's."

It would hardly be fair to expect the new Lord Rector of the University to enter adequately into the thoughts or deeper emotions that would fill the soul of a Rector returning to Scotland after 500 years. Their viewpoints would be as far apart as the two poles. The fifteenth century Rector would see all that his twentieth century successor represents him as seeing, but he would see something far more consoling to the heart of a Catholic. With Lord Rosebery he would see Charles I come and go. He would see Cromwell come and go. He would see Charles II and James II come and go. But what Lord Rosebery apparently is not aware of he would see in one instance the process reversed: he would see the Catholic Church of Scotland go and come. He would not see the Ancient Church fall like the walls of Jericho at a trumpet blast, but he would see after abominable cruelties wreaked on innocent men and women, after burnings, slayings, hideous torture, the Ancient Church dwindle to a mere handful of adherents. A hundred years ago the picture would have been sad indeed, but after the long night of desolation, bright and full of promise would be the vision of to-day. True, the four Universities are in alien hands, but the Church is again coming into her own. One hundred and fifty years ago a faithful remnant of twenty or thirty thousand was all that remained of the once flourishing Church of Scotland. But now St. Andrew's has again its Catholic Archbishop, and so too has Glasgow, and other Bishops now rule the sees of Aberdeen and Argyle and Galloway and Dunkeld. To-day 600 priests minister to a flock of 500,000, a number greater than the total population of Scotland five hundred years ago, when St. Andrew's was founded. Newman said in his Second Spring: "the Church of England has died and the Church lives again." The same is true of the Church of Scotland. And what he adds is equally applicable, that "in the day of trial and desolation for [Scotland] when hearts were pierced through with Mary's woe, at the crucifixion of Christ's body mystical, every tear that flowed and every drop of blood that was shed were the seeds of a future harvest which they who sowed in sorrow would reap in joy."

EDWARD SPILLANE.

Here is some sage advice that Carmen Sylva, the Queen of Rumania gives young wives who wish to keep their homes happy and peaceful:

1. Never begin a discussion, but if an explanation is unavoidable do not yield without having proved your point.

2. Never forget that you are the wife of a man and not of a superior being; it will make you understand his weaknesses.

3. Do not ask your husband for money too often. Try to manage with the allowance he gives you every week.

4. If you discover that your husband has rather a big heart remember also that he has an appetite. If you attend to the latter you will soon win over the former.

5. From time to time, but not overfrequently, allow your husband to have the last word; it will please him and will do you no harm.

6. Read the whole of your newspaper and not only the sensational news and your husband will enjoy discussing the events of the day and politics with you.

7. Beware of hurting your husband's feelings, even if he is sulking.

8. From time to time pay him a compliment by telling him that he is the nicest and most attentive of married men, and at the same time make him understand that you, too, have your faults.

9. If your husband is clever and active be a good comrade to him; if he is somewhat heavy be his friend and his counsellor.

The New York Evening Mail for September 28 indorses President Taft's utterances on divorce, given in the previous issue of AMERICA. "As the first citizen of the republic, President Taft's words are weighty," says the Editor. "He urges reform in divorce laws. He sharply outlines the danger to the home in present conditions. What have we to say in response?"

For our part, we thank him. Whether or not it is a subject for federal action, outside the territory directly under congressional control, is very doubtful. A constitutional amendment would first have to be adopted giving the general government power to legislate as to marriage. Manifestly the subject is not in the same class as interstate business interests.

Marriage is, however, more than interstate. Married parties are, each second of the day, passing from state to state and from nation to nation. The interests these persons transport within themselves are far more important than any freight car carries. They lie at the base of all social order. The home is the only recognized lawful and ethical starting point of the nation's life, and these ever-moving parents make the home.

There is already a law, world-wide, which we cannot change. It is the law of chastity; and another like it, the sacred oath or vow. As a cold fact, all these married people take that vow. On the wedding day they think they mean it, and, in their then frame of mind, they wish that vow were a thousand times stronger. "For richer, for poorer, for better, for worse!"

So that another hard, cold fact is that people about to marry should be held to an intelligent knowledge of what they are doing. The decadence of marriage is simply a decadence of morals and intelligence. It would not, theoretically, seem difficult to any state to square its legislation with the moral law.

We venture the assertion that the courtship period is where most of the trouble lies. The state cannot legislate brains for young people. A "marriage for convenience" may be contemptible. But a marriage without sound judgment has one sure result—divorce, or a wish for it. Why not try uniform legislation, and more stringent, on procuring the license?

FURTHER OPINION OF THE IRISH PLAYERS

As far back as April 8, 1904, the New York Sun said of "The Hour Glass," one of Yeats' least objectionable plays: "His medieval schoolmaster might be teaching dark heresies in Poughkeepsie as well as in Donegal, in the twentieth century as well as in the fourteenth." The same critic, writing the following week of some of the best work of Yeats and Synge—"The King's Threshold," "Cathleen Ni Houlihan," and "The Riders to the Sea"—remarks "the absence of real drama" and of anything "specifically Celtic," and the presence of "the Maeter-linckian atmosphere." February, 1905, the Sun described "Cathleen Ni Houlihan" and "The Hour Glass," Yeats' most satisfactory productions, as "of no great substance, either dramatic or intellectual, being the product of a movement which is fragmentary and reactionary, rather than vitally wholesome and progressive." Under the title, "Yeats the poet of visions," the Sun had this to say only two years ago, July 25, 1909: "The spirit of Paris, of the romanticism of 1830, invaded Dublin. Several Yeats plays were placed under the ban of public displeasure; 'Countess Cathleen' for one; as for J. M. Synge, it was a case for the police when his 'Playboy of the Western World' was produced. . . . Yeats knows Nietzsche, Flaubert, Ibsen, and he knows William Blake."

The London Pall Mall Gazette found Mr. Yeats' better plays void of "any very definite human interest" and laden with an "enervating, almost luxuriant effminacy." It describes the Synge plays as "photographs of bestial stupidity and depravity."

The London Globe says of "The Playboy of the Western World": "It is an extraordinary story of Irish immorality. It shows how a young farmer becomes a hero at Flaherty's public house because he boasts that he has murdered his father, and how all the girls run after him. When his father turns up with nothing worse than a cracked crown, they all repudiate him as a poor creature, and it is not until he fights and beats his father that Pegeen Mike, the most forward of the girls, regrets his loss."

Commenting on this description, an American critic remarked: "If Mr. Yeats' poetry be deficient in spinal marrow, he himself is not short of 'nerve' in persisting in the introduction of such an inexcusable insult to Irish manhood and womanhood in the capital of Ireland's hereditary foes."

The New York Herald, reviewing the brochure, "Pseudo-Celtic Drama," in August, 1904, cites Mr. Gwynn, M.P., an Irish Protestant of high literary standing, as declaring "the Yeatsite drama an 'exotic' production, 'alien' to the Irish genius as to the Irish soil, and too often desecration of national legend and an outrage to national sentiment." "No normal Irishman would have expected an Irish audience to regard with equanimity an Irish peasant kicking about, no matter in what extremity, an image of the Virgin." This statement the Herald pronounces "sound and true," and adds: "There never was an Irish Catholic peasant who believed that demon or spirit could overcome the name of the Lord God and His Christ on the lips and in the presence of the anointed priest of the Most High. When you pretend to be Irish and Celtic you must follow, not outrage, Irish and Celtic sentiment. . . . Mr. Yeats' parodies of Ireland are as insolently un-Irish as they are insolently incompatible with the foundation and essentials of the Christian religion."

The United Irishman, an organ of the Gaelic Revival, said of "The Shadow of the Glen": "Mr. Synge borrows the modern decadent note of Scandinavia or France, and tries to inject it into a picture of Irish life. He depicts an unfaithful Irish wife of the peasant class as if she were not an accident, but a type." And Canon Sheehan, who has not feared to depict the shadows as well as the lights in Irish life, in denouncing this school of Ibsenistic paganism, thus epitomized its program: "Perish the Church, perish everything, so long as you leave us art, and especially the old pagan art of Ireland."

We have received many letters warmly commending our exposure of the spurious "Irish" plays and playwrights. A distinguished churchman and litterateur writes from Boston:

"Your article on Yeats and Co. and the Irish Players was admirable. I wish that something of the same kind had been written for the Irish in Boston before we suffered the disgrace of having them open their arms to men and women who insult them . . . with the caricatures so ill concealed by the near-poetry of Synge. I attended the performance of "The Well of the Saint" and "In a Workhouse Ward." I was astounded to hear men and women applauding such sorry stuff. Having paid their two dollars a seat, they felt obliged, I presume, to pretend enjoyment of what the dailies have been calling intellectual treats. I hope you will hammer at this matter again and again, so that, even if Boston has been caught unawares, the rest of the Irish blood in America will not tolerate such a taint."

CORRESPONDENCE

The Japanese Attitude Towards Christianity

The effect produced on the mind of educated Japanese by the conflicting tenets of warring sects and the destructive criticism of modernists is well illustrated by an article of Mr. Hiroi Shintaro in the July number of the To-A-no-Hikari (The Light of Eastern Asia)—a magazine for the exchange of religious opinions. Mr. Shintaro voices the common opinion of educated Japanese, an opinion, alas, which is not confined to Japan, that religion is merely a matter of taste, of temperamental disposition, of hereditary environment. In his opinion, he says, the preaching of Christianity has become useless in Japan. The Christianity received heretofore from the West must be entirely transformed, Japonicized, so as to be no longer the same thing. To quote from the translation published in the Weekly Japan Mail, September 2, 1911:

"The attitude of the Japanese mind to religion is free from that narrow-mindedness found among the Occidental nations. In the same house you will see a Buddhist shrine and a Shinto shrine, and, moreover, you will often hear the head of the house quoting Confucian maxims, and even referring to the Christian Scriptures. In the hearts of our people Christ and Shaka (the Japanese name for Buddha) hold the same rank. All the religious and moral teaching we have received from foreigners in past centuries has been so modified by us, to suit our tastes and life, as to be hardly recognizable. The pessimism, asceticism and other-worldliness of Buddhism we let alone. When used by us it became optimistic and intensely secular. Christianity to-day is undergoing the same process of assimilation to our national life and fundamental ideas. The nations which in past years have been sending missionaries and money to convert us to their way of thinking are beginning to realize that there is no longer any need for their efforts in this direction. . . . Left to ourselves, we shall develop the Christianity we have accepted, in our own way. . . . In religion we Japanese are sufficiently broad-minded to take what is good from any number of creeds. . . . If I were asked to name a country where in the future the various creeds are likely to be harmonized and made to form part of a new religion, I should certainly name Japan."

This extract contains the whole situation in a nutshell. It emphasizes the difficulties, but also the opportunities for a scientific presentation of Catholic truth. Eclecticism is the watchword of modern Japan. As in mechanics, industry, militarism, police administration, legislation, etc., and even in the matter of clothing, they picked out what suited them best from the institutions of France, Germany, the United States; thus they propose to do in matters of religion.

That religion is anything else than a matter of mere choice or personal preference; that religious truths might be founded on solid reasoning and well-established historical facts, is a perfectly novel and astounding idea for the average Japanese boasting higher education. His idealistic Buddhist philosophy has convinced him that truth is purely subjective, that whatever a man thinks thereby becomes true; the contradictory opinions of Protestant sects, based on a private interpretation of the Bible, have been an additional confirmation of the same conviction.

It will be a long and tedious, but an unavoidable, process to bring home to the Japanese mind the preambles of faith, the philosophical and historical prerequisites for a supernatural religion.

V. F. GETTELMAN, S.J.

The Attitude of France and a Possible War

The last few weeks have been full of rumors of war, and to those living in France, among French people, it was interesting to note the symptoms that were revealed by a very real and positive danger ahead. So much has been said and written about the excitability, exaggerated sensitiveness and unreasonableness of the French that it was almost a surprise to find that, for once, these reproaches were unfounded.

It was feared also by the best friends of France that the anti-patriotic theories so vehemently expounded by M. Hervé and his disciples, and so weakly prohibited by the Government, had considerably damaged the right feeling of the French soldiers. To judge from the fiery denunciations that are sometimes placarded on the walls of Paris, or from the speeches that are made in certain socialistic meetings, the idea of a war would be hateful to the French people in general, the old-fashioned ideas of patriotism being forever past and gone.

Yet in presence of the possibilities of a conflict, possibilities that for the last six weeks have been hanging over Europe, the French people have shown neither unwise nervousness nor foolish security. We have heard little or nothing of the unhealthy theories that, in the name of Humanity, advise desertion and extol rebellion against the laws of the land.

The solemn menace that threatened its peace seems to have sobered even the emotional French nation, and, better still, to have brought to the surface the real feelings of what may be considered the typical "bourgeois," or middle class, a class that here, as elsewhere, constitutes a very considerable portion of the community.

The prevailing sentiment of the newspapers, and also of the people, is one of dignified patriotism. No one, except perhaps the officers and men of the regiments that are stationed along the frontier, can be said to wish for a war with Germany; the magnitude and inevitable risks of the conflict are recognized as tremendous, but, on the other hand, there is a quiet, steady conviction that if a call to arms is heard, it must be obeyed without a murmur, at whatever price.

As a peasant from Lorraine, whose farm stands close to the German frontier, observed: "War to us would mean absolute ruin, the end of everything, but we will face it without a complaint if the worst comes to worst." A retired savant, whose hopes and affections are centered on an only son, wrote: "René belongs to us; we have nothing else in the world, but if France, his other mother, calls him, why he must obey the call, and we, his parents, will not attempt to keep him back."

These words express the state of mind of thousands of humble, simple, steady-going folk, who know little of and care less for the empty declarations of the so-called "humanitarians." They represent the core of the nation, and their patriotism in a moment of crisis would be all the more praiseworthy from the fact that a war must mean a heavy call upon their purse, and the French "bourgeois," clerk or peasant, is essentially thrifty.

These people have no particular grudge against their German neighbors. Time has done its work and has necessarily smoothed down the edge of their past resentment, and, after all, 1870 is a long way off!

They are not wild with enthusiasm, nor do they, like the French patriots forty years ago, indulge in hysterical demonstrations and cry, "à Berlin," on every occasion.

The lessons of the past have borne their fruit: the French right-thinking people of to-day appear in a more sober and graver light. They do not hope or wish for war, but deep down, below the surface of their humdrum or frivolous lives, lies the old military instinct of their race that, after a few months' training, makes a smart soldier out of a clumsy peasant lad.

If circumstances occur that call forth this military instinct, it will blaze out with an eagerness and disinterestedness that may come as a surprise to many.

It is this spirit, veiled though it may be in ordinary life, that, more than anything else, brings home the conviction that the French nation of to-day, in spite of many faults and follies, possesses a reserve of steady endurance and fervent patriotism, that have survived years of evil government!

The military maneuvers of 1911 were accompanied by greater fatigue than usual, the unusual heat, the hard and dusty roads, in some cases the difficulty of obtaining provisions, added considerably to the hardships of both the officers and the men. Yet, in spite of adverse circumstances, these maneuvers were, on the whole, a success. The regiments that are quartered in the eastern provinces are always remarkable for their keen interest in military matters, their spirit of enterprise and endurance. This year the knowledge that grave events were possibly ahead and that any day sham fights might become stern realities, gave a deeper meaning to the maneuvers.

This impression was felt alike by officers and soldiers; they had the stern attention, the steady, silent endurance of men who are training for a solemn duty. The citizens of the frontier towns and the peasants who watched the evolutions of the troops were under the same impression. The sight of a regiment, with its flag flying and its drums beating, appeals irresistibly to the French temperament, but this year the enthusiasm of the spectators had a graver and more earnest note than usual.

During the last few days the chances of war are, God be thanked, diminishing, and for the time being, at any rate, there seems a hope that matters may be settled without a call to arms. It is impossible not to feel unutterably relieved as the prospect of peace increases.

Yet, who shall say that the present crisis, with its alternatives of hopes and fears, has not been fraught with blessings? To many honest citizens it has proved the fallacy of the socialistic, humanitarian theories that distort the idea of duty and advocate self-indulgence as a right. To others it has brought home the truth that religion and patriotism go hand in hand, and that those who serve God best are also the best servants of their country.

To lookers on, who were inclined to wonder if France, atheistical, scoffing and rebellious in her Government, was not utterly degenerate, it must have conveyed a knowledge of the good seeds that lie below the surface, seeds of patriotism and devotedness that only need an opportunity to bring forth abundant fruit.

ANGLO-FRENCH CATHOLIC.

A M E R I C A

A · CATHOLIC · REVIEW · OF · THE · WEEK

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 14, 1911.

Entered as second-class matter, April 15th, 1909, at the Post Office at New York, N. Y., under the Act of March 3d, 1879.

Copyright, 1911, and published weekly by the America Press, New York.
 President, THOMAS J. CAMPBELL; Secretary, H. J. SWIFT;
 Treasurer, MICHAEL J. O'CONNOR.

SUBSCRIPTIONS, POSTPAID:

United States, 10 cents a copy; yearly, $3.00
 Canada, $3.50 Europe, $4.00 (16s.)

Address:

THE AMERICA PRESS, 59 East 83d Street, New York City, N. Y., U. S. A.

CABLE ADDRESS: CATHREVIEW.

Our New Volume

With this issue we begin Volume VI of AMERICA. We trust that our readers will have found that we have lived up to the high ideals which were proposed when our work was inaugurated, and that the wide influence which AMERICA has exerted in the past will be still greater in the future.

A Plea for Divorce

A rich Socialist—an economic combination which always tempts one to ask why he doesn't share his possessions with the proletarians?—has written a book which he calls "Rebellion." It is a plea, or a brief, or a protest against the Catholic attitude in the matter of divorce. A young woman marries a man who turns out later to be a drunkard, and after some years of unhappiness divorces him and then mates with one who is credited with all the natural virtues, minus religion.

We are asked why should not this woman do as she did? Would we condemn her to pass her whole life bound to a man she hates?

We answer, no. We go further and insist that she never should have married him at all. His father was a drunkard, and it is more than likely she had seen evidences of the same weakness in the son. He had no steady employment, and no reasonable hope of being able to support a family; and he appeared later on to have little or no religious instincts or practice beyond taking the pledge. The girl's friends, especially her respectable old mother, must have warned her against him till they were weary of remonstrating and imploring, but with that pertinacious and unreasoning perversity that is so exasperating in many a young woman who thinks she is in love, though a closer scrutiny of her conscience would suggest a less flattering description, she persisted in her resolution, remained as deaf as a stone to all the pleadings of her friends, and even her own better nature, and fatuously persuaded herself that her powers of fascination would effect a reformation in the suitor, whom no one before herself ever understood.

She marries him, and as commonly happens her supposed influence counts for very little. He is drunk periodically; his personal appearance deteriorates—his biographer describes it in a manner which we shall not quote; there are other descriptions also which we shall not quote—and the woman begins to loathe him. The question now arises: Are we going to liberate her from this gross individual whom she once 'adored but now abhors?

Certainly not. She married him of her own accord in spite of the expostulations and entreaties of everyone who cared for her, and she must accept the consequences. She made the contract and must abide by the conditions. She need not live with him perhaps, but cannot divorce him.

"What," we are asked! Only separation! Is this woman in the heyday of her youth and her passions, with her soul athirst for happiness to lead a life of absolute continence and restraint?" Most decidedly; if there is no other way out of the difficulty.

Nor is there anything particularly alarming about such a prospect. There are thousands and thousands of unmarried women in every country of the world who are not only happy themselves, but are radiating happiness all around them. Not to speak of the glorious armies of consecrated religious, who in all the glow of their young maidenhood thankfully and joyously sacrificed the dearest family ties for the service of God and the good of humanity, and are as happy as the day is long, there are other armies of women who, though not invested with the religious habit, are like nuns in the holiness and sunlight of their lives, many of them gifted souls, who could have married the best in the land, had they so chosen, but who without a thought of repining or rebellion accepted the life-long care of aged parents, or of their little brothers and sisters, or the orphans of relatives, or who prayed and toiled for years to reclaim some reckless or dissolute brother or father to a better life.

Nor should we forget those other noble women who, though bowed down with sorrow in their widowhood, many after passing, perhaps, through the bitterest anguish that could wring the human heart, yet preferred to remain in the sanctity of their state out of reverence for the vows they once plighted at the altar. All such women deserve our admiration and respect. But it is silly to ask us to weep over the lot of the wanton heroine of the "Rebellion," or of her similars in sin, except to deplore their folly and to pray for their return to virtue.

From the first page of this book to the last Georgia Talbot reveals herself as a hard-hearted, selfish, conceited, pleasure-loving creature of low instincts and base ideals; condescending and supercilious to her younger brother, who is going to the dogs, and she knows it; reading stuff about art and ethical culture, so as to appear clever to the men with whom she consorts, while her crippled and heart-broken mother is night and day at the drudgery of housework. This wronged wife whom we are asked to pity is meantime as hard as brass to the fact that she is blasting her own and the family's reputation. She flings her drunken husband out of doors, and he is scarcely gone when she flies off to questionable cafés, is found in taxicabs late at night with strangers who assault her; she deliberately leads a man, step by step, towards sin; never utters a prayer to God or attends to her religious duties, except once when she was in danger of death, and then she found peace; sneers at the baptism of her baby, insults the venerable priest, a life-long friend of the family, by telling him to his face that she knew her duty better than he or the Church could tell her, and after abandoning her old mother, gives up her faith, hurries to the divorce court and with all possible expedition, while evading the law in her own part of the country, is married before a Justice of the Peace to a man who had previously proposed a murderous plan to rid her of her husband. How long she remained with this monster, who was worse than her drunken husband, we are not told. But that flash-light on the character of No. 2 brings out very clearly the fact which all sensible men are aware of, viz.: that divorce is not the panacea it is said to be for the evils of the matrimonial state. Nor has the rich Socialist, who wrote this sensational story, which he or some one else has hastened to put on the stage, any knowledge of genuine Catholic women, or of the means they have at their disposal to repair the greatest disasters or survive the greatest tragedies of life.

A Non-Catholic View of the Britannica

Although the Encyclopædia Britannica floundered badly when it attempted to treat Catholic subjects by handing them over to people who knew nothing about them, the superstition still prevails in the minds of a good many people, that on all other matters, historical, scientific, political, geographical, etc., it is above reproach. Not a few even may accept the assurance given when the work was launched on the world that "it contains the most complete, comprehensive, thorough, and absolutely precise statement of fact on every topic of human interest."

The scholarly American Historical Review of October, 1911, published by The Macmillan Company, of London, rudely shatters this illusion. "The besetting danger of encyclopædias," it says, "has been the omniscience of the editors." To obviate such dangers in this instance, the editor associated with himself a number of 'advisers.' But, unfortunately, neither Mr. Chisholm, the editor-in-chief, nor his chief assistant editor, Mr. Phillips, who chose these 'advisers,' was known to the world of readers by work in any special period save the most modern; and their colleagues were scarcely known at all. No doubt each in the field of his own preparation was admirably fitted for such duties as a cyclopædia may wisely commit to unproved pens; but for the revision of old articles or the writing of new, no training and no promise can to the users of a cyclopædia take the place of that proved special knowledge which alone can give authority. Yet to the pens of these, it must be feared, must be ascribed, not only the revision, but the great mass of the unsigned articles, historical, biographical, geographical. The most daring of this staff is indisputably Mr. Phillips, the chief assistant. With a temerity almost appalling he ranges over nearly the whole field of European history, political, social, ecclesiastical, now astonishing us by the keenness of his fresh research, now perpetuating some venerable error. "Whether such work be keen or careless," adds the reviewer, "is little to the point; the grievance is that it lacks authority."

The information vouchsafed us in the geographical articles is sometimes borrowed from guide books, and the biographies rely on other encyclopædias and biographical dictionaries, with the result that we are deluged with information that has long since been discredited.

The Review furnishes us with a list of errors a page long. Doubtless space forbade the mention of others. These errors, we are told, display a lamentable ignorance of the latest works on the topics treated. Thus, for instance, the very easy subject of Joan of Arc, which passed the scrutiny of the editor-in-chief himself, Mr. Chisholm, turns out to be only a revision of the wretched article in the ninth edition, long passages of which remain untouched. Some errors are removed, others are added. Had it been given to Mr. Lang, who is an authority on the subject, he would not have put Domremy "in the Vosges," nor have been guilty of the many other blunders with which the article teems.

AMERICA, some time ago, had the misfortune to excite the ire of the editor of the Encyclopædia by calling attention to the meagre character of the bibliography of the article which he had offensively set down as "Jesuitism." It appears now that the Jesuits were not the only victims, and we are consoled by reading in the Review, from which we quote, that "the weakest thing about the new Britannica is the inadequacy of its bibliographies. The most important source, the latest or the foremost monographs in English go often unmentioned."

The writer employs the words "in English," advisedly. They have a sting in them, for they imply that if the compilers of the Encyclopædia were ignorant, even of works in English, it was to be expected that the contributions to science, written in other languages, would be beyond their ken. Germany especially, it is pointed out, fared badly in this respect. "It fell into editorial hands and chiefly to a young scholar scarcely known as yet to print. As a first attempt in a difficult field his sketch is not disgraceful, and it well may be a prelude to achievement worth the while, but it is far from the ripe work to be expected on such a subject in the Encyclopædia Britannica and both its text and the somewhat chaotic bibliography at its end abound in misconceptions and inadequacies."

"Great irregularity, too, prevails throughout the work in the citation of titles and the description of books. More vexatious still are the misprints to be found on almost every page, especially in proper names and in passages from foreign tongues. A vigorous young scholarship at the editorial desk might have done much to remedy this evil," but that editorial energy is unfortunately the original sin in which this publication was conceived. It is not very flattering for us to be informed that it was precisely this "energy" in writing that was counted on to recommend the Encyclopædia to people on this side of the Atlantic. That is what is meant by "Americanizing" the work. "But it is an Americanizing," says the Review, "which few Americans will welcome." Ripe scholarship was not thought to be acceptable here.

On the whole the more one examines the Britannica the more it appears to be a very ragged affair; not worth the money that was paid for it.

Is the Pope Still a Sovereign?

During the celebration held at Le Mans, France, some two years ago, in honor of Blessed Joan of Arc, a certain M. Pavie, it may be remembered, who had decorated his windows with the Papal banner was promptly brought before a magistrate by a zealous prefect for disobeying the order that no flag should be displayed which did not carry the national colors either of France or foreign nations. "But yellow and white," explained M. Pavie, respectfully, "are the colors of the Pope of Rome, who is unquestionably a foreign Sovereign," whereupon the astute judge dismissed the case.

But the ministry of persecutors now ruling France were not at all pleased with this decision, so the case was carried to the Criminal Division of the Supreme Court, which has lately reversed, as in duty bound, the sentence of the magistrate of Le Mans, and solemnly declared that:

"The Papal banner in white and yellow is no longer a flag of a foreign nation, since the sovereignty of which it was formerly the symbol has ceased to exist, as a consequence of the annexation of the Papal States to the Kingdom of Italy."

M. Louis Delzons, however, in the Revue des Deux Mondes, takes issue with the court's findings, and asking with Spuller the pertinent question, "Do you imagine the sovereignty of the Pope depends on a handful of dirt?" Even the law of guarantees, M. Delzons shows, places the Holy Father in the same state of immunity as a sovereign, and recalls to his readers that prior to the breach of diplomatic relations in 1904 the French government itself recognized the Pope as a sovereign.

"I judge that it is not doubtful to anyone that the Holy See is still actually as great a political power as before the suppression of its temporalities," said M. Duclerc in the Senate, in 1882, "for it is to the Pope, the Sovereign Pontiff, to the man invested with a great moral power that other great political powers of Europe sent Ambassadors."

Nay, even M. Waldeck Rousseau, the father of the iniquitous associations law that opened the campaign against the Church, wrote, in 1901, to the procurator-general of Dijon:

"I have the honor to inform you, in accordance with a communication from the Minister of Foreign Affairs, that the Papal banner in white and yellow is that of a sovereign."

But in modern anti-clericals we must not look for consistency, it seems, nor exact too much from their feeble memories.

Resolutions of the Eucharistic Congress

It is with great pleasure we notice that the title, "Pope of the Blessed Sacrament," has been adopted for the Holy Father by the Fifth National Eucharistic Congress. The resolutions drawn up are filled with that fervor and zeal which the disciples at Emmaus felt when the Lord was revealed to them in the breaking of the bread. There is one resolution especially which will be of particular interest to the readers of AMERICA. It concerns the Frequent Communion Guild, of whose organization and work a full description was given in our issue of August 5, 1911. The following is the recommendation which the Congress humbly presents to the Vicar of Christ:

"RESOLVED: That the National Eucharistic Congress of Cincinnati, while expressing its pleasure at the organized efforts thus far made by the association known as the 'Frequent Communion Guild,' to spread the practice of frequent and daily Communion amongst all classes of the faithful, ventures humbly to make the request that the Holy See consider the advisability of approving this association, and thus rendering it a permanent and fruitful means of carrying out the wishes of the Holy Father as expressed in the decree 'Sacra Tridantina Synodus.'"

A Protestant Witness

In the October Atlantic, the Rev. George Parkin Atwater, an Episcopal clergyman of Akron, Ohio, instead of echoing the often-heard lament over the lack of men in the ministry, maintains, on the contrary, that the "ministry is an overcrowded profession." "With due allowance," he says, "for an exceptional condition here and there, every community has more ministers than it needs for the proper spiritual development of the people." He then cites cases of villages of only five thousand people that have as many as ten churches and ten ministers. Pleading earnestly for the union of churches, he shows how "the Christian forces by divisions and subdivisions are becoming the source of vast woe and distress to themselves. It is not too much to say that the principle of subdivision into sects is destructive of Christianity. It subverts authority and it weakens faith."

From a Protestant minister these are strong words, but they are no less true than those he writes not long after, as he regards admiringly the example of effective administration afforded by Roman Catholics. "In cities where they equal in number the other Christians they have fewer churches," he attests, "and fewer priests. And the churches are filled, because the Roman Catholics have preserved the principle of authority, which the denominational system has entirely broken down."

Doubtless. But the diluted Christianity that would necessarily result from the union of those ten Protestant sects would hardly give birth to the principle of authority that is so desirable.

—•••—

It is with feelings of dismay or rather of consternation that we find in a recent edition of one of our Catholic exchanges a display advertisement of a shockingly indecent play, which has already been anathematized by the Church authorities, and whose very name we dislike to mention. How the editor could have knowingly admitted into his paper such a horrible quarter of a column with the accompanying lewd and suggestive picture we cannot conceive, except by ascribing it to a reprehensible lack of supervision of his advertising matter or, perhaps, of financial control. The effect on Catholic families of this authoritative journalistic invitation to a theatrical performance, which both insults morality and assails religion, must have been one of horror, amazement and disgust. The editor owes an apology and an explanation to his subscribers, and to the public at large.

A THEOLOGIAN'S TROUBLES ABOUT THE BRITANNICA

An interesting controversy has arisen as to a statement in the Encyclopædia Britannica about "Attrition." Perhaps we can get some light on the subject by examining carefully what the Encyclopædia says under the two headings "Attrition" and "Penance"; for we assume that the two articles have been written, if not by the same pen, at least under the same guidance and with the same intent. Had there been an article on "Contrition," it would also have served our purpose, but there is no such article in the Encyclopædia, although Contrition is a topic of far wider importance than Attrition.

Under the heading "Attrition" we find just eight lines of matter, and under the heading "Penance" we find thirty-nine. Of Attrition the Encyclopædia says:—

"Theologians have also distinguished 'attrition' from 'contrition,' in the matter of sin as an imperfect stage in the process of repentance; attrition being due to the servile fear of the consequences of sin, contrition to filial fear of God and hatred of sin for his sake. It has been held among the Roman Catholics that in the sacrament of penance attrition becomes contrition."

Under the title "Penance" we read:—

"In the Roman Catholic Church the sacrament of penance consists of three parts, contritio, confessio, satisfactio. Contritio is in fact repentance as Protestant theologians understand it, i.e., sorrow from sin arising from love of God, and long before the Reformation the schoolmen debated the question whether complete 'contrition' was or was not in itself sufficient to obtain the Divine pardon. The Council of Trent, however, decided that 'reconciliation' could not follow such contrition without the other parts of the sacrament which form a part of it (sine sacramenti voto, quod in illa includitur). . . . In the middle ages 'doing' penance was often a process as terrible and humiliating to the penitent as it was possibly edifying to the Church."

In these two articles I find the writer is shift and inaccurate, and I think mischievous if not malevolent. It is inaccurate to say that contrition, as distinguished from attrition, arises from a filial fear of God. There may be a filial fear of God without contrition, as distinguished from attrition, and there may be contrition without any act of fear. The Encyclopædia should rather have said that contrition as distinguished from attrition arises from the love of God for his own sake. If contrition, as some think, may arise from another motive, this does not justify the introduction of filial fear into the definition.

As to the belief "among Catholics that attrition becomes contrition in the sacrament of penance," I cannot tell exactly what the writer in the Encyclopædia means. Does he mean that this is an opinion now held among Catholics or an opinion that was held in bygone days? Again, what does he mean by the phrase "among the Roman Catholics"? Does he mean that all Roman Catholics held the opinion? If so, he is wrong. If he means that only some Roman Catholics held it, why doesn't he say so? And if this is what he means is it worth recording in an Encyclopædia? In a short article of only eight lines why put down among Roman Catholic beliefs an opinion that many great Catholic theologians, as Suarez, put down as false. It looks singular that the writer of an article of eight lines should waste time on such subtle points of controversy and cull from theological treatises a sentence that has four different meanings in Catholic theology, and I may add, not one of them now of any practical interest, even to a Catholic.

I come now to the article on "Penance." It is inaccurate to say that contrition,—when enumerated with confession and satisfaction,—as a part of the sacrament of penance is "sorrow for sin arising from the love of God." Contrition may be perfect or imperfect, and in either form it may be a part of the sacrament, and in its imperfect form it does not arise from the love of God. The writer confuses contrition taken generically with contrition taken in its specific sense of sorrow based on love.

Again the author is obscure, I should rather say misleading in his English when he speaks of the decision of the Council of Trent. What justifies a sinner apart from the sacrament of penance is contrition including the desire of the other parts, and not contrition "followed" by the other parts of the sacrament.

In this article again the author has to tell us how the "schoolmen debated," etc., etc. Why does the Encyclopædia so insistently harp on questions "debated" by the schoolmen and long ago settled? From these two articles alone a person might easily imagine that the Encyclopædia had been written to gratify a multitude of old fogies who like to hear about warfare in the Catholic Church and imagine they are safe in their position when they read of a far-off battle among the schoolmen. These questions might be fittingly and usefully treated in an extensive history of scholastic theology, but to give them place in a popular and compendious work like the Encyclopædia, and especially in such two short articles as "Attrition" and "Penance," is a fact that should make Catholics pause before touching the Encyclopædia Britannica. And as to the old persons mentioned above, I should imagine that a clear and accurate statement of Catholic belief as it exists to-day all the world over, is what would do them most good, and what a high-minded and high-principled Encyclopædia should try to give them. The exact history of "battles long ago" in theology is matter for deeper thinkers and for minds more active in the work of hard and wearisome analysis.

Lastly, the Encyclopædia says: "In the middle ages 'doing' penance was often a process as terrible and humiliating to the penitent as it was possibly edifying to the Church." Why the "middle ages?" Why not the earliest ages as well as the middle ages? And again, why "possibly" edifying? Why not "edifying" without the adverb? And if the author had a conscientious scruple about stating the fact absolutely, why did he not omit the fact? I cannot help wondering what made his scruple and its object so important that they should be recorded in the Encyclopædia.

One word more. The two articles are unsigned, and we have to judge them by what they say and by the company in which they are found, and at times they are found in very bad company.

SACERDOS.

LITERATURE

The Rise of the Greek Epic. By GILBERT MURRAY, Regius Professor of Greek in the University of Oxford. The Clarendon Press, Oxford, 1911.

The triumphant spade in recent years has been unearthing so much Homeric pottery, that it is refreshing to find a scholar who preludes a series of eleven lectures on "The Rise of the Greek Epic" with the words:—"These lectures form the first part of an attempt to study the growth of Greek poetry from a particular point of view, namely, as a force and the embodiment of a force making for the progress of the human race." By progress the author means "some movement towards the attainment of that 'chief end of man,' which is, according to the magnificent definition of the document known in Scotland as the 'Shorter Catechism,' 'to glorify God and enjoy Him for ever.'"

"To glorify God and enjoy him for ever"—strange words indeed in connection with the vexed Homeric question! Yet the lecturer insists again and again that this is his aim; he endeavors constantly to show that Greek Literature is in its growth "an expression of the struggle of the human soul towards freedom and ennoblement." Keeping this aim in view we may take a closer look at the lectures.

Mr. Murray rejects the synonymous use of "Greek" and "Pagan"; in his opinion all classical literature shows that the "Greek" and the "Pagan" are direct opposites. "The Pagan man," he says, "is really the unregenerate human animal, and Hellenism is a collective name for the very forces which, at the time under discussion, strove for his regeneration."

The fact that here and there in Greek literature, we come across acts more in keeping with the state of the "unregenerate human animal" than with that of the progressive Greek does not militate against the lecturer's claims. He admits that the Greeks were struggling hard to beat down and lose sight of the old Pagan vices. Human sacrifice, slavery, the subjection of women, immorality and cruelty—these are the great degrading facts which, Mr. Murray asserts, the Greeks in their Epic forming period gradually fought against, gradually eliminated. He offers as proof of this, citations from various Greek writers; Euripides, he says, was a great defender of Woman's Right, and adds as an argument for the respect shown to women that the magnificent file of heroines in Greek tragedy, both for good and for evil, Clytemnestra, Antigone, Alcestis, Polyxena, Jocasta, even Phaedra and Medea, could not surely have sprung out of a society in which no free women existed.

As the lectures run on, however, in spite of the definite aim which the lecturer set before him, he seems in many places to have lost sight of it. Questions of the Migrations, the Birth of Homer, Ancient Traditional Books, the Alexandrian critics, and a host of other complicated and unsettled points so envelope what the author laid down as his particular point of view, that much of the interest we hoped for in the beginning is lost. Space forbids us to touch separately on each question. However, Lectures IV and V, "An Ancient Traditional Book," and "The Iliad as a Traditional Book," are worthy of careful attention both from the parallel drawn from scripture and from such remarks as:—"I will not lay stress on mythology, such as we find in the story of Samson (p. 134)," nor on what I may call Romance, or the story-teller's instinct, such as we find in the narratives of David and Joseph. The "Mythology" of Samson and the "Romance" of David and Joseph suggest, it would seem, a somewhat skeptical attitude towards the Old Testament narratives.

Moreover, we find here and there throughout the lectures, passages offensive to Catholic sentiment. Speaking of the ancient worship of the dead, the lecturer says: "All Asia Minor is still strewn with the graves of innumerable worthies, whom the course of history has turned into Mahometan Walis or Christian Saints." The "innumerable worthies" of pre-Christian times never carried their worthiness far enough to be enrolled on the Christian calendar of saints. More repellent still to Christian minds is the use the author makes of our titles of the Madonna. He speaks of the pre-Hellenic worship of a Korê or maiden; the Korê passes through certain stages and—"As we meet the full-flown deities of classical Greece, the 'Athenaia Korê has become the virgin Pallas Athena; the Argive Korê is Hera, the wife of Zeus; others are merged in Artemis or Aphrodite." Then he adds with reference to the geographical names in vogue for the various Korai:—"If names like Paphia, Cypris, Cytherea, Erycina, etc., persist throughout antiquity, it clearly means that even when a certain set of Korai were definitely merged under the name of Aphrodite, still Our Lady of Paphos was felt to be different from Our Lady of Cythera or of Eryx."

Now, since the "Argive Korê" of earlier times has become Hera, the wife of Zeus in "the full-flown deities of classical Greece," this is all the more reason why the association of the beautiful title of Our Lady with such ancient erotic patronesses is nothing short of insulting to the Mother of God and destructive of the high ideal which Catholics have of the Queen of Heaven. The idea of the Madonna is a distinctly Catholic one, full of reverence and devotion, and in his endeavor to show how Greek poetry may help man "to glorify God and enjoy him for ever," Mr. Murray should be careful not to transgress the bounds of Christian and Catholic sensibilities. He does this when he adorns Aphrodite with Our Lady's revered titles.

Each of the large Homeric questions spoken of doubtless has its bearing on the author's viewpoint, but he leads us too far afield, and as the lecturer began with a view to showing how Greek Literature was a force helping man "to glorify God and enjoy him for ever," so from this standpoint only, we criticize and feel that this work of scholarly finish would increase in interest if many points only indirectly relevant to the matter in hand were eliminated, or placed in a special volume.

J. S. H.

The Presidential Campaign of 1860. By EMERSON DAVID FITE, Ph.D. New York: The Macmillan Company. Price, $2.00 net.

"It is time that the words 'traitors,' 'conspirators,' 'rebels,' and 'rebellion' be discarded. . . . History, then, must adjudge that both sides in the controversy were [subjectively] right, and that the war was bound to come when the opposing sides conscientiously held, the one to the wrong, the other to the right of slavery." We heartily concur. A delay of half a century is not a day too long before undertaking to write the history of a campaign which, from the momentous issues involved and from the tremendous consequences that followed, must needs hold a unique place in the life of our nation.

It was the favor of Heaven, we think, that the Republicans failed to seat that cheap rover, John C. Frémont, whose greatness began when he happily married into a good family. The Republicans of the day were a strange composite of rather ill-assorted elements. Their cardinal doctrine, opposition to the further extension of slavery, had not originated with them; it had been appropriated bodily from resolutions passed by every Democratic free State, with one lonesome exception. They had but one plank which they could claim as exclusively their own, for it had been rejected by both Democrats and Whigs. It was the Free Homestead Law, which squeezed its way through Congress only to die under President Buchanan's veto.

The election of 1856 was a reconnaissance in force as a preparation for the struggle of 1860. To our mind, Professor Fite attaches too great importance to John Brown and his doings in their bearing on the result. Personally, we are satisfied that Brown was a madman. If the Pottawatomie massacre, which he planned and executed, was in itself proper and praiseworthy, we are persuaded that there can in no case be such a thing as coldblooded, deliberate murder. While in the domain of moral accountability, conscience is and must remain the supreme tribunal, it is more than merely possible that many actions which there pass muster will not fare the same way when judged by those whose duty it is to preserve and defend sacred rights. The individual, even the collective, conscience has its frailties, its limitations; the final verdict must be pronounced by Almighty God.

The campaign of 1860 was one of measures, not of men. Though feeling ran high, it was not disgraced by those personalities which have at times been the chief ammunition of the warring speakers. If Stephen A. Douglas was depicted as walking the tightrope of Mason and Dixon's line with the Dred Scott decision on one side and popular sovereignty on the other as balancers, if the supporters of Lincoln were ungraciously reminded that he had denounced the Mexican war as "unnecessary and unconstitutional commenced," if sympathetic New Yorkers rung bells and bawled "auction" when the Bell fusionists paraded, all this was political warfare and not an attack on the private life of a candidate. For this reason, the chapter on Campaign Arguments is to be highly commended for the light that it throws on the contest. Besides the four platforms, which are given in full, there is a typical campaign speech by a recognized power in each party. An elaborate index closes the volume.

Those who are by this time far enough removed from those scenes to read and ponder dispassionately will be richly rewarded for the careful study that they devote to this history of the campaign of 1860.

H. J. S.

"A Miracle on American Soil," by REV. E. BERNARD, S.J., is a modest brochure republished from the Messenger of some years ago. Miracles have not been so rare in our land as some imagine, but this relates one of the few American miracles which have received the solemn sanction of the Holy See. It is substantially the story of Mary Wilson who, born in Canada of Orange Presbyterian parents, and converted at 16 in St. Louis under very remarkable circumstances, sought admission to the Sacred Heart Community. In the hope of obtaining sufficient health she was sent as a postulant to the Sacred Convent, Grand Coteau, La., and when she became so ill that the doctors pronounced recovery impossible, a novena was made to Blessed John Berchmans, who appeared to her and cured her instantaneously. This was one of the three miracles recited in the Process of Canonization of St. John Berchmans. There are large possibilities in the narrative for further development, for, apart from edification, the facts and characters are as interesting as they are exceptional. An enlarged volume containing illustrations and a complete account of persons and places should prove welcome and useful to the public.

Our readers are cautioned against buying a new edition of "The Imitation of Christ, by Thomas à Kempis, with Twenty-four Colored Reproductions from the Old Masters," now being published by Little, Brown & Co., Boston. To make the book unobjectionable to Protestants the text has been shamefully garbled. For instance, that section of the last chapter of the first book which mentions with praise "the Carthusians and Cistercians, and the monks and nuns of divers orders" is left out completely, yet nothing is said to indicate the omission, while the entire fourth book, on Holy Communion, furnishes numberless examples of this unscrupulous "editing."

The Rev. C. W. Collins in No. 10 of the 5th volume of AMERICA, it may be remembered, passed well-merited strictures on such an abuse of A Kempis's incomparable volume.

Mgr. Grosch, Rector of St. John's, London, remarks in the preface to some two-dozen "Sermons and Lectures" he delivered in various town halls and churches of England, that "Books of sermons and discourses are already very numerous; originality of matter, or even novelty in the manner of treating it, is almost impossible of attainment." Originality and novelty indeed are not very conspicuous in this book, but the sermons are earnest and have the saving grace of brevity, while the lectures on the Church, which were evidently meant for non-Catholic hearers, are clear and convincing. The volume is sold by the Benzigers.

How popular even with English-speaking readers is St. Teresa's admirable biography, is indicated by the appearance of the fourth edition of David Lewis' excellent translation. Benedict Zimmerman, O.C.D., has re-edited the work, written an introduction and added new notes, and Benziger Brothers ask $2.65 for the book. For a frontispiece there is a well-known portrait of the saint that, as Cardinal Wiseman observes, does not represent a nun of an enraptured, languishing type, such as many would imagine this famous mystic to be, but shows us rather a religious with a strong, almost masculine face, in which it is not hard to see the promoter of the Carmelite reform.

An article in the Irish Summer Magazine by the confidential secretary of Isaac Butt, founder of the Home Rule movement, gives many interesting items, not generally known, concerning the Irish tribune. Mr. Butt, though a Protestant, indulged in several Catholic practices. He kept a crucifix on the desk in his study and beside it St. Alphonsus Liguori's "The Glories of Mary," a book which he read frequently and greatly treasured. Mr. Collins, the writer of the reminiscences, "often heard him, when reading the book, express in most endearing tones his veneration for the Mother of God." He carried three religious medals in his pocket book, and was careful to have them in his Counsellor's gown while pleading in court. When engaged in important cases he would arrange to have a Mass said to assist him in his advocacy, and he was wont to contribute to the maintenance of an altar dedicated to the Perpetual Adoration of the Blessed Sacrament. He had made all arrangements to spend some time in Mount Melleray, in the room occupied by O'Connell during his stay at the Trappist Monastery, when he was suddenly stricken by the fatal illness that resulted in his death. He was buried, by his wish, at Stranorlar, Donegal, the home of the O'Donnells, with whom he claimed kinship, and his head rests in death on the Catholic medals which he wore in life.

BOOKS RECEIVED

- The Presidential Campaign of 1860. By Emerson D. Fite, Ph.D. New York: The Macmillan Co. Net $2.00.
 Social France in the XVII Century. By Cecile Hugon. New York: The Macmillan Co. Net $3.00.
 The Louvain American College. 1857-1907. By the Rev. J. Van der Heyden. Louvain: The Author, Rue de Namur 143.
 The American Dramatist. By Montrose J. Moses. Boston: Little, Brown & Co. Net $2.50.
 The Superstition Called Socialism. By G. W. Tunzelmann. Philadelphia, Pa.: J. B. Lippincott & Co. Net $1.50.
 Rebellion. By Joseph Medill Patterson. Chicago: The Reilly & Britton Co. Net $1.25.
 Of the Imitation of Christ. By Thomas à Kempis. With Twenty-four Colored Reproductions from the Old Masters. Boston: Little, Brown & Co. Net $1.25.
 Dominican Mission Book, and Manual of General Devotions. Compiled from Sources Chiefly Dominican, by a Dominican Father. New York: Benziger Bros. Net 75 cents.
 Benziger's Home Annual for 1912. New York: Benziger Bros. Net 25 cents.

German Publications:

- Marien-Kalender für 1912. Net 20 cents. Benziger Bros.
 Einsiedler-Kalender für 1912. Net 15 cents. Benziger Bros.

Latin Publication:

- Brevior Synopsis Theologiæ Moralis et Pastoralis. Auctoribus A. Tanqueray et E. M. Quevastre. New York: Benziger Bros. Net $1.50.

French Publications:

- Considerations sur l'éternité. Par R. P. Dréxeli, S.J. Traduites par Mgr. Belet. Troisième Edition. Paris: P. Tequi, 82 Rue Bonaparte. Prix 2 Fr.
 La Bouddhisme Primitif. Par Alfred Roussel. Paris: P. Tequi. Prix 4 Fr.
 Le Chemin de la Vérité. Par M. Le Comte de Champagny. Nouvelle Edition. Paris: P. Tequi. Prix 2 Fr.
 Le Guide de la Jeunesse. Par M. l'Abbé de Lamennais. Paris: P. Tequi. Prix 1 Fr.

Spanish Publications:

- La Curia Romana. Según la Novísima Disciplina decretada por Pío X. Por el R. P. Juan B. Ferreres, S.J. Madrid: Administración de Razon y Fé. Precio 6 Pts.
 Le Muerte Real y La Muerte Aparente. Con Relación a los Santos Sacramentos. Por el R. P. Juan B. Ferreres, S.J. Madrid: Administración de Razon y Fé. Precio 1, 50.
 Los Esponsales y el Matrimonio. Comentario Canonico Moral sobre el Decreto Ne Temere. Por el R. P. Juan B. Ferreres, S.J. Madrid: Administración de Razon y Fé. Precio 3, 50.

EDUCATION

Education, whether in the home, the school or the church, is a continuous process; it must proceed on uniform principles without antagonism or contradiction. It is a training of faculties, analogous to that which is known as "training" in the world of athletics—but with this vital difference, that it lasts, without pause, till we pass through the portals of death. It is, therefore, not a matter of occasional spasms of effort, with seasons of repose or collapse between. Hence it is that modern scientific pedagogy rightly emphasizes the principle of unity and concentration and continuity in the training of the faculties of the child. The reason that urges educationists in our time to insist strongly upon the need of a systematic and orderly process in teaching methods reaching down through the lowest elementary grades is not, then, as many seem to presume, because these grades are steps in the preparation for secondary, college and university training and the universities set the standard. The great mass of the citizenship of every land will never come to enjoy the advantages of advanced school training; yet educational leaders never grow weary in their efforts to establish certain ideals and, by a process of teachers' training, to introduce into the common schools certain methods and courses which shall prove most efficient in securing to boys and girls the fullest development the limited school training open to them affords.

* * *

There was a time when orderly system, involving uniform courses with an assurance that practically the same grade of efficiency in the work done resulted in all schools, was not a characteristic of Catholic parish schools. The defect was due to no lack of appreciation of the need and of the intrinsic worth of such uniformity; rather was it the effect of harassing perplexities frequently pressing in upon the directors of these schools from sources entirely foreign to the question of teaching methods. The enormous expense resulting from the double and continuous tax or fine imposed upon Catholics—one for the education which they cannot in conscience accept, the other for the education which they can—for years made the problem of instituting and supporting a Catholic parochial school almost exclusively one of material ways and means. Happily that day is ended. Catholic elementary schools are daily growing in numbers to meet the constant increase of Catholic children who crowd their classrooms; and they are ever widening in efficiency to adjust themselves to the requirements of true modern education. Thorough organization of our schools in the various dioceses, with a head appointed by the chief ecclesiastical authority in the diocese, is now the rule. From this central authority the whole school system is beginning to be developed along lines which exclude haphazard processes and experimenting, and, in the main, hold the schools throughout the diocese to one approved and up-to-date course of instruction. This splendid step forward is made possible by permitting the central authority to designate what shall be taught, the requirements of teachers, and indeed all matters pertaining to school direction. The immediate consequence noted in dioceses which have adopted the policy is the promotion of a steady and harmonious working toward one great aim and ideal—thoroughness in elementary training. There are other results of beneficial influence. Whilst uniformity in the courses insisted upon does not do away with the individuality of the teacher or prevent the capable teacher from exerting his superior knowledge or attainments for the good of the school system, it does limit the possibility of certain evils likely to be present where that individuality is subject to no control. There is little opportunity allowed to waste time on non-essentials, on fads and fancies; there is small likelihood that our schools may be built up on a merely theoretical and impractical basis; there is a certain assurance that an intemperate zeal will not be permitted to look to the benefit of the few who enter High School and ignore the interests of the many who do not go beyond the elementary grades.

* * *

To be sure we do not mean to affirm that these happy effects are realized from the presence simply of uniformity in school courses. The writer has before him the report of an investigator appointed by the editor of a New York paper to interview capable teachers who have long been engaged in elementary school work here in the metropolis. The information it conveys seems calculated to make one go slowly in predicating the advantages of a fixed system for elementary schools. In a city where the teachers are declared to be the best equipped in the world and where the most modern methods and educational appliances are in use, competent critics appear to deem the system followed in the city's public schools somewhat of a joke. Complaints are made that the average New York boy when he leaves the elementary schools "cannot add up a column of figures correctly nor subtract nor multiply nor divide, although, to be sure, he can weave baskets and cut out figures from colored paper."

* * *

When, however, one insists upon the helpfulness of uniformity and continuity in a school system he has in mind, naturally, a system not built on impractical methods and fads, but one that has been evolved from a prudent study of the ideal sought in the school training—thoroughness—in the special phase of development the system is presumed to seek. And it is precisely this quality that we claim to find in the systems which present day progress in Catholic elementary schools has introduced in various dioceses of the land. A notable evidence is that presented in the Course of Study and Syllabi just published by the New York Catholic School Board for the elementary schools of the archdiocese.

* * *

A fair test of the merit of work scheduled for an elementary school is that mapped out in the Arithmetic syllabus. Experienced teachers are agreed that in no branch taught the little ones is there opportunity to judge the definite purpose of the entire course and the practical aim sought to be attained in it, such as that afforded by the manner in which they are drilled in Arithmetic. Much time must be given to forming the habits of correct adding, subtracting, multiplying and dividing; problems, properly so called, requiring the application of logical analysis should not be introduced until the pupil shall have completely mastered these fundamental processes, and the old-fashioned, readily understood "sums" should, therefore, form the ordinary exercise work in the two or three lowest grades; each grade should be devoted to the teaching of some particular topic and there should be no overlapping of these topics. This overlapping, say practical teachers, the taking up of decimals, for instance, in one grade, whilst long division is still being taught, muddles the pupil and destroys the ordinary possibility of thorough work. All these requirements are found in an excellent degree in the new Syllabus for New York's Catholic elementary schools, and the prudent regard shown for expert opinion in this course is equally marked in the work scheduled throughout. Were one inclined to pick a flaw in a scheme so generally praiseworthy, regret might be expressed that a fault noticed in late years in some elementary school programs is given permanency in the Board's schedule. It seems to us that the plan of holding the eighth year common school work for a general review of the entire field of arithmetic is now commonly conceded to give better assurance of practical good, than is that of permitting the children of that grade to nibble at the elements of algebra—a branch whose usefulness is not assured to one who will not enjoy the privilege of studying it more fully than will the ordinary parish school pupil.

There may arise occasion to discuss in particular detail the syllabi of the New York course making up what a tried teacher will not fail to recognize as a model scheme of school work for the ordinary boy and girl. Its purpose frankly is to provide the child attending the Catholic elementary school with the best general training suitable to its years and capacity; there is in it no suggestion of specialization—its purpose is to give that measure of mental drill which will constitute the "something more" than mere facility in bread winning which even the average child should enjoy. After-possibilities, that obtain in the case of the few who shall know the privilege of advanced formation, are not the standards determining its scope. The old-fashioned three R's are its main matter and the idea of thoroughness pervades its every step. The grade work, whether in English, arithmetic, history and geography, or religion, is logically thought out and planned, and the pupil who follows each course will undoubtedly be made to feel that there is something definite to learn, and he will pass from grade to grade feeling that he has actually acquired something. This idea of thoroughness is apparent even in the lesson plans, or lists, drawn up to mark how the instruction is divided according to subjects and hours in the week; to the essentials in elementary training is assigned always the lion's share of the twenty-five hours making up the week's class room work in each grade and sufficient time is allotted to give to the little ones the preliminary notions regarding such practical and cultural topics, as have been proved by experience to be an admirable adjunct to the general development of the child's faculties

* * *

Naturally the "religious atmosphere," required as a vital factor in any system of education worthy of the name, is everywhere present. Not, as some little acquainted with the routine of the parochial school class room foolishly fancy, that there is provision made for the continuous direct teaching and practice of religion throughout the school day, but the schedule is insistent that the training of the children following its requirements must be permeated by religious principle. There is, to be sure, a fixed period each day, in every grade for set religious instruction; and while one finds it difficult to specially praise where there is so much that merits approval, yet it were ungracious to close our notice of the New York Catholic school course of study without a word of sincere commendation, and of congratulation as well, to the teacher or teachers who drew up the singularly excellent plan it contains for the study of the catechism. Surely its author, to quote the words of the introduction to the syllabus on religion, "must have ever kept before his mind that the teaching of religion is the compelling and paramount reason for the existence of our costly, magnificent separate system of education."

M. J. O'C.

MUSIC

The new York diocesan authorities have taken a notable step in including an excellent system of sight reading and singing in the new plan of studies which has just been given out for use in the parochial schools of the archdiocese.

The general plan prescribed has been prepared by Rev. J. B. Young, S.J., and is the result of over thirty-five years of study and practical experience with children in the primary grades of the parochial schools. The course has therefore been thoroughly tested; it is practical, and most carefully graded, while keeping the highest artistic ideals in view as its ultimate aim. The schedule as outlined begins with the first grade, and continues for four years. It assumes a minimum of two lessons a week from a music teacher, with cooperation from the regular grade teacher on intervening days. The grade teacher is expected to spend ten to fifteen minutes each day in reviewing the purely theoretical side of the last lesson and in preparing staff reading or memory work for the next lesson. This plan enables the music teacher to focus his attention upon the purely musical side of the work during the short time at his disposal.

At the beginning of the fifth year, or even sooner, the children will be prepared to read at sight and sing with trained voices all music of ordinary difficulty. They will then be ready to take up the practical study of two and three part choruses, and the Gregorian Masses from the Vatican Kyriale. It is suggested that at this point the choir master of the church should take charge of the children's training.

It is impossible to overestimate the importance of this movement, the practical foundation, solidly laid, for a future of well-trained Catholic musicians. If we have been slower than the public schools to take up the practical study of music, we can now feel confident of making up for lost time. The more definite ideal toward which we aim, and the higher type of music which our course will include, should enable our children to show results surpassing in artistic value anything that has been done hitherto.

We trust that the other dioceses of the country may follow this excellent example. Some few have already led the way, but with a unified system of musical training throughout the parochial schools of the country, we should have gone a long way indeed towards the realization of the Holy Father's most practical ideals on the subject of the reform of Sacred Music.

J. B. W.

SOCIOLOGY

The idea is prevalent that no girl goes wrong of her own free choice. One could prove its absurdity a priori with half a dozen good reasons. Its defenders rely greatly on the accounts given of themselves by persons turned over by the police magistrates to the agents of Rescue Societies. Did these benevolent women realize how little such accounts are to be trusted, they would be less confident in the matter.

This is one extreme. The other is, that every unfortunate has only herself to blame; that she has gone to her fate with eyes wide open, and that all talk about protecting her is foolish sentimentality.

The truth is, as usual, found in the middle. There are those who go wrong by choice, and they are sufficiently numerous to be more than occasional exceptions to a general rule. There are those who go wrong freely, yet who would not do so were they not thrown, so to speak, into the occasion, and these constitute the largest class; and some there are real victims of circumstances. These demand protection from society in strict justice; charity at least requires that the second class be helped. The protection of the former belongs principally to a vigilant police, who should be convinced that they have no more imperative duty: the helping of the latter is principally the affair of organized charity. We say principally, because public authority is by no means excluded from the latter function; neither is organized charity from the former.

Confining ourselves to the work of organized charity, we are gratified to be able to say that societies for the protection of young persons are springing up everywhere. They are found in Europe, as the readers of AMERICA are aware, engaged especially in looking after young women emigrating to foreign lands. They exist also in countries, such as the United States, which receive a large immigration. They are established also in many large towns whither girls go from the surrounding country seeking employment. The method usually followed is, in the case of emigrants from either the country or from foreign lands, to take the names of these and their destination, and to notify the societies on their route or at their journey's end to look out for them; and in the case of immigrants from abroad, to meet steamers and trains and take charge both of those consigned to the society's protection and of those whom the agents may judge to be fit objects of its care.

Such a society is the Catholic Women's League of Chicago, with its office at 7 West Madison street. In its prospectus, which we have before us, it begs all young persons coming to Chicago to notify it before leaving home, so that its agents may meet them and conduct them to safe lodgings and honorable employment. This is excellent as far as it goes; but it seems to us that it will not do to leave the matter to the initiative of the young people themselves. Perhaps nowhere is the utility of federation so great, or its needs so urgent, as in the case of these societies, which, if any general good is to result, must be in constant communication. In Europe this federation exists to a certain extent: it should be perfected so as to take in this side of the Atlantic. Societies in Boston, New York, Philadelphia, New Orleans, Rio Janeiro, Buenos Aires, Valparaiso, etc., should be advised by the European societies of every one emigrating under their auspices; and if the state immigration agents at such places receive a similar list of names, they may be trusted to see that none on it leaves the receiving station except under the protection of the local society. The pastors of country parishes should be furnished with the society's address in every seaport, for the benefit of emigrants, and in every large city, for those who are about to seek work in their own land, so that they may consign the lambs of their flock to safe hands, and a work so organized would have the zealous support of the diocesan authorities. As for the young people themselves, they should be given a card commending them to the care of every society on their route.

Another point worthy of notice, especially in this country, is the importance of training young people in the practice of Christian modesty, a powerful defence against danger. They should learn from childhood that the street is, by its very nature, a means to an end. We read of Sts. Basil and Gregory of Nazianzen, that when they were students they knew only two streets, one leading to the school, and the other to the church. One walking the streets only for needful exercise, should have the appearance of going somewhere. Modest haste, downcast eyes, quiet conversation with a companion will save one from molestation. But we see too little of this. But we see many sauntering along with roving eyes loud in word and laughter. They mean no harm; but for all that, they are in danger. Here is something for parents and teachers to consider.

H. W.

PULPIT, PRESS AND PLATFORM

"Penn," writing in the Evening Bulletin of Philadelphia, September 28, denounces the practice of those who stir up opposition to a political candidate on account of his religion. He says:

There is no other principle of American citizenship which is more to be valued, as it always has been, too, by such men, than the separation from our political and governmental life of all acts or practices which might lead to the proscription of any one on merely the score of his creed or his methods of worshipping his God. It is not always observed even among us Americans quite as much as it should be; the unwritten law by which a Catholic, if not also a Jew, is barred from the Presidency, and against which Mr. Roosevelt once raised a just and emphatic protest, has too much vogue, and in too many campaigns there is an unwarranted disposition to demand from candidates what they "believe" and to criticise or condemn their opinions as unworthy or as "dangerous." Thus, three years ago, even Mr. Taft, a citizen whose private and public life has presumably been much above the average of cleanliness and honor among statesmen, was subjected to numerous impudent and even insolent interrogations on the ground that, being a Unitarian, he would not, or might not, be able to administer the Presidency with a due regard to his moral obligations.

There was nothing more creditable to Mr. Roosevelt than his clear enunciation of that principle while he was President and when Mr. Taft's Unitarian beliefs were cited by some clergymen as reasons for assuming that he might be "dangerous." There he at least stood on the same ground with many of his countrymen who have not always been able to agree with him in some of his methods as an agitator of either economic or constitutional opinions. He declared that Taft's religion was nowise a thing which should give occasion for political discrimination; that speculation on the subject for the purpose of exciting opposition or prejudice against him as a candidate for office, was unjust and illegitimate, and he gave us all an interesting view of his Cabinet when he described it as made up of Protestant and Catholic, Christian and Jew—which was his way of putting the matter—sitting side by side in common loyalty to the nation and the government, and each forgetful of the religion of the other. He illustrated, too, the folly it is among most of us of the disposition to apply denominational tests to public men when he said that, if it were proper and legitimate to support or to oppose a candidate because he is a Unitarian, it would be equally so to support or to oppose him because of his opinions on such questions as justification by faith, or salvation by works, or the method of administering sacraments, and so on until really there would be no point at which the process could stop.

No trickster is meaner in his mischief than the one who deliberately strikes that false note in a political campaign.

PERSONAL.

The editorial tribute to the late Mgr. William J. White, of Brooklyn, by Edward T. Devine of the Survey is a graceful as well as a grateful recognition of the aid given by that noble priest to his fellow workers of every denomination in the field of social reforms. One may not doubt the sincerity of the man who is quick to make public acknowledgment of the services of a Catholic priest when the failure to make such acknowledgment might pass without comment. Catholics will be pleased to know the esteem in which Mgr. White was held even by those who were not of his Faith, though that knowledge will be accompanied by an added regret over his loss. The editorial notice is as follows:

Social workers of every faith pay eager homage to the memory of their fellow worker, the Very Rev. Dr. Mgr. William J. White, supervisor of Catholic Charities of Brooklyn, who died on August 29, as he was completing the forty-first year of his age. Dr. White, he has usually been to us, though we took our full share of satisfaction in the rank conferred upon him by Pope Leo for his success in the supervision of the charities of Brooklyn. More completely than almost any other man he embodied for us the rapprochement between the eternal religious tradition and the new social spirit of our own age. Of his loyalty and devotion to the Catholic Church others may more appropriately testify, though it never occurred to any of us to question it. Of his loyalty and devotion to the ideals of the modern philanthropy as they are held in common by Jew and Gentile, by Catholic and Protestant, by socialized wealth and by socialized labor movements, we were always equally assured. Dr. White's address at the Boston National Conference of Charities and Correction in June, the last of his public addresses before a general audience, was a stirring and vigorous defense of the church against the charge of being reactionary and indifferent to the material needs of men, and a luminous exposition of the attitude of the church towards social needs and social reforms as Dr. White finds it expressed especially in the encyclicals of Pope Leo XIII. Most striking is the eloquent closing paragraph of this summary, in which he brings together the threads of his argument, and pays just tribute at once to the church in whose name he speaks and to the social workers in the midst of whom he stood:

"Finally, she boasts, not without reason, that in proclaiming the sanctity and indissolubility of marriage, the solidity of domestic society, the divine origin of authority, and the need of virtue and morality in the private citizen, she has given the social worker a background for his reforms, a solid foundation upon which to build that city of God which every earnest social worker sees in vision, labors to bring down from the clouds, and which in a thousand centers of teeming humanity is slowly becoming a reality."

Sane, sincere, open-minded, sympathetic, and plain-spoken, Mgr. White was a most valuable worker, whether on the foundations or on the superstructure of that city of our visions. The national, State, and city conferences were filled with his friends, who mourn with those of his parish and of his communion, and who hope, with them, that his influence will not soon disappear from among men.—The Survey, September 30.

ECCLESIASTICAL NEWS

The estate of the Rev. Angelo Lugero, formerly of Phelps, N. Y., who died in Italy in 1909, was recently appraised at $20,000. By the will of Father Lugero, the sum of $5,000 is left to relatives in Italy; the remainder is divided as follows: St. James' Catholic Church, Trumansburg, $2,000; St. Michael's, Penn Yan, $2,000; St. Stephen's, Geneva, $1,000; the Catholic Church Extension Society, $500; Julia O'Connell, Trumansburg, $1,000, and $400 for Masses for the repose of the testator's soul.

The fourth lecture course in ecclesiastical art was recently held at the royal university of Vienna. The object was to teach ecclesiastics and those interested in the construction, beautifying and preserving of churches to distinguish between the false and the true style in art. The ancient monuments especially, it is stated, have suffered greatly in the past from an unintelligent vandalism, which was the result of false stylistic principles. The course was accompanied by a system of practical tours, under directions of competent guides, to the various churches and ecclesiastical art establishments.

Another study circle of even greater significance was that which convened in the classic halls of Innsbruck to open the first Catechetical Course held in the Tyrol. The questions under discussion were all confined to the subject of religious instruction, such as the best methods of teaching the Catechism, preparation for the reception of the sacraments in accordance with the decree on Early Communion of children, study-plans and character building.

A special evening was devoted to the consideration of parental duties, and many of the Catholic laity availed themselves of the invitation to attend at these final lectures of the course. That this most important work has received the highest recommendation of the ecclesiastical authorities it is needless to mention. Nothing can be more worthy of all encouragement in our day than the promotion of enthusiasm in the cause of catechetical instruction.

President Taft, while "swinging around the circle," was given a reception, September 21st, by the faculty and students of Nazareth Academy, Kalamazoo, Mich. While the President's suite of seventy persons entered the hall Mr. Taft stopped to greet the Reverend Mother Superior and to register in the visitors' book. After President Burke of the Commercial Club had introduced our Chief Executive, one of the pupils of the academy read a short address, and then a tiny girl pinned a gold badge to the lapel of Mr. Taft's coat. The President then arose and said, in the course of his speech:

"It is a great pleasure to be here in this institution of learning. It is an experience I have had in Michigan before, and I remember one quite like this in Monroe, where there is a Catholic girls' school, in which they took occasion to welcome me when I visited that vicinity and made an address like this expressing, what I understand to be the first tenet of the Church, 'Loyalty to the constituted authority and love of country.'

"Occasions like this show how, instead of love of Church and interest in the Church being inconsistent with love of country and interest in the nation, that the better Catholic you have, the better American you have."

SCIENCE

LIGHTNING RODS

"Constant Reader" from Detroit requests information in these pages on lightning rods. He asks: Are lightning rods of any account? Are they a sure protection against lightning if properly put on?

We must premise a few words on the proper construction of a lightning rod. First, it ought to extend above all the prominent points of a building, and end (or begin) at each in one or more points. If the roof is metallic the rod ought to be connected with it. All the architectural points of a roof, such as finials, railings and the like, will then act as so many ends to the rod. Then the rod ought to be brought down over all the sides of the house, in the more places the better, the idea being to cover the house, as it were, with a netting. For this purpose the spouting and toilet room ventilators will be very serviceable. All the connections must be clean and tight, soldered if possible. There is no need of insulating the rod from the side of the house. The lower ends should run into some imperishable and conducting substances and into moist ground. Underground pipes make excellent terminals.

The action of a lightning rod is twofold. First, the row of points at the top, as some say, allows the opposite charge, which the overhanging cloud has generated in the house by induction, to run up from the ground and neutralize that of the cloud. Others hold that they offer a better path for the bolt when it does strike the house. Secondly, the strands on the sides of the house keep the electric charge on the outside of it.

Lightning rods are necessary for isolated buildings. We cannot claim that they are an absolute protection in all cases, because it may happen that the overhead charge is so great that the rod cannot carry all of it, or comes up so suddenly that it has not sufficient time to act. In that case the house may be struck in spite of its rods. It is highly probable, however, that in all ordinary storms a good rod is an excellent protection.

Why does lightning strike so seldom in cities? Because the many spires and steel structures and the many wires dissipate the charge very quickly.

Why so often in the country? Because buildings are isolated.

Why are rods not used in cities? They are not so necessary, for the reason given.

If rods are a protection, why do insurance companies not give better rates to persons whose buildings are rodged? This is a matter of business. The reasons may be, first, because a lightning rod is not an absolutely certain protection. Secondly, because, although rods may be put up properly, they are generally neglected and then out of order. Thirdly, there is a question of the risk, since a building may be as likely visited by lightning as by any other accident. In practice, the expense is about the same, whether we pay the premium or keep the rod in order. And in the first case we have the advantage of the insurance when the lightning does strike.

WILLIAM F. RIGGE, S.J.

Hypochlorites, now freely used in the purification of drinking water, when brought in contact with the metal parts of the supply system, seriously impair their longevity. In consequence an ingenious device is now used for applying this chemical direct to water under pressure. The pressure is so regulated by mechanical contrivances that the solution is forced through the feed pipe at a rate always proportional to the existing rate of flow through the main.

OBITUARY

By the death of Mr. Charles F. Smith, which occurred on October 2, Montreal has lost a prominent citizen and the Catholics of that city their leading representative since the death of Sir William Hingston. Interested at all times in educational matters, he was one of the founders of the Catholic High School, a member of the administrative body of Laval University, and President of the Montreal Catholic Sailors' Club, the first Catholic Sailors' Club in the world. In a quiet, unostentatious manner, he was a generous contributor to deserving charities, irrespective of nationality or creed. The public offices he held during an active life included the presidency of the Board of Trade, the highest commercial honor, and the presidency of the Western Hospital. He was also governor of the General, the Western and the Notre Dame Hospitals, and vice-president of the Alexandra Hospital, for contagious diseases. All recognized in him the highest type of Christian layman, one whose public-spirited benevolence and charity showed him to be the possessor of the noblest qualities of mind and heart. At the time of his death Mr. Smith was in his seventieth year. The Rev. Father McShane, pastor of St. Patrick's Church, was celebrant of the solemn requiem Mass, which was attended by many of the prominent citizens of Montreal. The Rev. Lewis Drummond, S.J., as the Chaplain of the Catholic Sailors' Club, was also present at the funeral.

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

NOT THE PUBLISHERS OF THE BOOK.

To the Editor of AMERICA:

In the issue of AMERICA for October 7th, you notice "The Old Home and Other Stories," translated from the French by Susan Gavan Duffy. You give our name as publishers of the book, saying that it is strange that a professedly Catholic publishing house should publish it. Permit us to say that, though the book has our imprint, it is not our publication. The publishers are Messrs. R. & T. Washbourne, the well-known Catholic firm of London. As we are their agents in this country we took a small edition. "Humble Victims," by the same translator, issued about two years ago by the same publishers, was so highly spoken of that we took it for granted that "The Old Home" was all right. AMERICA gave the former book a favorable notice. Had "The Old Home" been submitted to us in manuscript form we would not have accepted it. We regret that the book was sent out with our imprint and are withdrawing it from the market.

Yours very respectfully and truly,
New York City. BENZIGER BROTHERS.

The Coward Shoe

"REG. U. S. PAT. OFF."

Rest an Aching Arch
in a Coward Arch Support Shoe.

The extreme weariness and persistent ache, felt after continued walking or standing, are caused by arch strain. Proper mechanical support is needed.

The Coward Arch Support Shoe is correctly shaped, expertly made, and most helpful to wear. It relieves ankle and arch weakness, and is entirely comfortable from the first wearing.

Coward Arch Support Shoe and Coward Extension Heel have been made by James S. Coward, in his Custom Department for over 30 yrs.

SOLD NOWHERE ELSE

JAMES S. COWARD

264-274 Greenwich St., N. Y.
(NEAR WARREN STREET)

Mail Orders Filled | Send for Catalogue

HIGGINS'

DRAWING INKS
ETERNAL WRITING INK
ENGROSSING INK
TAURINE MUCILAGE
PHOTO MOUNT PASTE
DRAWING BOARD PASTE
LIQUID PASTE
OFFICE PASTE
VEGETABLE GLUE, ETC.

Are the Finest and Best Inks and Adhesives

For School, Home and Business Use

Emancipate yourselves from the use of corrosive and ill-smelling inks and adhesives and adopt the HIGGINS' INKS AND ADHESIVES. They will be a revelation to you, they are so sweet, clean, well put up and withal so efficient.

At Dealers Generally

271 Ninth St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

Branches: Chicago, London

CHAS. M. HIGGINS & CO., Mfrs.

You
Who Get Hungry
Between Meals

Don't deny yourself food till meal time.

When that midmorning hunger approaches, satisfy it with Uneeda Biscuit.

These biscuits are little nuggets of nutrition. Each crisp soda cracker contains energy for thirty minutes more work.

Many business men eat them at ten in the morning. So do school children at recess.

They're more nutritive than bread. You can eat them dry—or with milk.

Uneeda Biscuit are always crisp and delightful.

Never Sold
in Bulk

5c

In the moisture-proof package

NATIONAL BISCUIT COMPANY

McCray Refrigerators

"Proven Very Satisfactory"

McCray Refrigerator Co., Kendallville, Ind.

GENTLEMEN—The large cooler placed in St. Joseph's Sanitarium by your Detroit agent has, during the short time we have used it, proven very satisfactory, articles placed in the compartments keeping perfectly dry and sweet.

Your icing from the outside is a very desirable feature in the way of cleanliness, which is very much appreciated by all.

Respectfully yours,

SISTERS OF CHARITY,

St. Joseph's Sanitarium

Mt. Clemens, Mich.

McCray Refrigerators

are made in all sizes for every purpose that requires perfect refrigeration

Books describing the different varieties will be sent free on request:

- No. A. H. Built-in-to-order for Residences;
- No. 88 regular models for Residences;
- No. 67 for Grocers;
- No. 59 for Meat Markets;
- No. 48 for Hotels, Clubs and Institutions;
- No. 72 for Floral shops.

MCCRAY REFRIGERATOR CO.

254 Lake Street, Kendallville, Ind.

New York Branch, 231 W. 42d Street
Display Rooms and Agencies in all Principal Cities.

BROKAW BROTHERS

ASTOR PLACE AND FOURTH AVENUE

Our Clergymen's Clothes are made with the most exacting care, because we know down to the smallest detail what is correct in cut, materials and fit.

We are showing Clerical Sack Suits in smooth and rough black, dark oxford mixed and narrow self-stripes.

Clerical, Cassock and Lay Waist-coats in all materials.

Mail Orders Filled.

We send samples upon request.

ESTAB. OVER HALF A CENTURY

"We furnish any book published anywhere"

Publishers, Importers
and Booksellers

MAY WE SERVE YOU ?

LEO KELLY & CO.
118 East 28th Street, New York

Plays, Drills, Tableaux
SUITED FOR

Catholic Schools and Churches
are contained in "HINTS," the entertainment magazine

Send for free Sample Copy

HINTS MAGAZINE, 3 W. 29th St., New York, N. Y.

WITH GLACIER WINDOW DECORATION

YOU CAN GET
Stained Glass Effects
on Ordinary Windows
Suitable for Residence
Churches and Schools

Special Ecclesiastical Designs

Write To-day for Booklet 6

Address WM. B. QUAILE, 752 Broadway, New York

For Entrances, Corridors or Floor-Spaces
Exposed to Hard Service, Dirt or Wet

Cary's Everlasting Flexible Steel Mats

None so Clean, Durable and Sanitary for Churches, Hotels, Apartment Houses, Banks,
Stores, Restaurants and Public Buildings

Made of the
Best Cold Rolled
Steel. Rust Proof
Reversible, Self-
Cleaning.

Made in rolls and eight regular sizes. Special sizes to order.

Among the Churches which we have equipped with our mat are the CHURCH OF OUR LADY OF MERCY, FORDHAM, N. Y., with 270 square feet; ST.
CECILIA'S CHURCH, NEW YORK, with nearly 400 square feet, and we have put over 900 square feet in ST. AUGUSTINE'S CHURCH and SCHOOL, BRIDGEPORT, CONN.

Circular upon request. CAN YOU AFFORD TO BE WITHOUT THESE? (Telephone Worth 1445)

CARY MANUFACTURING CO. - 19 to 23 Roosevelt St., New York

The United States
Government uses
and specifies
for this mat
in all their Buildings.

PATENTED
IN THE UNITED STATES AND FOREIGN COUNTRIES.

DENTISTRY

Loose teeth tightened by a new process; teeth without plates. Extracting avoided. High-class and up-to-date dentistry in all branches at reasonable prices.

DRS. BURKE & BURKE
DENTISTS

1947 BROADWAY AND 65TH ST
16th St. Subway, L station and all surface cars.

WANTED—POSITION AS ORGANIST AND MUSICAL DIRECTOR in a Catholic Church, by a gentleman who is experienced and competent.

Will be in New York for six (6) months from October 15.

Will act as Substitute or as Organist at Church Services, including Holy Hour, Forty Hours' Devotion, Requiems, etc.

Can instruct Choirs, and act as Leader in Congregational Singing, Sodalitys, Missions, etc.

Address: Organist, office of this paper, or, on and after October 15, No. 213 Franklin Avenue, Brooklyn, N. Y. Telephone, Williamsburg, 3655, Party L.

Sarony

Photographer
256 Fifth Ave., New York

Favorably known to the Clergy and Laity for many years

TYPEWRITER RIBBONS
AND CARBON PAPERS

Especially adapted for use in Colleges and
Schools

Send for our Circular as to how we will save
you 50 per cent. on supplies

SNELLING & SON 225 34th Street,
South Brooklyn, N. Y.

Purveyors to U. S. Gov't

THERE ARE TWO REASONS

Why we send our Daus' Improved
Tip Top Duplicator on ten days' trial. FIRST—It proves our confidence in the machine. SECOND —By personal use you can positively tell, before buying, whether it meets your requirements. Each machine contains roll of "Dausco" Oiled Linen Back duplicating Surface which can be used over and over again. 100 copies from pen-written and 50 copies from typewritten original. Complete Duplicator, cap size, (prints 3-4x3 inches). Take advantage of our trial offer. Price . . . $5.00

Felix G. Daus Duplicator Co., Daus Building, 111 John St., New York

Pilgrim Walks in Rome

A GUIDE TO THE HOLY PLACES
IN ROME AND ITS VICINITY

By P. J. CHANDLERY, S.J.

Third edition enlarged $1.60, Postpaid
THE AMERICA PRESS

59 East 83d Street New York

MENEELY BELL CO
TROY, N.Y. AND
177 BROADWAY, N.Y. CITY.
BELLS

PRINTING OF EVERY DESCRIPTION
FOR

Churches and Schools

Periodical Publications
Catalogues Programs
Stationery Etc., etc.

THE MEANY PRINTING CO.

6th Avenue, Cor. 11th St., NEW YORK

We Own and Offer as the Highest Type of Conservative Investments, the Unsold Maturities of the following issues

FIRST MORTGAGE $500 REAL ESTATE SERIAL NOTES

To net purchasers 5% interest per annum

Each note sold by the Mercantile Trust Company has been first bought outright by it and held as an investment until it is disposed of and thus permit us to make other loans. Our profit is the commission charged the borrower when making the loan.

Each loan has passed the scrutiny and examination of the officers and directors of this institution, who have had long experience in such work.

The Legal Department of the Mercantile Trust Company prepares all papers, passes upon the validity of the titles, and holds insurance required by the mortgage for the protection of the noteholders.

St. Teresa's Academy 5% Notes

Kansas City, Missouri

TOTAL ISSUE, $300,000.—VALUATION, $525,000

The notes are the direct obligation of the St. Teresa's Academy (a corporation) and are secured by:

FIRST: An absolute First Deed of Trust on the entire city block of ground in Kansas City, Missouri, bounded on the north by Eleventh Street, on the south by Twelfth Street, on the east by Washington Street, and on the west by Penn Street. Right in the business center, within four blocks of the Baltimore Hotel. TOGETHER with the old academy buildings and improvements thereon.

SECOND: An absolute First Deed of Trust on a magnificent tract of land in the southern portion of the city, containing 20 acres, situated between Fifty-fifth and Fifty-seventh Streets, and fronting on Main and Wyandotte Streets, together with the handsome new three-story and basement, fire-proof academy building, just completed at an expense of over $300,000—separate building for power plant. A conservative valuation of the two properties would be $525,000.

THIRD: By the written guaranty of the Academy of the Sisters of St. Joseph, of Saint Louis, Missouri, Mother House of the Order.

Right Reverend John B. Morris 5% Notes

Bishop of Little Rock, Arkansas

TOTAL ISSUE, $70,000—VALUATION, $190,000

These notes are secured by a First Deed of Trust on the entire block of ground in the business center of Little Rock, known as Block 86, being 300 feet square and fronting on Center, Louisiana, Sixth and Seventh Streets, also by the improvements erected thereon, consisting of four two-story brick and eight one-story brick mercantile buildings occupying the entire Center Street frontage from Sixth to Seventh Streets. Also a two-story brick building occupied as a dormitory, located at corner of Seventh and Louisiana Streets. The mercantile buildings are modern and the present revenue from same is $7,600 per annum. In addition, the notes are the direct obligation of Right Reverend John B. Morris, Bishop of Little Rock.

St. Joseph's Convent of Mercy in Saint Louis 5% Notes

Saint Louis, Missouri

TOTAL ISSUE, $300,000—VALUATION, $700,000

These notes are the obligations of St. Joseph's Convent of Mercy in Saint Louis, (a corporation) and are secured by six separate properties appraised by this company at over $700,000, including the magnificent new fire-proof "St. John's Hospital" building now being erected in Saint Louis at a cost of over $380,000. Security of these notes beyond question. An exceptionally safe investment.

On request we will mail detail circulars regarding the above notes, showing the character of the moral as well as the physical security behind them.

The notes are payable to bearer, but if desired may be registered in the name of the purchaser, free of charges. Every facility provided non-resident purchasers.

Write us for complete information regarding these investments.

Loans we Have Made and Sold on This Plan in the Last Few Years, Include

Sisters of St. Mary, Kansas City, Mo. Retreat of Passionist Fathers, St. Louis, Mo. Redemptorist Fathers, Kansas City, Mo. St. Thomas Theological Seminary, Denver, Colo. St. Vincent's College, Cape Girardeau, Mo. St. Anthony's Sanitarium, Amarillo, Texas. St. Vincent's Infirmary, Little Rock, Arkansas. Catholic Bishop of Chicago, Chicago, Illinois. Sisters of Holy Names of Mary and Jesus, Portland, Oregon. Loretta Literary and Benevolent Institution, St. Louis, Mo. St. Vincent's Free School, St. Louis, Mo. St. Ann's Widows' Home, Lying-in-Hospital and Foundling Asylum, St. Louis, Mo. St. Edward's Catholic Church, Little Rock, Arkansas.

REAL ESTATE
LOAN DEPARTMENT

FESTUS J. WADE, President.

Mercantile Trust Company

J. B. MOBERLY, Real Estate Loan Officer.

ST. LOUIS,
MISSOURI.

The Catholic Mind

LIST OF ARTICLES NOT OUT OF PRINT

—1903—

- Nos. 2. THE LAWS OF PROSCRIPTION IN FRANCE.
FERDINAND BRUNETIERE, Editor of Deux Mondes.
No. 9. THE ATTITUDE OF MODERN PROTESTANTS
TOWARDS THE VIRGINITY OF OUR BLESSED
LADY. A. J. MAAS, S.J.
Nos. 10, 11. GALILEO GALILEI LINCEO.
No. 22. THE END JUSTIFIES THE MEANS.
RT. REV. BISHOP LUDDEN, JOHN GERARD, S.J., S. M.
BRANDI, S.J.

—1904—

- Nos. 3, 4. STATISTICS OF THE LEADING RELIGIOUS DE-NOMINATIONS. H. A. KROSE, S.J.
Nos. 8, 9. THE RELIGIOUS CRISIS IN FRANCE.
A. DE MUN.
No. 14. THE CONCORDAT OF 1901. D. M. O'CONNOR.
No. 15. SUAREZ AND REGICIDE.
Nos. 17, 18. THE VATICAN WHITE BOOK.
No. 24. THE CATHOLIC PROTECTORATE OF FRANCE IN THE EAST AND IN THE FAR EAST.

—1905—

- No. 8. WHO STARTED THE SPY SYSTEM IN FRANCE?
No. 18. A SINGLE CATECHISM: ITS ADVANTAGES AND DISADVANTAGES. Civiltà Cattolica.
No. 19. PUBLIC CONTROVERSIES ON RELIGIOUS MAT-TERS. Etudes.

—1906—

- No. 1. THE FRENCH SEPARATION BILL. TEXT.
No. 13. SCIENCE AND RELIGION. J. G.
No. 15. I. OBJECT OF FEDERATION.
RT. REV. J. F. REGIS CANEVIN, D.D.
II. DIVORCE. HON. DANIEL J. KENEFICK.
No. 17. HOLY COMMUNION IN THE EARLY CHURCH.
EDWARD KING, in the Month.
No. 18. THE FRENCH ASSOCIATIONS OF WORSHIP AND THEIR SUBSTITUTES.
No. 24. THE DELUSION OF CHRISTIAN SCIENCE.
T. J. CAMPBELL, S.J.

—1907—

- No. 1. LEGAL OPINIONS ON THE FRENCH SPOILIATION.
No. 4. FERDINAND BRUNETIERE. PIERRE SUAU, S.J.
No. 19. RECENT PAPAL DOCUMENTS.

—1908—

- No. 4. A PRIMARY CIVIC DUTY.
No. 7. SCIENCE AND HER COUNTERFEIT. J. GERARD, S.J.
No. 8. UNIVERSITY EDUCATION IN IRELAND.
No. 9. PLAIN WORDS ON SOCIALISM. I. C. S. DEVAS, M.A.
No. 11. CATHOLICS AND THE SOCIAL MOVEMENT.
RT. REV. MGR. PARKINSON, D.D.
No. 12. THE MAKING OF A SAINT.
No. 13. MR. BIRRELL'S UNIVERSITY BILL.
No. 14. STATUS AND PROPERTY RIGHTS OF THE ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH.
No. 15. APOSTOLIC CONSTITUTION ON THE ROMAN CURIA.
No. 16. THE ROMAN COURTS.
No. 17. THE CHURCH THE STRONG SAFEGUARD OF THE REPUBLIC. MOST REV. WM. H. O'CONNELL, D.D.

- No. 19. THE GENIUS OF CARDINAL WISEMAN.
WILFRID WARD.
No. 20. THE MASS AND THE REFORMATION.
J. CANON MOYES.
No. 21. CHRISTIAN KNIGHTHOOD. JOSEPH G. ANDERSON.
No. 22. REVISING THE VULGATE.
F. A. GASQUET, Abbot, O.S.B.

—1909—

- No. 1. LORD KELVIN AND THE EXISTENCE OF GOD.
H. V. GILL, S.J.
No. 2. PRIMARY EDUCATION IN FRANCE. J. E. N.
No. 3. PSYCHOTHERAPY. JAMES J. WALSH, M.D., LL.D.
Nos. 4, 5. SOCIALISM AND CHRISTIANITY. I, II.
REV. J. F. HOGAN, D.D.
No. 8. DARWINISM FIFTY YEARS AFTER. G. BONETTI, S.J.
No. 9. CATHOLIC FEDERATION OF LONDON.
HON. CHARLES RUSSELL.
No. 10. THE SALFORD DIOCESAN CATHOLIC FEDERA-TION. The Month, May, '09.
Nos. 11, 12, 13, 14. CALVIN'S CONVERSION. I, II, III, IV.
PAUL BERNARD, in Etudes.
Nos. 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20. CATHOLIC UNIVERSITIES. I, II,
III, IV, V, VI. ALFRED BAUDRILLART.
No. 21. SOCIALISTS AND CATHOLICS. ETIENNE LAMY.
No. 24. SERMON ON CARDINAL NEWMAN.
JOSEPH RICKABY, S.J.

—1910—

- No. 1. THE FRENCH BISHOPS AND THE EDUCATION
PROBLEM. CHAMBRUN.
No. 2. ETERNAL PUNISHMENT. GEORGE R. ROCHE, S.J.
No. 3. THE SONS OF ST. FRANCIS. HERBERT THURSTON, S.J.
Nos. 4, 5, 6, 7, 8. CATHOLIC MISSIONS. I, II, III, IV, V.
HILARIÓN GIL.
Nos. 11, 12, 13. CALLISTUS III AND HALLEY'S COMET.
I, II, III.
Nos. 14, 15. ST. CHARLES BORROMEO ENCYCLICAL.
No. 16. THE PASTOR AND EDUCATION.
No. 17. HOLY COMMUNION FOR CHILDREN.
No. 18. THE XXI EUCHARISTIC CONGRESS.
E. SPILLANE, S.J.
No. 19. THE HOLY EUCHARIST IN EARLY CANADA.
T. J. CAMPBELL, S.J.
Nos. 20, 21. PIUS X ON RECENT MANIFESTATIONS OF MODERNISM.
No. 22. REMOVAL OF PARISH PRIESTS.
No. 24. MAYOR NATHAN'S INSULT TO THE POPE.

—1911—

- No. 2. THE PORTUGUESE REVOLUTION.
No. 3. SOME CAUSES OF THE PORTUGUESE REVOLU-TION.
Nos. 4, 5. SPAIN AS SHE IS. Catholic Herald of India.
No. 6. SOCIALISM IN THE SCHOOLS.
HON. BIRD S. COLER.
No. 7. CONDEMNATION OF MODERNISM.
RT. REV. B. J. KEILEY.
No. 8. ONE HUNDRED BEST CATHOLIC BOOKS.
Nos. 9, 10. THE CHILD IN THE HOME AND THE SCHOOL.
RT. REV. DR. CLEARY.
Nos. 11, 12. CARDINAL GIBBONS' JUBILEE.
Nos. 13, 14. PROTESTS OF PIUS X AND BISHOPS OF POR-TUGAL.
No. 15. THE TRUTH ABOUT THE "ENCYCLOPÆDIA BRI-TANNICA." T. J. CAMPBELL, S.J.
No. 16. THE CATHOLIC PRESS. E. SPILLANE, S.J.
No. 17. ENGLISH ECONOMISTS AND CATHOLIC ETHICS.
REV. MICHAEL MAHER, S.J.
No. 18. CATHOLICISM AT HOME AND ABROAD.

Single numbers 5 cents each, $4.00 per hundred
Double numbers 10 " " 7.00 " "

Copies of THE CATHOLIC MIND not included in this list will be accepted in exchange for any of the above

THE AMERICA PRESS, 59 East 83d Street, New York City

COLLEGES AND ACADEMIES

A CATHOLIC INSTITUTION FOR THE HIGHER EDUCATION OF WOMEN

College of Mount Saint Vincent On Hudson

CITY OF NEW YORK

DAY PUPILS AND BOARDERSLocation Unsurpassed for Convenience, Healthfulness and Beauty
One-half Hour from Grand Central Station

PROFESSORS OF DISTINCTION . . . . . EQUIPMENT OF THE BEST

COLLEGE—Four years' course leading to the Degrees of B.A. and B.S.
SCHOOL OF PEDAGOGY—Required for entrance two years of college work

FALL TERM BEGINS SEPTEMBER 25, 1911 . . . . . WRITE FOR PROSPECTUS

PREPARATORY DEPARTMENT

ACADEMY MOUNT SAINT VINCENT ON HUDSON

CITY OF NEW YORK

Adjustable to any nook or corner—harmonizing perfectly with the decorative scheme of any room—Globe-Wernicke Bookcases ornamentally fill spaces in the home that would otherwise be bare and unattractive.

Section by section they grow as the number of your books increase—each section always complete at any stage of development.

Yet beauty and adaptability are only features—the real function of

Globe-Wernicke Bookcases

is the convenient, satisfactory care of books. Their utility is in their ease of expansion—growth—with and to accommodate the accumulation of your books.

Globe-Wernicke Bookcases are sold by authorized dealers in all leading cities and towns. The maintenance of uniform prices everywhere, is the best proof of their intrinsic worth and superiority.

Where not represented, goods shipped on approval, freight prepaid.

Complete catalog and a copy of "The Blue Book of Fiction" by Hamilton W. Mabie, containing lists of the world's best stories published in English, mailed on request.

Address Dept. AA

The Globe-Wernicke Co., Cincinnati

THE CATHOLIC MIND

$1.00 a Year 24 Numbers

The AMERICA PRESS, 59 East 83d Street, New York

For advertising rates, address "MANAGER" AMERICA, a Catholic Review of the Week
59 East 83d Street, New York City

Sacred Heart Sanitarium

FOR REST, QUIET, RECUPERATION AND HEALTH

Unsurpassed results obtained in Nervousness, Rheumatism, Heart and Stomach troubles. No surgical, hospital nor insanity cases taken. A delightful, homelike, restful place—ideal for all run down conditions. Hydrotherapy, Electricity, Massage, Zander Gymnasium, Sun parlor; swimming pools, billiards, bowling, etc. Gaited saddle horses, large indoor riding pavilion; suspended running track connected by tunnel with bath department. 17-acre park.

A staff of five physicians give their exclusive services to the patients.

WRITE SISTER SUPERIOR FOR BOOKLET X. MILWAUKEE, WIS.

We can supply anything in the line of Kitchen and Bakers' Utensils

Catalogue "M" FREE
upon request

French Cooking Ranges
and Broilers

Cooking Equipments
of Every Description

JAMES Y. WATKINS & SON 16, 18, 20 CATHERINE ST.
NEW YORK, N. Y.

Has It Ever Occurred to You
THAT THERE ARE

MANY KINDS OF SODA
WATER AND SOFT STUFF
FOISTED ON THE PUBLIC

OUR PRODUCTS

COST NO MORE
OVERBARSTHAN THE CHEAP
ONES MADE FROM GLUCOSE,
SACCHARIN AND ANILINE DYES

Get Your Money's Worth

I Am Direct Importer of VINUM EX VITE Altar Wine

Mr. Joseph C. Butler, who imported Vinum ex Vite Altar Wine, died on September 23d, 1910, his heirs settling up his estate. I purchased his interest and trademarks in the wine business. This wine was imported in cases containing 20-litre bottles and in barrels containing 21 gallons, bearing the producer's certificate that the wine was made according to the rules of the Holy Congregation of Rites. I am making arrangements with the producer to ship me the wine in the same shape as Mr. Butler received it. All orders for this wine will be promptly filled. Price will be the same as heretofore, i.e., $12.50 per case and $1.80 per gallon, for the present.

The certificate from the Vicar-General of Tarragone will be on the file in my office.

Depot for GUILLON 8-DAY TAPERS
and PERFUMED CHARCOAL

L. J. CALLANAN

41 and 43 Vesey Street, New York

Telephone No. 8585-8586 Cortlandt

A SHOPPING GUIDE TO ABRAHAM & STRAUS

This store has a department organized for the purpose of supplying the convent, academy orphan asylum or school, hospital, etc., with serges, merinos, draps d'été, linens, etc., and clothing worn by children. The contract department, as it is called, also advises and estimates on carpets, furniture, shades, etc. A representative familiar with the requirements of religious communities will call, as soon as request is sent to Contract Department.

ABRAHAM & STRAUS

420 Fulton Street, Brooklyn, New York

DIRECTORY OF COLLEGES AND ACADEMIES

Georgetown University WASHINGTON, D. C.

Directory for Catalogues or Information

The College (Graduates and Undergraduates Schools)

The Registrar, 37th & O Sts., N. W.

The School of Medicine

The Dean, 920 H St., N. W.

The Training School for Nurses

Georgetown University Hospital

The School of Dentistry

The Dean, 920 H St., N. W.

The School of Law

The Dean, 506 E. St., N. W.

The Astronomical Observatory

The Director, Georgetown University

Rev. Joseph Himmel, S.J., President

College of St. Catherine, St. Paul, Minn.

A Catholic College for Girls.

Accredited by the Minnesota State Board of Public Instruction and by several prominent Universities.

Seventy Acre Campus. Fireproof Buildings.

COMPLETE COURSES IN THESE DEPARTMENTS. THE COLLEGIATE, leading to the degree of Bachelor of Arts. THE ACADEMIC or COLLEGE PREPARATORY. MUSIC and PAINTING in their various branches. DOMESTIC ART, HOUSEHOLD SCIENCE and COOKING. Year Book Forwarded on Application. Address: THE SECRETARY.

COLLEGE OF ST. ELIZABETH CONVENT STATION

Near Morristown, N. J.

One hour from New York City.

A Catholic Institution for the Higher Education of Women

COLLEGE

Four years' course leading to the degrees of B. A. and B. S.

SCHOOL OF PEDAGOGY

Required for entrance two years of College work

SCHOOL OF MUSIC. COURSE LEADING TO THE DEGREE OF B. M.

ACADEMY

A High School Course of Four Years. Full College Preparatory Work.

GRAMMAR AND PRIMARY DEPARTMENTS SEPARATE

REGISTERED

By the New Jersey State Board of Education and the University of the State of New York

Apply for Year Book to The Secretary

MT. ST. JOSEPH ON THE WISSAHICKON

For illustrated catalogue address MOTHER

CATHOLIC COLLEGE FOR WOMEN

situated in the romantic Valley of the Wissahickon. Degrees conferred. Also Academic, Commercial, Intermediate and Elementary Departments. Very special advantages in Music and Art. The piano student possesses superior opportunities in the use of the Virgil Clavier Method pursued throughout the course. The Art Studio is admirably equipped, and every attention is given to the study of Art, both in theory and practice. Gymnasium perfectly equipped. Outdoor exercise, tennis, basket ball, fencing, etc.

SUPERIOR, Chestnut Hill, Philadelphia, Pa.

HOLY CROSS COLLEGE WORCESTER MASS.

Conducted by the Jesuit Fathers.

Largest Catholic College in America

Extensive grounds and exceedingly healthy location. New buildings, large gymnasium, indoor running track, hot and cold baths, modern conveniences. Easily reached on main line from Albany or New York to Boston via Springfield. Board, tuition, washing and mending, use of gymnasium, library and reading room, physical instruction and medical attendance, $260 a year. Furnished room and attendance extra. Send for catalogue to

PREFECT OF STUDIES.

Seton Hall College

FOUNDED 1856

South Orange, New Jersey

COLLEGE AND HIGH SCHOOL

Bayley Hall for Students of Grammar Course

FOR CATALOGUE ADDRESS
Very Rev. James F. Mooney, D.D., Pres.

The Catholic Mind

The Truth About "The Encyclopaedia Britannica"

BY REV. T. J. CAMPBELL, S.J.

Single numbers 5 cents each, $4.00 per hundred

THE AMERICA PRESS, 59 East 83d Street, New York City

DIRECTORY OF COLLEGES AND ACADEMIES

"MARYMOUNT"
Sacred Heart of Mary. Magnificently situated on the Hudson. Ideal environment for study and recreation. European advantages. 46 minutes from New York. Preparatory and advanced courses. College preparation. Private Rooms. For catalogue, apply to THE REV. MOTHER.

ROSEMOUNT HALL
SOUTH ORANGE, NEW JERSEY
Under patronage of His Eminence, Cardinal Gibbons and other prominent Catholics.
Private School for a limited number of Girls
Efficient staff of lay teachers. Best religious and home training. Beautiful location. Special attention to moral and physical development. Only Forty-Five Minutes from New York City.
Miss MARY MACMAHON, Principal

The Time To Advertise Is ALL THE TIME
An Opportunity for Schools and Colleges ADVERTISE HERE
For advertising rates, address "MANAGER" AMERICA, a Catholic Review of the Week
59 East 83d Street, New York City

St. Mary's College
St. Marys, Kansas
For Catalogue, send to
REV. ALOYSIUS A. BREEN, S.J., President

BOARDING COLLEGE
Under the Jesuit Fathers
Two Courses of Study:
Classical and Commercial

THE PAINE BUSINESS SCHOOL
1931
BROADWAY, COR. 53RD ST.

Shorthand
Typewriting
Telegraphy
Bookkeeping, Etc.
Taught Day and Evening
Catalogue.

Advantages: Winter in sunny Italy, summer in Switzerland, Germany and England
Stella Viae ROME
Finishing School for Girls
For Prospectus apply to the Reverend Mother, Stella Viae College.
271, Via Nomentana, Rome, Italy
Pleasant intercourse with foreign pupils of good social standing

The Winona Seminary, Winona, Minnesota
CATHOLIC COLLEGE FOR WOMEN
Faculty of Specialists. Separate college residence. Confers degrees B.A., B.S. and Litt. B. Full college preparatory courses—certificates accepted by all leading universities. Secretarial course Conservatory of Music confers degree of B. Mus.—visiting director, Emil Liebling. Departments of Art, Household Economics, Dramatic Expression. Private Rooms. Moderate Prices. Splendid Gymnasium. Extensive Campus. Students from thirteen States. Direct lines of railway from Chicago Milwaukee, St. Paul, St. Louis.
Earnest, capable young women who have a purpose in study are solicited.
WRITE FOR CATALOGUE . . . . . DEPARTMENT BULLETIN

MARY ALOYSIA HARDEY
RELIGIOUS OF THE SACRED HEART
1809-1886
WITH AN INTRODUCTION BY THE REV. THOMAS J. CAMPBELL, S.J.
440 Pages 16 Illustrations With Index
THE LIFE STORY OF A REMARKABLE WOMAN
PRICE TWO DOLLARS
By Mail 20 cents extra

THE AMERICA PRESS 59 EAST 83d STREET
NEW YORK CITY

HELEN AUGUSTA HAYES
VOCAL INSTRUCTOR
64 East 34th Street
NEW YORK CITY

Academy of St. Joseph
In-the-Pines
BRENTWOOD, N. Y.
A Boarding School for Young Ladies,
Affiliated with the State University
PROSPECTUS EXPLAINS THE TERMS, ETC.

The Only True American School System
Rev. THOMAS J. CAMPBELL, S.J.
PAMPHLET 24 PAGES
5 Cents per Copy. $2.50 Per Hundred
THE AMERICA PRESS 59 East 83d Street
NEW YORK

HOLY ANGELS
Conducted by School Sisters of Notre Dame
Location beautiful, healthy and convenient.
New Buildings, large gymnasium.
DEPARTMENTS: Academic, course of four years; Commercial, course of two years. Grammar and Primary Departments separate. Special advantages in Music and Art.
FOR YEAR BOOK ADDRESS SECRETARY

Boarding & Day School

FORT LEE
New Jersey

Convent of the Holy Child
SHARON HILL, DELAWARE COUNTY, PA.
15 Minutes from Philadelphia
ACADEMY FOR YOUNG LADIES
Highest English Course. French, Drawing, Music by Certified Teachers. Preparation for foreign travel. As the numbers are limited, special care can be given to the formation of character and training of each child.
Address Mother Superior

IMMACULATA SEMINARY
Mount Marian, Washington, D. C.
Select School for Girls. Situated in the Suburbs
Classical, Literary and Special Courses.
Two-Year Course for High School Graduates.
Music and Art. Abundant outdoor exercise.
Sightseeing with experienced Chaperons.
For Year Book address, Sister Secretary

ST. MARY - OF - THE - WOODS
COLLEGE
For Young Women. 71st Year
4 Years. Degrees, B.A., B.S., Ph.B.
Academic — College Preparatory — and Grammar Departments. Elective Courses. Conservatory of Music, Vocal and Instrumental. Art Studios. Natatorium, Gymnasium, Bowling, etc. Out-of-Door Sports, Horse-back Riding, Boating, Archery, Tennis. For Bulletins, Address, Sister Secretary, Box 70. St. Mary-of-the-Woods, Vigo County, Indiana.

The Tenderest Skin is Benefited

BY

FOR TOILET AND BATH

HAND SAPOLIO

It has a delicate, velvety touch and contains just the elements necessary to thoroughly cleanse, invigorate, soften and clear the skin.

All Grocers and Druggists

Pioneer Priests of North America

By Rev. T. J. CAMPBELL, S. J.

VOLUME I

Among the Iroquois

AN INTERESTING STORY OF THE MISSIONARIES AMONG THE IROQUOIS.

333 Pages

27 Illustrations

Price $1.60 By Mail
20c extra

VOLUME II

Among the Hurons

TELLS THE HEROIC STORY OF DE BRÉBEUF AND HIS ASSOCIATES.

480 Pages

24 Illustrations

Price $2.00 By Mail
20c extra

THE AMERICA PRESS

59 East 83rd Street

New York City

Among the Algonquins

The ethnic group that figured more extensively in our history than any other Indian family :: :: ::

VOL. III OF

PIONEER PRIESTS OF NORTH AMERICA

BY

Rev. Thomas J. Campbell, S.J.

336 Pages

22 Illustrations

Price, $2.00 By Mail
20c. extra

THE AMERICA PRESS, 59 East 83d St., New York, N. Y.

AMERICA

A CATHOLIC REVIEW OF THE WEEK

Vol. VI, No. 2 (Price 10 Cents) OCTOBER 21, 1911 ($3.00 a year) Whole No. 132

CHRONICLE

Radical California—Death of Justice Harlan—Would Enjoin Postmaster—Columbus Day Celebrations—Cardinal Gibbons Memorial Hall—Latest Wireless Triumph—Mexico—Canada—Great Britain—Ireland—Portugal—France—China—Violence in Austria—Germany—Italy..25-38

QUESTIONS OF THE DAY

A Great Scottish Bishop—The Modern Literary Conscience—The Irish Pagans—Tripoli—Sixteenth Century Education in Mexico, III, The University .....29-35

CORRESPONDENCE

Anent the War with Turkey—Strikes and Taxes in Spain—Adana .....35-37

EDITORIAL

Catholicity and Citizenship—A Moral for Our Readers—A Successful Protest—Canadian Agitation for a New Marriage Law—Methodist Unity—Notes .....38-40

A YARN ABOUT SUBMARINES.....40-41

LITERATURE

Reading for Catholics—Social France in the XVII Century—Die Schönheit der katholischen Moral—Africanische Spiegelbilder—Kirchliches Handbuch—The Lights of English Literature—The Catholic Who's Who—Note—Books Received .....41-43

EDUCATION

Vocational Training—The Dean of the Princeton Graduate School Elucidates His Opinions—The Morals of College Freshmen.....43-44

ECONOMICS

Ireland's Undeveloped Coal Mines.....44

PULPIT, PRESS AND PLATFORM

Our Lady's Shrine in Holy Family Church, Chicago .....45

ECCLESIASTICAL NEWS

Entrance Fees at Mass—Cardinal Gibbons' Jubilee—The Legal Title to Church Property in Pennsylvania—New Rectors for Jesuit Colleges. 46-47

SCIENCE

Heat Losses and Physical Deterioration in Stored Coal—Wheel Tires and Wear of Public Roads—New Copper Wire Tables.....47

OBITUARY

Rev. Henry Gillet, S.J.....47-48

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

The Unreliable "Encyclopædia Britannica"....48

CHRONICLE

Radical California.—The people of California cast a majority well over 100,000 in favor of a constitutional amendment establishing the initiative and referendum and the recall, the latter extending to judges. An amendment providing for woman suffrage was adopted by a small majority. The endorsement of the recall amendment acquires special interest in view of President Taft's recent veto of the Arizona and New Mexico Statehood bill, because of this provision in the Arizona Constitution.

Death of Justice Harlan.—John Marshall Harlan, Associate Justice of the United States Supreme Court, died at his home in Washington, October 14, after an illness of only three days. He was the oldest member of the court in point of both age and service. He was in his seventy-ninth year and for more than thirty-three years he had sat on the Supreme Bench. Last spring Justice Harlan delivered his two famous dissenting opinions in the Standard Oil and the American Tobacco cases. While agreeing with his eight colleagues on the main issue, the illegality of the two trusts, he vehemently dissented from their dictum as to the rule of reason, his criticism of the court's decision commanding hardly less attention than the decision itself. It may be doubted if any man ever sat on the Supreme Court Bench whose judicial career answered more exactly to the conception of "a just and upright judge." The filling of the vacancy caused by the death of Justice Harlan gives President Taft within three years the appointment of five Associate Justices to the Supreme Court, besides naming the Chief Justice. No such opportunity has come to any other President since Washington's day.

Would Enjoin Postmaster.—An action in equity was filed on October 13 in the United States Circuit Court by the Review of Reviews Company, against Postmaster-General Hitchcock and Postmaster Morgan, of New York, to restrain them from enforcing the new postal regulation for the forwarding of monthly and bi-weekly periodicals, on the ground that this rule constituted an unlawful discrimination. The new regulation complained of provided that, beginning September 1, 1911, periodicals classified as second class mail matter issued monthly, bi-weekly, or at longer intervals, be forwarded by fast freight instead of on regular mail trains in the territory known as the third contract section, which comprises the states of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Iowa and Missouri.

The Review of Reviews Company complained that this rule "wrongfully divides said second-class mail matter into two classes, and provides a much slower and inferior method of transportation for periodicals issued bi-weekly or at longer intervals than is furnished to periodical publications issued at intervals shorter than bi-weekly." A hearing on the application for a preliminary injunction was postponed by Judge Ward for one week.

Columbus Day Celebrations.—The Discoverer of America was honored on Columbus day throughout the Union, especially in those States where October 12 has been made a legal holiday. In the chief cities of the country a parade, in which thousands took part, was the principal feature of the celebration. Thirty thousand marchers in Manhattan and Brooklyn did honor to the first official observance of the day in New York State. In Manhattan nearly twenty thousand men were in line, representing the regular army, the national guard, the Knights of Columbus, the Italian Societies and other organizations. Mayor Gaynor reviewed the parade in Manhattan, and Borough President Steers the parade in Brooklyn. The thirty thousand men who took part in the parade in Boston represented some three hundred organizations. The military included soldiers from forts, marines and bluejackets from the Navy yard and warships, the Ninth Infantry and the Ninth Regiment Veteran Association, the Boston School Cadets, and the Hibernians. The civil division was largely made up of Knights of Columbus, Holy Name Societies, and Italian organizations. The Mission Church of Roxbury had 1,800 men in the Holy Name section. Governor Foss reviewed the line from the State House, and Archbishop O'Connell from a stand in Tremont Street, near that of Mayor Fitzgerald. The celebration in Chicago, with an imposing historical pageant on the Lake front, was especially noteworthy.

Cardinal Gibbons Memorial Hall.—Cardinal Gibbons, on Columbus day, blessed the cornerstone of the new Cardinal Gibbons Memorial Hall, to be built in honor of his double jubilee at the Catholic University of America. The ceremony, which though brief, was very impressive, was witnessed by a vast concourse of Catholics. His Excellency, the Apostolic Delegate, a large number of the American Hierarchy and clergymen from all sections of the East participated in the ceremony. His Eminence, the Cardinal, was the central figure of the occasion. Archbishop Farley, of New York, paid an eloquent tribute to his Eminence for the many sacrifices he has made in behalf of the University, for his devotion to the cause of higher education and for his steadfastness in the darkest days of the institution. Addresses were also made by Rev. Dr. Charles Francis Aiken and Dr. Daniel W. Shea. The most striking moment of the ceremony was when the Cardinal rose to respond to the splendid tribute that had been paid to his career in the Church and in the State. "I cannot fail," he said, "to contrast that other day of more than 20 years ago, when the first cornerstone of this University was laid, with the bright sunshine that now confronts us. Rain fell in torrents that day. Now the skies are cloudless and we are deluged with sunshine. It suggests to me the words of Holy Scripture, which tell us they who sow in tears shall reap in joy." It was announced that the outlay for the completed building will be $247,000. Already $120,000 has been contributed.

Latest Wireless Triumph.—A wireless message has now been successfully sent across the Pacific, 6,000 miles from the station at Hillcrest, San Francisco, to a new and powerful installation at Joi, on Kokushu Island, in the Japanese archipelago. In Argentina, a year ago, Marconi received messages from Nova Scotia and from Ireland, a distance approximately of 5,600 miles. Owing to more favorable conditions the best long-distance records have been made over the Pacific. Ships sailing between San Francisco and Melbourne have been able to communicate with Honolulu throughout the greater part of the journey. In November, 1909, the Korea, on her way to Japan sent messages to San Francisco from points 3,300 and 4,720 miles distant. The limit of the commercial range on the Atlantic has rarely exceeded 3,000 miles.

Mexico.—As the electors in Mexico are not expressly pledged to vote for any particular candidate for president or vice-president, every effort was put forth by the friends of the various candidates for the second office to secure the promise of votes in the electoral college for their favorites. Pino Suarez was the successful candidate.—General Reyes proposes to write a book, in which he will pillory Madero and others. Madero is of the opinion that Reyes ought to be expelled from the United States, because he is a trouble-breeder against a friendly power.—A Texas stockman has purchased sixty thousand acres of land in one parcel in northern Mexico as a cattle ranch. It is the largest sale in over a year.—The Government has been formally invited to take part in the Pan-Pacific Congress in Honolulu, next February, when questions of commerce, sea routes and mail matters will be discussed by representatives of all nations.—The number of rangers on the border between Texas and Mexico is to be increased in virtue of an arrangement between the Washington authorities and Texas. The rangers will be under the Governor of Texas, but the attendant expense will be met by the Federal Government. The purpose is to anticipate and check revolutionary activity and filibustering against Mexico. Would-be revolutionists are correspondingly depressed.

Canada.—Wet weather in the west has injured the crops greatly. Wheat inspection in Winnipeg shows a continual deterioration of grade. Much grain remaining unthreshed in the fields has sprouted, and more than is generally believed has not ripened and will not be cut.—A couple of mines in the Crow's Nest Pass are being worked on a very small scale. The Saskatchewan Department of Agriculture recommends all families to make timely provision of fuel, otherwise much suffering may occur.—Mr. Borden's cabinet has been sworn in. It is rather a composite affair. He has taken Mr. White, Minister of Finance, from amongst the revolted Liberals. Colonel Hughes, Minister of Militia, is a leader of the Orange Conservatives, and the representatives of the Province of Quebec are all Nationalists.

The old Conservatives are said to be dissatisfied, but it would have been hard for Mr. Borden to have acted otherwise, seeing that twenty of the Quebec Conservatives are Independent, that is, virtually Nationalists, and will be able to hamper the Government at pleasure and perhaps upset it. Altogether Mr. Borden's prospects of continuing in office do not seem very bright, and another election in a year or so is quite probable.—The Duke of Connaught, the new Governor-General, disembarked at Quebec on October 13.

Great Britain.—The result of the election in Kilmarnock Burghs surprised the Unionists. Reckoning on the dissatisfaction of the Young Scots with the bringing into the constituency of Mr. Gladstone, who had no claim on it, and on the presence of a Labor candidate, they hoped to win the election. To insure success the Unionist candidate spoke out on Home Rule. He was in favor of it for Scotland, but he would never consent to putting the tender Protestants of Ireland under the feet of Catholics. The consequence was a large falling off in the Unionist poll.—The approaching Royal visit to India occupies the attention of one section of the community. That of another is taken up with the Royal Commission on railway labor troubles. A permanent council has been appointed to adjust such disputes; but as, on the one hand, the companies and the leaders of the unions have taken very definite positions, and, on the other, the council is destitute of authority, it is not likely to be very efficient except as an instrument to convey the views of the Government.

Ireland.—In sending greeting to the inaugural meeting of the English Home Rule campaign, Mr. Redmond said: "Home Rule means not only self-government for Ireland, but a real union of the people of England, Scotland, Wales and Ireland in the cause of genuine liberty and democratic purposes in these countries." There are recent evidences that the measure will be stronger than that which Mr. Redmond agreed last year to accept. A few days before his election in North Tyrone, Mr. T. W. Russell said: "Before I left Dublin I had some notion of what the Bill will be, that it will not be a milk-and-water measure; and I tell you if the people of Ireland only stand firm and make it clear to the English nation that they want a strong, effective and thoroughgoing measure of self-government, they will get it. I hope to be present at the passing of the Bill and to strengthen it before it passes."—Adverting to the statement of an English politician that "the Irish were prepared to give up their religion for Home Rule," Cardinal Logue, preaching at the dedication of a new church in the Glenties, Donegal, said: "Had the Irish people given up their religion in the past, they would long since have had Home Rule, or, rather, they would have no need of it; they would have had full participation in the emoluments of the Empire. The brighter days that are now dawning must come with the unclouded light of God's blessing brightening our morning, flashing on our noontide and shedding on the eve the glow of peace. The Irish people will not give up their religion for Home Rule or for aught else."—The Estates Commissioners report that in the last financial year they advanced in direct and indirect sales, under the Land Purchase Act of 1903, $36,000,000, and that sales to the same amount are pending. The total advanced for sales since November, 1903, has reached $205,000,000, and there were 2,830 evicted tenants reinstated under the Act at the expense of $1,400,000. During last year $200,000 were expended in restoring evicted tenants.

Portugal.—The publication by the Government of the first pension list of the clergy caused a tremendous scandal, for it was headed by the name of the secretary of his Excellency, the Most Reverend Antonio Mendes Bello, Patriarch of Lisbon, and contained the names of two other priests belonging to his household and known to be in his confidence. The three astonished priests were informed by the authorities that as they had sent in no formal renunciation of the pensions it was taken for granted that they wanted them. Another name on the list was that of the Rev. Eduardo Coelho Ferreira, an aged and venerable priest, who had been absent on leave in France and knew nothing about the pension.—The ecclesiastical governor of the diocese of Oporto, in the enforced absence of Bishop Souza-Barroso, who was deposed by the Government, has called for contributions to a clergy fund, for the maintenance of parish priests deprived of their livings. His initiative has already been followed elsewhere in the country.—The Minister of Justice has decreed that objects of historical or artistic importance found among the belongings of the suppressed religious Orders shall be gathered into a permanent museum. Among the goods in the seminary of Oporto, which was confiscated and closed by the Government, were framed paintings valued by the commission at one hundred and fifty thousand dollars. Some belonged to the cathedral and others to a sodality, but all was seized.—Reports of the operations of Paiva Couceiro, in his attempt to overthrow the republic by armed force, tell of the favorable reception that the people are giving to his troops. In the event of success the voters will decide at the polls between Dom Manoel and Dom Miguel. The narrow, sectarian and persecuting policy of the so-called republic has made the counter revolution possible.

France.—The announcement of the nature of the arrangement with Germany on Morocco has not been received with much satisfaction in France. Fear is manifested that the cession of Congo territory is excessive. The unrest in the country is weakening the Ministry, and there is considerable anxiety about what will happen when Parliament convenes on October 31 or November 7.

China.—A revolution has started in China. The movement is said to be born of racial hate. The Manchus, who came down from the North three hundred years ago, overthrew the Ming dynasty and set up an emperor of their own, have never been liked by the native Chinese. The seat of the rebellion is Hu-peh, a province on the Yang-tse-Kiang, as large as England and Wales and with a population of 35,000,000. The revolutionists, after fierce fighting, got possession of Wu-Chang, the capital city, and also have control of Hankow and Han Yang. The viceroy fled, the imperial garrison revolted, and the government at Peking sent 20,000 troops and a fleet of gunboats to put down the rebellion. Foreigners are not molested by the revolutionists. Almost all the Protestant missionaries in Wu-Chang, however, left the city, but the Catholics remained. The rebellion is reported to be spreading rapidly. "Down with the Manchus!" is the slogan. The success of the revolution will probably mean the proclamation of a republic.

Violence in Austria.—The Chamber of Deputies of the Reichsrath became on October 5 the scene of an attempted assassination of the Minister of Justice, Dr. von Hohenburger. A debate concerning the Austrian riots, in which three persons had been killed and almost a hundred wounded, was causing violent excitement. The Socialist member, Dr. Adler, severely criticised the penalties which had been inflicted upon the mob leaders and declared that the only marvel was that people should submit so patiently to the suffering brought on by the high prices in the articles of food. "We still have other means left!" he shouted menacingly. The Socialist Schuhmeier seconded the sentiment of the speaker with the exclamation, "To the gallows!" At this crisis a poorly clad man in the galleries, afterwards identified as the Dalmatian Socialist Njegus, raised the slogan of Socialism and fired six shots into the assembly. Fortunately no harm was done; but he acknowledged, when captured, that all the bullets had been intended for the Minister of Justice, who narrowly escaped death.

Germany.—One section of the Morocco controversy has now received its final settlement, that namely which concerns the French and German interests in Morocco itself. The agreement has been drawn up, and the German Secretary of State, von Kiderlen-Waechter, as well as the French Ambassador Cambon, have signed it with their initials. What the precise terms are is a matter of secrecy, and will not be made public until the second part of the negotiations has likewise been amicably concluded. This latter relates to the compensations in the Congo which Germany is still to receive from France. German papers which have maintained a radical attitude during the entire controversy are bitter in the expression of their opinions about the concessions which they believe have been made to France. In general, however, the announcement of the agreement arrived at has been quietly received by the press. It merely calls attention to the secrecy which is to be observed until a complete settlement has been effected. The Kölnische Zeitung warns France that the concessions made in Morocco are not to be paid for by a slice of buttered bread.—The new Zeppelin airship, intended for the army, has in its trial flight surpassed all expectations. Carrying a full equipment of men and ballast it attained a speed of twenty-one meters per second, or about forty-seven miles an hour. The success of this experiment is looked upon in army circles as being of the utmost significance.—The Hygiene Exhibit at Dresden, which opened May 6, is now drawing to its close. It offered a complete view of all that has been accomplished in modern hygienics and enjoyed a most exceptional attendance. Even financially it has been most successful and promises to leave a surplus of half a million marks.—The vintage of the present season is considered to be the best that has been gathered for many years. Both in the quantity and quality of the grapes the country has been exceedingly favored.

Italy.—On October 10 the greater part of the army of occupation was on the sea, making for Tripoli. One division left Naples; the other Tarento; a third is to sail from Agosta. The first expedition, which had left Italy on October 5, landed at Tobruk, 600 miles east of the capital and 75 miles west of the Egyptian frontier. It is reported from Constantinople that the Ministry had decided to close all Italian industrial, financial and scholastic institutions in Turkey. It is said that Italy is willing to indemnify Turkey to the extent of $12,000,000, but it is uncertain whether she will recognize Turkish suzerainty over Tripoli in any form. The offer is a curious one, inasmuch as the boycott which Turkey can declare on Italian merchandise would considerably surpass that figure. The experiment was already tried on Austria and Greece, on which occasion Italy reaped the profit of the exclusion of those nations from the markets of Turkey. Now it will be Italy's turn to suffer. On the 10th a night attack of the forts by 3,000 Turks was reported. The fleet cooperated and the assault came to naught. On October 12 the Turks were still on the outskirts of Tripoli, and Vice-Admiral Forvarelli was obliged to telegraph for reinforcements, although 2,000 men had already been sent ashore. The fight at the fortifications on Monday was more serious than the first reports led the world to believe. The Turks left 4 dead on the field and carried off 160 wounded, which shows that a very considerable force was engaged. They afterwards concentrated at the foot of the Djebel mountains and were joined by a large number of Arabs. Their object is to recapture the city. Optimism has given way to anxiety on the part of the invaders. Finally, 7,000 more troops were landed. There are now 20,000 soldiers on the coast of Tripoli. The Sun reports four deaths from cholera in Tripoli.

QUESTIONS OF THE DAY

A Great Scottish Bishop

The Hays occupy a large place in Scottish and English history. There were the soldier Hays, of whom the best known, though, as is often the case, not the most meritorious, was, perhaps, the Lord Charles Hay of Fontenoy. There were the legal Hays, the medical Hays, and Hayes, naturalists and travelers. There were Hays with Queen Mary and there were Hays with the Lords of the Congregation. There were Jacobite Hays and Hanoverian Hays. There were Catholic Hays and Presbyterian Hays; Hays, Jesuit missionaries, and Hays, ministers of the gospel. But amongst them all shines out George Hay, Vicar Apostolic of the Lowland District, the centenary of whose death occurred on the fifteenth of this month.

He was great, not on account of secular nobility, for his connection with the Tweeddales, Errols, Kinnouls, or Carlises, was remote enough, but for his high place in the Kingdom of God. Here, again, if mere hierarchical rank be considered, his station was not lofty. He was but Vicar Apostolic of one of the least of the vicariates of his day. He was great interiorly and spiritually, and in his work for the revival of the Catholic faith in Scotland.

George Hay was born in Edinburgh, August 13, 1729. His father, a writer, or, as we would say, an attorney-at-law, was a Jacobite and Nonjuror, who had suffered imprisonment after the rising of 1715. Apprenticed to a surgeon, George Lauder, the future bishop and his master joined the Highland army in 1745 in their professional capacity. The consequence was a year's imprisonment in London, during which young Hay came in contact with the Catholic publisher, Meighan, from whom he got his first notions of the Catholic religion. Returning to Edinburgh, he continued his study of the faith under Father John Seton, a Jesuit, who received him into the Church. While he was surgeon in a ship bound for Marseilles he met Bishop Challoner in London, who perceived his vocation and arranged that, on the termination of the voyage, he should go on to Rome and enter the Scots College in the beginning of the term 1751-1752. He was ordained in 1758, and a year later returned to his native land.

For eight years he labored in Banffshire, where, two hundred years before, his collateral ancestor, another George Hay, an apostate priest, had propagated the Reformation. In 1767 Bishop Smith, the Vicar Apostolic, died, leaving his temporal affairs in no slight confusion, something not to be wondered at if one considers his advanced age, his narrow means and the many years during which he lived in the shadow of the laws against Catholics. Bishop Grant, his successor, knowing Mr. Hay's—so secular priests were styled in Great Britain then—skill in business, called him to Edinburgh to straighten out those affairs, and in 1769 had him appointed coadjutor, with right of succession, under the title of Bishop of Daulis in partibus infidelium. As a gathering of bishops in Edinburgh was thought imprudent, the consecration took place at Scalan, a little Banff village in the Braes of Glenlivet.

Bishop Hay was a man of prayer. He rose early, made an hour's meditation, which was followed by the Little Hours and preparation for Mass. After his thanksgiving he made some spiritual reading, and then gave himself to the business of the day. During the afternoon he found time for Vespers, Matins and Lauds, and in the evening at 8 o'clock he gave himself to an hour of contemplation before, if possible, the Blessed Sacrament. Evening prayers for the household finished the public day, but in his room he prolonged his devotions and study often to midnight. He was a mortified man. His bed was a mattress and two blankets without sheets, and he kept his room in order without the help of a servant. His clothing was extremely modest, and at the same time extremely neat. His food was frugal, consisting often of milk and vegetables, and he abstained from all strong drink, a rare thing in Scotland and difficult on account of the climate. It is recorded how once, in time of scarcity, he looked upon oatmeal as too expensive fare. Nevertheless, his manners were cheerful and engaging, his conversation was lively and, at proper times, even humorous. Children loved him and crowded round him to hear his stories, which he told with charming grace. He was a musician, too, and would not refuse to gratify his company with the strains of his violin or with a song. This brief sketch of his character prepares the reader to hear that his favorite virtue was conformity to the holy will of God, and he was never weary of repeating the words: "As it shall be the will of God in heaven, so let it be done."

He had need of that conformity. Hardly had the death of Bishop Grant, in 1778, made him Vicar Apostolic, when he saw one of his churches in Edinburgh burned by a mob stirred up to frenzy at the news that the Government proposed a slight relaxation of the penal laws, and another sacked. The furniture and the library of his residence were partly destroyed and partly carried off and sold. But his conformity to God's will was not inactive. He went to London to demand protection for Catholics. This the Government would not grant, though it compensated him for his losses. He saw the Scots College in Rome fall into decay on account of the suppression of the Society of Jesus, which had directed it; and this called him to Rome with a plan for its reorganization under Scottish superiors, which, after some time, was carried out. Then the French Revolution destroyed all the continental establishments for the education and support of his clergy, a blow the more grievous because since the death of the exiled King James III, in 1706, the Scotch Mission had no longer the means which had come from that royal benefactor. In 1788, therefore, he had reorganized a seminary in the same village of Scalan where he had first labored and which had been the scene of his consecration; and when the continent was closed against him he began a larger one at Aquhorties in Aberdeenshire, whither the students of Scalan removed in 1799.

One of Bishop Hay's works, most interesting in this country, cannot be passed over. Macdonald of Boisdale, proprietor of part of South Uist, one of the Hebrides, and holding a large portion of the remainder under lease, apostatized from the faith and resolved to compel his tenants to do the same. For this purpose he established a school. But when the people found that abuse of their religion was part of the daily lessons, and that the master was trying to force their children to eat meat in Lent, the school was deserted. At Whitsuntide, 1770, a formal renunciation of the Catholic faith was one of the conditions for the renewal of leases; but as all refused to comply, Macdonald was obliged to abandon it. He punished the tenants, however, by making the rents three or four times what they were before, and expelled the priest from the island. Bishop Hay saw that emigration was the only remedy, and many passed over to Carolina. But this did not suit the zeal of the Bishop. He saw that emigration to a Protestant community was more dangerous to the faith of the people than Macdonald's persecution. He therefore enlisted Macdonald of Glenaladale in their cause. Macdonald bought an estate in the island of St. Jean, now Prince Edward Island, and, with the aid of Bishop Hay and the Highland Vicar Apostolic, raised the funds necessary to transport a colony of confessors thither. There their descendants still live the fervent Catholic life; and each generation sends forth of its children apostles to many parts of English-speaking America.

Notwithstanding his many cares, Bishop Hay's pen was not idle. More than a column of the English "Dictionary of National Biography" is taken up by his works, of which three are well known to-day as standard works of piety, viz.: "The Sincere Christian Instructed," "The Devout Christian Instructed" and "The Pious Christian Instructed." He died at the seminary of Aquhorties, October 15, 1811, and was buried in a ruined Catholic church on the banks of the Don. A new church now stands there, with his grave in the south transept. HENRY WOODS, S.J.

The Modern Literary Conscience

Conscience is the mirror in which the Eternal Law is reflected. Sometimes the mirror is soiled, or broken, entirely or partially, so that the Law is not clearly or only fragmentarily reflected. But in every case the injury done to the mirror is by the free act of its owner. He is responsible for the obscuring or the breaking of what the Creator intended to image correctly, eternal truth and moral obligation. Truth and obligation, as they appear in conscience, are the compelling subjective guides of every man; for behind the eternal law is the sanction of the Eternal Lawgiver, God.

There is no one to whom God gives better opportunities of knowing the Eternal Law than to men of superior intellect; for by their gifts they have been endowed with the faculty of knowing and understanding well the truths of reason and of revelation. With them there is no excuse for ignorance, for the ignorance of indolence or of malice is not excusable; hence they are culprits when they misrepresent, falsify, deny, or suppress the truth, and place Venus in the place of the Blessed Virgin Mary.

Judged by these simple principles, what are we to think of those writers who maliciously assail God, deny the Creed, and violate the Code imposed by Him on mankind? When such writers lie, are they not conscious of the malice of their act? When they teach immorality, do they not know that they are doing a vile thing? And when they suppress the truth or distort facts, do they not know that they are doing a dishonest act? Was Voltaire honest? Was Rousseau? Did not conscience tell them they that they were despicable for writing certain things that they did write? And of the horde of immoral writers, ancient and modern, from Boccaccio and Rabelais down to the recent French, German, Italian, English and American authors of salacious and atheistic novels, was there one in good faith? Was there one whose conscience did not reprove him for violating its primary promptings and precepts? Did Spinoza believe what he wrote? If so, he should have been put in a lunatic asylum. Did Haeckel's conscience not reprove him when, prompted by a hatred of Christianity, he forged figures to prove a false theory in science?

Among scores of novels issued annually from the non-Catholic press, a reader can hardly find more than one or two fit to be read by a decent person. They violate the ordinary laws of truth and decency. These authors write for the low motives of money-making or of notoriety—never to do good. After forty or fifty pages of the new book, the unveracious and immoral part of it usually begins. Yet each of the writers had originally a conscience. What did he or she do with it?

Lack of conscience is shown in the suppression of truth as well as in falsifying historical, theological, or philosophical facts, and printing indecency. These writers violate the natural law that binds even the conscience of the savage; for he knows that it is wrong to lie, steal, murder, or take his neighbor's wife. Certainly, civilized men who have lived in the atmosphere of Christianity know and feel that lying and indecency are morally wrong. Even the Turk, the Hindoo, and the Oriental pagans know the primary laws of morality. Among us the most intellectual and well educated writers are often those most lacking in conscience! Some of them have been the chief corrupters of morals.

Here is a writer, although not a prominent culprit, who will serve as an example of a lack of conscience: J. C. Wright, M.A., late Fellow of Magdalen College, Oxford, some few years ago wrote a translation in verse of Dante's "Divine Comedy." It is fairly well done as to the rhymes and the sense. But his prose introductions to the different parts of the poem show a malicious purpose to exaggerate Dante's censure of ecclesiastics and to misrepresent the poet's meaning in his great work. One special illustration of this author's bias and bigotry must suffice. In the introduction to the "Paradiso," after giving a fair resumé of the different cantos, he balks at the last one, evidently because the Blessed Virgin is there invoked in the beautiful prayer of St. Bernard composed by Dante. "By the intercession of St. Bernard," says Wright, "Dante is endued with grace to look upon the brightness of Jehovah, and offers up a prayer that he may be enabled to show forth to unborn nations some traces of the glory revealed to him." But it was by the intercession of the Blessed Virgin, whom St. Bernard invoked on Dante's behalf, that he was "endued with grace to look upon the brightness of Jehovah!" Why does not Wright say so? Why does he not give credit to the Blessed Virgin in this case, since he does not deign to name her in his three prose introductions? What kind of conscience can a writer have who ignores the truth when it is expressed in the plain text he is translating? Where is the "mens sibi conscia recti" of such a writer?

Another instance of this lack of conscience is evident in the new school of so-called Irish atheistic and foul novelists and writers of Irish plays. Where is the conscience of Shaw and of Synge? Why, even the very Preface to Synge's vulgar and loathsome "Playboy of the Western World" damns him. Hear him: "When I was writing 'The Shadow of the Glen,' some years ago, I got more aid than any learning could have given me from a chink in the floor of the old Wicklow house where I was staying that let me hear what was being said by the servant girls of the kitchen." Imagine Synge lying on the floor, now listening, now peeping through a hole in it at the poor innocent girls, to get a plot for an indecent play! An eavesdropper and a peeping Tom combined! It required a personality as low as that to write the plotless, vulgar, false, disgusting caricature of simple Irish peasants in the "Playboy." Yet some people call this literature!

If Dante could come back to life on earth he would probably place these violators of the canons of good taste and morality in a new edition of his "Inferno," impaled on the forks of the Malebranche. HENRY A. BRANN.

The Irish Pagans

The statement of the Irish Ecclesiastical Record, that what has been termed "the Yeats and Synge boom" is "part and parcel of a pagan renaissance," has been again confirmed in a letter of Mr. Yeats to the New York Sun of October 8, and was reaffirmed, October 10, by his admiring father. Yeats, the father, knows that the Connacht peasants are really pagan and that the abominable "Playboy" faithfully represents them, for (1) an unnamed peasant told him so, (2) a lady who found fault with it was a prude, (3) Synge was a good man and, pagans as the peasants were, he loved them.

Yeats, the son, is less ingenuous. He reproduces one of his pagan pronouncements cited in AMERICA—that he aims to make "Ireland again a Holy Land as it was before it gave its heart to Greece and Rome and Judea"—and, in pretending to modify it, more fully reveals his paganizing purposes. He is willing to deal with Christ as with Achilles, but not with the Christ of the Gospel. A fabulous, legendary Christ may be tolerated in Ireland, and further shrouded in the nebulous mantle of neo-Celtic romance; but the Man-God, the historical Christ must be banned and barred, the Irish must decline His acquaintance, and the Christ Whom Patrick preached must no longer walk in that "holy land." The heir of all the bards has said so. And he deftly insinuates that the thing is already accomplished—that the Irish country folk know not the Christ of Judea—thus adding another to the many libels his plays have uttered against the Catholic peasantry of Ireland. Because Lady Gregory heard a story of Christ appearing in a Connacht cottage in the likeness of a traveler Yeats at once concludes, according to his policy of generalizing from a selected incident to the end he has in view, that "it is characteristic of the folk mind" so to conceive the historical Christ, and to the Irish country folk "Christ did His miracles on the neighboring road," just as Cuchullin and Oscar performed their feats of valor in the district. Placing Christ and Achilles on the same historical level, he goes on to insinuate that the Irish peasant conceives Cuchullin and Christ in the same way, and concludes: "If it is paganism to think it a holy place trodden by holy feet it is not we who are pagans, but the country men and women of Ireland."

This is a fair sample of the Yeats shiftiness and literary trickery. By adroitly misapplying the word "holy" he has paganized the Irish peasant at a stroke. The Irish Catholic in town or country deems that Ireland a holy place which was trodden by the holy feet of her teachers, missionaries and martyrs and uninterrupted generations of a pure and Christian people. Mr. Yeats' "holy land" and "holy feet" are those only that antedate St. Patrick, before Christian footsteps polluted Irish pathways. Not only would he obliterate the footprints of Patrick and Columba and of the centuries of men and women who suffered at the hands of his racial and anti-Catholic progenitors, but he represents in this letter and depicts in his plays the Irish peasantry as actually renouncing their Catholic teachings for pagan morals and their Catholic heritage for pre-Christian romance.

This deliberate perversion of facts, whether open or veiled, is the warp and woof of his literary output. This is why the leaders of Irish Catholic thought have denounced him as a traducer of their people and an enemy of the Gaelic Revival. His insolent audacity in persisting to depict Catholics exclusively is on a par with his ignorance. Why, it was asked, does not this pagan of Protestant heritage and environment turn to the class he knows, and leave to Catholics the task of interpreting the Catholic mind?

Ireland is proud of its ancient literature, pagan and Christian. The heroes of her epics had nobler traits than those who warred at Ilium, and the ease and rapidity with which Christianity sunk ineffaceably into her heart and mind indicate high intellectual and moral standards in her pagan days. She had much to learn, but little to renounce. Her literature was rich and pure, and it was Irish monks, saints and scholars who wrote down, preserved and delivered it to us, despite the vandalism of pagan Danes and Protestant Saxons; it was the Catholic O'Curry and O'Donovan who rediscovered it when the laws penalizing Irish learning were repealed; and it is mainly Catholic scholars who have been and are now familiarizing the people with its treasures.

Protestant scholars like Dr. Hyde, who are working for Irish literature, and not for self-advertisement, are the last to make it a channel for pagan propaganda. They know, as Hyde's "Religious Songs of Connacht" make evident, that the Gaelic peasants who still recite lovingly the heroic legends of pagan times, are the most intensely Catholic in Ireland and the most moral in the world. They do conceive the Christ of Nazareth as near to them, not as a passing traveler, but as dwelling in the tabernacle of their churches, where they adore Him. Perhaps to Mr. Yeats this also is paganism. The brazen attempt, under the mask of patriotism and art, to picture a Catholic people as pagan in mind and morals, and Christian only in blasphemy, was justly characterized in the comment: "It is not by staging a lie we can exalt Ireland or art."

M. KENNY, S.J.

Tripoli

It is a curious and somewhat humiliating historical fact that Tripoli, which is now causing so much excitement in the world, was once our master. As early as 1785 the Dey of Algiers who then ruled over Tripoli had seized two American ships, carried their crews into slavery, and then demanded no less than $60,000 for their ransom. It was a huge sum in those days. Not until five years after was Washington able to lay the matter before Congress, but as there was no navy there was no redress. It is still more curious that little monarchical Portugal, whose disheveled politicians are now dancing around a republican caldron, protected us from our African enemy in those days of our helplessness. But even that protecting hand was withdrawn in 1793, when England, which was just then anxious to make peace with Algiers, succeeded in inducing Portugal to let other nations take care of their own shipping and to give the marauders a free hand for a year at least. It was not a kindly act for England to surrender us thus to the corsairs, but perhaps the memory of 1776 still rankled, and possibly, also, the shadow of the war of 1812 was beginning to darken the horizon. In this distressful situation we sent an ambassador to the little African potentate, with no other result, however, than that of being permitted to purchase security for our shipping at the price of $85,000 a year.

From 1785 until the end of 1793 fifteen American vessels had been seized by the Turks, and 180 men and officers had been reduced to a degrading slavery. Up to that time we had paid as much as $1,000,000 into the coffers of the Algerines to persuade them to leave us alone. Nor were we merely being bled to death financially, but the worst kind of indignities were being heaped on our official representatives. In May, 1800, when Captain Bainbridge had set sail on the good ship George Washington to pay our regular dues as well as our enforced homage, he was compelled on his arrival to set out on an embassy to Constantinople as the Dey's special agent. If he refused, it meant war with the United States, the destruction of his ship and his incarceration and that of his men in an African dungeon. It was a pretty pass for a proud American commander to find himself in. There was nothing to do, however, but to obey; and it was fortunate that he did so, for he returned from Constantinople to Tripoli invested with such powers that he was able to demand the release of all the Christians who were in captivity. He then set sail for home. His ship, The George Washington, was the first U. S. man-of-war to appear in the Bosphorus.

Two years afterwards saw Bainbridge again in the Mediterranean, no longer as a suppliant, but as a fighter, for war had been declared. He was in command of the Philadelphia, and was bent on avenging the insult that had been formerly put on him, but all his dreams were dispelled, and it was nearly two years before he saw his country again. The Philadelphia struck a rock in the harbor of Tripoli. The Algerines swarmed down on the helpless ship, and led off the crew as prisoners. For nineteen months he and his 315 men languished in African dungeons. The officers were treated with some consideration, but the men had to endure the sufferings and ignominy of the worst kind of slavery.

Then the Preble expedition set out and the heroic Decatur appears on the scene. On a bright moonlight night in February, 1804, the fleet sailed into the harbor. Decatur commanded the Intrepid, a vessel transformed from an old Turkish caïque which he had captured from the enemy the year before when it was on its way to Constantinople with its human freight for the Sultan's harem. It was a diminutive craft, for it had a crew of only seventy-four men, but with this small fighting machine he warped up to the Philadelphia, which after its disaster had been lifted off the rocks and now floated the Algerine flag. He leaped aboard at the head of his men, killed the whole crew or pitched them into the sea, and then set fire to the ship. His own little vessel was hauled off to safety, out of reach of the flames.

On August 3 of the same year, Decatur captured a huge Tripolitan warship, and then, veering over to another, on which his brother had been slain, boarded her at the head of his men, as before, and made for the captain, who had shot Decatur's brother. A hand-to-hand fight ensued; the pirate's pike pierced the American's breast, but, plucking it out, Decatur grappled with his antagonist and, as they rolled over in a death struggle on the deck, shot him through the heart. Decatur survived his wound.

Four other attacks were made on the city in the course of August and September, but without any practical result. On November 10 Commodore Barron arrived, and the fleet now numbered ten vessels, with 264 guns. They opened fire on the city, and on April 27 the American flag floated over the fortress of Tripoli. After that the United States paid no more tribute to the Moslems, but a ransom of $60,000 was demanded and given for the liberation of the prisoners of war. However, it was not until 1815 that the final battle was fought. Decatur was in chief command, and though in the January previous he had been badly beaten by the English—for the war of 1812 was still on—he set sail for the Mediterranean, and by defeating an Algerine squadron off Cartagena compelled the Government to promise to put an end to its barbarous conduct not only to the United States but to all the other powers. He made them pay, also, for all the American property that had been destroyed. But, as usual, the promise was not kept, and in 1816 England had to bombard the capital again. In 1830 France began its forty years of war, in which she has spent many a million and poured out rivers of blood to pacify the terrible Turk, at least in Algeria, on which Tripoli formerly depended. It was only in 1871 that the last serious rebellion was suppressed in that part of Africa.

Tripoli is the eastern end of old classic Carthage, where Hannibal ruled. It is estimated to have about 1,000,000 inhabitants, of whom the Berbers and Bedouins live in or roam over the country, while the Moors occupy the towns. In the town the Jews, Maltese, Italians and Cretans are gathered, and they make up the bulk of the foreign population. It has a seacoast of 1,100 miles. Its limits on the south are undefined, for the Sahara seems to run up in one part as far as the sea; on the east it is bounded by the plateau of Barca, and a line determined by France in 1892 fixes its separation from Tunis on the west. Its collective area is about 400,000 square miles. It has no great river, and is far from fertile. It is healthy enough, but frightfully hot when the simoon blows from the desert. On the interior plateaus storms rage with terrific violence. The principal occupation of the roaming Arabs is cattle-raising; that of the settled Moors, commerce with its immemorial caravans. Agriculture counts for little. As for the Government, it depends on Constantinople, and the Dey assumes the title Pasha.

In the school days of fifty years ago we knew all that section of Africa as far as the Straits of Gibraltar as the Barbary Coast, and one is prompted to ask: Whence comes the name? Is it because its bad habits made the world regard it as the chosen country of barbarians, or did the name Berber, the designation of what was probably the primitive population suggest it? Who can tell? The Arabs have a word Barbara, which signifies "the place where the people walk tumultuously." Whether the Greeks and Romans adopted the expression, we leave to the philologist to determine. At all events those "people who walked tumultuously" in Africa were cultured enough to build three cities, and hence the name of the entire territory. The cities were Cea, Sabrata, and Leptis. The first of these is the present capital, which the Moors call Tarabulus; but that is evidently Tripoli modified.

In the year 201 A. C., after the second Punic war, the Romans abandoned the country to the Numidians, but later resumed possession and called it the Tripolitana Provincia. That name vanished with Rome, and up to the middle of the sixteenth century it was considered merely as one of the sections of Barbary. About that time it was captured by the illustrious pirate, Dragut, and from that out became the stronghold of the sea-robbers of the Mediterranean.

When the Ottoman Empire began to decline, anarchy reigned in Tripoli. The Dey ceased to be appointed by the Sultan. The Janissaries elected him, and a needless confirmation of the choice was sent from Constantinople. Ever since then its history has been a series of revolts, assassinations and revolutions. Charles V attacked the pirates in 1541, but in spite of his greatness and power he failed. The French bombarded the capital in 1665 and 1728, but the piracy which it had hoped to suppress survived. Spain tried its hand at subjugation in 1775 without result. Then, as we have seen, came the United States, shortly after it separated from England. In 1835, when the country was in the throes of anarchy, the Sultan intervened, and put an end to the domination of the Caramanli family, which had furnished the ruling Deys since 1714. From 1835 it has remained a fief of Constantinople. A Sheik of Caramanli blood led a revolt in 1842, but he was promptly assassinated. In 1844 the Berbers attempted to throw off the yoke, but were soon quelled. Italy is now entering the field, and the world is waiting to see how it will fare. X.

Sixteenth Century Education in Mexico

III.—THE UNIVERSITY.

The work of education in Mexico, which was so brilliantly begun by the great Fray Pedro de Gante, progressed so rapidly that the colleges founded by the Franciscans did not answer the demands of the Mexicans who had become eager for learning. This, and the gradual growing social equality between the educated Indians and the Spaniards, brought about the creation of the University of Mexico. A University of Mexico during the sixteenth century! This, no doubt, will be a revelation to many. Yet it is a historical fact, as the following data will prove:

Don Antonio de Mendoza, first Viceroy of Mexico and the founder of the colleges of "Tlaltelolco" for the Indians and of "San Juan de Létran" for the "mestizos," was one of the most enthusiastic supporters of the idea of establishing the University, and gave some lands of his own for the site of the institution. A petition was then sent to the King of Spain asking him to give his consent to carry out the important design. The petition was favorably received by Charles V, and by a decree given at Toro on the 21st of September, 1551, he ordered the foundation and granted for that purpose an annuity of $1,000.

Besides the donation of $1,000 yearly, the privileges of Salamanca were granted to the new university, with the exception of a few limitations which Philip II eliminated by a decree given at Madrid on the 17th of October, 1562. The Holy See also took interest in the Mexican university, and in the year 1555 ordered that it should be ruled by the statutes of Salamanca, and confirmed the privileges granted to it by the Kings of Spain.

The University was formally inaugurated on the 25th of January, 1553. The first Rector was Don Antonio Rodriguez de Quesada, and the first chancellor Gomez de Santillana, both being judges of the Audiencia or Supreme Court. The University had from its very beginning the following chairs: Moral Theology, taught by Fray Pedro de la Peña; Sacred Scripture, by Fray Alonzo de la Veracruz; Canon Law, by Pedro Morones, who was the attorney general; Decretals, by Dr. Bartolomé Melgarejo; Law, by Bartolomé de Frias; Philosophy, by Rev. Juan Garcia; Rhetoric, by Cervantes Salazar; and Spanish Grammar, by Blas de Bustamante. A few years later were established the chairs of Mexican Medicine and Zoology.

All the teachers of the University were learned men. De la Peña was a graduate of the college of San Gregorio of Valladolid, Spain, and a pupil of the great Spanish theologian, Fray Domingo de Soto. (Icazbalceta's Biografias, Vol. IV, page 429.) Fray Alonzo de la Veracruz was a graduate of Salamanca, and had taught philosophy in that university prior to his coming to New Spain. (Op. cit. Vol. I, pages 44-54.) Melgarejo had received his doctorate at Alcalá, and Cervantes Salazar, a pupil of the learned Alejo de Venegas, had been professor of rhetoric at the University of Osuna, and Latin secretary to the Cardinal Fray Garcia de Loaysa, one of the most prominent men of Spain at that time, for he was General Inquisitor and successor of Archbishop Fonseca in the presidency of El Consejo de Indias. (Op. cit. Vol. II, pages 21-23.)

The University was opened to the public on the 3d of June, 1553. This event was signalized by the masterly Latin oration of the learned Cervantes Salazar. The various departments of the University did not, however, begin their work on the same day, but, commencing on the 5th of June, the various courses were opened one after the other so that the viceroy and the members of the Audiencia might be present at the first lesson taught in each department.

The University was first situated in some houses at the corner of Arzobispado and Seminario streets; on the 9th of July, 1589, it was removed to the house of Cortés on Empedradillo street, until 1589, when its magnificent quarters, built on some lots which had belonged to Cortés on the plazuela del Volador, were finished. One of the features of this building was the grand portico embellished with the statues of Civil and Canon Law, Medicine, Philosophy and Theology, the busts of the three Charles, and the escutcheon of the Royal Arms. (Carillo Perez, México Católico, Vol. VII, cap. I, M. S. cited by Icazbalceta.)

The University opened with ten students, all of whom were Augustinian friars. Among these was Fray Pedro de Augurto, a Mexican by birth, who later became the first rector of San Pablo, the first college of the Augustinians in Mexico; he taught theology at the university during the absence of Fray Alonso de la Veracruz, and finally was made Bishop of Zebú, P. I., where he died on the 14th of October, 1608. (Icazbalceta's Biografias, Vol. I, pages 428-429.)

The Augustinian friars were the first students of the University, and some of its greatest teachers were also monks of this order. As soon as the Augustinians arrived in Mexico they devoted themselves particularly to the development of the nascent University and the development of their colleges. This does not mean that they did not take an active part in the evangelical work which gave so much credit to the Franciscans and Dominicans, for it is recorded in their chronicles that three of the original number were distributed through the land to help in preaching of the Gospel.

The number of chairs established in the University at its beginning was gradually increased; so that in the first part of the last century it counted twenty-four chairs, including those of the Indian languages, which had been established since 1645. In the year 1775 the graduates of the University were 29,882 bachelors of arts and 1,172 doctors. We have not been able to find the exact number of graduates in the law department; among them we see the name of Juan Ruiz de Alarcon, the distinguished dramatic poet of Mexico, whose works have received a most favorable criticism from the literati of Spain.

The rectorship of Don Manuel Ignacio Beye de Cisneros was marked by the inauguration of a library of the University in the year 1760. This library had over 10,000 volumes, among which were many relating to Mexican history, and was of great advantage not only to its members, but also to outsiders, who had access to it twice a day. Considering that the means of transportation at the period under discussion were rather scarce, it is not too much to say that at least sixty per cent. of those books were printed in Mexico (The printing press was brought to Mexico in 1537 by the efforts of Bishop Zumárraga and the Viceroy, Mendoza), and this at a time when paper was so scarce that the Gazette of Sahagun was discontinued for lack of printing paper (Icazbalceta's Documents for the Hist. of Mex., Vol. II, p. 250), and when Mota Padilla complained that he had to pay one and, sometimes, two reales (about ten or twenty cents Spanish gold) a sheet to make a copy of his works.

The University was suppressed during the administration of President Farias in 1833. Reopened by Santana, it was again closed by President Comonfort by his decree of the 14th of September, 1857. General Zuloaga re-established it in the spring of 1858. Juárez gave it one more blow and again closed its doors. We see it revive once more in 1863, until Maximilian ordered its final closing by his decree of November 30, 1865.

This is in a few words the history of one of the first universities of America. The fact that thirty years after the Conquest we had a University is an eloquent proof of the culture of our Spanish ancestors. Yet there are some who consider the University as a second-class school, and who think that its curriculum was limited to scholastic subjects. But this belief is entirely absurd, for, as we have seen, the University had a chair of law from its very beginning, and a few years later the chair of medicine was established. But even supposing that the curriculum of the University had been confined merely to scholastic subjects, its work would be important, for it must not be forgotten that during the period under discussion the great universities of Europe devoted themselves particularly to scholastic subjects.

BENJAMIN MOLINA CIREROL.

CORRESPONDENCE

Anent the War with Turkey

ROME, October 1, 1911.

Along with the cholera, water-courses running dry during the extreme heat, volcanic eruptions at Aetna and Vesuvius, here comes war with Turkey on the heels of all. Indeed, these be troublous times. We had counted on the prevalence of cholera to prevent any war in Europe this year, but our hope has been disappointed. The government censorship on all telegraphic and extramural telephonic communications keeps the news from filtering through too fast for the public health, but we know at least that we are at war with Tripoli. Things moved swiftly enough.

On Monday Il Momento of Turin published that the Masonic Congress at Rome, under the presidency of the Grand Master, discussed the occupation of Tripoli and universal suffrage. Against the latter the conclusion of the Congress was absolute, on the ground that universal suffrage would result in Italy, as it had in Belgium and Germany, in a victory for clericalism. In the Tripoli matter the Prussian representatives, led by one Herr Backhaus, spoke in favor of Italian occupation; but the overwhelming sense of the Congress was against it, though it was thought wiser to abstain from a formal resolution to that effect. At the same time the Socialist Deputies to Parliament held a caucus at Bologna, in which they adopted a resolution against the occupation, on the ground that it would be injurious to the laboring classes, for the aggrandizement of the money interests, and an incentive to increased military domination. They deprecated, however, the general strike proposed by the Labor members. It is only just to add that some of the leading members of the Socialist Party, as Bissolati, Felice, and (to give the devil his due) Podrecca of the Asino, refused adhesion to the party resolution against occupation. The General Federation of Labor, also in session in Bologna, none the less, ordered a general strike of twenty-four hours' duration throughout all Italy as a protest against the abuse of military power and the occupation of Tripoli. This met with little sympathy from the laboring classes at large, and all they needed was an excuse to ignore the order. The excuse was forthcoming. The Catholic Labor Organization, a distinct body called into existence by the exclusion from the Federation, first, of Catholic principles, and then of Catholic membership, announced in terms of vigorous patriotism that in an emergency like the present it behooved all Italians to uphold the hands of the government, and consequently that the Catholic workingmen would not join in the strike. That ended the socialistic scheme. An effort was made to enforce the strike, which proved ludicrously abortive. The press of Rome, with the sole exception of the official organ owned by the Socialists, the Avanti, pronounced against the strike from the beginning.

Meanwhile, official action in regard to the occupation of Tripoli, pacific or by force as the case might be, went right on, and war with Turkey has resulted. The Capuchin Fathers have supplied chaplains for the land forces of the expedition, and the Salesians for the navy. The general sentiment of the Italians at Rome seems to be that the Turks are barbarians to be pushed back out of Europe, that the boycotting of Italian merchandise in Turkish ports is to be punished, Italian colonists in Africa protected; and, finally, that Italy is entitled to her share of the land-spoil resulting from the anatomical operations of the Powers upon the still living body of the Turk. Every evening in the Piazza Colonna, the Piazza Venezia and along the Corso in between, great crowds of enthusiastic Romans make public demonstration in favor of the war, cheering the army, the navy, Italy and Italian Tripoli.

The Vicar Apostolic of Tripoli, the Franciscan Father Rossetti, chanced to be in Rome at the beginning of the trouble. He hastened at once to Tripoli, arriving on Thursday morning; the 28th of September. The next day war was declared, and dispatches by way of Constantinople and London announce that Father Rossetti was obliged to withdraw, with the rest of the Italian residents. This is not quite credible, as it is agreed in all the dispatches that the Franciscans have remained in their monastery, hoping to save the church from profanation. So much for the war.

At Assisi during the past week the Catholic Professional Associations have been holding their annual week's convention for the discussion of social topics. The convention has forwarded a strong address to the Holy Father, in which it declares its adhesion to the principles and guidance of the Catholic Church in all efforts for the solution of present social problems. It proclaims its conviction that "all social economic organizations will remain barren of effect, while withdrawing from the supreme source of their vitality, religious truth as safeguarded by the Church and the Sovereign Pontiff, and that on the contrary only by adhering without reserve, in every field of their activity for social betterment, to the wise and strong guidance of the Catholic Church, by defending her sublime morality and doctrinal integrity and the freedom of her universal religious mission, will they make modern efforts for economic reform work out for true civilization."

The Holy Father, on hearing of the blowing up of the French man-of-war La Liberté, hastened to send the following telegram to Mons. Guillibert, Bishop of Frejus: "The Holy Father, deeply distressed in the presence of the catastrophe which has just befallen France and her glorious navy, expresses all the paternal sympathy of his heart, and offers to God his most earnest prayers for the victims, their afflicted families, and for the nation."

Signore Credaro, the Minister of Education, has just issued a circular order to all government supervisors of studies to enforce against all private secondary schools the law obliging them to submit to the Government for approval their courses of study and the text-books in use; and that under penalty of suppression of the schools. This is a development of the agitation against Father Savio's history for not glorifying to the taste of its friends the authors of the uprising of Italy.

Meantime, at the convent of the Reparatrice nuns two score of public school teachers have just finished a week's retreat for their spiritual strengthening.

Friday morning Bishop Harkins of Providence was received in audience by His Holiness. C. M.

Strikes and Taxes in Spain

MADRID, Sept. 25, 1911.

History repeats itself. Just as in July, 1909, the first volleys fired by our soldiers to punish the aggressions of the Moors of El Rif were echoed by the shout of revolution in Spain, so to-day, in similar circumstances, revolution has taken the form of general strikes, which have broken out simultaneously in Cantabria, Málaga, Saragossa, and elsewhere.

There are two chief causes of this state of affairs. On one hand there are the schemes and the gold of French colonizers, who are bent upon hindering in all possible ways Spain's activity in Morocco, and to this end they multiply obstacles and stir up strife among our people; for thus the attention of the Government will be turned from Moroccan affairs and our national energy will be lessened. On the other hand, there is the lamentable policy of Canalejas, who day after day has tolerated and left unpunished the spread of all kinds of anti-religious, anti-social and unpatriotic principles, simply for the sake of humoring the Republicans and Radicals.

This upheaval of popular and revolutionary passion has demonstrated to the President of the Council the dangerous trend of his policy, and has forced him to make a momentary change which is at variance with all his past history. Forgetting his own saying that "the Mauser is to be answered with dynamite," forgetting that in 1909 he was one of those who did most to stir up popular feeling against Maura because he used energetic means to check the crimes of Barcelona's bloody week, Canalejas, finding himself face to face with a similar conflict, did not hesitate to mobilize troops in Bilbao and to threaten to send the whole standing army of 73,000 men against the strikers who had dynamited the railway bridges.

This change of attitude has quite naturally irritated the revolutionists, who have relieved their feelings by denouncing him in their newspapers as "worse than Maura, a hundred times worse than Maura." This is the gratitude which is now shown Canalejas by those who exalted him to the skies when they saw the scope of his policy against religion, against the country, and against the army, when he approved by his silence of the French Socialist propaganda in Madrid, and when he walked arm in arm with the Radicals and showered governmental favors upon them. It is a just judgment upon the man who, two years ago, let his thirst for power gather together all the subversive elements of the country for the sake of overthrowing the Conservative administration.

Along with these social and political conflicts the religious question has just reached a grave and acute stage. It is about the inventories of ecclesiastical property. By a law sanctioned by the king on December 29, 1910, an annual tax was levied on the property of associations, corporations and similar organizations, whose property does not descend by right of inheritance; and an inventory of all such property was to be handed in prior to September 30, 1911.

At once the question was raised whether the new tax affected the property of the Church and of the Orders recognized by the Concordat. The legislator maintains that it does. The episcopate have just presented a collective letter in which they adduce reasons to prove that it does not. It has ever been an unquestioned principle in the history of Spanish jurisprudence that the Church and religious associations are governed by the Concordat in whatever affects their property. Now, Art. 41 of the Concordat still in force provides that "the Church shall be solemnly respected in the property that she now possesses or may hereafter obtain." The tax in question, as is plain, implies a falling-off in the revenues of productive property and an annual onslaught on the value of unproductive property. The bishops have, therefore, petitioned for a royal order to the effect that Church property is not included in the law.

But the tax in itself is the least of the evil; what is much worse is that with the inventories in its possession the Government would be well on its way towards the seizure of all Church property. We know for a fact that in anticipation of some such calamity Rome has expressly forbidden the religious Orders, whether of men or women, to make out such inventories. When the time comes they are to maintain an attitude of passive resistance to the law.

Here Canalejas has planted himself. The ground, as is plain to all, is extremely dangerous and delicate; the question is hard to solve, and the consequences of a solution cannot be foreseen.

NORBERTO TORCAL.

Adana

Prior to the appalling massacres by the Moslem mob and soldiery, who in April, 1909, destroyed the flourishing mission of Adana in Turkey, the Jesuit Fathers had in that place a college, a preparatory school, a church, and in connection with these a Girls' school conducted by the Sisters of St. Joseph of Lyons. All these establishments were destroyed by incendiaries. At the outbreak of the massacre over 8,000 Armenians sought refuge under the French flag in the Jesuit institutions. The Fathers opened their doors wide to all, Catholics and Gregorians alike, disregarding the orders of the French Consul in Mersina, who wanted them to leave Adana and seek safety in Mersina under the protection of the guns of the French squadron then at anchor in the bay. They stuck to the post of danger; one of them, Father Augustin Sabatier, was fired upon and seriously wounded by the Turkish soldiers. Their courage on that occasion elicited universal admiration. In 1910 the French Academy, in its annual distribution of prizes, awarded to two of them the Monthyon prize for heroic deeds. The address delivered on that occasion by Frédéric Masson, the well-known historian of Napoleon, was a masterful eulogy setting forth and contrasting the behavior of the missionaries with the shameful indifference and tacit connivance of the so-called Christian and civilized nations of Europe, who permitted the infuriated Moslems to butcher, under the very guns of their warships, over 15,000 Christians. The callousness of the European rulers was to a certain extent redeemed by the gallant conduct of a handful of French Priests and Sisters, who showed themselves worthy descendants of the Crusaders who, centuries ago, had shed their blood in the very same land and on the very same spot for the cause of Christ.

After the massacres and incendiary fires had done their destructive work, everything was in a state of chaos. The missionaries were confronted with the alternative of abandoning their establishments or suffering unbearable hardships; they did not hesitate, and selected the latter, camping out among the victims of the massacres, ministering to their physical and spiritual needs, acting as nurses, quartermasters, sanitary engineers, and attending to thousands of other details of relief work, the neglect of which might have meant pestilence among the refugees; such was their lot for many months.

The Superior of the Mission, whose headquarters were at Constantinople, was Father André. He had devoted eighteen years of his life to plan, build up and bring to a high stage of efficiency the various schools of Adana. Two years before the massacres he had been transferred to the less arduous duties of Rector of the College of the Holy Family in Cairo, Egypt. After the catastrophe the Superiors in Rome and Lyons (the mission of Armenia depending from the latter Province) called upon Father André to return to Adana and undertake the herculean task of restoration. With his characteristic energy and "push," he threw himself heart and soul into his work. Thanks to the generosity of a few French benefactors, he has so far succeeded in rebuilding the schools both for boys and girls that they have now more than 1,200 boarding and day pupils; but an additional burden has been thrown upon him, owing to the fact that the Armenians of either denomination have not been able to reconstruct their schools. The children apply now to the Fathers for school accommodation. To turn them away would be tantamount to compelling them to go to the Protestant schools.

Father André is very anxious to build his church. He has raised the funds, but official difficulties and procrastinations are delaying the work. The total loss suffered in the massacres amounts to over $80,000. They put in a claim for that amount through the French Embassy at Constantinople, but the latter does not seem to be inclined to press it. Ten years ago the French Government took drastic measures to collect the dubious claims of a group of naturalized Jewish bankers against the Turkish Government, and a French squadron dispatched to the Levant seized the Island of Metelin and threatened both Smyrna and the Dardanelles. Then the Turkish Government yielded and paid in full the famous Dorando claims. Now that a just claim has been filed by real Frenchmen, the Paris Government, dominated by Judeo-Masonic influences, does not seem eager to act.

He now proposes to convert into a permanent hospital, with eighty beds, the temporary ambulance-hospital fitted up during the relief work; but he has no funds. His Superiors have made it conditional upon his raising enough money to secure a minimum annual income of 8,000 francs, which is equivalent to $1,600 in American currency. He considers the erection of a hospital of vital importance for the Catholic cause. The Protestant missionaries have one; they have received generous contributions from their co-religionists in America, who have sent over $300,000. Unfortunately, the Catholic world has not been anywhere near as generous as the Protestants. Not a single dollar of American money has gone to help the Fathers in their work of restoration, and the American missionaries are so active and prosperous in Turkey that for the Christian population of the Empire, Greeks, Bulgarians and Armenians, the word American is synonymous with Protestant. It would be hard to make them believe that one-sixth of the inhabitants of the United States are Catholics. It may be realized from the foregoing against what tremendous odds the missionaries have to contend, but they are looking forward to charitable Catholics the world over for financial help to enable them to fight their way to success.

The conduct of the Fathers during the last massacre has endeared them specially to the Armenian Gregorians, and it has gone a long way towards eradicating the traditional hostility of the Armenian-Gregorians against the Catholic Church; no better opportunity has been afforded the Catholic clergy to improve its relations with the Gregorian Church. The Jesuits were sent to Armenia at the urgent request of the late Pope Leo XIII, with the main purpose of bringing into the fold the Gregorians, whose religious differences with the Catholics are not dogmatic. This object is now within comparatively easy reach, but the Catholic missionaries need the assistance and cooperation of the Catholic clergy and laity the world over in order to carry their undertaking to success. To illustrate how far conciliation has progressed we may be allowed to quote the incident of Father Jouve's funeral, in July, 1910. He died after a lingering illness caused by the shock, hardships and overwork he had suffered during and after the massacres. He was held in the highest veneration by the Gregorians, and on the day of his funeral the whole Christian population of Adana stopped work as a tribute to him. The clergy of the dissident denominations attended his funeral in a body; the Governor of the Province was represented; the Patriarch of the Gregorians came purposely from Sis and expressed his sympathies and those of his flock; the Council of the Armenian Patriarchate met and unanimously resolved to have an oil portrait made of Father Jouve and have it hung in the Council-room. In a community rent asunder by religious dissensions dating back to the Byzantine period a spontaneous demonstration of this kind is highly significant, and a matter of no common gratification for the devoted missionaries.

A M E R I C A

A · CATHOLIC · REVIEW · OF · THE · WEEK

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 21, 1911.

Entered as second-class matter, April 15th, 1909, at the Post Office at New York, N. Y., under the Act of March 3d, 1879.

Copyright, 1911, and published weekly by the America Press, New York.
President, THOMAS J. CAMPBELL; Secretary, H. J. SWIFT;
Treasurer, MICHAEL J. O'CONNOR.

SUBSCRIPTIONS, POSTPAID:

United States, 10 cents a copy; yearly, $3.00
Canada, $3.50 Europe, $4.00 (16s.)

Address:

THE AMERICA PRESS, 59 East 83d Street, New York City, N. Y., U. S. A.

CABLE ADDRESS: CATHREVIEW.

Catholicity and Citizenship

"The better Catholic you have, the better American you have," said President Taft a few weeks ago in a speech acknowledging a reception given him by a Catholic academy. To some of those outside the Church his words may seem but another instance of Mr. Taft's well-known gift for saying what admirably fits the occasion; while to others the President's statement may have weight as a prominent non-Catholic's testimony to the loyalty of his Catholic fellow-citizens.

But to those of the fold who have given the matter some thought our Chief Executive's assertion is almost a truism. For what else can a good Catholic be but a good citizen? A good Catholic knows that he must keep God's commandments; he knows that he must not buy or sell votes; he knows that he must not perjure himself; he knows that he must not rob or defraud the government or the taxpayer.

Good Catholics, moreover, believe that the Almighty will one day exact from them a strict account of the way they have kept His law; good Catholics reverence as coming from God all duly constituted authority; good Catholics consider marriage a sacred institution; good Catholics believe that morality without religion is a hollow sham.

The Church too, it should be remembered, provides her children with effective means for keeping the commandments and living up to their belief. For if they will but use the prayers she teaches them, heed the warnings she gives them and avail themselves of the holy Sacraments she administers for the cleansing, safeguarding and strengthening of their souls, Catholics will find it easy to keep the commandments and hold fast to their creed.

Such Catholics cannot but be good Americans. For to-day the Americans who are a menace to their country are corrupt politicians, shameless perjurers, lawless Socialists, upholders of divorce, and secularists in education. But no good Catholic can be any of these. So President Taft is right: The better the Catholic, the better the American.

A Moral for Our Readers

According to the figures given out to the comrades, October 7, by John M. Work, the National Secretary of the Socialist Party, its membership has now passed the one hundred thousand mark. Basing our calculations, as Socialists do, upon the ratio of members to voters, the party should now be able to poll more than a million votes, since with a membership of only 60,000 they registered 607,000 votes at the last balloting.

The reason for this discrepancy between the number of party members and party voters is easily understood when we learn that the former contribute each month twenty-five cents for the support of the party organization, while the latter make no greater sacrifices than merely to show their sympathy and offer their support by casting a Socialist vote. The party was founded only in 1901, at the time of the "Unity" convention at Indianapolis, and its greatest increase in membership took place immediately after the last elections, when the figures leaped from 60,000 to 80,000 during the brief period of three months.

There is an army of 50,000, known as "the Appeal Army," active in securing the circulation and ever greater expansion of the Socialist weekly, the Appeal to Reason, which already numbers half a million subscribers and many millions of readers. To each member of this army a circular letter was sent from the national office of the Socialist Party, with a special application blank for party membership, urging the recipient to become a member of the party, or if already one, to induce another to fill out the blank. The results are now beginning to show themselves.

Oh, for an army of 50,000 to pledge themselves to the spread of Catholic literature! Why not, dear reader, interest yourself for one, and make the application personal? There is no success except by work, and no work more important, as the Holy Father assured us, than the apostolate of the Catholic press. There are countless homes where a Catholic paper has its mission to fulfil, where you alone can introduce it, where else it will never find an entrance. It is your work as well as ours. What is so unselfishly done by the worker in the Socialist cause, who looks for no reward in the hereafter, can certainly be done by you, prompted by all the high motives which faith suggests and by the most urgent appeals from the Vicar of Christ. Well does he realize that the building of churches and schools will not avail us if we neglect the active, energetic support of the Catholic press. It is to you he addresses himself; yours is the work and yours the reward.

Socialists realize the power of the press. The vast diffusion of their literature is due entirely to individual initiative and enterprise.

Why not follow their example?

A Successful Protest

To purify the New York stage is so great a task that its accomplishment will require the long and hearty co-operation of all good citizens. But what can be done in smaller cities by following a line of action like that suggested in the issue of AMERICA for September 2 is shown by the ease with which the Aloysius Truth Society, an association of Washington Catholics, aroused the public opinion of that city against indecent theatrical productions.

A "Broadway success" not fit to be seen was announced to be coming to a Washington playhouse. The Aloysius Truth Society thereupon mailed a circular letter to the leading institutions and to the prominent men of the city, explaining the objectionable nature of the production and urging all to send vigorous protests to the manager of the theatre at which the performance was to be given. Consequently, the public was at once assured that, though the play would be presented, all objectionable features would be carefully removed. The promise was kept. But what was the result? The comedy proved so weak and insipid that the critics marveled much how so flat an affair could have enjoyed so long a run in New York. The explanation is simple. The parts eliminated were the very features that made the play so attractive to the prurient and the foul-minded, and with these portions gone, as the play lacked any real merit or dramatic consistency, it proved a total failure.

Besides exercising such praiseworthy vigilance as this, the Aloysius Truth Society publishes at intervals in the Washington Herald able papers on the decadence of the American stage, and suggests remedies for its improvement. Thus a sound public conscience may be formed on this important question.

Why cannot Catholics in other cities profitably follow this example set for them in Washington?

Canadian Agitation for a New Marriage Law

Will this agitation succeed? Only a prophet could answer definitely. One may note in it, however, an essential element in all successful revolutionary agitation, unscrupulosity as regards misrepresentation. In its beginnings we were told that the Province of Quebec stultified itself by declaring invalid marriages entered into before its own duly authorized agents. Now that it is clear to every one that the Province of Quebec does not authorize any but Catholic priests to assist at Catholic marriages, and that, if Episcopalians, Methodists, Presbyterians, etc., so chose, it would authorize no one but the ministers of those sects respectively to assist at the marriages of the members of such sects, the agitators raise a new cry. If a Protestant, they say, should marry a Catholic before a minister, or if a Catholic who had embraced Protestantism should in the same way marry a Catholic, or even a Protestant, the Quebec courts would, in view of the "Ne Temere" decree, decide such marriages to be invalid.

On what grounds do they forecast so surely what the decision of the courts would be? Past experience shows that, on the contrary, the Quebec courts are inclined to favor the Protestant side, and it is most probable that they would do so, should such cases come before them. They are very far from being mere echoes of the ecclesiastical courts. The Quebec code does not make them so. This recognizes the impediments placed by any denomination upon its members; but in the cases suggested at least one party is not a member of the Catholic Church in the eyes of the law; and we do not think we are far wrong in judging that the courts would decide in favor of that party. Odiosa sunt restringenda is a maxim of general application, and we believe that this would be the legal view of the case.

Anyhow, to base an agitation throughout the length and breadth of Canada against one province on a mere hypothesis is so utterly unreasonable that further misrepresentation is needed to support it. Hence we have been told that a well-known Catholic of Montreal, who married many years ago a Protestant woman before a minister, has had the invalidity of the marriage declared in a Quebec court, in view of the Ne Temere decree, and sustained in the court of appeal. As that decree is only a little over three years old, the story supposes it to be retroactive, and the wildest agitator knows better than that. If the Catholic is so well known, and if the case has gone from the lower court to the court of appeal, it is strange that the agitators do not quote it specifically by name.

Methodist Unity

At the Ecumenical Methodist Conference which was in session last week at Toronto, Canada, the Rev. T. H. Lewis, of Westminster, Md., who is President of the General Conference of the Methodist Protestant Church, made an urgent plea for a union of American Methodists into one body. He stated his position in favor of such a union thus: "We are keeping ourselves back from the greatest opportunity ever offered us by the most unnecessary and inexcusable hindrance ever tolerated. If a census of opinion could be taken as to what one circumstance would do most to promote world-wide evangelism among the Methodists themselves, enlist most missionaries and start a missionary crusade that would set the Methodist world aflame with new zeal and hope; I believe an overwhelming majority of all our people would say: 'It is the union of American Methodists into one body.' We have seventeen different names for Methodists in America, and consequently about as many different missionary campaigns. In the field we compete with each other, duplicate each other's efforts and confuse those trying to serve." Bishop E. E. Hess of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, expressed his dissent. "When you get too big a church it suffers from its own obesity," he said.

The earnest plea of Mr. Lewis for unity coupled with the unpleasant substantive employed by the Methodist Bishop in describing the Church is but a surface indication of the underlying difficulties which must be met and overcome before the multiplying divisions of Methodists can ever be formed into an organic body.

If Methodism has split into seventeen separate units in this country, this is due not only to the lack of any cohesive force which would hold its adherents together, but because, like Protestants in general, the principle of private judgment applied to essentials is running to its logical consequences. The principle of authority, on the other hand, is as essential to the Church as it is to the State. Without it Catholicity could never boast of its unrivaled unity nor present, as it does, an unbroken front to its assailants. When Methodists submit to authority, they may hope for unity, but in this case they will cease to be Methodists. A body in which the ravages of decomposition are visible may be held together by the embalming process, but such treatment arrests only for a time the progress of decay.

—•••—

"There are about 15,000 English-speaking Jesuit priests and scholastics in England and the colonies," writes a foreign correspondent of the Springfield Republican for the enlightenment of his readers. If by "England and the colonies" is meant the whole world, and if by "English-speaking" are meant Jesuits of all nationalities, and if in "priests and scholastics" are included lay-brothers, the assertion is not far from the truth. The English and Irish provinces of the Society have combined but about one thousand members.

—•••—

The authorities in New York City are vigorously enforcing the observance of the Child Labor Law. One day recently a city magistrate affixed his signature to 132 warrants and summonses procured by the inspectors of the Department of Commerce and Labor for alleged violations of the statute. For three weeks the department gave special attention to the matter of children between 14 and 16 years of age being compelled to work more than eight hours a day and being detained in shops and factories after five o'clock in the evening. In Manhattan Borough fifty inspectors traveled in pairs, visiting the whole district and procuring the evidence for themselves. Other inspectors were at work at the same time in other sections of Manhattan and in Brooklyn. Fully fifty child labor violations were found in the Borough of Brooklyn.

A YARN ABOUT SUBMARINES

"The pleasures of Anthony and Cleopatra have also rendered celebrated the divers of Egypt."—This is not a quoting from classical history, but from a pamphlet produced by a naval lieutenant in 1875, who says:—"According to Plutarch, the two lovers were frequently engaged in fishing in the waters of the Nile, on which occasions Anthony secretly employed the services of a submarine assistant, who from time to time attached a fish to the line of his master. The success of Anthony was a matter of great concern to Cleopatra, who could not conceal her annoyance, till one day, discovering his secret, she also employed a diver, who, on the next occasion, attached a large salt fish to the line of Anthony, who drew it from the water amidst the laughter of the surrounding courtiers."

Now, if anything in this weary world is refreshing, it is to light upon some such passage with its little view of human nature smiling through the driest possible series of military documents. Nowadays Uncle Sam's naval officers seldom drift into such light literature, but their predecessors have left humor and poetry and pathos in their reports, and so the charm will ever cling to old public documents.

To-day is the era of abridged reports and statistics, polysyllabic citations and scientific data. Some matters are so condensed in the official output of to-day that nothing but hardened consonants and digits seem to have survived from the shaking up and boiling down process which resulted from the official order to "curtail reports."

So, 'back to nature, the human nature which founded our nation and which really is the nation, our hearts love to wander from the mazes of abstract officialism. On my desk I have kept lovingly this little faded-purple pamphlet called "Lecture on Submarine Boats and their Application to Torpedo Operations, by Lieut. F. M. Barber, U. S. Navy." The lecture was printed (and probably delivered) at the U. S. Torpedo Station, Newport, R. I. It drifted into the harbor of the Public Documents Library with some more old-time Ordnance Bureau text-books, on some of which was written the owner's name "Capt. Dewey" or "Geo. Dewey." I fell day-dreaming at the autographs, wondering if the renowned Admiral would be glad to know that the school books of his early days were completing Uncle Sam's collection and were incidentally proving of unusual interest to one reader.

Lieut. Barber delighted in tracing the history of submarine navigation even back to the siege of Tyre, during which the Macedonians were "much annoyed by workmen under water, who came out from the city and cut their cables." These early submarines also prevented the enemy from building a dike by removing the stones underneath the water as fast as others were added above.

Touching on the armored divers of Rome, he passes to the two Greeks who demonstrated before Charles V the principle of the diving-bell by descending into the water in a large inverted kettle loaded with lead at the rim, coming up dry, and with their light still burning—all this at Toledo, Spain, in 1540.

Next came Cornelius Debbrel who, in 1624, constructed a submarine boat to carry twelve rowers and some passengers, and he is also credited with having discovered a liquid to purify the air needed in the under-water trip, but his secret died with him. The next Englishmen walked below the waters in a leather sack, cut largely on the outline of the human form and with a glass window at the face.

Next comes the Yankee genius, a William Phipps, ship carpenter of Boston, who "persuaded King Charles II to furnish him with a ship and a diving-bell of his own invention to search for a rich Spanish ship which had been sunk in six or seven fathoms of water off the coast of Hispaniola. The first attempt was unsuccessful, but on a second trial in 1687, he succeeded in raising treasure to the amount of $200,000. He was knighted on his return to Europe."

The last has been quoted at length because it may prove to be the first of the endless series of thrilling tales which center about mysterious Spanish treasures.

Bushnell, who died in Georgia in 1826, at the age of ninety, is called the "Father of Submarine Warfare." A Connecticut Yankee was this inventor, and he earned the other title during the Revolution by getting his boat, "American Turtle" under the British "Eagle," then lying off Governor's Island, in order to blow up that ship. The magazine exploded at some distance, however, and threw up a huge column of water, which astonished all and harmed no one.

The invention of Fulton and the government boat which was created to destroy the "Merrimac" of Civil War fame, are followed by a legion of later and successful submarine boats.

Some of the photographs of the poor old battleship have been officially published on large plates in connection with a recent report, and this can be obtained by those interested, as can the old detailed report of the Board of Inquiry on the Maine, but Lieut. Barber's Lecture, with its chronological appendix and its illustrations, is one of the good things which only come by the drifting-in process.

M. PELLEN.

LITERATURE

Reading for Catholics.

"Read your newspaper standing," was the advice given by a sage of the last century to the young men of his time, and "Read your newspaper standing" would be good counsel for American Catholics to-day. For if many who now sit for hours reading from the secular press page after page of trifling, useless or injurious "news and comment," which it requires little mental effort to absorb, were to skim through a reputable newspaper only as long as they could remain comfortably standing in one position, much time could be saved for more profitable reading.

The Catholics of this country should develop a taste for good literature. It is something that can be acquired. Every reader can frequent the society of the kings and queens of letters if he only wishes to fit himself for it. "All the while," Ruskin writes, "this eternal court is open to you, with its society, wide as the world, multitudinous in its days, the chosen and the mighty of every place and time. Into that you may enter always; in that you may take fellowship and rank, according to your wish; from that, once entered into it, you can never be an outcast but by your own fault; by your aristocracy of companionship there, your own inherent aristocracy will be assuredly tested." "Do you ask to be the companion of nobles?" he continues. "Make yourself noble and you shall be. Do you long for the conversation of the wise? Learn to understand it and you shall hear it." So Catholics can school themselves to appreciate and enjoy what is best in literature. The mere determination to like Shakespeare or Newman, for example, is a great stride forward. To take up, for instance, a well-edited text of "Macbeth," or the "Second Spring," with the resolve to discover and enjoy its beauties, is likely to be rewarded with at least the beginnings of the appreciation of a masterpiece.

No one can truthfully maintain now that there are few books by Catholics worth reading. If nothing but novels are desired, Father Francis J. Finn, S.J., reminds us that: "It is time for our Catholics to awake to the fact that there are now in the market splendid Catholic stories; that within the past decade there has sprung up a set of Catholic novelists the possibility of whose existence, even in the time of Cardinal Newman, was undreamed of. Canon Sheehan, John Ayscough, Father Benson, Genevieve Irons, the late Henry Harland, Olive Katherine Parr, Frank Spearman, Alice Dease, M. F. Egan, Mrs. Wilfrid Ward and others, have written novels out of which might be selected a number of books, which in every respect would be superior to any of the recorded 'best-sellers' of the last four or five years."

As for poetry, history, biography and devotional literature, how well provided with them English-speaking Catholics are, can be proved by a glance at the Liverpool Times' "One Hundred Best Catholic Books," a list reprinted in last April's Catholic Mind.

What a wealth, too, of solid learning the successive volumes of "The Catholic Encyclopedia" are furnishing. This great work those of slender means should be able to find at their local public library, so there is no excuse nowadays for any reading Catholic to be ignorant of the teaching, history and literature of the Church.

But, besides good books, Catholics should have good periodicals in their homes. Secular magazines and papers are there, no doubt, in abundance, but is the Catholic Press as well represented? In addition to the diocesan weekly, AMERICA or the Ave Maria should be conspicuous on the library table, and magazines like the Messenger of the Sacred Heart, the Catholic World, the Rosary or Extension, should not be absent.

If Catholic parents first cultivate in themselves and then impart to their children a correct taste in literature, so that only what is best is enjoyed or tolerated, they will be protecting their homes from the greatest danger of these times, the plague of indiscriminate reading.

Those, moreover, who staunchly support Catholic editors and authors may feel assured that they are doing more to stay the spread of irreligion and immorality in our land than if they built a score of churches, for Catholic books and periodicals can be made to reach and influence those who never enter a church. To counteract also the harm being done by that deluge of bad books and magazines that is daily pouring from the press, our boys and girls must be taught betimes to value properly the excellent work Catholic authors and editors are doing. For read our children will, that is certain. Then let us teach them to read what is good.

W. D.

Social France in the XVII Century. By CÉCILE HUGON. The Macmillan Company, New York. $3.00 net.

The "Social France" depicted in this very interesting volume is largely that part of it which clustered around the throne of Louis XIV, from his babyhood to his old age. There are, however, hasty sketches also of the conditions that prevailed in the everyday life of the people who had to submit to the freaks of the Grand Monarque's character, which by his extravagance and ambition developed to an appalling extent. As the writer is a lady, the distinguished women, respectable or otherwise, who fluttered about the court are given, perhaps, a disproportionate degree of consideration. But that may have been done with design, as the luxury of which these females were the natural promoters was the occasion, if not the chief cause of the sufferings which characterized the daily life of the unfortunate subjects of Louis XIV. On the other hand Miss Hugon does not fail to set before us in its completeness the favorable side in the character of these remarkable women by presenting them to us divested of their frivolity and worldliness, when in the days of the dreadful pestilence that ravaged France they appeared in great numbers as ministering angels at the bedside of the sick and dying.

In the matter of education one is tempted to doubt if the writer has given us a correct estimate of the condition of the schools prior to the times when the Jesuits took control of the colleges. If such gross ignorance prevailed among the bourgeois and nobles, it is difficult to understand how a brilliant period of letters was instantaneously evolved from the chaos. Nor do we admit that the results were due to an anticipation of the pedagogical maxims of Jean Jacques Rousseau; or that the influence of the school of Port Royal was as beneficial for the nation as Miss Hugon would have us accept. In the matter of morals, it is unfortunately true that scandal was rife in those days, especially in the court circles, and it is pleasant to note the delicacy in handling those unpleasant themes which distinguishes the writer's account of those blots on the reign of Louis. The book on the whole is a notable addition to the knowledge of that brilliant period of French history.

Die Schönheit der katholischen Moral. Von FRANZ HAMM. M. GLADBACH: Volksverein Verlag. 1, 20 M.

A thoughtful little book, written by a competent authority and dealing with the beauty of Catholic moral. It is a work such as is most greatly needed and most rarely found—a literary treatise on theology, in which priest and layman can take delight. The author's presentation is purely historical and in nowise polemic. We first glance with him at the ethical passages gleaned from the pages of the earliest Fathers; thence we pass into the company of those master minds, St. Clement of Alexandria, St. Ambrose, St. Augustine, St. Thomas and St. Bernard, and finally discuss the scholastic moral of our own day. It is not an exhaustive treatise that the writer means to put before us, but a book filled with pregnant thought and beautiful illustration. At a time when every resource of literary effect is employed to present the pagan ethics of our age in the most attractive forms, we should eagerly welcome a work which would set before the world the truth of Catholic moral in its own becoming beauty. * * *

Afrikanische Spiegelbilder. VON OTTO C. ARTBAUER. New York: Friedrich Pustet.

A picturesque description, full of color and life, giving the reader a vivid conception of the countries which to-day are most in the eyes of the world, Morocco, Tripoli and other parts of the great lands of the crescent. The natives with their impressionable natures, their fiery tempers, their distrust of the foreigner are strikingly placed upon the canvas. The book has all the interest of a story. * * *

Kirchliches Handbuch, herausgegeben von H. A. KROSE, S.J. St. Louis: B. Herder. $1.70 net.

The present issue of the Handbook of the Church is for the years 1910-1911. Two volumes of this work have already appeared and the intention is to make it an annual publication, if the proper encouragement is given to the enterprise. The name of the editor, Father Krose, S.J., is sufficient guaranty for the accuracy of the statistics and the correctness of the general information. The volume is intended to be used mainly as a reference book and gives the data whence we may gather the present condition of the Church: of her hierarchy, religious orders, societies, missions, schools and recent legislations. Although the general status of the entire Church is presented in various particulars, yet the book as such is devoted to the interests of Germany and of German

Catholics, for whom it is written. This, however, will not lessen its value for the general student, who will find here a complete account of the activity of the Catholic Church in the German Empire. * * *

"The Lights of English Literature," by E. Gibson Houston, is a very useful companion to the teacher of English. Though evidently not intended as a text book in itself, still it forms a useful accompaniment to almost any course of English literature selected by the teacher. It is a compendium rather than a mere synopsis of English literature, containing a well-defined outline of the field of English prose and verse from Caedman of the seventh century to Kipling of our day. The author groups the long line of writers into nine distinct ages. He does not seem to make any attempt at original criticism, but rather tries to present clearly and concisely the characteristics, the authors and the productions of each age. A leading feature of the work is a pictorial chart, showing the representative writer of each age. Around this portrait are grouped the names of contemporary authors, their relative degrees of merit being shown by difference of type, while signs in footnote indicate the nature of each writer's work. The entire work contains in a nutshell the meat of English literature.

There are certain books which the Catholic editor keeps always within easy reach. One such is "The American Catholic Who's Who," the valuable work of reference that Georgina Pell Curtis has compiled and edited and Herder publishes. Its seven hundred pages, well packed with biographical data of our Catholic countrymen, are a monument to the industry and enterprise of its projectors, and an impressive record of the number of Catholics of prominence this land contains. Though the first attempt here at a book of this kind, a year's use of the work has proved its high worth and many merits. Use, however, also betrays some of its defects and deficiencies. No one, of course, should be mentioned in a "Catholic Who's Who" that has never been received into the Church, or has thrown off all allegiance to her. Yet we find a prominent actress of no apparent church connections whatever, and a well-known mayor, who has long ceased to be a Catholic, put down as sheep of the fold. Then, too, the number of names in the book could profitably be reduced. Too many are of merely local prominence. On the other hand, some conspicuous omissions, due, no doubt, to the difficulty of securing information, have been noted.

In a work of this nature it is the editor's ungrateful duty to blue pencil the MS. of those who write too profusely about their family tree, their social triumphs, their minor achievements, or their commonplace travels. But there are some grave offenders of this class. About prelates, priests and laymen of real distinction we would often like more data than are given. Their modesty keeps them hid. Perhaps a neater and more compact book could be made of the "American Catholic Who's Who" by modeling it more on its British contemporary, in matter and style. But these, after all, are blemishes that can readily be pardoned in a pioneer work and really detract little from the many excellencies of Miss Curtis' book.

Father Thurston, S.J., has contributed to the Month an interesting enquiry into the origin of the term "Roman Catholic." It seems that "popish" and "Romish" were the epithets commonly applied to Catholics by Protestants prior to the year 1618. But about the time of the marriage negotiations James I was carrying on with Spain, "a more courteous tone came to prevail, and the usual term employed to designate the religion of the Spanish people is 'Roman Catholic." As the word "Roman" was used, not in a descriptive, but in a restrictive sense, it should have been resented by English and Irish Catholics of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries. But cowed by the penal laws they began to use the name themselves. In 1901, Cardinal Vaughan tried in vain to get the Crown to receive an address from him and his suffragans in which they described themselves simply as Catholics. The only permissible style was declared to be "the Roman Catholic Archbishop and Bishops in England." But the Cardinal found an early opportunity to explain publicly that, "with us the prefix 'Roman' is not restrictive to a species, or a section, but simply declaratory of Catholic." Father Thurston concludes his paper by urging his readers to insist on being called Catholics merely, to protest uniformly against the use of the name Roman Catholics, and to strive by every means in their power to claim the title which has been their rightful heritage from the beginning.

BOOKS RECEIVED

Studies Military and Diplomatic. 1775-1865. By Charles F. Adams. New York: The Macmillan Co. Net $2.50.
Pioneer Irish of Onondaga. About 1776-1847. By Theresa Bannon, M.D. New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons.
The Oriental Religions in Roman Paganism. By Franz Cumont. Introductory Essay by Grant Showerman. Chicago: The Open Court Publishing Co. Net $2.00.
Genius and Other Essays. By Edmund Clarence Stedman. New York: Moffat, Yard & Co. Net $1.50.
Where the Shamrock Grows. The Fortunes and Misfortunes of an Irish Family. By George H. Jessop. New York: The Baker & Taylor Co. Net $1.00.
Robert Louis Stevenson. By Isabel Strong. New York: Charles Scribner's Sons. Net 50 cents.
The Poems of Henry Van Dyke. Now First Collected and Revised with Many Hitherto Unpublished. New York: Charles Scribner's Sons. Net $2.00.

Latin Publication:

De Actibus Humanis. Auctore Victore Frins, S.J. Pars III. De Formanda Conscientia. St. Louis: B. Herder. Net $2.00.

Spanish Publication:

La Vida Espiritual. Reducida á Tres Principios Fundamentales. Por el Padre Mauricio Meschler, S.J. Version Española por el Padre Juan M. Restrepo, S.J. St. Louis: B. Herder. Net 70 cents.

French Publications:

La Dévotion au Sacré-Cœur de Jésus. Doctrine-Histoire. Par J. V. Bainvel. Paris: Gabriel Beauchesne, Rue de Rennes, 117. Prix 4 fr.
La Première Communion. Histoire et Discipline; Textes et Documents; des origines au XXe siècle. Paris: G. Beauchesne. Prix 3 fr. 50.
Récits de la Chambrée. Par Abbé Georges Ambler. Paris: G. Beauchesne.
Bellarmín et la Bible Sixto-Clémentine. Etude et Documents Inédits. Par le R. P. Xavier Marie le Bahelet, S.J. Paris: G. Beauchesne. Prix 5 fr.

EDUCATION

Dr. Stewart Paton, the eminent specialist in nervous diseases, has entered the lists in opposition to Dr. Andrew West, whose admirable paper on "Vocational Training" was discussed in this column two weeks ago. In a letter to the New York Times (October 7) he criticises the charge made by the Dean of Princeton's Graduate School that "the pursuit of the 'immediately useful' has to a great extent driven out the great studies of universal value and has become a menace to the liberal arts and sciences—the very soul of university life." Dr. Paton accepts Dr. West's paper as an "attempt to make vocational training the scapegoat for all the pedagogue's sins of omission and commission," and he affirms that "there are a great many intelligent persons who will not sympathize with the attempt." Dr. West, no doubt, will in his own time give us a suitable reply to the distinguished physician's letter, meantime, since the Princeton professor's contention was cordially approved in our own comment, it will be worth the while to look into some of the assertions contained in Dr. Paton's rejoinder.

* * *

The medical specialist will, one is sure, pardon the query suggesting itself on the first reading of his letter. Why does he deem Dr. West's paper a sweeping denial of any virtue in vocational training? "That there should be ample place outside and a place inside universities for technical and vocational training is to be admitted," are Dr. West's words, and he adds, "full provision should be made and is rapidly being made to supply what the nine-tenths of those who go to school and must 'make a living' need and can take." His quarrel is not with the defenders of vocational training as such, but with those who, in exaggerated esteem of that training, "slide into acquiescence with the notion that in education the visible side is the chief thing, and that the real end of education is 'practical,' 'vocational,' 'something that you can see the use of,' 'something that will help a man make a living.' The present day insistence on vocational training is ignorant," he contends, "because the relation of technical to liberal studies is not recognized in it to be not coordinate but subordinate; before one specializes he should have the general mental development that will make possible success in the special phase of work he may undertake."

* * *

Dr. West's argument is not an attempt to magnify the cultural value of liberal studies by speaking in derogatory terms of technical and vocational training; his purpose is deeper and broader. To him the "end of education is the development of intelligence," and learning is valuable for something more than that it helps a man in the struggle for life. If we mistake not, it is the crudely material concept of those who constantly measure the value of an education in the terms only of practical money-getting which he attacks. In the eagerness begotten of the progress characteristic of our time we try to turn all to utilitarian ends irrespective of the abiding invisible values of things. There are some things that cannot be turned into gold, and some things which gold cannot produce, without which, nevertheless, life in the society of our fellowmen would become a mere struggle for existence in which the physically strongest, the shrewdest and the most unprincipled would survive. There are virtues, to be sure, in the vocational training; so much one willingly concedes to Dr. Paton; but the virtues it possesses will never justify the intolerant stand its defenders assume towards every phase of intellectual training which does not make directly for material comfort, the conveniences of life and the material aids to refinement.

* * *

The Dean of the Princeton Graduate School, one may presume, is quite ready to accept the self-evident proposition that every disciplinary process by which the maturity and perfection of man's faculties are in any degree attained is in the widest sense of the term educational. This is a simple corollary of the original idea of the generic term "to educate." The traditional definition of the process it implies is that which simply asserts education to be the unfolding and development of the faculties of the whole man, the educing from the potentiality of the individual—to use the phraseology of the schools—of that physical, intellectual and moral maturity in act of which the individual is capable. Where Dr. West enters into conflict with the defenders of exaggerated vocationalism is rather in the specific determination of the disciplinary process best adapted to ensure this development. Since education is a generic term, comprehending various kinds, and not a word connoting a number of unrelated processes, it certainly supposes harmonious evolution of the distinctive faculties characterizing man as an intellectual and moral agent. The primary purpose of all education, properly so called, is to develop and train mental powers and to form and fix character.

Precisely here is found the inherent fallacy of the educationist whose criterion of the worth of a disciplinary process rests in its capability "to help a man make a living." The acceptance of the "obviously helpful" as a sole measure of one's effective use of his intellectual gifts is to follow a utilitarian impulse, which, as Dr. West very properly affirms, is "good only when followed as subordinate to something higher—the making of a good life." It invariably results in "individual narrowness, personal prejudice, amateur knowledge, half-baked impressions and facile judgments" which are the chief obstacles preventing the spread of culture. Dr. Paton appears much concerned lest the upholders of an education that means "something more" than bread-winning "introduce factional disputes and schisms among the defenders of the citadels of learning—the universities." These have no such purpose in view, one may safely affirm, but even the possibility of such an outcome will scarcely lessen the zeal with which they hold to a truth resting upon the very foundations of educational theory and confirmed by the results of history—the aim of education is to beget intelligence and to form character, not to help merely the individual in his struggle for life.

As frequently happens, the sensation of a day has died away leaving hardly a trace of the upheaval it created. One hears but little of Mr. Crane's broadside on the "Moral Result of College Education," and yet it was but yesterday that our papers gave it the notability which fantastic headlines and first-page prominence ensure. A curious sidelight is thrown on the Chicago merchant's attack by a remark contained in a letter recently received. A gentleman well informed on Harvard's ways, whilst conceding Mr. Crane to be "a crank of the first water on college and technical education," writes in this strain: "I think he is nearly right on the college business, as you know from our own observation here in Boston. . . . Some time ago I was talking with some Harvard men and the dearth of new college songs came up. One of them remarked that the new college songs were not heard outside of the college because they could not be sung in public. The fact is, of course, that there is entirely too much freedom for the freshmen classes. If the large colleges would adopt the system of the Catholic colleges of keeping the boys within certain bounds and not allowing them to run loose, it would make a great difference with their morals during freshman year."

M. J. O'C.

ECONOMICS.

As our readers know very well, coal fields are distributed quite widely in Western Europe. They occur in Westphalia, in Belgium, in Northern France, in England, Scotland and Wales. In fact, there seems to be a coal belt running northwestward between, say, latitude 48 and 56. As Ireland is well within this belt and is directly opposite the great English, Welsh and Scotch deposits, one would naturally expect to see these continued in that island. But, strange to say, there is no coal in Ireland; or rather, that there is no coal in Ireland has been the unfaltering persuasion of every schoolmaster in Great Britain for many a long year; and this valuable piece of geological information has been handed out unwaveringly to generation after generation of British school children, and to Irish children too in many national schools.

The absence of coal from Ireland was, of course, a mystery of Divine providence, which might not be examined too closely. It was commonly suggested, nevertheless, that God had laid up huge supplies in England, Scotland and Wales, as a reward for their people in view of their future meritorious zeal for the Gospel; and it was often pointed out that the extraction of coal developed almost step by step with the spreading of Protestantism. On the other hand, God had deprived Ireland of such treasures in punishment of its future obstinacy in adhering to Popery. Perhaps the explanation savors somewhat of bigotry; but for all that most Englishmen, Scotchmen and Welshmen held it "alta mente repostum" along with the conviction that in the Popish religion there is something incompatible with the spinning of cotton, the weaving of flax and wool and the navigation of the sea. For this idea they were as excusable as for the other; since their school histories have always observed a singular silence regarding certain very important facts that concerned Irish manufactures and trade.

Sometimes a foolhardy soul would venture to doubt the general persuasion. "Coal in Ireland?" would be the ordinary Briton's rejoinder. "Pooh! Pooh! Nonsense! You might as well talk of sturdy British oak in Timbuctoo!" But is there coal, workable coal, in Ireland? The "Encyclopædia Britannica," in its ninth edition, held out some hopes. It told of coal in all four provinces and was somewhat complimentary to the Leinster and Connaught fields. Its tone, somewhat depressing with regard to the Munster field, becomes soberly enthusiastic over that of Ulster, in which "it is believed that very extensive and valuable seams of workable coal exist at lower depths," a belief unentertainable with respect to the coal of the other provinces by any one who has not shaken himself free from the notion of the connexion between coal and the Protestant religion. Still one must not allow himself to be elated by the partially favorable view of the ninth edition. The last edition retracts all its concessions, telling us without any details that though coal is found in all the provinces, the quantity raised is very small. Under the heading of "Geology" it is more explicit, informing us of a vast upheaval at the close of the carboniferous period—the same, probably, which hurled the Isle of Man into the sea after pulling it out of the ground to form Lough Neagh—that raised all the upper coal measures to be worn away by the weather, the just punishment of a Popish people, and concluding that "little encouragement can therefore be given in Ireland to the popular belief in vast hidden coal fields." Hence, notwithstanding the ninth edition, the glorious, pious and immortal William, though he could deliver from Popery and wooden shoes, could not bring back, even to Tyrone, "the very extensive and valuable seams at the lower depths."

But is there coal in Ireland? A writer in the London Times, not having the fear of the last edition of the "Encyclopædia Britannica" before his eyes, tells of the discovery below the seams that have long been known, of a deposit of steam coal nearly equal in colorific value to the best Welsh. Being Irish it could not, of course, be absolutely equal to Welsh, still less could it be superior. The area of the field in which the new seam occurs is 75,000 acres, and its contents are estimated at 100 million tons. The more generous ninth edition of the "Encyclopædia Britannica" gave only 180 million tons of very ordinary coal to all Ireland. The Great Southern and Western Railway is about to extend its line into the district, what it would never do for the anthracite that has been worked on a small scale for so many years. But steam coal is not anthracite. It can be sold to Germany for its navy. The other day, when the Government was hurrying 20,000 tons of Welsh coal to the naval bases on the North Sea, 80,000 tons, it is said, were being shipped to Germany, with whose fleet it seemed quite probable that the British fleet might soon be engaged.

It appears, then, that there is coal in Ireland; and that, notwithstanding the latest "Encyclopædia Britannica's" refusal to encourage so unscientific a belief, there may be other "vast hidden coal fields" besides the Leinster one just discovered.

H. W.

PULPIT, PRESS AND PLATFORM

Among the reminiscences published by the Chicago Tribune on the fortieth anniversary of Chicago's "great fire," Oct. 9, 1871, is the following interesting story of a great missionary's vow. The incident is one well remembered by old-timers of Father Damen's home parish, the Holy Family, in Chicago.

"About that revered edifice known to three generations of west siders as Holy Family Catholic church centers a romance which had its inception at the time of the great fire. Built in 1857 by the Rev. Father Arnold Damen, S.J., the church and some of the oldest members of the original congregation have seen the great west side spring up around it.

Father Damen, who was the first Jesuit missionary to enter the field of Chicago after Father Marquette, established the Holy Family parish in 1852. He was the nestor of St. Ignatius college, now Loyola university, and his original parish comprised all that part of Chicago west of the Chicago river as far north as the present North avenue, and extending south into the prairies that fringed the young city. In an obscure corner of the gray old church which has stood for fifty-four years is a niche which shelters a statue of the Blessed Virgin. "Our Lady of Perpetual Help" is the symbolic title the image bears, and before it is a triangular candlestick, in which seven burning candles are placed.

The story of "Father Damen's Pledge" has its fountain head in that triangular array of lights before which hundreds offer daily orisons to the madonna above. Pious old Irishwomen of May street have watched its flickering gleam for forty years, and in telling their children or grandchildren the story of Father Damen bear witness to the fact that the candles never have gone out.

On October 9, 1871, the great Chicago fire started in a little old cowshed on De Koven street near Jefferson street. Early in the morning terrified women and children rushed to the shrine of the Madonna. The fire was headed in the direction of their parish, and the church of the Holy Family was directly in its path.

Father Arnold Damen was in New York conducting a mission. He was sent a telegram telling of the peril that threatened Chicago and his own little world, the Holy Family parish. Before the altar of St. Michael's, in Brooklyn, he prayed that his parish might be spared, and vowed a sanctuary light would be kept forever burning before the image of Our Lady of Perpetual Help if his prayers were answered.

Back in the gloomy church the women before the shrine saw the flames advance until but a hundred yards separated them from the outlying houses of the parish. Then the course of the fire was turned and the flames swept back over the downtown district. Not a house in Holy Family parish was burned, and when Father Damen returned the next day the story of the miraculous escape was told.

"In hoc signo vinces," said the pastor, as he knelt before the statue of the virgin. That day the lights were placed before the shrine, and Father Damen solemnized his vow at Mass never to allow them to burn out. The rector imposed the same obligation on all his successors.

For the past twenty-five years Brother Thomas Mulkerins, sacristan of the church, has tended the lights. He has guarded them jealously during his quarter century of vigilance and attests to the fact that they never have gone out. Three years ago the sacredness of Father Damen's pledge was threatened during a heavy rain storm one night.

The chancel window had been left open and a driving rain swept in past the shrine. At midnight the lights were all burning, but early in the morning when Brother Mulkerins entered the sanctuary the feeble glimmer of one candle stub was all that attended Our Lady of Perpetual Help. Quickly lighting a fresh candle from the dying one the sacristan placed it in a position and soon all seven were burning brightly.

Two old women of May street will have none of the theory that the position of the candle saved it from extinction on that occasion. The spirit of Father Damen, who died several years ago during a mission at Cheyenne, Wyo., they insist kept watch over the fervid little glow until Brother Mulkerins arrived. The fire of '71 is perpetuated in the feeble candlelight and the old women of the parish declare that it is the spirit of Catholicity itself, "the light that never has failed."

ECCLESIASTICAL NEWS

ENTRANCE FEES AT MASS.

Circular letter of His Excellency, the Apostolic Delegate, to all the Archbishops and Bishops of the United States:

SEPTEMBER 29, 1911.

YOUR LORDSHIPS:

On different occasions complaints have been made by various persons to this Delegation of the custom existing in some places as to the demand made at the doors of the church for money contributions to be given by those who are entering for the purpose of assisting at Mass or at other religious services.

It was also said that in some localities tickets for entrance to the church for the same purposes were previously sold, and especially on the occasion of Christmas,

Easter, etc., and were then demanded at the door of the church.

The necessary investigation having been made, it was found to be only too true that these practices really exist in some of the parishes of the various dioceses, and I did not fail to call the attention of the ordinaries to the matter.

Since there is here a question of a practice really reprehensible and already condemned, a practice, moreover, which could easily spread, and thus give still greater scandal both to Catholics and to non-Catholics, I have deemed it my duty to make it the subject of a circular letter.

It has long been known to all how strongly the Holy See has reprobated all practices of this kind, their explicit condemnation having been made by Pius IX in the year 1862. Not less explicit are the provisions of the Second and the Third Plenary Councils of Baltimore concerning this matter. (Cfr. Conc. Plen. Balt. II, No. 397, and Conc. Plen. Balt. III, No. 288.) To these should be added the fact that the S. C. of the Propaganda addressed to all the Bishops of the United States a letter dated 15 August, 1869, which contained the following: "Praxim pecunias exigendi ad fores ecclesiarum ut fideles ingredi possint, et divinis mysteriis adesse. . . . penitus aboleri atque eliminari cupiens, S. Congregatio A. Tuam nunc in Domino adhortari non desinit, ut omnem curam conferas, si forte in aliquibus istius diocesis locis consuetudinem huiusmodi invaluisse noveris, ne ulli omnino collectores, quando christifideles in ecclesiam ingrediuntur, quo divinis mysteriis adstare, vel verbum Dei audire possint, ad earumdem ecclesiarum fores ponantur."

I also wish to add that so recently as the 22nd of May, 1908, His Eminence, the Cardinal Prefect of the Propaganda, having received complaints concerning this matter, directed me to take measures to prevent the repetition of abuses of this kind, and I accordingly called the attention of the Bishop in whose diocese the abuse was verified to the matter.

After all that I have here set forth, Your Lordship, to whom ecclesiastical decorum and the good of souls is above all other considerations, will, I am sure, be more than ever convinced of the necessity of completely eliminating all evils of this kind. I therefore request you to command all rectors of churches in your diocese to discontinue all these practices, if they have already been introduced, and by no means to permit them to be established, if they do not already exist.

I well know that in some churches money is collected at the door, not for mere entrance, but as a payment for a seat in the church. Even this practice cannot be tolerated, since it produces an undesirable impression on all, and has proved to be, in practice, the cause of many regrettable consequences.

This custom also is, moreover, directly and manifestly opposed to the spirit of the above-mentioned letter of the S. Congregation of the Propaganda, in which it is explicitly said, "ne ulli omnino collectores . . . ad ecclesiarum fores ponantur." This custom, therefore, must also be abolished. In order, however, that the proper revenue from the pews be not lost, Your Lordship can devise some other method involving no objectionable features.

It need not be said that the present letter is not intended to prevent the distribution or the taking up of tickets gratuitously given when special circumstances suggest their use.

I am sure that Your Lordship will put into execution without delay what I have here, as a matter of conscience, directed; instructing the clergy at the same time that if in the future further complaints concerning these matters are received and are found to be well grounded, the rector responsible for them will be condignly punished.

Kindly acknowledge the receipt of this letter.

Respectfully yours in Christ,

✠ D. FALCONIO,
Apostolic Delegate.

The clouds were very heavy over Baltimore on Sunday, October 15, the day of the Cardinal's Jubilee, but, fortunately, no rain fell. Besides the Apostolic Delegate, there were bishops not only from the various parts of the United States, but from Mexico and Canada, and even South Africa had its representative. The procession that started from Calvert Hall and wound around the venerable cathedral seemed endless, with its seminarians and monks and friars, and secular priests and professors of the Catholic University, and monsignori and bishops and archbishops; the illustrious Jubilarian himself, accompanied by Papal chamberlains in blazing red uniform, closing the line. The sacred edifice was already crowded when the ecclesiastics entered, and then some few of the waiting throng outside were admitted. The sermon of the occasion was preached by the Most Reverend Archbishop Glennon of St. Louis, though the local press had him down for Washington, D. C. There was a banquet in the afternoon at the Seminary for some of the visiting clergy. At Vespers in the evening the sermon was preached by Archbishop Blenk of New Orleans.

On Monday morning the Knights of Columbus presented to His Eminence a rosary made up of nuggets of gold. A nun of Newfoundland had received it as a present from a miner. She, to gain money for a charitable institution, sold it to the Knights, and they in turn availed themselves of this occasion to present it to the Cardinal as an expression of their affection and esteem. An hour before that ceremony a Congress of the Holy Name Society from the whole country opened its sessions. It was a national convention, but there were also delegates present from Canada. In the afternoon there was a parade through the principal streets of the city of between 20,000 and 30,000 men, among whom were representatives of various clubs from Washington, New York, Boston and Chicago. At Vespers in the evening the preacher was the eloquent Bishop of Wheeling, P. J. Donahue, D.D. The whole city is rejoicing in the celebration, for, as all the world knows, the Cardinal is enshrined in the heart of Baltimore. Singularly enough, the Jubilee is a double one. It commemorates not only His Eminence's fiftieth year of priesthood, but the twenty-fifth anniversary of his elevation to the Cardinalate. He has seen wonderful changes in the United States during that period. How he himself was a prominent factor in their making was the theme of the distinguished prelate who spoke at the Jubilee Mass on Sunday morning.

The handsome silver service bought for Cardinal Gibbons by a citizens' committee of Baltimore, shortly after the civic demonstration in his honor on June 6, was formally presented at the City Hall on October 7. Mayor Preston presided as chairman of the committee appointed to secure a testimonial for the Cardinal from the people of Baltimore, irrespective of creed, marking the fiftieth anniversary of his ordination to the priesthood and the twenty-fifth anniversary of his elevation to the Cardinalate. The ceremony was attended by men high in the social, political, ecclesiastical and business life of the city and State.

Catholics will be interested in a decision handed down by Justice Stewart in the Supreme Court at Pittsburgh, on October 9, setting aside a decree of the Lackawanna County Court, which required the congregation of St. Joseph's Lithuanian Church, in Scranton, to execute and deliver a proper deed for the church property held in trust for them to Bishop Michael J. Hoban, of Scranton.

The dissensions among the congregation over the ownership of the church property arose in 1908, and has been the subject of litigation since that time. Ten lay members of the congregation brought proceedings to compel the restoration of the property to them as trustees, the excommunication of the dissenters following, and while Bishop Hoban complied with a decree of the court requiring him to convey the property, he issued an episcopal interdict, closing the doors of the church against the congregation.

A meeting of the congregation was then called to determine how the title to the property should be vested, and an election was afterwards held, which resulted in the election of Bishop Hoban as trustee, "in accordance with the laws and usages of the Catholic Church."

The ruling of Justice Stewart, considered unusually important in its ecclesiastical bearings, decides that the dispute must be settled by the statute of April 20, 1855, which holds that all church property must be held subject to the control of the lay members of the congregation.

He says in his opinion:

"In view of the plain words of the statute thus called to their attention as to the exclusive right of the property in the congregation, the unquestioned sovereignty of the law where rights of property are involved, the equal inhibition against the bishop, qua bishop, exercising control of the church property, the positive conflict in this respect between the rules and regulations of the Catholic Church and the statute laws of the State, what other conclusion can be reached than that the action of the meeting of the congregation, as expressed in the resolution we have referred to, and at which it is claimed Bishop Hoban was elected trustee, was a clear attempt to invest that particular ecclesiastical with an authority over the congregational property which the law expressly forbids? If no other purpose was intended than to elect Michael J. Hoban in his private and natural capacity—the only capacity in which, under the law, he was competent to hold the legal title as trustee—was it for the purpose of identification that he was described as 'Rt. Rev. Michael J. Hoban, Bishop of the Diocese of Scranton' . . .

"What the law does not expressly allow to such trustee it forbids. The office of trustee simply of legal title is not created by ecclesiastical authority, but created by the law; such trustee can exercise no control whatever over the property held in trust; being an officer created by law, and answerable only to the law, he can derive neither authority nor power from any other source. His duties, privileges, authority and responsibility qua trustee can neither be enlarged nor impaired by ecclesiastical interference, and any attempt to so interfere would be quite as illegal as though forbidden in express terms.

"But suppose we are mistaken in attributing to the congregational meeting that elected Bishop Hoban a purpose to circumvent the law, it follows then that the election was made under a total misapprehension of the law regulating ownership of church property and the rights of the congregation therein.

"The fact of conflict between the rules and regulations of the Catholic Church and the laws of the State in this regard remains. It is idle to dispute such fact; it is too patent to be questioned, and further discussion of it would be but wasted effort. If in ignorance of his rights, on the one hand, and the law's restrictions, on the other, the congregation by a majority of votes took the action on which these appellants base their claim, should the court lend its aid to compel compliance? Were contractual rights involved, we might feel constrained to do so; but we are embarrassed by no such consideration. No possible prejudice can come to any individual or interest by our withholding our sanction to the decree in this case. If St. Joseph's Lithuanian congregation desires Michael J. Hoban, whether described by his episcopal office or not, to be the custodian of the legal title to their church property, let them so declare by a majority vote of the adult male membership at a meeting regularly called, and their choice will not only be respected by the courts, but will by them be enforced if necessary. In either case no other purpose or understanding can be imputed than that the individual so chosen is to hold his office by virtue of the law, with no power or control whatever except what the law confers."

Several important changes were made last week in colleges under the care of the Society of Jesus in the Maryland-New York Province. The Rev. Joseph N. Dinand, for several years connected with St. Andrew's Novitiate, near Poughkeepsie, New York, has been appointed President of Holy Cross College, Worcester, Mass.; Rev. Thomas J. McCluskey, of St. Francis Xavier's, New York City, has been transferred to the presidency of Fordham University; Rev. Joseph Rockwell, the former Socius to the Very Rev. Provincial, becomes President of St. Francis Xavier's, and the Rev. Joseph Mulry, President of St. Peter's College, Jersey City. The Rev. Alphonse Donlan, Professor of Physics at Woodstock College, Md., is the newly appointed Socius to the Very Rev. Joseph Hanselman, Provincial of Maryland-New York.

SCIENCE

The U. S. Bureau of Mines has, for the past three years, been closely studying the heat losses and the physical deterioration of different samples of coal while in storage. The results are briefly set forth as these: Deterioration in the open varies considerably with the kind of coal, the Appalachian coals being only slightly affected, while the younger coals of the West are more easily oxidized and weathered. The wetting of the coal by submergence reduces its evaporation power more than enough to offset any saving accomplished through the prevention of deterioration. Fine coal deteriorates more in all cases than run-of-mine. Pocahontas coal lost but 0.3 per cent. in heat value in open air storage. The greatest heat loss was noted in Sheridan sub-bitumen, the loss being 3.5 per cent. Pittsburgh gas-coal suffered no loss at all during the first six months of outdoor exposure.

* * *

In order to protect its public roads, Italy, according to the Journal of the Royal Society of Arts, has enacted a law regulating the widths of wheel tires of vehicles. For two-wheeled vehicles a tire width of 1.57 inches is specified for 1,323 pounds gross weight, 2.36 inches for 2,205 pounds, 3.14 inches for 4,410 pounds, 3.72 inches for 11,023 pounds. For four-wheeled vehicles a tire width is set at 1.57 inches for 2,205 pounds, 2.36 inches for 3,307 pounds, and 3.14 inches for 6,614 pounds. Weights exceeding these and up to 15,432 pounds may be carried on wheels having rubber tires. If the weight is in excess of 15,432 pounds, special permission is required to use the roads.

* * *

At the request of the Standards Committee of the American Institute of Electrical Engineers, the U. S. Bureau of Standards has prepared new copper wire tables. The new publication contains fifteen tables, including complete reference tables for standard annealed copper, American wire gage, both in English and in metric units, and similar abbreviated working tables. There are also tables for bare concentric cables of standard annealed copper and for hard drawn aluminium wire. Comparisons of wire gages and tables of temperature reductions are included. F. TONDORF, S.J.

OBITUARY

The death is announced of the Rev. Henry Gillet, S.J., well known as a missionary in South Africa and Central America. The following sketch of his life is taken from the Eastern Province Herald, Port Elizabeth, Cape of Good Hope, for September 7, 1911:

Father Henry Gillet was born at Fleetwood, Lancashire, England, on December 4, 1842. He entered the Society of Jesus at Manresa House, Roehampton, London, S.W., on September 7, 1861. After his two years' novitiate and further studies, he was sent to teach in the Society's College at Liverpool. From Liverpool he was sent to teach in the Jesuit College in Jamaica, and after about two years he was recalled to Europe to begin his theology. Having completed his theological course he was ordained priest in Perigueux (south of France), on July 26, 1875. Before the end of the same year he was sent to the Jesuit Mission in British Honduras, where we find him in succession stationed at Belize (the capital), Corozal, and again at Belize, where in 1886 one of the works entrusted to him was the editorship of The Angelus, which he conducted for two years.

In 1888 he was appointed Superior of Stann Creek, where it will be of interest to know that he was joined by his three brothers, Fathers Anselm, Cassian, and Silvin Gillet, who had followed him into the Society of Jesus, and became co-workers with him in British Honduras. We next hear of him in turn at Orange Walk, Stann Creek, Belize and Corozal, the scarcity of missionaries necessitating such frequent changes. In 1895 the Mission of British Honduras was transferred from the English province of the Society of Jesus to the American Fathers of the same Society, the English Province having taken over the Zambesi Mission in South Africa. Hence Father Gillet was sent out here.

He arrived in Port Elizabeth on June 24, 1895, and his first appointment was that of Superior of Keilands, Transkei. One year later, in 1896, he succeeded the Rev. Father D. Corboy, S.J., as Superior of the Mission Station of Dunbrody, near Blue Cliff, where he remained until June, 1902. During his Superiorship he built the two schools for boys and girls which are admired by every visitor to Dunbrody. The High Altar in the church at Dunbrody is also his design, and to a great extent also his work. In June, 1902, he was sent from Dunbrody to Salisbury, Rhodesia, where he acted as Parish Priest and Chaplain to the Dominican Sisters until age and illness, the latter of which he had never known before in his life, made it imperative to send him back to Dunbrody, where he arrived on March 8, 1911.

From the 19th of the same month till the Feast of Pentecost he was able to say Mass, the only consolation that was left him. From Whit Monday till the last day of his life, August 31, 1911, he received Holy Communion every morning in his room. He bore his trying illness, dropsy and heart disease, with the fortitude of the veteran soldier of Christ. He died at 5.30 p. m. on August 31st, after having received all the last rites of Holy Church, and on the eve of the first Friday of the month in a mission whose church has the title of the "Sacred Heart of Jesus," and eight days before the Golden Jubilee of his entrance into the Society of Jesus. Anticipating this Jubilee, the highest Superiors of the Society had written to him on this occasion to thank him for his long and strenuous labors for God and the salvation of souls.

His funeral took place at Dunbrody on Saturday last, and was attended by the Rev. Father Superior and the resident priests of Dunbrody Mission, as well as by all the inhabitants of the Mission Station and friends from the neighboring farms.

A memorable incident in Father Gillet's life may here be recalled. It is connected with his residence in British Honduras in 1881, and the facts are as follows:—

Father Gillet was stationed at the time in Belize, the capital of British Honduras, where he was a teacher in the parish school. At the end of the session he asked and obtained the permission of his superiors to pay a visit to the Isabel lagoon, famed for its beauty. This lagoon is on Gautemalan territory, but almost within hailing distance of the Colony.

Although the Jesuits had been expelled from Gautemala in 1871, Father Gillet entertained no misgivings, for the nature of his errand, his nationality, and the flag under which the sloop sailed, were, in his opinion, a sufficient protection and a complete justification. But hardly had he set foot on shore when he was placed under arrest. After a short delay, to learn the pleasure of President Barrios, he was conveyed as a prisoner to the capital.

Five days spent on the road were followed by forty-eight hours without food or drink in a noisome dungeon, where those condemned to death were confined until the sentence was to be carried out. Thence Father Gillet was transferred to the common gaol, where he spent ten days in the company of thieves and vagrants before he could get word to the British Consular Agent. That gentleman lost no time in representing personally to President Barrios the complications that might arise from such high-handed actions towards one of her Britannic Majesty's subjects, and he insisted upon Father Gillet's immediate return to the place where he had been seized. President Barrios acquiesced.

The news of Father Gillet's capture produced consternation in Belize, for it was well known that President Barrios was not excessively conscientious in the choice of means when he had made up his mind to act. But while the advisability of sending an armed force to demand the release of the prisoner or to avenge his execution was under discussion in the Colony, which had no telegraphic communication with the rest of the world, Father Gillet solved the difficulty by making his appearance among his delighted friends.

Certain newspapers of the time, thinking that Father Gillet's execution was a foregone conclusion, for he was a Jesuit and a foreigner, anticipated the course of events by publishing harrowing descriptions of his trial, condemnation and execution, all fully illustrated from drawings "made on the spot" or elsewhere. They might do duty again if the Jesuits were to venture into Gautemala, for we understand that the so-called law inflicting the death on any foreign Jesuit that may stumble into the country is still on the statute books.

The foregoing is but a resume of this historic adventure, the full details being given in a pamphlet dealing with the incident published some time back by Father Gillet himself.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

THE "ENCYCLOPÆDIA BRITANNICA."

CULEBRA (CANAL ZONE), SEPT. 23, 1911.

To the Editor of AMERICA:

New York, N. Y.

REV. SIR: I am indebted to you for two particular favors:

(a) You have helped the cause of Truth by pointing out errors in the new edition of the "Encyclopædia Britannica," and, as one of the millions interested, I thank you.

(b) You have warned me in time, through AMERICA, to prevent my investing $120 in a reference set which, because of unreliability, would be more than useless to me; so again I am much in your debt.

With sincere thanks, best wishes, and the assurance of two new subscriptions from me (when mine falls due in January), and any others which I may happen to get for you, I remain

Yours very truly,

D. F. MACDONALD.

[Copy]

CULEBRA, C. Z., SEPT. 21, 1911.

To the Editor of the Encyclopædia Britannica,

35 West 32d St., New York City.

DEAR SIR:—Your advertising matter states that the present issue of the "Encyclopædia Britannica" is "absolutely authoritative and up to date." Relying on this and your advertised connection with Cambridge University, I made up my mind to purchase a set as soon as I should reach Washington, D. C., this fall. The circulars mailed me from your office had my enthusiasm up to the point where I should have ordered a set here but for the fact that books quickly become damaged in this damp climate.

Within the past few days I have received the surprising information that your great "Encyclopædia" is not trustworthy. Some copies of AMERICA have come to me, and these show that many of your articles, on the Catholic Church, for instance, are misstatements of fact, prejudiced and, therefore, worse than useless. This field, then, of your publication, is not authoritative, as you claim; therefore, I ask myself, how many of your other articles are to be depended upon?

To sum up, your advertising matter mailed to me, coupled with your use of the splendid name of Cambridge University, led me to believe your work to be authoritative as you claim. Now I learn that it is not authoritative; that it contains material that you must have known to be unreliable; therefore, as a collection of facts for reference it is worse than useless, and the misstatements in your advertising matter nearly cost me a personal loss of $120, the price of the set. This is my grievance against you, and it is certainly not a small one. As one interested in science—in the propagation of facts—I shall consider it my duty to work against your publication whenever I can find opportunity to do so, and I think such opportunities will not be few.

Yours truly,

DONALD F. MACDONALD.

Commission Geologist.

To the Editor of AMERICA:

On reading your masterly criticisms of the "Encyclopædia Britannica," I thought hard, as a subscriber to this work, what I should do. I finally sent this letter to the Cambridge University Press:

"Some months ago, you sent me, on request, 14 volumes of your "Encyclopædia." Since their delivery I have not opened them, but awaited the remaining volumes, which as yet have not come.

"My request was based on your assurance that there was nothing in them at which subscribers could take reasonable offence; that the various articles were treated objectively, truthfully and without bias. From published criticisms, citing innumerable instances of unfairness, bias and absolute falsehood, I am compelled to inform you that you have manifestly failed to keep your promise, and, having failed, I must request you to send for the 14 volumes now in my possession.

"The Church of which I am a member can stand discrimination, misrepresentation and calumny. She is divinely fortified for that. But I want the truth. This you fail to give me."

To the foregoing I received a response, a few days ago, denying "intentional unfairness or bias in the treatment of subjects concerning the Catholic Church," and requesting that the volumes I had in my possession—on which I fortunately had paid nothing—be returned, a request immediately acceded to.

Thus ended the transaction between the "Encyclopædia Britannica," 11th edition, and

A DISILLUSIONED SUBSCRIBER.

Outfitters to Schools, Institutions and Hospitals for everything in CHINA, GLASSWARE, Cutlery, Cooking Utensils and Sundries used in the dining room and kitchen. A reminder of a few necessities carried in stock:

Pails	Matches	Coffee Urns	Umbrella Stands
China	Crockery	Coffee Mills	Ice Cream Freezers
Trays	Hampers	Toilet Paper	Mops and Wringers
Scales	Fruit Jars	Jelly Moulds	Glass Candle Sticks
Brooms	Glassware	Earthenware	Ash and Garbage Cans
Dusters	Dust Pans	Woodenware	Silver and Plated Ware
Baskets	Stock Pots	Meat Presses	Agate Cooking Utensils
Brushes	Toilet Sets	Flower Vases	Aluminum " "
Sponges	Jardinières	Meat Choppers	Steel " "
Chamois	Stone Ware	Carpet Sweepers	Fire Proof Earthenware

Your inspection is invited, or our representative will call upon request

O'BEIRNE BROTHERS

317-319 WEST 42d STREET, NEW YORK CITY

Telephone 1177 Bryant One Block West from Broadway and Times Square Subway

Sacred Heart Sanitarium

FOR REST, QUIET, RECUPERATION AND HEALTH

Unsurpassed results obtained in Nervousness, Rheumatism, Heart and Stomach troubles. No surgical, hospital nor insanity cases taken. A delightful, homelike, restful place—ideal for all run down conditions. Hydrotherapy, Electricity, Massage, Zander Gymnasium, Sun parlor; swimming pools, billiards, bowling, etc. Gaited saddle horses, large indoor riding pavilion; suspended running track connected by tunnel with bath department. 17-acre park.

A staff of five physicians give their exclusive services to the patients.

WRITE SISTER SUPERIOR FOR BOOKLET X. MILWAUKEE, WIS.

DENTISTRY

Loose teeth tightened by a new process; teeth without plates. Extracting avoided. High-class and up-to-date dentistry in all branches at reasonable prices.

DRS. BURKE & BURKE
DENTISTS

1947 BROADWAY AND 65TH ST
66th St. Subway, L station and all surface cars.

HAVE YOU GOT ONE?

We mean a Daus Improved Tip Top Duplicator, with "Dausco" Oiled Linen Back negative roll, that ideal assistant, always ready to quickly make 100 copies from pen-written and 50 copies from type-written original. Complete Duplicator, cap size (prints 8 3/4 x 13 inches), costs $5 but we don't want your money until you are satisfied, so if interested just write us to send it on 10 days' trial without deposit. That's fair enough, isn't it? Then send to-day.

Felix G. Daus Duplicator Co., Daus Building, 111 John St., New York

Stained Glass Windows

Mayer & Co.

...of...

Munich, London and

47 Barclay Street New York

Memorial and other Window
Statues and Stations of the Cross

Designs and Estimates Submitted

Specimens of our work may be seen in almost every City in the United States

MARRIAGE INVITATIONS

beautifully engraved in correct forms, at moderate prices. Mail orders receive special attention.

DEMPSEY & CARROLL,
22 West 23 St., New York

The Coward Shoe

"REG. U. S. PAT. OFF."

Orthopedic

To every man whose daily occupation necessitates constant walking or standing, the Coward ORTHOPEDIC SHOE is a friend in need.

It has a roomy toe, flexible tread, with a snug fit about the waist and heel, that rests the arch and supports the ankle.

Men with tender, sensitive feet will particularly appreciate the comfort of this shoe.

SOLD NOWHERE ELSE

JAMES S. COWARD

264-274 Greenwich St., N. Y.

(NEAR WARREN STREET)

Mail Orders Filled | Send for Catalogue

INSTITUTION LINEN

of all kinds, also Sheets and Pillow Cases, Blankets, Bed Spreads, etc., etc.

WRITE for SAMPLES and PRICES

H. W. BAKER LINEN CO. Dept "K"
41 WORTH ST.
Importers and Manufacturers NEW YORK CITY

For Entrances, Corridors or Floor-Spaces
Exposed to Hard Service, Dirt or Wet

Cary's Everlasting Flexible Steel Mats

None so Clean, Durable and Sanitary for Churches, Hotels, Apartment Houses, Banks,
Stores, Restaurants and Public Buildings

Made of the
Best Cold Rolled
Steel. Rust Proof
Reversible, Self-
Cleaning.

Made in rolls and eight regular sizes. Special sizes to order.

Among the Churches which we have equipped with our mat are the CHURCH OF OUR LADY OF MERCY, FORDHAM, N. Y., with 270 square feet; ST.
CECILIA'S CHURCH, NEW YORK, with nearly 400 square feet, and we have put over 900 square feet in ST. AUGUSTINE'S CHURCH and SCHOOL, BRIDGEPORT, CONN.

Circular upon request. CAN YOU AFFORD TO BE WITHOUT THESE? (Telephone Worth 1445)

CARY MANUFACTURING CO. - 19 to 23 Roosevelt St., New York

The United States
Government uses
and specifies
for this mat
in all their Buildings.

PATENTED
IN THE UNITED STATES AND FOREIGN COUNTRIES.

We can supply anything in the line of Kitchen and Bakers' Utensils

Catalogue "M" FREE
upon request

French Cooking Ranges
and Broilers

Cooking Equipments
of Every Description

JAMES Y. WATKINS & SON 16, 18, 20 CATHERINE ST.
NEW YORK, N. Y.

Pioneer Priests OF North America

By Rev. T. J. CAMPBELL, S.J.

VOLUME I

Among the Iroquois

AN INTERESTING STORY OF THE MIS-SIONARIES AMONG THE IROQUOIS

383 Pages

27 Illustrations

Price $1.60 By Mail
20c extra

VOLUME II.

Among the Hurons

TELLS THE HEROIC STORY OF DE BRÉBEUF
AND HIS ASSOCIATES.

480 Pages

24 Illustrations

Price $2.00 By Mail
20c extra

THE AMERICA PRESS 59 East 83d Street
NEW YORK

The Catholic Mind

The Truth About "The Encyclopaedia Britannica"

BY REV. T. J. CAMPBELL, S.J.

Single numbers 5 cents each, $4.00 per hundred

THE AMERICA PRESS, 59 East 83d Street, New York City

WE OWN AND OFFER

$165,000

First Mortgage Real Estate $500 Gold Coupon Notes

EXECUTED BY

St. Joseph's Convent of Mercy in St. Louis

(A Corporation)

RATE OF INTEREST

5%

PAYABLE SEMI-ANNUALLY

TOTAL ISSUE $300,000

PROPERTY VALUED AT $700,000

All Notes Dated April 10, 1911

Interest coupons payable May 1st and November 1st of each year, at the office of the Mercantile Trust Company, Trustee in Deed of Trust, securing this issue of Notes.

Principal Notes of $500 each, payable as follows:

Numbers 1 to 20, both inclusive, on May 1, 1914 (Sold)	$ 10,000
Numbers 21 to 40, both inclusive, on May 1, 1915 (Sold)	10,000
Numbers 41 to 70, both inclusive, on May 1, 1916 (Sold)	15,000
Numbers 71 to 100, both inclusive, on May 1, 1917 (Sold)	15,000
Numbers 101 to 130, both inclusive, on May 1, 1918 (Sold)	15,000
Numbers 131 to 160, both inclusive, on May 1, 1919	15,000
Numbers 161 to 190, both inclusive, on May 1, 1920	15,000
Numbers 191 to 600, both inclusive, on May 1, 1921	205,000

Maturities available 1919, 1920 and 1921

Total.....$300,000

SECURITY—Six Separate Properties Valued at over $700,000

FIRST: A magnificent tract of ground fronting 314 feet 10 inches on Euclid Avenue by the extraordinary depth of 432 feet 7 inches on Parkview Place and 396 feet on Audubon Avenue, just one-half block east of Forest Park, and one block south of Forest Park Boulevard. There is now in course of erection on this property at a cost of over $380,000 the handsome new fireproof building known as St. Johns Hospital, one of the most modern and complete buildings of its kind in the United States.

THIRD: The Southeast Corner of 22d and Morgan Streets. Lot fronting 168 feet on Morgan Street by a depth of 144 feet 7½ inches on 22d Street, together with the 3-story brick building, now used as the Girls' Industrial School.

FIFTH: Eighty-one acres fronting on the Laclede Station Road and Edgar Road in St. Louis County, near Webster Groves. A magnificent tract of land rapidly increasing in value.

The Deed of Trust securing these notes is a first making the notes exceptionally well secured.

The Mortgage requires that the improvements be kept insured in a sum of at least $175,000 against fire and $100,000 against tornado. Loss, if any, payable to and policies held by the Mercantile Trust Company for the benefit of note-holders.

The Title to all this property is perfect. Titles have been examined and Certificates issued by Title Guaranty Trust Co. on the St. Louis City and County properties.

Notes payable to bearer, but if desired may be registered free of charge in name of purchaser.

A safe and convenient Investment of $500 or multiples of $500 netting purchasers 5%.

Purchases by non-residents filled with the same dispatch as locally.

Interviews and correspondence invited.

SECOND: The Southeast Corner of 23d and Locust Streets fronting 106 feet 6 inches on Locust Street by 155 feet on 23d Street, together with the 3-story brick building, known as the St. Johns Hospital and covering the entire lot. It is the intention to remove said Hospital to the new building above described as soon as same is completed. The Girls' Industrial School now at 22d and Morgan Streets will then be removed to and will occupy the property at 23d and Locust Streets.

FOURTH: A strip of ground fronting 451 feet 3 inches on the north line of Cook Avenue by a depth of 147 feet 6 inches on Newstead Avenue, just opposite the Rankin School of Mechanical Trades.

SIXTH: A tract of land fronting 320 feet on Nichols Street and bounded by Main and Concord Street in the City of Springfield, Missouri, together with the brick Hospital Building, known as St. Johns Hospital thereon, erected at a cost of Forty Thousand Dollars, exclusive of ground.

Mortgage on EACH OF THE SIX properties described,

REAL ESTATE
LOAN DEPARTMENT

Mercantile Trust Company

Eighth and Locust Streets
ST. LOUIS, MISSOURI

FESTUS J. WADE, President.

J. B. MOBERLY, Real Estate Loan Officer.

Capital and surplus Nine and One-half Million Dollars.

The Catholic Mind

LIST OF ARTICLES NOT OUT OF PRINT

—1903—

- No. 9. THE ATTITUDE OF MODERN PROTESTANTS TOWARDS THE VIRGINITY OF OUR BLESSED LADY. A. J. MAAS, S.J.
 Nos. 10, 11. GALILEO GALILEI LINCEO.
 No. 22. THE END JUSTIFIES THE MEANS. Rt. Rev. Bishop Ludden, John Gerard, S.J., S. M. Brandi, S.J.

—1904—

- Nos. 3, 4. STATISTICS OF THE LEADING RELIGIOUS DENOMINATIONS. H. A. KROSE, S.J.
 Nos. 8, 9. THE RELIGIOUS CRISIS IN FRANCE. A. DE MUN. D. M. O'CONNOR.
 No. 14. THE CONCORDAT OF 1901.
 No. 15. SUAREZ AND REGICIDE.
 Nos. 17, 18. THE VATICAN WHITE BOOK.
 No. 24. THE CATHOLIC PROTECTORATE OF FRANCE IN THE EAST AND IN THE FAR EAST.

—1905—

- No. 8. WHO STARTED THE SPY SYSTEM IN FRANCE?
 No. 18. A SINGLE CATECHISM: ITS ADVANTAGES AND DISADVANTAGES. Civiltà Cattolica.
 No. 19. PUBLIC CONTROVERSIES ON RELIGIOUS MATTERS. Etudes.

—1906—

- No. 1. THE FRENCH SEPARATION BILL. TEXT. J. G.
 No. 13. SCIENCE AND RELIGION.
 No. 15. I. OBJECT OF FEDERATION. Rt. Rev. J. F. REGIS CANEVIN, D.D.
 II. DIVORCE. Hon. Daniel J. Keneffick.
 No. 17. HOLY COMMUNION IN THE EARLY CHURCH. Edward King, in the Month.
 No. 18. THE FRENCH ASSOCIATIONS OF WORSHIP AND THEIR SUBSTITUTES.
 No. 24. THE DELUSION OF CHRISTIAN SCIENCE. T. J. CAMPBELL, S.J.

—1907—

- No. 1. LEGAL OPINIONS ON THE FRENCH SPOILIATION.
 No. 4. FERDINAND BRUNETIERE. PIERRE SUAU, S.J.
 No. 19. RECENT PAPAL DOCUMENTS.

—1908—

- No. 4. A PRIMARY CIVIC DUTY.
 No. 7. SCIENCE AND HER COUNTERFEIT. J. GERARD, S.J.
 No. 8. UNIVERSITY EDUCATION IN IRELAND.
 No. 9. PLAIN WORDS ON SOCIALISM. I. C. S. DEVAS, M.A.
 No. 11. CATHOLICS AND THE SOCIAL MOVEMENT. Rt. Rev. Mgr. Parkinson, D.D.
 No. 12. THE MAKING OF A SAINT.
 No. 13. MR. BIRRELL'S UNIVERSITY BILL.
 No. 14. STATUS AND PROPERTY RIGHTS OF THE ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH.
 No. 15. APOSTOLIC CONSTITUTION ON THE ROMAN CURIA.
 No. 16. THE ROMAN COURTS.

- No. 19. THE GENIUS OF CARDINAL WISEMAN. WILFRID WARD.
 No. 20. THE MASS AND THE REFORMATION. J. CANON MOYES.
 No. 21. CHRISTIAN KNIGHTHOOD. JOSEPH G. ANDERSON.
 No. 22. REVISING THE VULGATE. F. A. GASQUET, Abbot, O.S.B.

—1909—

- No. 1. LORD KELVIN AND THE EXISTENCE OF GOD. H. V. GILL, S.J.
 No. 2. PRIMARY EDUCATION IN FRANCE. J. E. N.
 No. 3. PSYCHOTHERAPY. JAMES J. WALSH, M.D., LL.D.
 Nos. 4, 5. SOCIALISM AND CHRISTIANITY. I, II. Rev. J. F. HOGAN, D.D.
 No. 8. DARWINISM FIFTY YEARS AFTER. G. BONETTI, S.J.
 No. 9. CATHOLIC FEDERATION OF LONDON. Hon. CHARLES RUSSELL.
 No. 10. THE SALFORD DIOCESAN CATHOLIC FEDERATION. The Month, May, '09.
 Nos. 11, 12, 13, 14. CALVIN'S CONVERSION. I, II, III, IV. PAUL BERNARD, in Etudes.
 Nos. 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20. CATHOLIC UNIVERSITIES. I, II, III, IV, V, VI. ALFRED BAUDRILLART.
 No. 21. SOCIALISTS' AND CATHOLICS. ETIENNE LAMY.
 No. 24. SERMON ON CARDINAL NEWMAN. JOSEPH RICKABY, S.J.

—1910—

- No. 1. THE FRENCH BISHOPS AND THE EDUCATION PROBLEM. CHAMBRUN.
 No. 2. ETERNAL PUNISHMENT. GEORGE R. ROCHE, S.J.
 No. 3. THE SONS OF ST. FRANCIS. HERBERT THURSTON, S.J.
 Nos. 4, 5, 6, 7, 8. CATHOLIC MISSIONS. I, II, III, IV, V. HILARIÓN GIL.
 Nos. 11, 12, 13. CALLISTUS III AND HALLEY'S COMET. I, II, III.
 Nos. 14, 15. ST. CHARLES BORROMEO ENCYCLICAL.
 No. 16. THE PASTOR AND EDUCATION.
 No. 17. HOLY COMMUNION FOR CHILDREN.
 No. 18. THE XXI EUCHARISTIC CONGRESS. E. SPILLANE, S.J.
 No. 19. THE HOLY EUCHARIST IN EARLY CANADA. T. J. CAMPBELL, S.J.
 Nos. 20, 21. PIUS X ON RECENT MANIFESTATIONS OF MODERNISM.
 No. 22. REMOVAL OF PARISH PRIESTS.
 No. 24. MAYOR NATHAN'S INSULT TO THE POPE.

—1911—

- No. 2. THE PORTUGUESE REVOLUTION.
 No. 3. SOME CAUSES OF THE PORTUGUESE REVOLUTION.
 Nos. 4, 5. SPAIN AS SHE IS. Catholic Herald of India.
 No. 6. SOCIALISM IN THE SCHOOLS. Hon. BIRD S. COLER.
 No. 7. CONDEMNATION OF MODERNISM. Rt. Rev. B. J. KEILEY.
 No. 8. ONE HUNDRED BEST CATHOLIC BOOKS.
 Nos. 9, 10. THE CHILD IN THE HOME AND THE SCHOOL. Rt. Rev. Dr. Cleary.
 Nos. 11, 12. CARDINAL GIBBONS' JUBILEE.
 Nos. 13, 14. PROTESTS OF PIUS X AND BISHOPS OF PORTUGAL.
 No. 15. THE TRUTH ABOUT THE "ENCYCLOPÆDIA BRITannica." T. J. CAMPBELL, S.J.
 No. 16. THE CATHOLIC PRESS. E. SPILLANE, S.J.
 No. 17. ENGLISH ECONOMISTS AND CATHOLIC ETHICS. Rev. Michael Maher, S.J.
 No. 18. CATHOLICISM AT HOME AND ABROAD.

Single numbers 5 cents each, $4.00 per hundred
 Double numbers 10 " " 7.00 " "

Copies of THE CATHOLIC MIND not included in this list will be accepted in exchange for any of the above

THE AMERICA PRESS, 59 East 83d Street, New York City

A Lady of experience offers her services as a guide in the Eternal City or other parts of Italy.

Correspondence Invited.

MISS RATHE

Via Paolo Emilio 28<sup>int</sup> 3. Rome, Italy

SURBRUG'S ARCADIA MIXTURE

In each pound there are three to four hundred pipe fulls—it costs $2.00 per pound—three-quarters of a cent a pipe.

If you smoke five pipes a day it's less than four cents—five hours of pleasure for four cents—certainly ARCADIA is cheap enough for you to smoke.

THE SURBRUG COMPANY
New York

TYPEWRITER RIBBONS AND CARBON PAPERS

Especially adapted for use in Colleges and Schools

Send for our Circular as to how we will save you 50 per cent. on supplies

SNELLING & SON 225 34th Street,
South Brooklyn, N. Y.
Purveyors to U. S. Gov't

ENTERTAINMENT SUPPLIES

For Schools and Churches

PLAYS, DRILLS and SUPPLIES

suited for all occasions

Send for free Catalogue

ENTERTAINMENT SUPPLY CO.
3 West 29th Street, New York, N. Y.

"We furnish any book published anywhere"

Publishers, Importers
and Booksellers

MAY WE SERVE YOU?

LEO KELLY & CO.
118 East 28th Street, New York

ALTAR WINES

From the Jesuit Fathers
Novitiate Vineyards at
LOS GATOS, CAL.

"MALVOISIE," a light dry wine
perfectly matured.

$1.00 per Gal. $4.00 per Doz.

"NOVITIATE," a generous wine,
somewhat sweet—will keep in wood.
$1.50 per Gal. $5.25 per Doz.

Depot and Sole Agency
P. A. MAHONY BARNSTON TEA CO.
Treas. 6 Barclay St., New York

BOUND VOLUMES OF AMERICA

A CATHOLIC REVIEW
OF THE WEEK

SIX MONTHS TO A VOLUME

$3.50

The AMERICA Press, 59 East 83d Street, New York

NOW READY

Among the Algonquins

NOW
READY

Vol. III of PIONEER PRIESTS of NORTH AMERICA

By REV. THOMAS J. CAMPBELL, S.J.

The ethnic group that figured more extensively in our history than any other Indian family

336 Pages

Price, $2.00

By Mail
20c extra

32 Illustrations

The AMERICA PRESS, 59 East 83d Street, New York, N. Y.

When Love and Skill Work Together Expect a Masterpiece

SET OF 30 HIGH CLASS ART POSTALS
of RELIGIOUS SUBJECTS 50¢
SENT BY MAIL

WE SEND FREE WITH ORDER A WELL MADE ALBUM
WITH YOUR NAME STAMPED IN GOLD ON COVER

Set of 30 Souvenir Picture Cards of Religious Subjects, reproduced from Famous Paintings in the National Galleries of Europe. Each subject is elaborately lithographed in the most beautiful colors and of exceptional quality.

An appropriate remembrance gift to friends.
Complete set of 30 pictures, including Album to hold 24, with your name stamped in gold on cover (if desired). Mailed to you complete on receipt of 50c. You will be pleased with the artistic beauty of these pictures, at such moderate cost.

IMPORT DISTRIBUTING CO.
25 West 42nd Street New York

THE BOY-SAVERS' GUIDE

Society Work for Lads in Their Teens

By FATHER GEORGE E. QUIN, S.J.

Details twenty years' experience regarding the attractions, organization, meetings, instructions, dues, expenses,
etc., etc., common to all juvenile religious fraternities. The "club" feature, treated as needless to priests, is discussed preferably with zealous laymen.
A practical solution of the entire "parish-boy" question, invaluable to priests and others engaged in the important field considered. Benziger Brothers, New York, Cincinnati, Chicago. $1.35 net. Postage, 15 cents extra.

MENEELY BELL CO

TROY, N.Y. AND
177 BROADWAY, N.Y. CITY.

BELLS

PRINTING OF EVERY DESCRIPTION FOR Churches and Schools

Periodical Publications

Catalogues Programs

Stationery Etc., etc.

THE MEANY PRINTING CO.

6th Avenue, Cor. 11th St., NEW YORK

DIRECTORY OF COLLEGES AND ACADEMIES

Georgetown University WASHINGTON, D. C.

Directory for Catalogues or Information

The College (Graduates and Undergraduates Schools)

The Registrar, 37th & O Sts., N. W.

The School of Medicine

The Dean, 920 H St., N. W.

The Training School for Nurses

Georgetown University Hospital

The School of Dentistry

The Dean, 920 H St., N. W.

The School of Law

The Dean, 506 E. St., N. W.

The Astronomical Observatory

The Director, Georgetown University

Rev. Joseph Himmel, S.J., President

College of St. Catherine, St. Paul, Minn.

A Catholic College for Girls. Accredited by the Minnesota State Board of Public Instruction and by several prominent Universities.

Seventy Acre Campus. Fireproof Buildings. COMPLETE COURSES IN THESE DEPARTMENTS. THE COLLEGIATE, leading to the degree of Bachelor of Arts. THE ACADEMIC or COLLEGE PREPARATORY. MUSIC and PAINTING in their various branches. DOMESTIC ART, HOUSEHOLD SCIENCE and COOKING. Year Book Forwarded on Application. Address: THE SECRETARY.

COLLEGE OF ST. ELIZABETH CONVENT STATION

One hour from New York City.

A Catholic Institution for the Higher Education of Women

COLLEGE Four years' course leading to the degrees of B. A. and B. S.

SCHOOL OF PEDAGOGY Required for entrance two years of College work

SCHOOL OF MUSIC. COURSE LEADING TO THE DEGREE OF B. M.

ACADEMY A High School Course of Four Years. Full College Preparatory Work. GRAMMAR AND PRIMARY DEPARTMENTS SEPARATE

REGISTERED By the New Jersey State Board of Education and the University of the State of New York Apply for Year Book to The Secretary

MT. ST. JOSEPH ON THE WISSAHICKON

For illustrated catalogue address MOTHER

CATHOLIC COLLEGE FOR WOMEN situated in the romantic Valley of the Wissahickon. Degrees conferred. Also Academic, Commercial, Intermediate and Elementary Departments. Very special advantages in Music and Art. The piano student possesses superior opportunities in the use of the Virgil Clavier Method pursued throughout the course. The Art Studio is admirably equipped, and every attention is given to the study of Art, both in theory and practice. Gymnasium perfectly equipped. Outdoor exercise, tennis, basketball, fencing, etc.

SUPERIOR, Chestnut Hill, Philadelphia, Pa.

HOLY CROSS COLLEGE WORCESTER MASS.

Conducted by the Jesuit Fathers.

Largest Catholic College in America

Extensive grounds and exceedingly healthy location. New buildings, large gymnasium, indoor running track, hot and cold baths, modern conveniences. Easily reached on main line from Albany or New York to Boston via Springfield. Board, tuition, washing and mending, use of gymnasium, library and reading room, physical instruction and medical attendance, $260 a year. Furnished room and attendance extra. Send for catalogue to
PREFECT OF STUDIES.

Seton Hall College

FOUNDED 1856

South Orange, New Jersey

COLLEGE AND HIGH SCHOOL

Bayley Hall for Students of Grammar Course

FOR CATALOGUE ADDRESS
Very Rev. James F. Mooney, D.D., Pres.

Academy of St. Joseph In-the-Pines

BRENTWOOD, N. Y.

A Boarding School for Young Ladies,

Affiliated with the State University

PROSPECTUS EXPLAINS THE TERMS, ETC.

College & Academy of the Incarnate Word

ALAMO HEIGHTS, SAN ANTONIO TEXAS

For the Higher Education of Young Ladies

Conducted by the Sisters of Charity of the Incarnate Word

COLLEGE—Four years' course, degrees B.A. & B.L.
ACADEMY—Three years' High School course.
COMMERCIAL—Three years' course.
PREPARATORY DEPT.—Eight years, equivalent to primary schools.

Studios of Music and other Fine Arts

Ideal location for students whose health demands climatic advantages. Building new and thoroughly equipped. Steam heating. Electric light.

For illustrated catalog address, SUPERIORESS.

Convent of the Holy Child

SHARON HILL, DELAWARE COUNTY, PA.
15 Minutes from Philadelphia

ACADEMY FOR YOUNG LADIES

Highest English Course. French, Drawing, Music by Certified Teachers. Preparation for foreign travel. As the numbers are limited, special care can be given to the formation of character and training of each child.
Address Mother Superior

Advantages: Winter in sunny Italy, summer in Switzerland, Germany and England

Stella Viae ROME

Finishing School for Girls

For Prospectus apply to the
Reverend Mother, Stella Viae College,
271, Via Nomentana, Rome, Italy

Pleasant intercourse with foreign pupils of good social standing

St. Mary's College

St. Marys, Kansas

BOARDING COLLEGE
Under the Jesuit Fathers

Two Courses of Study:
Classical and Commercial

For Catalogue, send to

REV. ALOYSIUS A. BRENN, S.J., President

Lessons from the best Masters in Music and Art. Lectures in Italian, French, German, Spanish and English by University Professors and others.

Special private and conversational lessons.

Chaperonage to Concerts; frequent visits to Basilicas, Art Galleries, Museums and the splendid ruins of Rome and its environs.

If desired, tours to Naples, Florence, Milan and Venice.

Atmosphere and comforts of a cultured and Christian home, with the devoted care of Nuns speaking one's own tongue.

Boarding & Day School HOLY ANGELS FORT LEE New Jersey

Conducted by School Sisters of Notre Dame

Location beautiful, healthy and convenient.
New Buildings, large gymnasium.

DEPARTMENTS: Academic, course of four years; Commercial, course of two years. Grammar and Primary Departments separate. Special advantages in Music and Art.

FOR YEAR BOOK ADDRESS SECRETARY

The Winona Seminary, Winona, Minnesota

CATHOLIC COLLEGE FOR WOMEN

Faculty of Specialists. Separate college residence. Confers degrees B.A., B.S. and Litt. B. Full college preparatory courses—certificates accepted by all leading universities. Secretarial course. Conservatory of Music confers degree of B. Mus.—visiting director, Emil Liebling. Departments of Art, Household Economics, Dramatic Expression. Private Rooms. Moderate Prices. Splendid Gymnasium. Extensive Campus. Students from thirteen States. Direct lines of railway from Chicago, Milwaukee, St. Paul, St. Louis.

Earnest, capable young women who have a purpose in study are solicited.

WRITE FOR CATALOGUE . . . . . DEPARTMENT BULLETIN

An Opportunity for Schools and Colleges

ADVERTISE HERE

For advertising rates, address "MANAGER"
AMERICA, a Catholic Review of the Week
59 East 83d Street, New York City

THE Paine BUSINESS SCHOOL
UP-TOWN
1931
BROADWAY, COR. 65TH

Shorthand
Typewriting
Telegraphy
Bookkeeping, Etc.
Taught Day
and Evening
Catalogue.

DIRECTORY OF COLLEGES AND ACADEMIES

"MARYMOUNT"

TARRYTOWN-ON-HUDSON, N.Y. High-class Boarding and Day School for Young Ladies. Conducted by the Religious of the Sacred Heart of Mary. Magnificently situated on the Hudson. Ideal environment for study and recreation. European advantages. 45 minutes from New York. Preparatory and advanced courses. College preparation. Private Rooms. For catalogue, apply to THE REV. MOTHER.

Georgetown Visitation Convent

A boarding and day School for Young Ladies and Little Girls

Delightfully Situated on Georgetown Heights

WASHINGTON, D. C.

Founded in 1799 Address Sister Directress

St. Joseph College Bardstown, Ky.

CONDUCTED BY XAVIERIAN BROTHERS

Preparatory, Academic, Commercial and Collegiate Courses.

A Catholic home-like institution for boys and young men. Send for prospectus.

ST. JOSEPH'S ACADEMY, 6400 Minnesota Avenue, St. Louis, Mo.

CONDUCTED BY SISTERS OF ST. JOSEPH

BOARDING
AND DAY SCHOOL
FOR YOUNG LADIES
AND GIRLS

THE site of the Institution is in the highest degree healthy; situated on the west bank of the Mississippi; commanding a fine view of the river and vicinity.

Grounds ample for exercise and well kept. Guarantees a solid and refined education in: Classical, Literary, Scientific and Commercial Courses. Preparatory, Intermediate and Primary Courses. Highest facilities in all Departments of Art and Music. For other particulars address, Sister Directress.

ONLY 75 CENTS EACH, POSTPAID

Keep every number of AMERICA in a handsome ADJUSTABLE BINDER

THE AMERICA PRESS, 59 East 83rd Street, New York

MARY ALOYSIA HARDEY

RELIGIOUS OF THE SACRED HEART

1809-1886

WITH AN INTRODUCTION BY THE REV. THOMAS J. CAMPBELL, S.J.

440 Pages 16 Illustrations With Index

THE LIFE STORY OF A REMARKABLE WOMAN

A book sure to do good and sure to give pleasure.—The Ave Maria.

It is worthy tribute to a great soul.—The Irish Monthly.

We congratulate its author and the AMERICA PRESS in giving us such a valuable work dealing with the life and labors of this eminent and noble religious.—New World, Chicago.

To miss reading this book is to miss a great blessing.—The Pilot, Boston.

Teachers especially will find the life abounding in valuable suggestions.—The Republic, Boston.

A book of special religious interest.—New York World.

An edifying and intensely interesting life.—Catholic Times, Liverpool.

PRICE TWO DOLLARS

By Mail 20 cents extra

THE AMERICA PRESS 59 EAST 83d STREET
NEW YORK CITY

HELEN AUGUSTA HAYES

VOCAL INSTRUCTOR

64 East 34th Street

NEW YORK CITY

CARLTON ACADEMY

Summit, New Jersey

A Catholic School that meets college requirements in Greek, Latin, English, French, German, Mathematics and the Sciences.

Charles H. Schultz, A.M., Headmaster.

St. Mary's College & Academy

MONROE, MICHIGAN

FOR YOUNG WOMEN AND GIRLS

CONDUCTED by the Sisters of the Immaculate Heart. Beautifully located between Detroit and Toledo. A high standard maintained for sixty-five years in Culture, Education and Discipline. Courses include Collegiate, Academic and Preparatory. Special attention given to Music, Art, Expression and Domestic Science University affiliation. Separate department for little girls.

For illustrated prospectus apply to Mother Superior

The Only True American School System

Rev. THOMAS J. CAMPBELL, S.J.

PAMPHLET 24 PAGES

5 Cents per Copy. $2.50 Per Hundred

THE AMERICA PRESS 59 East 83d Street
NEW YORK

IMMACULATA SEMINARY

Mount Marian, Washington, D. C.

Select School for Girls. Situated in the Suburbs

Classical, Literary and Special Courses.

Two-Year Course for High School Graduates.

Music and Art. Abundant outdoor exercise.

Sightseeing with experienced Chaperons.

For Year Book address, Sister Secretary

ST. MARY-OF-THE-WOODS

COLLEGE

For Young Women. 71st Year
4 Years. Degrees, B.A., B.S., Ph.B.

Academic — College Preparatory — and Grammar Departments. Elective Courses. Conservatory of Music, Vocal and Instrumental. Art Studios. Natatorium, Gymnasium, Bowling, etc. Out-of-Door Sports, Horseback Riding, Boating, Archery, Tennis. For Bulletins, Address, Sister Secretary, Box 70, St. Mary-of-the-Woods, Vigo County, Indiana.

Electric Light Bracket

MADE FOR ST. JAMES CHURCH

NEW BEDFORD, MASS.

The Gorham Company gives special attention to the manufacture of lighting fixtures for ecclesiastical and civil buildings and invites correspondence on the subject.

The Gorham Company

Fifth Avenue and 36th Street

NEW YORK

CABLE ADDRESS "SIBBEL"

ESTABLISHED 1881

Of all the fine arts which serve the Church in the communication of the Faith, sculpture is the most necessary—making direct and telling appeal to the beholder. To make this appeal most vital and potent, by imparting the spirit of Catholic faith and devotion to work of a higher order of artistic excellence has been the aim of the Sibbel Studio during the thirty years of its existence.

JOSEPH SIBBEL STUDIO

Ecclesiastical Sculpture

214 East 26th Street, New York

STATUES, STATIONS OF THE CROSS AND FRAMES, GROUPS, ALTO-RELIEVOS, ALTARS, SHRINES, BAPTISMAL FONTS, MEMORIAL TABLETS, ETC.

CORRESPONDENCE INVITED

AMERICA

A CATHOLIC REVIEW OF THE WEEK

Vol. VI, No. 3

(Price 10 Cents)

OCTOBER 28, 1911

($3.00 a year)

Whole No. 133

CHRONICLE

The Cardinal's Jubilee—Masonry in Manila—Magazine Loses—Ex-Minister Herbert G. Squiers—Aviators Killed—Mexico—Guatemala—Canada—Great Britain—Ireland—Portugal—China—France—Italy—Tripoli—Germany .....49-52

QUESTIONS OF THE DAY

The Holy Name Society—Catholics and Labor Unions—Turkey's Dilemma—Another African Loot—English Political Economists.....53-59

CORRESPONDENCE

Failure of the Uprising in Spain—Expelling Chinese from Siberia—Portugal's Prime Minister .....59-61

EDITORIAL

The Editor of the "Encyclopædia Britannica" Replies—The Pope and the Newspapers—News-paper Inaccuracy—A Futile Device—A Eulogist of Ingersoll—A Representative Irish Visitor—Canadian Campaign Documents—Notes....62-63

LITERATURE

A Very Specious Comedy—Aspects of Religious Belief and Practices in Babylonia and Assyria—Studies Diplomatic and Military 1775-1865—The Holy Viaticum of Life as of Death—La Curia Romana según la novísima disciplina decretada por Pio X—Los Esponsales y el Matrimonio según la Novísima Disciplina—Notes—Books Received .....65-67

EDUCATION

Public Testimonial to the New President of Marquette University—Inefficiency of Non-Classical or "Vocational" Studies—Lack of Thoroughness in Early School Training as Shown by West Point Entrance Examinations—German University Students.....68-69

SOCIOLOGY

Providing for the Spiritual Care of Immigrants 69

PULPIT, PRESS AND PLATFORM

Archbishop Ireland and Cardinal Gibbons on the "Weapons of Mobocracy".....70

ECCLESIASTICAL NEWS

The Liszt Centenary—Dr. Grannan Honored—Cardinal Gibbons and the Society of St. Vincent de Paul—Privileges for the Eudists—Christian Brothers' Schools in India—An Interesting Irish Wedding—Inconsistent Presbyterian Minister 70-71

SCIENCE

Atmospheric Waves—Search for Domestic Potash Deposits—Daily Wireless Weather Reports in France for Ships—Fruit Respiration.....71

OBITUARY

Victoriano Agüeros—Very Rev. Cornelius T. O'Callaghan, D.D.—Right Rev. Augustine Van de Vyver, D.D.—Rev. Mother Victorine.....72

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

Honoring Marquette's Memory.....72

CHRONICLE

The Cardinal's Jubilee.—During the greater part of the week, ending October 21, Baltimore was given over to the celebration of Cardinal Gibbons' Jubilee. The services in the Cathedral as already recorded were held on Sunday, October 15. On Monday more than 30,000 marchers joined in the greatest Catholic procession Baltimore has ever witnessed. Surrounded by distinguished prelates who had graced the other ceremonies of his dual celebration, the Cardinal, from the stately portico of the Cathedral, acknowledged the salutes of the thousands as they passed, and while fatigued by the strain of the several hours constant watching, he remained in his place until the last man had gone by. Representative societies from all the parishes in the city, many from Washington and country districts were in line headed by their respective pastors. Members of the Holy Name Societies from many states, Knights of various organizations, Germans, Hibernians, Poles, Bohemians, Lithuanians, delegations from the Colored churches bearing a banner with the inscription, "He's our Cardinal, too," all united in the impressive tribute to a prince of the Catholic Church, to the foremost citizen of Maryland, and to one of the greatest figures of the nation. The Tabernacle Society of Baltimore tendered a reception to his Eminence on Tuesday. This was followed by the dedication of the Gibbons Memorial Chapel at St. Mary's Industrial School on Wednesday, and the services at the cathedral in which 4,000 children took part brought the program of events to a fitting close. Cardinal Week will furnish a glorious page in the Church annals of Baltimore.

Masonry in Manila.—According to the Cable-News American of Manila, September 3, three hundred master Masons attended the temple dinner at the Masonic Temple, Manila, on September 2. Of the five speakers mentioned by the Manila daily, three were judges, Ross, Crossfield and Smith; another, Dr. (of divinity) Murray Bartlett, formerly rector of the Episcopal Cathedral of Manila and at present president of the government university of the Philippines, and the fifth a business man, Mr. Strong, who addressed the high school of students of Manila the week before.

Magazine Loses.—Judge Ward, of the United States Circuit Court, denied the motion of the Review of Reviews Company for an injunction restraining Postmaster General Hitchcock from transporting its magazine as second-class mail matter by fast freight trains instead of by fast mail trains. The Review of Reviews Publishing Company charged that the new order was a discrimination against it in favor of its two chief competitors, The Literary Digest and the Outlook. Both of these publications are issued weekly, while The Review of Reviews is a monthly magazine. In refusing to grant a preliminary injunction pending a decision on the action brought by The Review of Reviews Publishing Company, Judge Ward pointed out that the department had a right to reduce the loss caused by the transportation of second-class matter, and that the distinction in favor of publications issued at short intervals was due to the fact that monthly magazines were sent over great distances, while the radius of distribution for weekly publications seldom exceeded 500 miles, and that for dailies 250 miles on the average.

Ex-Minister Herbert G. Squiers.—Word was received of the death in London on October 19 of Herbert G. Squiers, former captain in the United States Army, and more recently Minister to Cuba and to Panama. Herbert Goldsmith Squiers was born in Toronto, Canada, April 20, 1859. He was graduated from the West Point Military Academy in 1880, and in 1890 was made lieutenant of the Seventh Cavalry. He had also been instructor of military science and tactics at St. John's College, now Fordham University, New York. Mr. Squiers began his diplomatic career with his appointment as second Secretary of the American Embassy in Berlin, in 1894. This post he held until 1897, when he was made Secretary of the American Legation at Peking. During the attack on the city by the Boxers he acted as chief of staff to Sir Claude McDonald. So well did he conduct himself during the rebellion that President McKinley paid tribute to his services in a message to Congress, and the British Government also thanked him officially. In May, 1902, he was appointed by President Roosevelt American Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to Cuba. He resigned his post in 1905, and was made Envoy and Minister to Panama. He received the honorary degree of LL. D. from Fordham University in 1906. Mr. Squiers had been in ill health for the last two years. The funeral services will be held at the Church of St. Francis Xavier's New York City.

Aviators Killed.—Eugene Ely, one of the most famous of aviators, met his death at the Georgia State Fair in an attempt to make a sensational dip with his Curtiss biplane. Twenty-thousand persons witnessed the fatal mishap. Ely's greatest distinction as an aviator was gained in San Francisco, when he flew from the aviation field a distance of twelve miles to the United States cruiser "Pennsylvania," anchored in San Francisco Bay, and, after taking luncheon with the officers, flew safely back to his hangar. In November, 1910, he won a $550 prize offered by the Aeronautical reserve for the first flight from a steamship to shore.—The German aviator, Tacks, while making a flight near Hamburg, fell and died a few hours later in a hospital. This makes 102 aviators killed in a heavier than air machine since the beginning of active flying, a little more than three years ago. Tacks is the thirteenth German to sacrifice his life. Germany stands third in the list of such fatalities, France coming first, with thirty-seven, and America next, with seventeen. Italy has lost eight airmen, England seven and Russia five.

Mexico.—At the request of the Government, the Chinese cruiser Hai Chi, will not call at any Mexican port. During the Maderist revolution, over three hundred Chinese, including small children, were barbarously put to death at Torreon, and the question of indemnity is being discussed by the two Governments. It was thought that the presence of the cruiser might suggest pressure on Mexico.—In the course of his wanderings, General Diaz recently paid a flying visit to London, where he expressed the intention of returning to Mexico as soon as public tranquillity should be fully restored. As Madero is being openly accused of imitating the old régime and of paving the way for the triumph of demagogism, the ex-president may not return very soon.

Guatemala.—Through the influence of three toadies of President Estrada-Cabrera, one Domingo Pérez Aura, who is characterized as an "Americanized Spaniard," has secured extensive and valuable land concessions in the district of Peten, which borders on the colony of British Honduras and Mexico. Although obtained ostensibly for timber cutting and gathering chicle, an inspissated sap which is the foundation of chewing gums, Mexicans view the move as an attempt to establish an American colony in dangerous proximity to Mexico, and as another step towards a Central American republic under the leadership of Guatemala and the protection of the United States. The Mexican minister to Guatemala has informed his Government that he considers the colonization scheme as political rather than economic.

Canada.—The results of the census have just been published and are disappointing. Canadians counted on having 8 million population at least. They have actually 7,100,000, an increase of 1,700,000 during the last decade. There is, therefore, relatively an immense exodus from Canada, one person leaving out of every three of increase. The greatest increase is in the western provinces. Saskatchewan has grown from 91,000 to 453,000; Alberta from 73,000 to 373,000; British Columbia from 178,000 to 363,000; and Manitoba from 255,000 to 455,000. Among the cities Montreal has increased by 200,000, and has now 466,000 inhabitants; Vancouver, B. C. and its environs, have 125,000, an increase of nearly 100,000. Calgary and Edmonton have respectively 44,000 and 25,000, instead of 4,000 and 2,500. Toronto has increased by 168,000, and now numbers 376,000. The Maritime Provinces are either stationary or show a loss of population. The redistribution of seats in parliament will give 5 additional to each of the western provinces. As British Columbia is Conservative and Manitoba more Conservative than Liberal, this will mean a slight advantage to Liberalism in the West. On the other hand, as the Maritime Provinces inclined to be Liberal lose 5, the redistribution will hardly affect the balance of parties.—The Methodist Conference at Toronto has passed resolutions concerning the Ne Temere decree full of the usual misrepresentations. Thus, it repudiates the idea that any church decree should have the power to override the civil law, and is of the opinion that a marriage ceremony performed by a person authorized by the State should be valid irrespective of the religion of the parties concerned. But nowhere in Canada has a church decree any such power, and everywhere in Canada a marriage performed by a person authorized by the State is legally valid irrespective of the religion of the parties, provided it conform in all respects to the law of the State.—The McGill students were riotous again on their theatre night.—The western crops continue to show great degeneration of grade.

Great Britain.—The Unionist members of Parliament are not of one mind as regards the use of their salaries. Some refuse to accept the treasury warrant, others give the sum to charities in their constituencies. This is thought by many to come so near to illegality as to endanger to the members' position at the next election. The great body of Unionist members seem to be taking the salary and saying nothing.—There is not a little difference of opinion regarding the details of the Old Age Insurance Bill. Mr. McKenna announced the other day that the Government would stand or fall by it. This, however, does not mean that all amendments will be refused.—Unionist papers announce a deadlock between the Government and the Irish party over the financial part of the Home Rule Bill. The wish, probably, is father to the thought.—The Labor party has won the general elections in Western Australia. In South Australia the party seems securely established in the Government. In the Commonwealth Government it is in difficulties on account of the defeat of the Referendum, and also in New South Wales, because its land law takes away the right of rural lessees of public lands to convert leases into freeholds, and its labor-disputes law has been framed to include agricultural laborers.

Ireland.—The Hierarchy in their annual meeting at Maynooth condemned the late strike as wrong in principle, injurious to trade and nascent industries, and decreed by an organization alien to Irish labor. "A more glaring instance of the evil of being tied to Great Britain in our local affairs could not be found." While relying mainly on "sound public opinion formed by Christian principles," the Bishops approved of legislation constituting a quasi-arbitral court, to which all conflicts between employers and employees should be referred, and prohibiting strikes until after the court's award a fixed time had elapsed, sufficient for the public mind to grasp the situation. Cardinal Logue called attention to the large number of honors in Gaelic on the prize list of the Maynooth students, and said there was more done for the revival of Gaelic in Maynooth than in any other part of the country.—Lord Pirrie, President and chief owner of the Harland and Wolff ship-building plant, said at a reception he gave in Belfast to the British Postmaster-General, "experience showed that Irishmen are perfectly capable of managing their own affairs." His interests were larger now than ever, and he had no fear that their finances would suffer by Home Rule. It was the men who allowed no representation to the Catholics of Belfast, one-third of the population, who are now imputing religious intolerance to Nationalist Irishmen. Those men were "past-masters in the art of penalizing on religious grounds." There was no one with a stake in Belfast or Ulster who was able or willing to lead the opposition to Home Rule. In matters of Irish Government, as in local affairs, Catholics and Protestants could work together in harmony.—There were remarkable demonstrations in honor of Mr. Shane Leslie on his departure for the United States to lecture in behalf of the Gaelic League. An immense torchlight procession accompanied him to the train in Dublin, and both in Dublin and Cork leading representatives of the clergy and of the civic and social bodies paid him tribute.

Portugal.—The custom house receipts for July, 1911, mentioned in number 131, should have shown a difference of $438,000 in favor of the receipts for July, 1910.—One of the first steps of the Government when the Royalist uprising began was to arrest and confine a large number of priests. It then published a manifesto to the citizens, in which it declared that if each priest in the country influenced only three men, a considerable army could be raised in a short time. While the priests were being conveyed to prison, they were stoned and spat upon by an angry mob, the guard doing nothing to protect them; but when an attempt was made in Oporto to lynch some priests, a body of infantry hastened to their rescue.—The reports made to the friendly Spanish press by the Portuguese monarchists give glowing accounts of their equipment and prospects. Captain Paiva Couceiro, who is the brains of the undertaking, has enlisted only Portuguese, and of them only those who have had some military training.—In answer to the petition of various commercial and industrial concerns for some delay in exacting the taxes because business was so stagnant, the Minister of the Treasury has insisted on prompt payment, for the Government needs the money and does not wish to attempt to raise a loan.

China.—The Imperialists have not yet succeeded in putting down the revolt, though there are said to be 4,000 regular troops in the neighborhood of Hankow, the rebels' stronghold. A massacre in that city of eight hundred Manchus is reported. As in the "Sicilian Vespers," the victims' inability to pronounce correctly a certain word brought instant death. An engagement between an imperial army of two thousand men and an equal force of republicans was indecisive. The government troops gave way at first; then the rebels retired owing to a lack of ammunition, leaving three hundred of their dead on the field. Multitudes of refugees who have fled to Shanghai report that nearly the entire valley of the Yangtse, as far as Hankow, is in the hands of the rebels. The foreign concessions in Hankow are considered safe, as Sir Alfred Winsloe, commander of the British Eastern fleet, as senior officer, has under him a joint foreign force to protect American and European interests. The government seems confident that the rebellion will soon be suppressed, though a loan of $3,000,000 which is needed for the army, cannot be obtained from foreign bankers.

France.—General de Charette, one of France's most brilliant soldiers in recent history, died October 10, at his family seat of Basse-Motte near Saint Malo in Brittany, at the age of eighty. Catholics will recall his gallant services to the Holy See as Commander of the Pontifical Zouaves during the troublesome years 1860-1870. De Charette won the admiration of the world during the sharp fighting at Castelfidardo and at Mentana. Even after the departure of the French auxiliaries in 1870 had made the occupation and defence of Rome impossible in the face of the invading army sent by Victor Emmanuel to wrest the sovereignty of the city from the Pope, the undaunted leader of the Pontifical troops continued the struggle until an express order sent him by Pius IX forced him to abandon the fight. In the Franco-Prussian war, at the head of a volunteer corps of Vendéans, de Charette fought with valor, winning the highest commendation of the Republican forces under Gambetta. During the siege of Loigny he was grievously wounded and left for dead on the battlefield. Some of his followers finding him alive at the end of a terrible day's fighting, carried him to a field hospital where, unknown to the Prussians, he was nursed back to health. His gallantry that day won him promotion to the command of a brigade in the army of the West. It was de Charette, it will be remembered, who in opposition to the growing anti-Catholic sentiment of French leaders in 1871 brought about the public consecration of his legion to the Sacred Heart in June of that year. He took no part in politics following the proclamation of the republic, but spent his years quietly in the retirement of his family seat in Brittany. General Charette was the author of an interesting story of the legion he led so long, entitled "Reminiscences of the Pontifical Zouaves: Rome 1860-1870; France 1870-71." General de Charette married an American, Miss Antoinette Polk, a member of the famous Tennessee family.—The Franco-German negotiations concerning the Morocco question are continuing, though little is heard of them in the more serious matters recently developing in continental diplomacy. French papers say that the chief difficulty in their consideration arises from the Congo concessions to be made. Public opinion in France seems to be averse to yielding much in that direction. It will be dishonorable, says the press, in time of peace to abandon colonies whose upbuilding has cost the country a heavy price and whose possession has been so gallantly acquired.

Italy.—The country is afflicted just now with a heavy share of the world's evils. What with the war in Tripoli, the earthquake in Sicily, sharply recalling the terrible scenes of 1908, and the cholera, the Italian people needs all its fortitude to weather the storm. War news is scarce. Besides the military censorship enforced on all news from Tripoli the cable between that place and Malta is being used exclusively for army messages. Press despatches are refused transmission over the cable and must be mailed to Malta or Syracuse. From Turkish sources the report was sent out that the negotiations between the powers and Turkey, with a view to a restoration of peace, had failed. Propositions made by the powers, says the report, could not be accepted with honor, and Turkey will pursue a firm and just policy in defence of her rights in Tripoli.—The cholera epidemic was marked last week by violent outbreaks on the part of peasants at Segni, a town of 7,000 population, distant half an hour by railway from Rome.

Tripoli.—The meagre reports from the seat of war show that General Caneva, commander of the Italian army expedition in Tripoli, is now directing his attention chiefly to making the city of Tripoli an impregnable base from which will be provided the reinforcements and supplies necessary for the campaign in the interior. Fortifications are being extended all about the city, making it a thoroughly entrenched camp. In addition posts will be established along the line of the advance into the country, in order to make it impossible for the enemy to cut off the invading column from its base of supplies.—News from the interior reaching the Italian commander through friendly natives describe the Turks as making an active campaign among the Arabs to incite them against the Italians.

Germany.—The war in Tripoli has offered a difficult problem for German diplomacy to solve. The friendly overtures made to Turkey in the past had raised the hopes of the latter to look to Germany for possible support in the crisis of a war; while Italy, as a member of the Triple Alliance, might naturally expect a favorable attitude towards herself on the part of the sister country. It was a case where the German Eagle had needs face two ways at the same time. To sacrifice the friendliness of Italy would weaken the European prestige of Germany at a period when England and France would be anxious to win over the rejected ally, and yet the advantages which the land of the crescent was promising could no less be foregone. In this situation Germany has been eager to bring about conciliation by every means possible, and to extend her sympathy to both parties. The Tripolitan dilemma has proved almost as distressing as the Moroccan difficulty.—The barbaric settlement of disagreements by the argument of a duel, which the German Emperor has rather encouraged within the army, has lately claimed its victims in the German gymnasium at Rudolstadt in Thuringen. The student Hans von Necker was shot on the "field of honor" by Dietz, a fellow student.

QUESTIONS OF THE DAY

The Holy Name Society

Anyone familiar with Baltimore will remember the huge building known as Lyric Hall, which stands about half-way between the grey Mount Royal Station of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, and the new white marble structure, now the Union Station of the Pennsylvania and its associated lines. Lyric Hall was the place where on Monday, October 16, the Holy Name Society assembled its delegates from all parts of the country, for its first General Congress. Even Canada sent its representatives. The meeting coincided with and made part of the festivities which Baltimore was then busy with, in celebrating the Golden Jubilee of Cardinal Gibbons.

How many people filled the seats of the vast auditorium is something which is only of secondary importance. Far more impressive was the fact that you saw before you an immense assembly of men, some of them apparently from business or the professions, who had some control of their time and occupations, but also and perhaps the main contingent sturdy hard-handed workmen, who had willingly traveled hundreds, some of them a thousand miles or more—a journey involving an outlay of hard earned money that must have required a great deal of previous and subsequent saving—yet who gladly made the sacrifice and gave up their time for absolutely no other purpose than to meet for a few hours in order to make a public and united proclamation of their reverence for the Holy Name of Jesus Christ.

Such a purpose assumed as the exclusive object of a great organization of every-day practical men must necessarily be somewhat of a puzzle to the world outside. It does not seem large enough to account for so much effort. But it must be remembered that the name by which the Society is designated is a part of that symbolism which is so intimately interwoven in everything connected with Catholic belief and practice. The scope of the Society is much wider than its name would seem to imply. Its first object, namely, war against profanity, is a proclamation to the world of the doctrine which the non-Catholic part of it is forgetting: the Divinity of Jesus Christ. Herein lies the opportuneness of the Association and the inspiration it affords for united and aggressive cooperation. These serious, hard working, practical men thought it worth while to assemble at Baltimore for that purpose, and to make the year 1911 the beginning of a series of annual conventions which are to be roll-calls in the battle for that great object. These men know that belief in the Divinity of Christ is the foundation stone of modern civilization, and it is worth recording that the earnestness of these men in the fight they are waging is not restricted to resolutions and proclamations. They are earnest Catholics, and a large number of them had received Holy Communion on the morning of the Convention and crowded the Cathedral again in the evening to assist at Vespers and Benediction of the Blessed Sacrament.

The proceedings of the Congress were momentarily interrupted, or rather their picturesqueness was added to, when the Apostolic Delegate in his grey robes entered the Hall and read for the delegates a letter from the Holy Father, which all listened to standing; kneeling at the end for the Papal blessing. Later on a flash of red was seen at the end of the Hall, and the Cardinal in his scarlet ascended the platform and let his heart speak to the assembly in words of encouragement and praise. As he withdrew he was accompanied down the aisle by a stalwart delegate in the uniform of the New York Fire Department, the Catholic chaplain who has established a branch of the Holy Name Society among the valiant fire-eaters of the metropolis. The chaplain of the New York Police was also present, but in clerical garb.

A series of resolutions had been prepared for the meeting. They were in reality a digest of a much larger number that had been sent in from all sections of the country. They dealt mainly with the means to be taken in the fight against profanity, but there were also subsidiary ones, such as the methods to be adopted for the suppression of vile plays and indecent picture shows, and for the support of the Catholic press. Readers of AMERICA will be pleased to hear that the last named resolution, which was carried unanimously, pledged the members to support, not only the local organs, but "the great national weekly, organized and directed by the Fathers of the Society of Jesus."

There were addresses by an eloquent Dominican, Father J. T. McNicholas, Attorney-General Hogan, of Ohio; Father John C. Fearn, of Revere, Mass., and the chaplain of the New York Police, Father Francis Sullivan, who has organized a Junior League of the Holy Name outside the Department, and who is also successfully laboring with the guardians of the peace in his native city. Others also spoke. Besides the addresses, diplomas were given to some of the members of the Association as a recognition of the zeal which they had shown for years in building up the organization. In the great procession that took place in the afternoon in connection with the Jubilee, the Holy Name Societies were given a place of honor. Such were in brief the proceedings of the First National Congress. It may well congratulate itself on having done very much at this initial meeting for the interests of Catholicity in the United States.

STAFF CORRESPONDENT.

Catholics and Labor Unions

According to the statistics drawn up by a competent Labor Commission, and quoted in the Nation for August 12, 1909, "about half of those in the trade unions are Roman Catholics, the rest Protestants or without religious preference." This statement, carefully prepared though it was, appears to be rather excessive at the present date; but it makes plain the great interest which priests and Catholic societies are called upon to take in the trade unions of our country.

At the last general convention of the American Federation of Labor, when the resolutions drawn up were not as radical as Socialists desired they should be, Victor Berger remarked that nothing else could be expected because of the predominance of blue and green, a combination which results in yellow. The green, of course, represented the large Catholic element among the sons of Erin, while we may be sure that under the blue he had not a few of the Catholic German workers in his mind, who by their demonstrations at the convention were causing no slight confusion in the Socialist camp.

The strength of the Church in many of our unions was brought home to the writer as he stood before St. Patrick's Cathedral, in New York, to watch the Labor day parade march by in serried columns. At times rank on rank would reverently lift the hat, or even pass with bared head along the full front of the great Cathedral, showing the pride they felt in thus professing before the world that faith for which they were prepared to offer up their very lives. Again only an isolated few would acknowledge the Lord there holding His review from the silent Tabernacle. But where the red was prominent one usually looked in vain for the salute that meant so much, though the Celtic cut of features often told their tale or the hand half-lifted from instinctive habit, and dropped again. The long, endless files of the garment workers, with their Socialist pennons and Yiddish inscriptions, could not be expected to know Who dwelled within, but the Italian labor union, too, marched by as stolid and unmoved as if not one in all their numbers had ever heard of the existence of the Church of Rome.

The force of association could well be studied here, and the absolute need of discrimination between the various locals. The activity of priests and of the leaders of Catholic organizations can nowhere be better employed than in following with keenest interest the proceedings of the unions to which the laborers beneath their care belong. The interests of the workers are the interests of the Church.

"Perhaps nowhere to-day," writes one who is but repeating a truism of modern economics, "is the conflict with the Socialist propaganda being waged so continuously, so actively and at such close range, as within the ranks of the organized industrial crafts." The reason for this is evident. The work of bringing to Socialism the unorganized laborers of any country is slow and painful, must be carried on with individuals and remain insecure. Members of local trade unions, on the contrary, have already gained through organization a certain solidarity, and if swung over to the Socialist party can be permanently held by joint subscriptions to Socialist papers and other influences that can constantly be brought to bear upon them. The outlying elements of labor will then readily enough be caught up and swept along in any emergency by the strong current of Socialist organization.

Socialism is contemplating nothing less than the absorption of Labor Unionism. Precisely in as far as opposition exists between these two forces is the bond between Unionism and the Church drawn closer. Both must have nothing more at heart than the true welfare of the worker and of the poor. Both must spend themselves in this noble service. It must not be a merely negative effort consisting in nothing but opposition to Socialistic aggression, as is often the case, but a strong, positive energizing cooperation for the relief of poverty; the improvement of labor conditions, wherever reasonably demanded; and the social betterment of the world, making the law of Christ the rule of all our activity.

To safeguard the union laborer, to point out to him his dangers or to teach him how to meet them is evidently one of our gravest duties. Socialist locals must forever be sealed to the Catholic. The fact is clear that taking Socialism, not as it might be, but as it actually is, the laborer must finally come to choose between it and the Church, between it and Christ. The Catholic Church is for Socialism the block of stumbling, and any means is licit than can asperse her fair name or cast discredit upon her ministers. Priests and Catholic organizations should thoroughly understand the sympathies of the various trade union locals to which the parish members belong or which they are likely to enter. The establishment even of Catholic locals would be a welcome support and encouragement for Unionism, since this, as a body, is still bravely fighting to throw off its Socialist incubus.

It is true that many locals are Socialistic; it is true that entire unions are avowedly so; it is true even that various State conventions have endorsed the first principle of the Socialist platform. The cause of Socialism is being promoted night and day within almost every union of the American Federation of Labor, which itself is yearly pestered and annoyed by Socialist resolutions that are proposed only to be rejected. As Socialists express themselves, they can lead the horse to the water, but cannot make it drink. By often repeating the action, however, they hope to succeed at last. Then they can saddle and ride it too. No one who is truly interested in the welfare of the laborer and in the preservation of the faith of the working millions can fail to see how grave and imminent the danger is.

We know that Catholic activity has already manifested itself strongly, even at the national conventions; but we have not as yet even begun a concerted Catholic labor movement, such as is at present gathering strength and momentum in Germany. It is true that under different circumstances different methods must be employed. Activity within the labor unions may for the present usually be our best tactics.

There are in the entire German empire 3,291 Catholic workingmen's associations, with a total membership of 439,749. The burning question has been whether such societies should be exclusively Catholic, or whether it is not better to adopt in preference the so-called "Christian Industrial Unions." A widely-spread conviction is that Catholics alone are not sufficiently strong, and should invite the co-operation of Christians of all denominations. The guidance of the Church, it is thought, would not be forfeited by this, and should any local go astray her voice could readily recall its members. The fact is that, according to a recent account, not more than fifteen per cent. of the membership in these labor unions is Protestant, so that their spirit remains strongly Catholic. Opposition is taken to these views by the Catholic labor federation known as "Sitz Berlin," which counts 1,229 societies with 130,000 members, and which holds that the entire movement should remain directly under ecclesiastical control.

The conditions which have called forth the labor activities of German Catholics have not as yet arisen, and must not be permitted to arise in our own country. Organized labor in Germany, with the exception of what has been here described, is entirely identified with Socialism. These same conditions Socialists have pledged themselves to bring about in our labor unions. Their efforts, as we have seen, are already bearing results. What are we to do to meet them?

"Three great forces," says a writer in a non-Catholic publication, "are to-day affecting the intellectual and emotional life of the working people: trades unions, Socialism, and the Roman Catholic Church." The attitude of Socialism towards the Church is sufficiently clear. Its interest in the trade unions, as Socialists themselves declare, is to change them into revolutionary centers. "Unionism," says the Socialist President-elect of the International Association of Machinists, "is the body and Socialism is the soul of the labor movement." Such at least is their dream. What part is the Church to take in this struggle, mindful alike of the spiritual welfare of the laborer and his temporal needs and happiness?

At every great labor convention Socialists hold their own private meetings at which each movement is carefully studied and discussed, in which the resolutions to be submitted are first put to the ballot, and where the means are decided upon to cover up a defeat or follow out success even to the limit of possibility. The humor of the situation is that when Catholics attempted at St. Louis, during the last national convention, to evince a particular interest in the Federation, without displaying even in the least the disloyalty of which Socialism has often been guilty, there was at once an outcry from the entire Socialist press. Even to attend Mass in a corporate manner, as members of the Federation, was betraying it into the hands of Rome. The insincerity of such an attitude is often most exasperating; but it will not deter Catholics from exercising their rights and safeguarding their interests, spiritual and temporal. To attempt in merest self-defence and in the most modest way what Socialism has most brazenly carried out a thousand times calls forth from its camp at once a chorus of most virtuous indignation. The consolation is, that in this Socialism is not so very different from other enemies the Church has had from the beginning, and still will have when Socialism shall have passed into history to trouble only the mind of the poor schoolboy, like a thousand other sad, unhappy and forgotten things. Socialism, too, under the Providence of God, can only work unto the good of those who love Him.

In the meanwhile there is work for us to do, and the unions will heartily welcome our activity in whatever way it can be most prudently displayed. Socialism is founded upon class-hatred. The unions, where Socialistic ideas have not infected them, still at least propose to themselves the ideal of justice for all, the ideal of Christ and of His Church. He wished to be descended from royalty and wealth and to be laid in the tomb of the rich; but He was born into the labor-world and in this He desired to live. It was a school of laborers He drew about Him and by the mouth of the workers did He evangelize the world, teaching neither hatred towards the rich, nor contempt of authority, but justice and love for all and the coming of the Kingdom of God. Healing, like Him, the temporal wounds of mankind, we shall lift up its gaze to the cross whence alone salvation can come to the world.

JOSEPH HUSSLEIN, S.J.

Turkey's Dilemma

If we could forget the wrongs inflicted by Moslems on Christians, or logically hope for fair treatment, some day, from enlightened Turkish rulers to the poor rayahs dependent upon them, we could easily sympathize with new Turkey in her present sore straits. She is being openly despoiled by a nominally Christian state which protested faintly at persecution of Christians nearer home, but finds it incumbent on her to take up the cudgels in defense of a handful of traders who help to replenish an exhausted exchequer. Italy judges possession of a tract of land inhabited by hostile Arabs of more advantage than a protectorate over the barren peaks of Christian Albania. She scarcely raised her voice to seek justice for the latter, but she is ready to go to war for a piece of African territory that may prove as fatal to her as her first footing in Abyssinia. Italy's ambition of colonial extension can meet with but scant approval from any impartial observer of her iniquitous home administration, and it is hard to pronounce between the respective merits of irreligion and infidelity as informing elements for a wild untutored race such as the denizens of the Tripolitaine. On the whole, the cause of righteousness is better served, perhaps, by the frank barbarian than by the hypocritical guardian of faith and morals that Italy is known to be.

The position of Turkey is critical in the extreme, for there is not a point in that sorry empire at this moment immune from trouble. Wherever we look its footholds are insecure, in Europe, Asia, or Africa. Round Uskub, Ipek, and other Macedonian towns the rebel bands of Serbs, Bulgars, and Vlachs are in process of re-formation. The Greek propaganda which had somewhat slackened, is revived in all Hellenic districts, and discontent is rife on the borders of Thessaly as well as in Crete. Albania is a perpetual fountain of unrest. To the dissension between tribes of different creeds is now added the jealous resentment of Moslem Albanians against the Government which has granted particular privileges to the Malissoris. Solidarity with these promises greater advantages than continued loyalty to Moslem governors. The brotherhood of nationality appeals more strongly than ever to the Moslem Albanian, who will ultimately adhere to it rather than to brotherhood of creed.

In Asia the prospect for the Young Turks is just as disquieting. The revolt in Yemen was only partially quelled, and between Kurds and Armenians there are daily conflicts. Arabia knows little and cares less about the program of Union and Progress. If the Arabs were consulted they would probably demand the restoration of old Abdül Hamid and condign punishment for the self-styled regenerators of modern Turkey. In vain does the Constantinople Press attribute disorders to English guineas and American dollars distributed in Aden and Adana, contempt for the new régime is spreading to the farthest corners of the empire in Asia.

But it is in Africa that Young Turkey is suffering her bitterest humiliations. We have seen of how little weight was her word when France and Germany disputed over their respective claims in a land supposed to be under her jurisdiction. Bit by bit Turkey has been losing her African dominions. After Algiers, Egypt; and after Egypt, Morocco and Tunis; but it was reserved to the Young Turk government to be robbed of Tripoli in the most cynical manner yet recorded. A government that had so shamefully violated its engagements towards its Christian subjects deserved perhaps no better, but the chastisement is, unfortunately, not calculated to aid justice or relieve suffering. How far removed from the spirit of the Crusaders are the Italian filibusters may be gauged from their coveting a land inhabited by Mahomedans, rather than exact some measure of liberty for their Christian brethren nearer home. Politics, indeed, have little to do with morals, and still less with common humanity, but Italy does not even make a show of seeking any end beyond selfish aggrandizement. She can hardly lay claim to what is called military glory since her adversary, as has been justly stated, is a prey to chronic civil war.

Turkey's isolated condition, her scanty material resources, and the disorganized state of her army, preclude any chance of successful resistance to Italy's sudden onslaught. She has no avowed political allies; Germany, on whom she counted, and whose support she thought she had purchased by immense economical concessions, failing her utterly in the hour of need. England looks on impassively while her former protégé is being dismembered. More, the appointment of Kitchener, a man of action, not a diplomat, to the Governorship of Egypt, was an alarming symptom for men who asked for benevolent passivity abroad while they pursued "pacific reforms" at home. England plainly intimates to Turkey that her natural protector is now the factor with whom she practised over Bosnia regardless of England's advice. France has been estranged by Turkey's persistent favoring of German commercial enterprise. Russia remains the darkest spectre that looms on the Turkish horizon, for she is the most natural successor and the most logical foe.

There is an inborn fear of Russia in all Turkish hearts. The events of 1877 and 1888 are not forgotten, and Young Turkey fully realizes that the policy which incited England and France to save her from disruption in those crucial moments, exists no longer to-day. New dangers, fresh foes, have arisen, and the expiring relict of Asiatic fanaticism in Europe is confronted with Teuton aspirations. The endeavors of the Young Turks to conciliate the Triple Alliance and form an identification of interests with its prime factor, Germany, have been the most pitifully disastrous fiasco of modern international politics. It is the Powers whose friendship they have cultivated at the expense of older allies that reduce Turkish territory. Austria deprived them of Bosnia and Herzegovina. Italy seizes Tripoli. It remains for Germany to establish a protectorate over the land through which runs her great railroad to Bagdad, and then the Young Turks may well exclaim: Heaven save me from my friends!

The cabinet of Hakki Pasha was regarded as the fourth adherent of the policy that groups Middle Europe against East and West. It forgot in its eagerness to stand alongside the presumably greatest military force in the world, that Bismarck had adroitly fostered Italian pretensions in Africa, and that the natural trend of Austro-German expansion would be from the Baltic to the Ægean Sea. There were not wanting, however, plenty of warnings to its Government from the Turkish Press. Not so long ago Hikmet had a leader which said:—"Germany is our worst enemy because it is masquerading as a friend. Germany has got all possible economical concessions in our dominions, and we reject the solid, handsome article of English and French manufacturers for coarse German products. In return Germany's allies are egged on by her to despoil us."

The infatuation of the Young Turks went so far as to make their mouthpiece, the Crown Prince Yussuf-Izeddin, declare after his recent tour in Europe, that he found Germany pre-eminent in both might and culture. This undiplomatic pronouncement is but one of many blunders of the Hakki cabinet. The tour of the Sultan's heir was intended to bring a personal note of intimacy between the new régime in Turkey and foreign potentates. But it displeased the conservative Mahommedan population. It is of course unheard of that any descendant of the Prophet should deign to visit his brother rulers. The fiction which makes the Sultan Sovereign of the World can only be upheld by avoidance of those parts of it that refuse to acknowledge allegiance. The innovation which sent Yussuf-Izeddin among his peers had no practical result. Germany, whose gift of the splendid fountain in Hippodrome Square is a monument of the Kaiser's friendship for the ex-Sultan, is presented a model battleship—nucleus of the projected Turkish fleet—to his deponents, and now watches with polite regret the destruction of this embryo sea-power by her ally Italy.

How can the inexperienced men who undertook to rejuvenate and consolidate their tottering old Empire find the guiding thread in this fluctuating line of policy? They have been deceived and must bear the penalty. Russia, ever the most steadfast and most sincere of Turkey's many foes, does not conceal her satisfaction at the Young Turks' disillusionment. The Novoe Vremye compares the Hakki cabinet clinging to Germany to a drowning man clasping a serpent. The pity of it is, in Russian minds, that European complications which generally wind up with the peace offering of some portion of Moslem territory from one Power to another, have little bearing on the fate of the Christian peoples still oppressed by Turkish misrule.

Thus, turn where she will, Turkey is isolated and friendless, but her worst difficulties arise not from danger without, but from chaos within, as another paper will indicate.

BEN HURST.

Another African Loot.

The diplomacy of the European Governments in dealing with the Morocco problem is, according to a French political economist, prophetic of similar methods to be followed in the near future in another part of Africa. It is practically a proclamation that after they have satisfied their boa-like appetites by swallowing the countries on the northern littoral of the Dark Continent, they will proceed to assimilate by the same process those that are lying expectant along the shore of the Red Sea. Africa, indeed, seems to be in the process of a transformation into a Greater Europe, and the English, French, Spanish, Italian, Portuguese and German uniforms may soon grow to be as familiar to the sun-burnt men near the equator as to their white brethren on the other side of the Mediterranean. The advantages of commerce and the necessity of protecting their colonists will henceforth serve as a pretext for European interference with the ultimate purpose of subjugation.

Before the Morocco question has been disposed of, lo! in Eastern Africa there arises an almost exactly parallel problem, but one which will call for far more adroit and delicate handling than that which is now putting the diplomats of Europe to a supreme test. It is the question of Abyssinia.

The geographical, political and economic interests of that country are remarkably like those of Morocco, and it is not rash to assert that as soon as King Menelik, who refuses to die, finally shuffles off his mortal coil, the Cabinets of Europe will sit somewhere or other to dispose of the dead monarch's estates, independently of the wishes of his heirs and assigns. Just as in Morocco, civil strife afforded a more or less plausible pretext for interference, so we are going to see immediately on Menelik's demise a squabble for succession similar to that of Abdul Aziz and Mulay Hafid. There is, moreover, a resemblance in the geographical features of the two countries, both affording excellent opportunities for commercial and military operations. Moreover, the occupation of Casablanca by France, that of Larache by Spain, of Agadir by Germany, of Tripoli by Italy, have already been duplicated in Abyssinia in the seizure of Massouah by Italy, of Djibouti by France, and of Zeila by England, not to speak of the Panther that may plant its claws in Abyssinia, just as it did in North Africa.

Again, it is as sure as sure can be, looking at it in the light of past events, that when Menelik departs this life anarchy will be inaugurated both in the country of the Gallas at Erythrea, and in that of the Beni-Changoul on the borders of Harrar. He is a paralytic now, and is said to be on the verge of the grave, for which he shows an aversion most exasperating for his prospective heirs outside the kingdom. But when he does at last lay down the burden of life, then over his dead body the scramble will begin.

The awe and respect in which he is held by his subjects, as well as their loyalty to the dynasty which he represents, have held them in check so far. But when he is gone the storm will break. Indeed, it is the monarch's own action which will unchain it. For not only has he abrogated the Salic law, but he has designated his sister's son as his successor to the throne; although in default of an heir in the direct line, one of the sons of his uncle, the Ras Dargié, has by the law of the land, the right to the throne.

Added to this there is the clash of races and religions. The Prince Mikael, who has been made heir apparent, belongs to the inferior race of the Gallas, and although a convert to that particular form of Christianity which prevails in Abyssinia, he is of Mussulman origin. The Abyssinians, who are essentially traditionalists and nationalists, will not stand for him, and hence the very strong probability is civil war. Doubtless the European Powers, who are watching the course of events, have already picked their man.

Abyssinia is a rich country, and has some very useful ports. France already occupies Djibouti, which is well sued, not only for commercial, but strategical operations. It is an important commercial centre for the caravans. Five hours' journey from that lies the English port of Zeila in Somalia. Italy, besides Erythrea, owns all the northern coast from Massouah to Rahoita. In brief, the ground is so well covered that the natives have very little, if any, direct communication with the Red Sea.

Erythrea was given to the Italians by England, just as it gave Morocco to France, and Italy at that time began to dream of a protectorate over Abyssinia. The world knows how Menelik dispelled that dream, when at Adowa he routed Baratieri and his 65,000 men. Germany has since then become somewhat active in those parts, and even Russia cherished an idea of a religious alliance between the Catholics of Abyssinia and the Russian Church, but the advances were repelled. Rome would be much more acceptable to the people. France has been very cautious all along. Indeed, it has never been in good odor with Menelik. A French railroad was attempted, but so far it has never gone beyond the limits of French territory. The African monarch looked upon it with suspicion and efforts to extend it ceased.

Meantime the European Powers are watching each other. They have made their treaties, secret or otherwise, which the experience of this year has shown us will hold just as long as the diplomats keep their temper, or until commercial advantages call for a change. The status quo established by Menelik since 1870 will be changed immediately; for as soon as the war of succession breaks out Italy, England, France and Germany will probably interfere, on the plea of protecting their subjects resident in Abyssinia. Indeed, the European merchants of those parts are already preparing for that contingency and will quit Addis-Ababa, or "The New Flower," as the capital is called; a name given in defiance of the fact that frequent fogs make it an unpleasant place to live in.

No doubt "The New Flower" will not be culled and the capital will remain intact, but England will doubtless gobble up the whole western region along the line which connects Addis-Ababa with Khartum; and will thus by the valley of the Blue Nile unite it to the English possessions in Egypt, and to Zeila in English Somalia. The Italians on their part will add to Erythrea Tigné, and Eastern Amhara as far as the capital. France will have the rest, which is relatively very little, that is to say, the country from Djibouti to the capital, which will mean Adal and Danakil, a small part of Choa and the valley of Aouache. Germany may also claim a share, even if the secret treaties have not provided for that contingency.

If, however, the succession of Menelik is uncontested the plans of the diplomats may go awry. But even if there is no civil war there would be sure to be trouble if an attempt at invasion is made, for the Abyssinians are both ardent patriots and splendid fighters, and many a long day will pass before they are subjugated. X.

English Political Economists

In an instructive paper read at the annual Conference of the Catholic Young Men's Society of Great Britain, held at Southampton, June 3-5, 1911, the Rev. Michael Maher, S.J., passes in review the Classical English Economists and some of their pet theories. Father Maher marks where these theories enter the domain of ethics and points out how they have failed to meet the test of experience, and moreover run counter to Catholic ethical principles.

"Abstract economic generalizations," says Father Maher, "are one thing, concrete positive measures designed to influence the actual methods of production, distribution, exchange and consumption of wealth in the world around us are something quite different." He seems to hold that only when doctrine passes out of the sphere of theoretic speculation and essays the practical, does it become the subject of ethical or theological criticism. But this we submit would be to allow perfect freedom to theoretic speculation and to require theory to be called to account only when it is being reduced to practice. On the contrary, theories are the proper object of ethical and theological criticism, as every text-book shows; and as a matter of fact, if we allow theories to pass unchallenged it will be hard to prevent them from being reduced to practice. "Principiis obsta" is a precept no less sound in morals than it is in medicine, and from the nature of things calls for more urgent application. But with this exception noted, Father Maher is right in maintaining that in the application of theory to existing conditions the economist is bound to show that the theory is in harmony, or at all events not in conflict with morality or with the teaching of religion.

The first theory which the Jesuit philosopher dissects is Malthus' theory of over-population as the chief cause of poverty and misery in the world. It had a most vehement advocate in John Stuart Mill. But, as Father Maher points out, experience has utterly discredited it. England trebled its population from the time of Mill to the end of the century, but the general conditions of the working classes had very much improved. France, moreover, which adopted the preventive checks such as abstinence from marriage and the "prudential restraint," advocated by Malthus and Mill, shows the slowest increase of any country in Europe. Were it not for the immigration of foreigners the actual population of that country would be shrinking from year to year. French economists of to-day, we are told, mournfully recognize that the French nation is dying, and that unless a profound change takes place the French race will disappear and their fertile lands will pass to another people.

Another principle which, too, may often in the working out, involve an infraction of the moral law of God, is that of "enlightened selfishness," which these economists laid down as a working basis for free competition, the unrestricted liberty of conscience, and in general for their great maxim of "laissez faire"—leave things alone. "Enlightened selfishness," as a principle, fitted in nicely with the assumption of Rousseau and Locke, that the authority of the government is the outcome of a free contract of the individuals composing the State. It also harmonized well with that other maxim of theirs, that the common good is best secured by permitting each individual to bargain freely and pursue his own interests. The State should avoid meddling, for it is the business of the Government, according to these economists, "to protect against fraud and physical violence, and to enforce contracts freely entered into, but beyond this it should abstain from interference between man and man."

But the Catholic student of ethics will not allow these assumptions to pass unchallenged. He is taught that the end and purpose of the State is the temporal well-being of the nation as a whole, and that among its primary functions is the protection of the weak and the securing of justice to all. He will not even in theory concede a false origin to authority, but will hold, according to the ethical philosophy of the Catholic Church, that the authority of the State is from God, though the form of government and the distribution of power may be determined by the people.

The substitution of free competition and unlimited liberty of contract in place of the regulations of the Medieval guilds and the paternal forms of government prevailing in the Middle Ages, Father Maher finds has not worked for the bettering of the laboring class. The State was at length forced to ignore the false theories of free contract and free competition and compel the employer to exercise justice and humanity towards those working for him. In England the Government passed the long series of "Factory Laws," "constituting," says Father Maher, "one of the most valuable economic chapters in the British Statute Book, as well as the most admirable embodiment of the principles of equity." This superlative is perhaps an exaggeration. The factory laws were a long drawn-out approximation to the principles of equity, beginning with prescriptions of decency. Whether they have yet attained to the embodiment of equity may be doubted. Sweat shops still exist. But the Government was not unaided in restricting liberty of contract. Father Maher points to the rise of the Trades Unions, which checked individualism and limited competition among their own members, while developing an esprit de corps, through which private sacrifices are cheerfully made for the good of the body. In this respect he finds nothing in the Trades Unions to condemn.

Starting with the assumption that man is "a bartering animal," the economists insisted on the principle that it should be left entirely to buyer and seller to protect themselves. But, as Father Maher indicates, here too as time went on the moral sense of the people and actual experience of human nature set aside the ratiocinations of economists. Many laws of drastic character were passed in England preventing adulteration and false representation in regard to the nature and quality of goods and their method of production. In America the Pure Food laws, passed by Congress and the creation of a Pure Food Bureau, under the Department of Agriculture, afford another example of the rapidity with which legislation is divorcing itself from economic theorists. The recent remedial legislation for Ireland is one of Father Maher's happiest illustrations. The Irish Land Act, passed by the Imperial Parliament in 1881, as Father Maher says, was the most authoritative and complete condemnation of the laissez faire creed during the whole century, the opponents of the bill urging that the measure meant the banishment of the science of Political Economy to the planet Saturn.

Father Maher concludes his essay with an extract from the great illustration of Catholic principles and the method of their application to economic problems exhibited in the grand authoritative pronouncement of Leo XIII on the most fundamental and far reaching of all sociological questions—that of the just remuneration of labor. Its bold and lofty vindication of the principles of natural justice, he says in conclusion, would have astonished the utilitarian John Stuart Mill. It is but another evidence that the Catholic Church remains ever the truest friend and the ablest and most uncompromising defender of the just rights of the poor.

E. SPILLANE, S.J.

CORRESPONDENCE

Failure of the Uprising in Spain

MADRID, Sept. 23, 1911.

The storm of revolution which, for a few days, filled us with anxiety and fear has at last passed over our heads, and the tempest, dark and threatening, has been succeeded by fair weather.

We take it for granted that the readers of AMERICA have obtained from the daily press the chief events that took place during those days of stress, when even the wisest hesitated to foretell what an hour might bring forth. Instead, therefore, of going over the ground once more and relating the murder of the judicial authorities of Cullera, the robbery and arson in Carcagente, the distribution of private property in Alcira, the acts of sabotage on the railways of Valencia, the attacks on the civil guard in Saragossa, and many other outrageous acts of these new Vandals, we think it better to philosophize on the facts, to study the origin and causes of the movement, and to point out its true character and significance.

The revolution was not political but social. What was in danger was not a political party, not a throne, not a dynasty, but society itself, in its widest acceptance; for the onslaught was made on political and religious institutions, on the army, on the bench, on the Church, on the laws, on property, and on the family. There was no talk of an economic clash, or of a struggle between capital and labor, or of an attempt by labor to secure the betterment of its material or moral conditions; the talk was of an assault on society, of overthrowing it, of destroying it root and branch, of establishing the reign of anarchy, of reproducing the Commune of 1870.

The active principle of the collapsed revolution was not Republican, nor Socialistic in the proper sense of the word. It was syndicalistic. It did not start among the Republicans, but among the enemies of all law. The laborers that recognize the leadership of Lerroux did not join in the general strike; the "general union of workmen," which is the incarnation of Spanish Socialism, took almost no part; the most important Republican and revolutionary leaders remained at a safe distance; Lerroux was not in Barcelona but in Madrid, at the side of Canalejas; Emiliano Iglesias, the right hand man of Lerroux, came into Spain and presented himself at the Casa del Pueblo, or Laborers' Club, to dissuade his followers from cooperating in the revolt. We may here remark that these worthies, together with Azzati, laid the train for Barcelona's "bloody week" in 1909.

On the other hand, the laboring classes, who were pushed on against their will towards a general strike, saw betimes that they were the victims of a cruel deception, whose purpose was to launch them upon a career of violence and crime for the benefit of certain professional agitators who exploit and enslave them. Therefore, the uprising collapsed.

Where, then, is the natural inquiry, did the attempted revolution take its start? The answer is found in a "Laborers' Confederation," whose central office is in Barcelona. It is at the head of various Catalonian organizations or clubs and keeps up friendly relations with similar associations in other parts of Spain. The Barcelona organization purposes to walk closely in the footsteps of the "General Confederation of Labor" in France which, as is well known, is animated by a thoroughly anarchistic and communistic spirit. Affiliated to it in the different parts of the kingdom are twenty thousand laborers, who look upon the State as essentially bad and tyrannical, and therefore to be wiped out of existence. They want no beating about the bush. Their motto is: "Direct action by the proletariat in the shape of a general strike, vindictive and bloody."

This organization is, as is plain, syndicalistic, revolutionary and anarchistic; it is as much against a republic as against the monarchy; its aim is the destruction of the State. It started the revolution. It looked for active help from French revolutionists, who had been noticed in considerable numbers in the country before the event, and it is not unlikely that it expected valuable aid from Portuguese friends of the plan. Funds were to be had in abundance. Common report says that the French parent organization, whose main object seems to be to embitter our existence, devoted five million dollars to work in Spain and Morocco.

From what we have said it follows that he would fall into a grave and lamentable error who should conclude that the revolt was the outcome of the feelings of the Spanish working classes as a body, or that it was as general and as widespread as appearances seemed to indicate. No; Spanish workingmen, broadly speaking, are not partial to anarchistic excesses and outrages. Far from approving of them, many organizations have formally protested against them, and many laborers, tired of the tyranny of a handful of conscienceless adventurers and agitators, have withdrawn from membership in clubs of such tendencies.

Does this mean that we may joyously fold our arms and take a rest? Not at all. Four ways of improving his condition have been set before the Spanish laborer. These are the Socialistic plan, the Barcelona revolutionary plan, the Lerroux plan, and the Catholic social plan. This last, and it is painful to confess it, is the weakest and the least influential and has the fewest members. Here we may ask what might have happened if, instead of the Barcelona revolutionists alone, who did so much damage in a few days, the Socialists and the Lerrouxists had taken part in the fray? True, Lerroux ordered his partisans to remain aloof and they heeded him. Would they be as docile to him or to his lieutenants to-morrow? Here is a suggestive incident. Shortly after the revolt had collapsed and quiet had been restored, Lerroux visited the local jail, where some friend and admirer of his had been confined for a misdemeanor. His way led him by many of his political followers, but instead of words of welcome and good will they hurled offensive epithets at him and gave unequivocal signs of disgust and hostility. They did not even hesitate to call him a traitor.

But from another point of view, there is no denying that the revolt has given a good lesson and a providential warning to all, to the sluggish rich, to truckling cabinet officers, to the middle classes, who never remember their rights and their duties, and to the laborers, who have so often blindly submitted themselves to the guidance of men of bad faith. In this sense the disturbance has done good. For one thing, it has caused Canalejas to make a radical change in his policy. Displaying an activity which was as energetic as it was unexpected, he has shown that he will not be a party to subversive propagandas and attempts to stir up disorder and rebellion. It could be said with truth that those who fomented the disturbances simply tore up his political platform. Logically, his next step should be to resign.

Another consequence of the trouble seems to be the rupture of the alliance between the Republicans and the Socialists. The Republican leaders saw too late that they had lost their followers; for the Republicans of last year had passed on into the camp of the Socialists or of the anarchists.

Finally, some of the labor organizations have received knocking-out blows, for it has been shown that their governing committees exercised a tyrannical sway over the members and exploited them for political or personal ends. Treated as if they were prisoners and slaves, the workingmen have learned that all that glitters is not gold, and all that raise a hurrah for the laborers are not his friends. They have seen, too, that the way to ruin the country is to bring on unjustifiable strikes.

NORBERTO TORCAL.

Expelling Chinese from Siberia

VLADIVOSTOK, July 27, 1911.

I wonder if reliable prophets are recruited from the ranks of doctors? If so, I am glad to leave these otherwise hospitable shores, since the doctors visiting these parts predict that without doubt the golden autumn months will see the pneumonia plague established here, if not permanently, at least for thirty years. Distance lends enchantment to the view, and I contemplate a certain, if not final, exit before then.

The Litany of the Saints pleads for deliverance from pestilence, famine and war. Like the Russian peasant, to whom it never occurs to take time by the forelock and about whom is the proverb: "When the thunder growls the peasant crosses himself," I did not think of reciting it till kind friends, arriving from Dalny and Harbin, began to regale us with the horrible details of this plague; details which have before now been pictured to the rest of the world by the ever present cinematograph. The prospect was most upsetting to contemplate at short range, and in the words of the poet, "none for mine," could it possibly be avoided.

Hardly less alarming was the war scare we had in the late spring. Excepting the military, who are obliged by law to employ Russian servants, almost everyone else in Siberia has Chinese for cooks and waiters, and Japanese women for maids and nurses. With the trouble in Manchuria came the order that every Chinaman should give a strict account of himself, and to help the police identification each one was obliged to have two views of himself photographed, one front and one side view. Copies of these were to be pasted in his wage-book, on his passport, and also registered at the police station. Another order which made the Chinese very angry and which so far has never been strictly enforced, was that each was to wear a bracelet with some particular identification marks on it. This order was so very distasteful, that rather than submit to it, not a few cut off their queues, dressed in European fashion and prefaced their own names with Russian ones, though whether they went through a baptismal ceremony or merely adopted the name that sounded sweetest to their ears I never could definitely determine. Many of them being unable to prove that they had any visible means of support were deported, and it was sometimes pitiful to see them driven through the streets by the soldiers, their miserable chattels packed on their backs. I shall always remember one old man, all his belongings tied up in a handkerchief, the tears streaming down his face, his tottering steps trying to keep up with the rest, as he left what to him had been a land of plenty compared to his famine and plague-stricken fatherland. Poor old thing, perhaps he was mercifully suffocated on the steamer that took them away, packed together like fish in the hold. Some died in port before the Yenisei sailed.

Two months later the Minister of War arrived on a tour of inspection, and his observations resulted in a call for 10,000 more Chinese to work on the government forts. The Minister of War is a beautiful person with gorgeous red trousers. He reviewed 50,000 soldiers at the race course one afternoon. Infantry, artillery, cavalry and ever so many bands. His military bearing, as well as that of the soldiers, was truly perfect. There is a lot of style about a Russian officer. I believe the peasant soldier is as brave and bonny a lad as ever shouldered a gun.

The review began at three o'clock in the afternoon, but the artillery had been on the grounds since midnight, and the rest since early morning, so the tea from countless samovars and many a sack of bread and sausage vanished before the arrival of the Czar's representative. There was a very pretty but much smaller review in honor of the Prince of Siam, who passed through Vladivostok with his Russian wife and suite on the way to the coronation of King George V. The Prince is a dapper little fellow in a neat grey uniform, and he seemed quite modest and shy as he returned the military salutes and cheers of the troops

AN AMERICAN ABROAD.

Portugal's Prime Minister

MADRID, Oct. 5, 1911.

After our sketch of President Arriaga, we think that the readers of AMERICA would like to know a little about the man that he has chosen as President of the Council, or Prime Minister João Chagas, and to him we shall give our respectful attention.

It is now about twenty years since Chagas sprang into prominence as a libeler. By prying into the private life of his victims and destroying reputations by means of a pen that was always dripping vindictiveness, he gained such notoriety as a defamer that his own partisans held him in fear. Gifted with a fine figure and great aptitude for intrigue, a bold and ready writer, he made his way into the salons of the great where, as is the common talk of Lisbon, his name became associated with blackmailing schemes, which were as profitable for him as they were disreputable.

The life of Chagas has pages which might figure in a romance. Franco, the premier of Dom Carlos, having received secret information that the Republicans were preparing a revolutionary outbreak, at once put the police to work to ferret out the plot, but nothing more than vague surmises was the result of their efforts. Then Franco got a brilliant thought. He knew that Chagas was infatuated with a certain actress who had received such tokens of regard from crowns and coronets that she frigidly disdained the admiration of the humble Republican quilldriver. The premier induced the actress to affect great regard for Chagas and thus, little by little, draw from him all the details of the conspiracy. Chagas proved an easy dupe. Finally, on January 27, 1910, he bade farewell to his supposed admiring friend and informed her that the revolution was set for the following day, and that he was named for an important part. But at dawn on that fateful twenty-eighth of January, Franco hastily changed the colonels of several regiments, and soon after a long string of conspirators started for Portugal's African prisons.

Charged by his fellow-conspirators with having betrayed them, Chagas confessed openly that he had committed no other fault than having shared the secret with a dancer. The whole revolution having fallen through on account of this indiscretion, Chagas decided to visit the punishment on himself. Did he mean it? However that may be, some of his friends happened in upon him just as he had drawn up his last will, and was within reach of a loaded revolver. He did not kill himself. He went into exile, where he lived like a prince on the generous sums which the stupidity of his friends had placed at his disposal to effect the revolution. Four days later, Buíça, Costa and half a dozen other extremists avenged on King Carlos and his heir the astuteness of Franco in discovering their plot. Chagas, on his side, so lost caste with Portuguese Republicans, that at a meeting in Setubal held shortly before the regicide, Bernardino Machado told him to his face that he profaned the republic by mentioning it. The other day these two hugged each other in full parliament. The Carbonari now say that the revolution of October 5, 1910, was successful because Chagas was in jail and knew nothing about the plot.

The Provisional Government sent Chagas as its representative to Paris, where he was instrumental in securing the recognition of the republic on the day of Arriaga's election to the presidency. He is well placed over men devoid of faith, conscience and shame.

N. T.

A M E R I C A

A · CATHOLIC · REVIEW · OF · THE · WEEK

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 28, 1911.

Entered as second-class matter, April 15th, 1909, at the Post Office at New York, N. Y., under the Act of March 3d, 1879.

Copyright, 1911, and published weekly by the America Press, New York.
President, THOMAS J. CAMPBELL; Secretary, H. J. SWIFT;
Treasurer, MICHAEL J. O'CONNOR.

SUBSCRIPTIONS, POSTPAID:

United States, 10 cents a copy; yearly, $3.00
Canada, $3.50      Europe, $4.00 (16s.)

Address:

THE AMERICA PRESS, 59 East 83d Street, New York City, N. Y., U. S. A.

CABLE ADDRESS: CATHREVIEW.

The Editor of the "Encyclopædia Britannica" Replies

The New York Times of October 15 published the views of Mr. Hugh Chisholm, editor of the eleventh edition of the "Encyclopædia Britannica" on the attacks on that work "by certain Roman Catholic societies in America."

"As I am at present advised," said Mr. Chisholm to the correspondent of the New York Times, "these critics approach the subject in a spirit which makes fair controversy impossible." Evidently Mr. Chisholm is an optimist. "As I am at present advised" appears to indicate his hope of receiving later advices telling him that in the heat of their indignation the American agents misrepresented the spirit of the "Roman Catholic societies," or else that these societies have turned to penance in sackcloth and ashes. He would prefer, of course, the latter, but we think he will get no comfort unless the former message be sent him.

"Everybody knows," he continues, "that the 'Encyclopædia Britannica' is not itself a Catholic work. England is not a Roman Catholic country, and Catholics can not reasonably suppose that they will find their point of view dominating the theological articles of such a work." This is quite true; and, beyond suggesting that it might well have appeared in the prospectus sent to Catholics, we have to remark this only, that it does not touch the Catholic grievance at all. The "Roman Catholic societies'" chief complaint is that the editor of the Encyclopædia gave them hopes regarding the treatment of religious subjects, and these hopes have not been fulfilled.

"The eleventh edition of the 'Encyclopædia Britannica' has attempted, as no previous editions have done, and, as I believe, no other professedly Roman Catholic works of this kind have done, to represent the Roman Catholic doctrine according as it is held predominantly by Roman Catholics in an objective way." Muddled language is a sign of muddled thought. If the New York Times gives us the very words of the Encyclopædia's editor, we need no further explanation of his inability to understand the objective value of his pledges and the Catholic position that they have not been carried out. However, we will suppose that the words we have quoted are those of the New York Times correspondent, and that Mr. Chisholm did not wish to say that his "Encyclopædia Britannica" is a "professedly Roman Catholic work," nor to imply by the words, "held predominantly," a possible subconscious holding by Roman Catholics of Protestant, Agnostic or Infidel doctrines, nor to hint that each Catholic mind has its own subjective way of looking at the objective teaching of the Church. We will suppose that he meant to say merely, that the object of the Encyclopædia is to present to its readers the objective teaching of the Church as it is accepted by all Catholics, with the exception of a few who, tending to the renunciation of the Catholic Faith, indulge in notions of their own regarding it. We are justified in our supposition; for our interpretation of the words under discussion corresponds with the more florid exposition of the Encyclopædia's aims by the editor of the department of religion.

This being so, Catholics ask naturally, why in matters concerning them this rule has been departed from; why the statement that "articles on particular Churches have been assigned to prominent and yet moderate members of those Churches," is not verified in the case of the Catholic Church; why in treating Catholic matters the Catholic teaching is set aside in favor of views of them quite the reverse of Catholic? Mr. Chisholm's explanation in the New York Times is, that Catholics are unreasonable in putting such a question. "What are errors to them happen to be very often conclusions of standard, theological and historical criticism as understood in the wider sphere outside that of dogmatic Roman Catholicism." Others, as well as we, have shown something of the true value of these so-called conclusions; but this is beside the present question. Mr. Chisholm ought to see that practice has not corresponded to theory. Again, why were Catholics not warned in the prospectus of the special treatment they were to receive?

Mr. Chisholm is "glad to find that these attacks are not supported by a great many well-instructed Roman Catholics." We wish him joy of his discovery, and do not grudge him whatever consolation he gets from it.

The Pope and the Newspapers

We renew the warning we gave lately in connection with the Pope's illness: Don't accept blindly the stories set afloat about his sayings and doings with regard to Italy's little war with Turkey. The Pope may have fallen on his knees and begged heaven to bless the Italian soldiers, he may have blessed them in God's name from a high window in the Vatican. There is no reason why he should not have done so. He is their Father, and they are his children. He is an Italian, and they are men of his own language and more or less of his own race. But we will not believe he did so because we read it in the newspapers. In fact, these put into his mouth certain utterances approving the expedition to Tripoli, which belong really to the rather well-known Bishop of Cremona.

Why this anxiety to create the impression that the Pope favors the war? To ask this question in the editorial rooms of our great journals would be useless. The answer would be: "We print what is furnished us by the press agencies." To ask these agencies in Rome would be as useless. They would reply: "We transmit the news as it is given us." As someone must be responsible for what is done with a set purpose, it seems clear that the responsibility must lie between the Vatican and the Quirinal. No extraordinary acumen is needed to exclude the former. Hence one must conclude that the Italian Government, fresh from triumphing over its violation of the rights of the Holy See, hand in glove with the Judæo-Masonic Syndic of Rome, Nathan, the reviler of Holy Church, denying arrogantly not so long ago, that the Pope could have any voice concerning peace or war in the Czar's futile congress of disarmament, is now eager to appear to the world as clothed with the Sovereign Pontiff's blessing. It is a strange practical commentary on the loud boastings of the past few months, and on the self-sufficiency of more than half a century.

By the way, since the Methodist Episcopal Mission in Rome is in such high favor with both the Government and the Municipality, and has been doing such great work, according to its own testimony, for Christ's Kingdom, why do we not hear that the Reverend Doctor Tipple fell on his knees and blessed the Italian army? Surely, the men who cheer madly as they pass the Mission, would fight all the better for its pontiff's benediction.

Newspaper Inaccuracy

Since people have such blind confidence in the newspapers, they have a right to demand that these should be scrupulously exact in their statements. How lightly editors esteem their duty in this matter may be seen from the following, which is otherwise of little importance:

We read lately in the Sunday issue of a great New York paper an article on rare wines, which told, among other things, of a gentleman who has in his cellar some sherry, vintaged in 1811, which belonged to Admiral Nelson, and some marsella (sic) made in 1801, for the Duke of Bronte, who acted for Napoleon.

How "Admiral Nelson" could have owned wine vintaged in 1811, seeing that he passed from this world six years earlier, the writer of the article did not explain, nor did the editor think it worth while to demand an explanation. The Duke of Bronte certainly acted for Napoleon—who, by the way, was in 1801 still only Bonaparte—but not in the manner the writer of the article would imply. The play began August 1, 1798, with the battle of the Nile. It lasted for seven years, and the last act was Trafalgar. "Admiral Nelson" and the Duke of Bronte were one and the same; and both writer and editor should have known it.

A Futile Device

The latest scheme adopted by the French Government for the dechristianizing of the country is to give new names to old streets. The object the anti-clericals have is to efface in this way from the minds of the people the memory of the nation's Catholic past. Instead of saints' names, for example, patriots will now read at street corners those of Voltaire, Renan, Diderot and other lights of freedom. Rues de la Liberté, de l'Egalité and de l'Indépendance, moreover, are now to be found in such bewildering profusion that the poor post-men must be at their wits' end.

But the Catholicity of France is too deeply imprinted in her history to be blotted out by any such petty means as these. "Her past, at least, is secure." Even since the "great awakening" of '89 Revolutionary France has not had a heroine like Joan of Arc; a spiritual force like St. Bernard; a law-giver like St. Louis; an orator like Bossuet; a "social worker" like St. Vincent de Paul; a scholar like Father Petavius, or a dramatist like Racine. The truest and greatest glories of France are her ancient Catholic glories. Altering sign-posts will not change that.

A Eulogist of Ingersoll

There was lately published in the Evening Post an appreciation of Robert Ingersoll that must have given pain to many of that paper's Christian readers. A eulogist of this noisy unbeliever credits him, for instance, with winning a victory over Gladstone, Cardinal Manning, and the Rev. Henry M. Field, by means of "his swift, peppery dialectic," which is at least a "sentiment open to doubt," but nothing is said of the late Father Lambert's effective use of the same weapon against Ingersoll himself.

The statement, moreover, that that infidel "had the satisfaction of seeing many of the doctrines he attacked, particularly that of eternal punishment, in full retreat," is one that calls for many reservations, before being accepted. For Rome surely has not shifted her ground an inch, nor would it be fair to say that all the sects of Protestantism have been equally ready to surrender fundamental doctrines at the bidding of a clever lawyer.

Colonel Ingersoll himself, as the reviewer gently insinuates, was as fierce a bigot and fanatic in upholding the dogmas of his creed, as that unbeliever would consider a medieval bishop who persecuted heretics. The superior air with which the Post's reviewer avers that a certain materialistic tenet of Ingersoll's "is a pure assumption and quite as wide and hazardous a one as that of immortality or of God," is meant, perhaps, to indicate what an impartial umpire we have, nevertheless the whole bias of the article is offensively anti-Christian.

Had Colonel Ingersoll kept to himself his rejection of all dogma, as many an unbeliever quite as sincere as he has done, he would have been of real service to his country, but this talented infidel proclaimed from the housetops, in season and out, his hostility to revealed religion. He even made his atheism pay. For multitudes bought tickets to hear his blasphemies and to laugh at his mockery of all that is most sacred.

By destroying their belief in Christianity, Ingersoll did thousands of his fellow-citizens an irreparable wrong, and seriously imperiled his country's future, for a nation of unbelievers can never be a great or an enduring nation. Articles like that in the Evening Post do much to perpetuate Ingersoll's evil influence.

A Representative Irish Visitor

It is fortunate at this particular moment, when the much heralded "Irish Players" are grossly misrepresenting the Catholic life and national ideals of Ireland, that an authoritative and qualified representative of both is coming to our shores. Among the many young men of high character and literary promise who sprung up in the great awakening of the Irish Revival, the most variously gifted, and in the last few years the most active in every department of Catholic and national life, as speaker, social worker and literary propagandist, has been Shane Leslie. A young man and a convert of a few years' standing, he has won the confidence of the responsible leaders, as well in the Gaelic, Temperance, and Nationalist, as in the specifically Catholic movements. It was his address on "Are Catholics Socially Inferior to Protestants," at the Catholic Truth Society Conference, in Dublin, that Archbishop Healy selected for special mention as "racy, spicy, new in style and matter," and a masterly plea for Catholic self-respect; and his "Isle of St. Columcille" was pronounced the best, as it is the most widely read, in the excellent "Iona Series" of the Catholic Truth Society publications. A favorite speaker on Temperance and Gaelic League platforms, he was twice selected by Mr. Redmond to contest Derry against the Marquis of Hamilton; and now that false ideas of Irish life and literature are being propagated here by unauthorized persons, Mr. Leslie has been chosen by Dr. Hyde and the Gaelic League to present to Americans the true ideas and purposes of the Celtic Revival.

He will lecture mainly on Celtic Literature in ancient and medieval times, its value, variety and beauty, its relation to Christianity, and the Catholic Church in Ireland and its influence on continental thought; and the Celtic Revival and Irish Nationality, including addresses on Shane O'Neill in Irish History, John Mitchel and Parnell. His lectures in Ireland on the social aspects of Catholic questions should be equally instructive here. The fact that he is half American—his mother was Miss Leonie Jerome, daughter of the late Leonard Jerome, of New York—should help to win him welcome, but his own merits as an Irish Catholic of high ideals and an orator of striking originality and power, will sufficiently commend him to those who wish to hear the story of the Celtic note authoritatively interpreted by one who is endowed with the requisite literary gift.

Canadian Campaign Documents

La Presse, of Montreal, has a theory that Sir Wilfrid Laurier's defeat in the recent elections in Canada was due in some small measure to Protestant antagonism in the Province of Ontario; and to prove it gives its readers a French translation of a political tract written in English and scattered broadcast among the voters of that province.

In it the Holy Father is represented as saying "Down on your knees, Ontario! grovel and lick the dust, your sons and daughters fair are mine. . . . Close up your schools. I will teach your young the old Latin tongue, with which your English can not be compared. Your teachers, ministers and 'guides' are but a pack of fools. Your trusted men are in my pay. Sir Wilfrid is my son; your province must become French, no matter what you say. Your Orangemen are cursed, your Masons damned, your True Blues doomed. All that a son could do for me, Sir Wilfrid verily has done. His plans are laid, his men told off; the enemies of Holy Church we will crush forever." The second part of the tract gives Canada's Reply to the Pope of Rome. "The enemy is on the ground, prepared for bitter fight. Up then! Young Canada and guard the right. We treat with scorn her 'Ne Temere' decree. We stand beneath the Union Jack, ready . . . to chase the tyrant from the land. Down with the white and yellow flag; down with those who try to sever Canadians from their fealty to Britain's lawful King!"

How far this document contributed to Sir Wilfrid's defeat we are unable to say. Other journals in Canada, at least as well informed as La Presse, hold that its effect was very slight indeed. In fact, the voters whom it would inflame belong to a class to which the mere French Canadian name would be a sufficient incitement to depose its bearer, as we see from the attacks made not only upon the composition of the Borden ministry, but also upon the Duke of Connaught himself, because he replied to the address of the French Canadians of Quebec in their own language.

It is, however, an example well worth recording of the campaign of misrepresentation regarding Catholic Québec, which has been carried on for nearly a year. Protestant bishops and synods, ministers and conferences may not have descended quite to its depths of expression; but its sentiments and those they have been propagating are the same.

An explanation is requested concerning the relation of the Students' Eucharistic League to the Frequent Communion Guild, since the notices given to the former in AMERICA "are still bringing many requests for information from all parts of this country, and even from abroad."

Both titles represent one and the same organization, which at its foundation was commonly known as the Students' Eucharistic League. As it gradually developed and became national in its extension a convention of delegates from various colleges interested in its promotion was called to draw up a constitution which might be presented to the Holy Father for final approval. It was here found that the restrictive word "Students" was no longer applicable, since the organization had already spread beyond school and college walls, while the second part of the title was not considered to be sufficiently distinctive. The name Frequent Communion Guild was therefore proposed by a committee to the assembled delegates and was unanimously accepted. The essential features of the organization, however, underwent no changes. An explanation of them may be found in AMERICA under date of August 5, 1911.

"Divorce," remarks the New York Times, "is a social ailment of the poor and the ignorant, not of the well-to-do and well-educated classes." This news is enlightening. The benighted public have long been persuaded that those most infected with the itch for making these new matrimonial ventures were found in the ranks of professional or moneyed men and women. It is not "the poor" certainly that have made Reno infamous, nor are those who figure most prominently in the divorce courts people whom the Times would consider "ignorant," though in point of fact they are indeed densely ignorant of the true nature of Christian marriage.

In the first part of "The Vision of Sir Launfal," a poem by Lowell, that is widely read in American schools, occurs the line: "The priest hath his fee who comes and shrives us." Confession, of course, according to the ancient Protestant tradition is largely a commercial transaction; a fat purse can buy plenary shrift. But if absolution, after all, is not a marketable commodity, should not Catholics insist on text-book publishers omitting this objectionable line from the poem?

LITERATURE

A Very Specious Comedy

A new comedy, "Primerose," has appeared in Paris. Primerose is a young woman of noble family, in love with one Pierre de Lancry. He addresses her so seriously that she expects an offer of marriage, but, to her distress, she hears only that his fortune has been lost in a South American bank, and that he must set out immediately to look after his affairs. As he is now supposedly poor, he thinks it right to say that he does not love her, so Primerose resolves to enter a convent. Her uncle, Cardinal de Merance, of the usual worldly type, who is in the château to perform the annual ceremony of "blessing the hounds," tries in vain to dissuade her.

When Primerose next appears she is a Poor Clare novice, with a Rosary and "gold cross." She comes to the château in a pony cart to collect scraps of food for the poor. At the same moment Pierre de Lancry, who has rescued his money, returns, resolved to marry her. The Cardinal, who is still in the house—since the blessing of animals seems to require a cardinal, he may have remained to bless all the live stock on the premises—is quite in favor of the match; but Primerose won't hear of it. Then comes news that the Government has dissolved all religious orders. The Cardinal, rather happy over it, is inclined to view indulgently the republic that has set Primerose free. But the young lady, clinging obstinately to the Poor Clares' pony cart and gold cross, declares herself the bride of heaven, until somebody hints that the devoted Pierre is about to console himself elsewhere. This settles her. Her vocation is forgotten; she consents to become Madame de Lancry, and the play ends with the Cardinal blessing the happy pair.

The sharp-witted Parisians see quite clearly the moral and the morals of the comedy. Should it be brought to America, many less acute Catholics will go to see it as they go to see other plays in which their faith and the religious life are outraged, and will chirp responsively to the unbelieving world: "A beautiful comedy, full of sparkling wit and tender sentiment, and—what a love of a Cardinal!"

* * *

Aspects of Religious Belief and Practices in Babylonia and Assyria. By MORRIS JASTROW, JR., Ph.D., Professor of Semitic Languages in the University of Pennsylvania. New York, etc.: G. P. Putnam's Sons. $2.25.

There are two ways of treating the history of religions. One admits the indisputable fact of the true religion revealed by God coming down to us from Adam through Abraham and his descendants, and perfected by the coming in human flesh of the Second Person of the Blessed Trinity. Admitting this, it notes in each false religion the traces of the primal revelation and of a purer worship; it searches out in each such things as the tradition of a golden age forfeited by man and to be restored through a deliverer to come; it observes in each rites and ceremonies expressive of the relations of a fallen race with its Creator, of the consciousness of sin, of the need of propitiation, of sacrifice and of purification by means thereof, of the efficacy of prayer, supplications, etc.; it watches the gradual degradation of primitive religion and how this continues in its purity among the chosen people, guarded and perfected by successive revelations, by avengers of the covenant, and by the line of prophets; and it dwells on what is noblest and best in the idolaters' concept of divine things, in order to show how far short this fell of God's revealed truth. Thus God and His revelation and His providence and His Church are exalted; and the comparative study of religion is not without its usefulness.

The second way uses an opposite method. It rejects the undoubted fact, and assumes the hypothesis of evolution as explaining the origin of man. If man is the result of evolution, so also is man's religion; and its history must tell of its constant upward development. There can be no such thing as one true religion, nor can any be called false; for all are mere phases of the moving towards their perfection of the religious aspirations of human nature. Every investigator following this method sees very soon that it does not agree with the facts. Its devotees say practically, so much the worse for the facts; for its scope is the degradation of the one true God and the denial of His revelation, of His providence and of His Church.

It is hardly necessary to say that the work before us follows the second method. It consists of a series of six lectures delivered under the auspices of the American Committee for Lectures on the History of Religions, before such institutions as the Johns Hopkins University, the Lowell Institute, the Union Theological Seminary and the Meadville Theological School. What kind of Christian ministers will be the result of a training which judges such lectures to be suitable to theological students is a problem easy to solve. The eighth rule of the American Committee forbids not only polemical subjects, but also polemical treatment. Professor Jastrow has not observed this rule; for his allusions to Almighty God are, in the words of Truthful James,

"Frequent and painful and free."

Perhaps he will say that the observance of the rule is impossible; and from what we have said concerning the method he uses, we think our readers will agree with him.

But he may attempt an excuse, saying: "I avoid attacking orthodox religion. I do not argue against it. I merely assert things." The excuse would be as valid as one a boy might bring for hitting some passer-by: "I was only throwing stones. I was not aiming at anybody." Certainly Professor Jastrow asserts. He asserts confidently and recklessly; but he gives no reasons, following in this the prudent Sir Andrew Aguecheek. Omitting, through decency, his assertions about God, we will mention a few less painful. He asserts that Adam and Eve in Paradise were forbidden to eat of the tree of life. He asserts that the obviously intelligible history of Jonathan's warning to David by means of the arrows is a euphemistic account of an act of divination. He asserts that the Greek word, phren, has survived to our days in the word, phrenology, while the fact is that, had not the former word survived independently of the latter, this could never have been invented less than a century ago. He asserts that the verse of David: "Arise, O my glory, arise psalter and harp" has no sense, but that if one read: "Arise, O my liver," it becomes perfectly intelligible. He asserts that the history of Jacob's dream is a legend devised to account for the sanctity of Luz. According to him, the place where Jacob slept was a sacred enclosure formed by stones, and the stone he used for a pillow was the special stone of the divinity of the place, etc., an explanation harmonizing as little with the scripture account as it is discreditable to Jacob's discernment. These are a few specimens of the loose and lawless assertion indulged in too often by those who boast of their science.

Professor Jastrow may reply that his book is not a treatise, but a series of lectures. This only shows that not every subject is suited to popular lectures, a point we are always ready to maintain. For the rest, this book contains nothing remarkable or novel to make it necessary to Catholic students of comparative religion. With regard to Catholics in general, it is clearly a forbidden book.

H. W.

Studies Diplomatic and Military, 1775-1865. By CHARLES FRANCIS ADAMS. New York: The Macmillan Company. Price, $2.50 net.

This book is not porridge for young children nor a grateful cordial acceptable to the palates of all adults, without regard to how their owners may have nailed and clinched their views of certain dramatic events and critical moments in the history of our country. It is a book for thinkers. It is to be read and studied calmly, dispassionately. The stiff-necked partisan and the shallow declaimer will take a timid peep at it, and then want their money back. Those who, unlike Job's comforters, are satisfied that wisdom will not die with them, will find it a treasure-house. If we heave a sigh of natural regret over the vanished illusions of childhood, we ought to rejoice that our sober manhood sense has recognized them as illusions. So of some fond fancies in connection with our life as a nation. The author makes his own the words of Sydney G. Fisher: "Our histories are able rhetorical efforts, enlarged Fourth of July orations, or pleasing literary essays on selected phases of the contest."

The bearer of an illustrious name, and the inheritor of the exceptional mental gifts of distinguished ancestors, the author, now far enough removed from the time when the strife of sword and pen and the clash of intellect made unbiased judgment, to say the least, extremely difficult, takes up and discusses various military operations from the Battle of Bunker Hill to the surrender at Appomattox. The chapters on the "Ethics of Secession" and "Some Phases of the Civil War" will well repay repeated and attentive perusal.

One point in particular we find developed quite in harmony with our own long-cherished views. It is the effect of immigration on the national life, on the national feeling, on the national thought. It was a reproach sometimes leveled at the Federal authorities that, during the "late unpleasantness," so much bloody work was done, not by native American citizens, but by foreigners who had been but recently naturalized. Perhaps exaggerated reports of their number added an especially bitter sting to the taunt. While the armies of the South were more largely composed of native-born Americans, foreign-born soldiers were not wanting and there was no bar on their enlistment. But this is a little beside the question. The striking fact is this, that from the days of the "Old Thirteen" to the time when naturalized voters began to be an important factor, allegiance to the State overbore allegiance to the national Government. The Virginia and Kentucky Resolutions and the Hartford Convention led up naturally to South Carolina's Ordinance of Secession. Those whose allegiance was not influenced by State limitations were those who had renounced a European allegiance, and had sworn allegiance to the national Government; they had never known a State allegiance antedating or clashing with a Federal allegiance. Foreigners coming after the United States had become a country helped unawares and insensibly to mold the heterogeneous mass into a nation. Foreign immigration to the Southern States before the war was too insignificant to be noticed; therefore, the old spirit of allegiance to the State, a spirit which had been common to the whole country at an earlier date, survived at the South after it had been buried elsewhere. Foreigners had largely helped to open the grave. Mourners there had been, but more had rejoiced over the distribution of the effects.

The Diplomatic Studies (we wish they had been extended into a separate volume) bear upon the Civil War and the part which was played by the British Government during its continuance. Alas! we must reject Mr. Abram S. Hewitt's circumstantially related private interview between Queen Victoria and Minister Adams in the presence of the Prince Consort (and only six months after Albert's death); but there is something else that we would fain reject. In one of New York's public squares there is a strange statue which might be labeled "The Doomed Indian," for it seems to represent an Apache in the grip of the cholera. Could even a "poaching diplomat" have the hardihood to offer to a freebooter a commission as major general in the United States army, and survive the information that a "civil and military dictatorship" was the price of his services?

H. J. S.

The Holy Viaticum of Life as of Death. By REV. DANIEL A. DEVER, Ph.D., D.D. New York: Benziger Bros.

In this little volume Holy Communion is considered as the support of the wayfarer upon the road of life, as well as his strength for the journey of death. The thoughts are all strung like beads upon the golden thread of the life of that pilgrim saint of purity, St. Stanislaus Kostka, for whom the author has cherished a constant devotion from childhood to age and whom he would likewise endear to his readers. * * *

La Curia Romana según la novísima disciplina decretada por Pio X. Por el R. P. JUAN B. FERRERES de la Compañía de Jesús. Madrid: Administración de Razón y Fe, Plaza de Santo Domingo, 14, bajo.

The learned author of this commentary on the Constitution Sapienti Consilio has gone deeply into the subject. Not satisfied with the Constitution itself and the declarations of the Sacred Consistorial Congregation up to February of the current year, he has dug into the history of former ages of the Church, and has contrasted the former discipline with that now in force, and has carefully traced the origin and the vicissitudes of the various Congregations, Tribunals and Offices or Departments which are now found in the Roman Court or which once existed and have since been suppressed. The bibliographical index gives upwards of one hundred and fifty authors who have been drawn upon for matter. The alphabetical index of the contents gives many titles, such as Beatification, Cardinal, Oath, and Graces, which bring together a vast deal of erudition. This is a second and amplified edition. * * *

Los Esponsales y el Matrimonio según la Novísima Disciplina. Comentario Canónico-Moral sobre el Decreto Ne Temere. Por el R. P. JUAN B. FERRERES de la Compañía de Jesús. Madrid: Admón. de Razón y Fe, Plaza de Sto. Domingo, 14, bajo.

The repute enjoyed by the distinguished author is such that a fifth and enlarged edition of his masterly work has been issued to meet the growing demand for a solid and thorough treatment of the epoch-making decree of Pope Pius X on betrothal and marriage. Besides the commentary proper, which is, as usual, supported at every step by references to authorities, there is a special section in which a comparison is instituted between the former discipline and that introduced by the new decree. * * *

"The Matrimonial State," a timely pamphlet by Father William Poland, S.J., of St. Louis University, has just been published by Herder. In some fifty pages is condensed under the heads, "The Contract, One and Lasting, The Domestic Commonwealth and Civil Paternalism," a clear and forcible exposition of the teachings of Catholic ethics on the nature of marriage. That education of children is also one of the ends of matrimony, that divorce is actually a crime, that the father is the head of the family, and that it is primarily the right and the duty of parents to see to the physical, mental, moral and spiritual education of the child, are proved to admiration. As no one can pick up the average paper nowadays without finding freely expressed in its columns ideas on marriage that would better become a Mohammedan socialist—if such there be—than an American with common sense, the wide diffusion of Father Poland's excellent pamphlet would doubtless promote sounder thinking on this vitally important question.

Commendation from a worthy and competent critic stimulates and encourages. When the commendation is unsolicited this twofold effect is all the greater. In reading an instructive article on the Catholics of Belgium, in the September number of the Cath- olic Magazine for South Africa, we came across a citation from our own weekly, in which AMERICA is spoken of as containing "the finest Catholic foreign correspondence in English that we know of." It is gratifying to know that our efforts to give reliable information to the readers of AMERICA concerning the more important doings of their brethren throughout the world meet with the kindly appreciation of the little magazine which is doing such good work in the cause of truth in that far-off corner of the globe.

According to the Protestant tradition the typical nun is a love-lorn maiden, who enters the convent because she hopes to find in a life of renunciation some solace for her broken heart. Tennyson, for instance, has in mind this traditionary nun when he introduces his readers to:

"A holy maid; tho' never maiden glow'd,
But that was in her earlier maidenhood,
With such a fervent flame of human love,
Which being rudely blunted glanced and shot
Only to holy things."

A later example of the type is to be seen in a song that has had some vogue, called "The Dying Nun." Through some half dozen stanzas of very indifferent verse a religious whose death is near is largely occupied with thoughts of her former lover. She cherishes a ring which, strange to say, she was allowed to keep, because it is "Only a plain gold circlet, with a braid of Douglas' hair." It is with this well-tressed Douglas that "the dying nun," instead of saying her last prayers, "floats away," as she "hears the wild waltz pealing." What a death-bed for a religious! As if a nun of that kind could have endured even for a week the cloistered life, since it is those only who die daily to themselves that they may live to God, who are happy in convents.

Regret has often been expressed that a stronger effort is not made among us to utilize for educational purposes something of the literary treasures that lie hid in the Missal and in the Breviary. The poetry of the Catholic liturgy deserves to be better known and appreciated by the educated Catholic laity. It was this thought, no doubt, that inspired Rev. M. Germing, S.J., head of the Latin Department in the Jesuit Seminary at Florissant, Missouri, to edit the booklet of Latin Hymns which he recently published. The selections chosen by him are intended to make the student acquainted with the full meaning and setting of those beautiful hymns, one or other of which is used at almost every public church service. We trust that Father Germing's venture will meet widespread and hearty welcome. The little book is published by the Seminary Press, St. Stanislaus, Florissant, Missouri.

A handful of attractive pamphlets has come from the London Catholic Truth Society. "The Duties of Conjugal Life," "St. Gilbert of Sempringham," "A Pilgrim of Eternity," "Social Work on Leaving School," "Bebel's Libel on Woman," "Who is St. Joseph?" and "Why Must I Suffer?" are some of the titles. Catholics of means who wish to scatter broadcast good reading matter can find nothing that will do more good than booklets like these.

BOOKS RECEIVED

The Evolution of the Prairie Provinces. By W. S. Herrington, K.C. Toronto: William Briggs.

Pamphlets received from the Catholic Truth Society of London, England:—

A Pilgrim of Eternity. The Story of a Unitarian Minister. By M. N. Book VIII: The Last Things. IX: The Fourth Gospel. X: The Fever of Youth. XIV: The Position of Socialism.

The Duties of Conjugal Life. A Pastoral Letter by Cardinal Mercier. Price 1d.

Social Work on Leaving School. By the Rev. C. D. Plater, S.J. Price 1d. Bebel's Libel on Woman. By the Rev. W. MacMahon, S.J., M.A. Price 1d.

St. Gilbert of Sempringham (1083-89?-1189). By B. M. Laughton. Price 1d.

German Publications:

Katechesen für die Vier Obern Klassen der Volksschule. Von P. Cölestia Muff, O.S.B., Dritter Band. Katechesen über Gebote und Gebet. New York: Benziger Brothers. Net 75 cents.
Pädagogische Grundfragen. Von Dr. Phil. et Theol., Franz Krus, S.J. New York: Frederick Pustet & Co. Net $1.35.

EDUCATION

"There was large significance in the diversity of the elements which united to tender this honor to the new president of Marquette," says the Evening Wisconsin of Milwaukee, commenting editorially on the splendid welcome prepared for Rev. Joseph Grimmelsman, S.J., recently appointed to the post of president of the young and flourishing institution of which Milwaukeeans have grown vastly proud. One may be permitted to emphasize a feature of that significance that ought to serve as an object lesson to misguided leaders in France and other countries, who prate so eloquently of their love of freedom in educational matters. The banquet tendered to Marquette's new executive offers excellent proof that with us in America there exists as yet no antagonism between the public and private schools; that there is room enough for all is happily the broad-minded conviction prevalent in this country. May the even-handed justice underlying that conviction be ever strong against the few among us who would gladly push their foible of state control in educational matters to the extreme that obtains with disastrous results among certain continental peoples.

* * *

Evidently Milwaukeeans are not minded to pay much heed to the views advanced by the gentlemen entrusted with the disbursing of Mr. Carnegie's educational fund. Marquette is an institution controlled by Jesuits, one, therefore, in which religious influence and religious atmosphere are in a proper sense a principle of its existence. The welcome received by its new president, in his public introduction to the people of that city, shows how little concerned that people is lest this feature of Marquette's scholastic life prove a detriment to broad and liberal scholarship. That welcome was essentially a civic function. The Governor of the State was there, and the President of the State University, and the State Superintendent of Public Instruction, and the President of the Milwaukee Chamber of Commerce, and the President of the Milwaukee Clearing-House Association, and representatives of various religious beliefs and various political affiliations. Their presence attested acceptance of Marquette University as an institution of learning worthy of glad recognition and liberal patronage by the community at large.

* * *

Father Grimmelsman said at the banquet, at which he was the guest of honor, October 7, that he regarded it as a demonstration in behalf not of himself but of the University. "As a matter of fact it was both," says the Evening Wisconsin in the editorial already referred to. "After an absence of twenty years he comes back to Milwaukee, with high reputation as a scholar and an executive, to conduct an institution which he knew in its incipency and which has expanded with a rapidity almost unexampled. So quiet has been the growth of Marquette University, however, that the majority of Milwaukeeans are unaware of the marvel which it presents. Its student body, which numbered only three hundred a few years ago, has increased to eighteen hundred. It is a university in fact as well as in name, and the momentum which it has acquired will carry it forward in a career of usefulness undreamed of by the enthusiasts who laid its foundation."

A correspondent writing to the New York Evening Post, October 14, communicates a bit of information that is apt to prove of special interest to educators here in America. It is a striking confirmation of what Dr. West has been claiming in recent papers of the inefficiency of non-classical or, as their proponents term them, "vocational studies." As we know, following a long campaign against classical studies, the programs of 1902 changed the whole secondary education of France, that which answers to college training with us in this country. The successful fight against classical studies coincided with the government's suppression of the religious schools, where such studies were much in honor. As in the case of our own "vocationists," the reason advanced by the French leaders of the opposition to classical studies was the claimed "uselessness of these studies to the majority of students in their after-life."

* * *

Nine years under the new programs should certainly be accepted as a fair period of test as regards their efficiency. The result will prove scarcely cheering to "vocationists." "Ever since last spring," writes the Post's correspondent, "teachers and academicians, directors of engineering companies, and Chambers of Commerce have been complaining that the first result of the new programs shows the inefficiency of non-classical students." The standard accepted in France is the success of students in passing those government examinations which are the only door in that country to any liberal profession as distinct from purely commercial careers. "It is said," adds the correspondent, "that in these examinations last year there were able to pass only a little over 40 per cent. of the Lycée students bred up on 'vocational' studies, that is, students untainted with Latin and Greek, and all that was once known as humanities, that made the young mind the heir of all the ages of men." Since more than 70 per cent. of the classical students succeeded in passing these same tests, if the government, out of sheer opposition, does not lower the bars of its examinations, the Post correspondent predicts "this problem of liberal education will solve itself, and we shall see once more generations of Frenchmen bred up on Latin and literature as in the past."

* * *

Unfortunately French Radicals will scarcely permit the question to be settled on its purely educational merits. Passionate hatred of the Church with them colors every mental process. Already, we are told, they are clamoring that Latin means reaction and clericalism, that it is anti-democratic and breeds aristocracy in college. If necessary to safeguard the conquests of the revolution secondary education must be done away with altogether. "Their ideal," explains the correspondent whom we have been quoting, "is that primary boys and girls be allowed to enter direct the professional schools of the universities." The idea is not put with quite the same bluntness by our American upholders of "vocational" studies, yet their purpose, if rigidly carried out, will mean the speedy disappearance of college training as a factor in educational life. Common schools, high and elementary, will amply suffice to meet the ambition of such as are trained to look upon education as worth while only in the measure in which it helps them to "make a living." May one express the hope that the defenders of an "all-embracing democracy" here are not tainted with the radicalism of the French, who, for other motives, proclaim a similar purpose.

The lack of "thoroughness" in early school training in our day is strikingly evident to one who reads between the lines of the annual report of Major-General Thomas H. Barry, the Superintendent of the United States Military Academy at West Point. We concede at once that our view is not that emphasized in the report. General Barry says that it is due to carelessness on the part of Congressmen in making suitable appointments that the majority of candidates who have tried the regular entrance examinations for West Point this year, as well as two special examinations, would fail to qualify in any respectable grammar school. And newspaper writers, accepting his lead, urge, as a remedy of the deplorable unfitness shown by this year's candidates, that Congressmen should refuse to consider applicants as candidates or alternates who could not show them certificates of scholarship and graduation from high schools. It is, to be sure, entirely reasonable to insist, as does General Barry, that the fitness of appointees be thoroughly tested before they are allowed to take the entrance examinations. But are our Congressmen, as a general thing, careless in complying with this?

* * *

It is a matter of common knowledge, we claim, that members of Congress who have an appointment to West Point to dispose of usually call for volunteer candidates from their districts qualified to pass the entrance examinations; and usually, too, the appointment is bestowed on the candidate who wins out in a preliminary test before competent examiners appointed by the Congressman. It is rare enough to-day to have an appointment made simply because the recipient is acquainted with a political leader. Why, then, make our Congressmen scapegoats, when there is question of the "complete unfitness" of candidates complained of in General Barry's report? Surely the exceptional departures from the common practice will not explain the fact that of the 522 nominated for the first entrance examinations to West Point this year, only 170 passed the mental and physical tests; that of the second batch but 78 passed out of 242 candidates; and that of the 83 nominated for the July examinations, only 15 were qualified.

* * *

Certificates of completed work in high school grades, which newspaper critics insist should be asked for, are not always sure indications that candidates are likely to qualify. The writer has served on several occasions on boards appointed to examine applicants for a West Point cadetship. Each time the candidates without exception had finished or were just about to finish the customary high school course, and the writer has very vivid recollections of examination papers handed in that contained specimens of quite as brilliant blundering as any presented in the choice selections quoted by General Barry. We must look for the explanation of the "evidence of complete unfitness" somewhere else. And there are not wanting among us old-fashioned teachers who will find the source of the trouble rather in the disproportionate amount of energy given in our schools to-day to the external machinery of education rather than to the earnest drill that makes for thoroughness in the process of mental training. It is not a comforting reflection. The deficiency noted in the candidates for West Point is but another instance of poor work done under our present elementary school methods, and it may, in all justice, be set down as confirmatory of the complaint frequently heard—that it is difficult to find office boys and minor clerks who can write a good hand, do small sums, and write messages and short notes in good English.

Nearly 55,000 students matriculated at the twenty-one German universities during the present year's summer semester. In 1909 there were 51,700 students, and in 1900 the total was 33,700. Consular reports note the steady increase in the number of women attending university courses. Since the fall of 1908, when women were first allowed to matriculate in the German advanced schools, the number of those registering shows a very notable annual growth. At present there are 2,552 women students enrolled on the university lists, 2,100 of whom are subjects of the German Empire, and two-thirds of these are Prussians. Of the 452 foreigners about one-half are Russians, one-third are from North America, principally the United States, and thirty are from Austria-Hungary. During the summer of 1911 there were 1,438 women studying philosophy, philology and history; 423 were in the mathematical schools, 549 were studying medicine, 56 took political economy and agriculture, 42 studied law, 31 dentistry, 7 pharmacy and 6 theology.

M. J. O' C.

SOCIOLOGY

In sketching the life of Bishop Hay, last week, we mentioned his dissatisfaction with the emigration to the Carolinas of the Catholics driven out of the Hebrides by a persecutor. He saw that, in the natural course of things, the scattering of a comparatively few Catholics over a Protestant community would mean for their descendants the loss of faith; and that if the Faith, for which the emigrants were sacrificing home and country, was to be preserved, they must enter the new world as colonies, transferring the Catholic community, with its customs and traditions, from its ancient to its future seat. The event has justified his foresight. The descendants of the Hebridean immigrants could, no doubt, be traced to-day in North Carolina and South, but probably not one could be found to have received the Catholic Faith handed down uninterruptedly from his ancestors. On the other hand, in all the Scottish Catholic colonies of the Maritime Provinces of Canada the Faith is as strong and as bright to-day as ever it was in highland glen and western isle.

A child of one of these colonies, Archbishop McNeil of Vancouver, British Columbia, sees, like Bishop Hay, so the Canadian Messenger of the Sacred Heart tells us, that Catholic rural immigrants into the province are in much the same danger as were the immigrants of the eighteenth century. Those who settle in the towns find priest and sacraments and church awaiting them. They can be cared for, and it is their own fault if they are not. In the country Catholics are settling singly here and there among Protestants. A priest may have nominal care of a district, saying Mass at different stations and trying to hunt up the scattered sheep of the flock. The work is arduous, involving long journeys, and frequently it is fruitless. The Catholic, when found, is too often one of those who say: "Well, I was a Catholic at home, but now I think one religion is as good as another." The consequence is that in all his diocese he has no country parish with the rural population living round the church under their pastor's care, and what is worse, there is no prospect that he will be able, under present conditions, to establish any.

To remedy this Archbishop McNeil turns to colonization, just as wise Catholics, bishops and pastors are doing in this country. He has made a beginning near his see; but that beginning meant the finding of money for the purchase of land, and consequently it has exhausted his means for the present. Meanwhile the stream of immigration into the province is growing.

He appeals, therefore, to Catholics in Eastern Canada to help him. But here a great difficulty occurs. The Eastern Provinces are jealous of their people. They do not like to see their population diminished, and therefore do not take kindly to emigration schemes. Nevertheless, they must recognize the fact that there is a constant emigration of their sons and daughters. They cannot prevent it; and so they ought to be willing to direct and regulate it so as to preserve the emigrants' faith. This wealthy Catholics can do by acquiring tracts of land suitable for colonization, and notifying bishops and pastors that it is reserved for Catholic settlers. They need not fear ruining themselves. In this they would be doing for Catholics no more than what others have made fortunes by doing for immigrants in general. We might suggest that this interest in colonization should be extended to Europe. A hundred Catholic families coming from Belgium or Germany or Austria, or any other country, with their priest and school teachers, would be a treasure in a Western diocese.

One has to reflect very little to see the immense political advantage such colonies would give the Catholic people. Rural constituencies have, as a rule, in proportion to numbers, much greater influence than the urban. Such colonies could put Catholics in county school boards, they could return Catholics to provincial legislatures and the federal parliament, and could exert a wholesome control over their representatives, even though these be not Catholics.

H. W.

PULPIT, PRESS AND PLATFORM

The initiative, the referendum and the recall were called the "weapons of mobocracy" by Archbishop Ireland in an address at the dinner of the Army of the Tennessee, at Council Bluffs, Iowa, October 11.

"The clamor now is heard," the Archbishop said, "that the organization of American democracy, such as the Republic has known for a century and a quarter, must be altered, torn asunder, under the pretence that with it the people do not govern with sufficient directness. Let us hope that this clamor is but a passing ebullition of feeling.

"Democracy, yes; mobocracy, never. And toward mobocracy we are now bidden to wend our way. The shibboleths of the clamor, the initiative, the referendum, the recall, put into general practice as the evangelists of the new social gospel would fain have them, are nothing more nor less than the madness of democracy. The highest and purest moral virtues run into extremes become evil—so with democracy.

"May we not, it is asked, trust the people? Yes, we trust the people, as the framers of our Constitution trusted them, as the people usually trust themselves when interests other than political are at stake—remitting those interests to experts. We trust the people when they treat matters with which they are conversant.

"In the long run American public opinion will be sure to right itself. The misfortune is, as we know too well, the people may suffer from a temporary excitement. From the consequences of such excitement we should strive to save the Republic.

"With the initiative and referendum legislative bodies become mere bureaus of registration and exchange for popular views and opinions. All conclusive authority is lost to them. A small fraction of the population sets the machinery of legislation in motion, retards or annuls its decrees. And this for all subjects, the most abstruse and complicated. The ultimate verdict, it is true, rests with the whole people, but many, we must admit, are the problems regarding which the whole people have no adequate knowledge, to which, in the throes of a political campaign, the people are unable to give the requisite reflection.

"But the worst is the recall. Stability and independence in office for a fixed period of time are essential. Liable to recall, the official is continuously watchful of public opinion. And then we must remember the peril to the public peace of the commonwealth. Fifteen or even ten per cent. of the voters at a preceding election, gathered, probably, from the defeated party, may force the recall and bring on the turmoil of a new campaign.

"But what if the official has proven himself unworthy of his trust? Our laws and Constitution provide a remedy. Let him be impeached and judged by well established and impartial courts.

"The peril of the recall is shown when it is extended to the judiciary. If ever independence from popular clamor is imperiously demanded it is when men are bidden to speak in the name of supreme justice, regardless of consequences; when absolute calmness of mind is the prerequisite to a decision.

"Whatever the social or political revolutions with which the country may be threatened, for the sake of America, let us pray the God of Nations, let there be no sacrilegious hand laid upon the courts, impairing their independence or lowering their majesty."

* * *

In his public sermon delivered in Baltimore, on Sunday, October 1, Cardinal Gibbons expressed views similar to those of Archbishop Ireland. He made a plea for the retention of present political landmarks, and opposed the referendum, the recall and popular election of Senators. Of the referendum and the recall of judges he said:

"To give to the masses the right of annulling the acts of the Legislature is to substitute mob law for established law.

"To recall a judge because his decisions do not meet with popular approval is an insult to the dignity, the independence and the self-respect of our judiciary. Far less menacing to the commonwealth is an occasional corrupt or incompetent judge than one who would be the habitual slave of a capricious multitude, who has always his ear to the ground trying to find out the verdict of the people."

ECCLESIASTICAL NEWS

The Liszt centenary was observed, on October 21, at St. Patrick's Cathedral, New York. A solemn Mass of requiem was celebrated by Mgr. Edwards, Vicar-General, in the presence of his Grace, Archbishop Farley. Mgr. Lavelle preached the sermon. Music by Liszt was sung by the full choir of the cathedral.

The Very Rev. Dr. Charles P. Grannan, now professor emeritus of Sacred Scripture at the Catholic University of America, has been made a Roman dignitary and prelate of the pontifical household. In conferring this mark of distinction upon him, the Holy Father has sent him a letter of commendation, which is in part as follows:

"The distinguished services which you have rendered, as regular professor of Sacred Scripture in the Catholic University at Washington, of which you are now professor emeritus, and the assistance which your efforts bring to young men who lack the means but possess the desire of devoting themselves to the service of God, mark you as one worthy of receiving a pledge of our particular good-will. Therefore, by these letters do we make, constitute and declare you to be a Roman Dignitary, or Prelate of the Pontifical Household."

Mgr. Grannan was invested with the purple of a Monsignore in the private chapel of Archbishop Farley in New York.

A very felicitous address of congratulation was transmitted to Cardinal Gibbons, on behalf of the New York Superior Council of the Society of St. Vincent de Paul, by its president, Mr. Thomas M. Mulry, on the occasion of the recent Jubilee celebration in Baltimore. In his reply his Eminence says: "Your great Society, and the noble work done by its members, have always been to me a source of admiration and inspiration, and it has been with a deep sense of pleasure that, during the long years of my ministry, I have seen the Society grow and prosper in its grand field of usefulness."

In order to have more perfect uniformity amongst the Institutes recognizing the Blessed Confessor John Eudes as their founder, the Rev. Gabriel Mallet, Procurator-General of the Congregation of Jesus and Mary (the "Eudists"), begged the Pope to extend to the Religious of Our Lady of Charity of the Good Shepherd, whose Mother House is in Angers, the privilege legitimately enjoyed since the year 1886 by the monasteries called "of the Refuge," namely, to celebrate a feast of the Most Sacred Heart of Jesus on October 20th, and one of the Most Pure Heart of Mary on February 8th. The Sacred Congregation of Rites has accorded the extension of both feasts to the Institute of the Daughters or Religious of Our Lady of Charity of the Good Shepherd for the days indicated.

The Right Rev. Joseph M. Koudelka, D.D., when he left Cleveland, on October 4, to become Auxiliary Bishop of Milwaukee, refused a check for $4,000 from the people of St. Michael's parish, with whom he had been for twenty-eight years. The check was intended as a farewell gift. In refusing the money, and requesting that it be turned into the church treasury, the venerable prelate said: "I came here poor and I leave you poor."

St. Paul's High School, Rangoon, India, is one of the flourishing establishments of the Christian Brothers in the East. It was founded in 1860, and therefore is in existence over fifty years. Today it has 1,217 pupils, of which number 812 are day scholars, 220 boarders and 185 orphans, the latter being brought up wholly at the expense of the institution.

The school has had an uninterrupted series of successes in every line, more than once every one of its students passing at University or High School Examinations, and once all in the first division. The Industrial Department, with its printing and book-binding establishments, is especially noteworthy. A few years ago a special European Department was opened, which to-day is the largest of its kind in Burma.

In Kilkenny, September 26, Chevalier Thomas O'Loughlin, of Killarney Villa, Ballarat, Australia, was married by Rt. Rev. Dr. Brownrigg to Miss Kathleen Murphy, of Kilkenny, under circumstances of unusual interest. The church in which the ceremony was performed was the gift of the bridegroom, Mr. O'Loughlin having previously built and presented, free of cost, the O'Loughlin Memorial Church, a magnificent edifice, to his father's native parish of St. John. Three years ago the Pope conferred on Mr. O'Loughlin the title of Chevalier in recognition of his services to Catholicity, and Bishop Brownrigg announced at the wedding that His Holiness had created him a Count and sent his Apostolic Benediction to the newly wedded pair.

Rev. W. M. Fraser, a Presbyterian minister of Halifax, asks that his name be struck from the roll of the presbytery because he declines to sit in a presbytery where some of the members disregard their ordination vows in their preaching and teaching, and because of what he considers their lessening loyalty to the doctrines of the Presbyterian Church. He says that he "will not extend the hand of fellowship to anyone who, denying the Virgin birth, brands his Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ with a foul stigma." But why does Mr. Fraser remain in a Church where such views are tolerated?

SCIENCE

Rev. Miguel Maso, seismologist to the Philippine Weather Bureau, has just published an interesting brochure on the "Eruption of the Taal Volcano, January, 1911." Amongst the topics discussed are "Atmospheric Waves," "Area of Destruction," "Seismic Movements During and After the Principal Eruption," and "Intensity and Effects of the Earthquake in the Vicinity of the Volcano." Under the heading of "Atmospheric Waves" Father Maso analyses the remarkable rapid rise of the barometer. He says: "Owing to the quake two different series of movements were caused in the atmosphere: Waves of compression and rarefaction, produced directly by the explosion of the volcano; and a true atmospheric depression, resulting from the condensation of water vapor and the ascending currents of highly heated air. This depression had to produce a powerful influx or convergent movement of the air from the outer zones towards the centre of the depression, and he instances, on reliable authority, the actual existence of strong air currents converging towards the volcano. From this he concludes that there occurred a tornado of short duration, which, when once formed and advancing, had to cease almost instantly, as all the elements to which it owed its origin failed quickly. This inference of so eminent a seismologist as Father Maso shows the close relation between seismology and meteorology.

The United States Geological Survey has dispatched several parties in quest of potash salt deposits, that so this country may be independent of "any importation of potash," as the official statement phrases it. Thus far only encouraging generalities have been reported. A laboratory has been established at Fallon, Nevada, where free analysis of salt samples will be made for any comers. The survey unexpectedly came upon rich deposits of phosphate rock in the North-west, and nearly 2,400,000 acres have been surveyed and withdrawn. Nitrogen and potash are essential, however, in making a complete fertilizer, and the search is being continued in the hope of finding potash in commercial quantities. The formation of the arid Western country is favorable to the location of such deposits, as the salts are left by the evaporation of what have been old sea beds, and to this class of formation much of the arid country belongs.

For the benefit of vessels on the Atlantic, the Central Meteorological Bureau of France has just inaugurated the sending out by wireless daily, immediately after the 11 a. m. time signals, the 7 a. m. weather reports received from Reykjavik, Iceland; Valentia, Ireland; Ouessant, France; La Coruña, Spain, and Horta, Azores; and the 8 p. m. observations of the previous day for Saint Pierre-Miquelon Islands, America. The data sent out are the barometric pressure, wind directions and force, together with the state of the sea. The messages are dispatched from the Eiffel Tower.

Fruit respiration is the subject treated in Bulletin 142 of the U. S. Bureau of Chemistry. It states that the respiration intensity of different varieties of fruit was found to vary widely, but that when the data were plotted there was a marked similarity in the curves. Also that fruits that grow and mature quickly and soon become overripe respire rapidly, whilst those which have a long growing season are physiologically inactive. An increase in respiration of from 1.89 to 3.1 is noted for every increase of 10 degrees in temperature.

F. TONDORF, S.J.

OBITUARY

One who stood in the front rank of Mexican publicists laid down the pen when the licentiate Victoriano Agüeros expired in Paris, on October 9, 1911. Born of a Spanish father and a Mexican mother, in the State of Guerrero, on September 4, 1854, he made his early studies in the capital, where he obtained a teacher's certificate when he was only sixteen years of age. He began his literary career in 1871 by contributing various fugitive pieces to the local press. He published his first book, "Essays by José," before he had reached his majority. This was followed by others in quick succession. His most notable work on purely literary lines was a biographical dictionary of Mexican writers, with a critical appreciation of their productions. But it is rather as a champion in the journalistic arena that the deceased licentiate is entitled to our grateful remembrance. After having served on the staff of a newspaper of the time, he saw the need of a thoroughly Catholic daily which could and would defend religious interests while it supplied the other matter sought in such publications. As the result of much thought and consultation, he launched El Tiempo on July 1, 1883. The time was not propitious for an outspoken defender of religion or for a patriot who could write, for it was during the administration of González, who was engaged in holding the place until Díaz could step in for another term. Two years before beginning his editorial duties, which were to be his lifework, he had graduated as a lawyer, but his legal knowledge was never used at the bar. It stood him in good stead, however, for it enabled him to keep within the limits of the law and, at the same time, to raise his voice against the very general corruption in the administration of public affairs. So skilfully did he pilot his journalistic bark that, though many periodicals were summarily suppressed without any legal proceedings, El Tiempo weathered every storm. As the Díaz dictatorship drew towards a close, Don Victoriano's editorial utterances became so plainspoken that the writer of these lines ventured to warn him of possible disaster. He promptly answered: "There is no danger now of violent suppression, for it would produce too strong an impression on the public mind."

Selected to represent the Mexican press at the coronation of King George V, he took advantage of the occasion to visit Spain, where he was cordially received by Alfonso XIII. His letters descriptive of his trip made many bright pages in his newspaper.

He was on the point of embarking on his homeward journey when a sudden attack of enteritis, which defied all medical skill, snuffed out the light of his life when, humanly speaking, he still had many years of active and useful work ahead of him in his chosen profession. The licentiate was a tall and handsome man of striking personality. He was known to the whole City of Mexico, and he was respected even by those who had no sympathy with the cause to which he had devoted his life. Always considerate and courteous, he was an unflinching exponent and defender of his faith. His domestic life, to which he gratefully retired after the tempests of the day, was singularly happy. He had been blessed with a numerous family, and, as he said in a private letter to the writer of these lines, "I am contented with all my boys." Men like Victoriano Agüeros are never numerous in any country; no country can have too many of them. May his life long be an inspiration to the Mexican layman!

Very Rev. Cornelius T. O'Callaghan, D.D., Vicar-General of the diocese of Mobile for forty years, died in that city October 5, in his seventy-third year. Born in Kanturk, County Cork, Ireland, 1839, he came to America in 1852, and having made his preliminary studies at St. Thomas', Bardstown, and St. Vincent's, Cape Girardeau, Mo., completed his course in philosophy and theology at Springhill College, Mobile, where he was ordained by Bishop Quinlan, in 1862. Having labored on the missions in Alabama and Western Georgia in the trying times during and immediately following the Civil War, he was made rector, in 1867, of St. Vincent's, Mobile, a position he retained till his death. He built and freed from debt the fine Church of St. Vincent, established parochial schools, and, during several visitations of yellow fever, won by his heroism the esteem of all classes. Vicar-General since 1871, he served as Administrator of the diocese in the interval following the deaths of Bishops Quinlan, Manucy and O'Sullivan, and in both capacities greatly influenced the continuous growth of the diocese. His funeral was attended by all classes in Mobile.

The Rt. Rev. Augustine Van de Vyver, D.D., for the last twenty-two years Bishop of Richmond, passed away on October 16. He had been ill for some time but his death was not expected. Bishop Van de Vyver was born at Haesdonck, East Flanders, Belgium, December 1, 1844. He studied at the University of Louvain and was ordained a priest by the Apostolic Nuncio to Belgium, on July 24, 1870. Shortly after his ordination he came to America, and was appointed assistant at St. Peter's Cathedral, Richmond. For six years he had charge of the mission at Harper's Ferry, West Va. In 1881 he became Vicar-General of the diocese, later succeeding Bishop Keane in the See of Richmond, when that distinguished prelate was appointed Rector of the Catholic University of America. He was consecrated Bishop on October 20, 1889. The Catholic Church in Virginia owes much to the zeal of Bishop Van de Vyver. During his episcopate forty new churches were built, ten parishes established, and several religious orders welcomed into his diocese. At his funeral, His Eminence Cardinal Gibbons celebrated the high Mass of requiem in the Cathedral of Richmond.

Rev. Mother Victorine, Superior-General of the Loretto Nuns in North America, died in Toronto, Canada, on October 11. Her family name was Harris, and she was born in Ontario fifty-five years ago. On July 1, 1910, when Superior of Loretto Abbey, she was chosen for this high post to succeed Rev. Mother Ignatia.

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

HONORING MARQUETTE'S MEMORY.

To the Editor of AMERICA:

A memorable event was the recent meeting of the officers of the Wisconsin State Historical and Archaeological Societies at Prairie du Chien, Wis. "None of the gatherings," said Secretary Brown, "which these societies have held in former years at Milwaukee, Beloit, Madison and elsewhere, have been of a more interesting and enthusiastic character." The visitors and their friends numbered about two hundred, and their purpose was to inspect and approve grounds for a State Park, for the purchase of which the last Legislature had appropriated $50,000.

As guests of the city, the visitors were conveyed in autos to the many historic points of interest around this, the oldest city in the State, visiting old Fort Crawford, the National Cemetery and Indian mounds scattered about in great abundance. On arriving at the grounds of Sacred Heart College the party was welcomed by the reverend president, who conducted the sightseers through the various buildings.

In the evening, the members of the societies were greeted by an audience that filled the Metropolitan Theatre. Professor Flint, of Wisconsin State University, and Mr. Brown, Secretary of the Wisconsin Historical Society, gave addresses outlining the purpose of their visit. Rev. G. Pickel, S.J., Professor of Science at Sacred Heart College, read a sketch of the earliest settlement of Prairie du Chien by Canadian French in 1726, and of Fort Crawford, erected there by the U. S. Government in 1814.

Captured and burned by the British in the war of 1812, the fort was rebuilt on a grander scale, and became the chief military outpost of the entire northwest, especially during the wars with the Winnebagoes in 1825, and with Black Hawk in 1832.

The next morning, accompanied by over three hundred citizens, the visitors, among whom were prominent residents of Milwaukee, Manitowoc, Green Bay, Madison, La Crosse, Janesville, Waukesha, Watertown, and of McGregor and Dubuque, Iowa, boarded an excursion steamer to course over the same waters, two miles below, where, on June 17, 1673, Père Marquette, in paddling down the Wisconsin, had discovered the great Mississippi. Disembarking at the junction of the rivers, all ascended Mount Lookout, from which they had a full view of Marquette's course of discovery. This mount, which, according to the U. S. survey, attains the height of 1,108 feet above sea level, was chosen as the site of the State Park. The view obtained from the summit was a surprise to all. The great river was seen winding away to the south until lost amid great bluffs on either side. Northward its waters, widening into lagoons, course down between the cities of McGregor and Prairie du Chien, four miles distant. Eastward lies Bridgeport, far away on the banks of the rapid, serpentine Wisconsin. Stretching out from the junction of the rivers, an unbroken ridge of hills, averaging 300 feet in height, sweeps around in a semi-circle, reaching back again to the Mississippi. Within the amphitheatre thus formed, a beautiful stretch of meadow land measuring six miles in length and four in width, and midway between Prairie du Chien and the junction of the rivers, stand out boldly the buildings of Sacred Heart College. Gazing in admiration at the magnificent scene, the vice-president of the Historical Society said "the College was destined by Providence to become a great seat of learning."

The summit of Mount Lookout, the site of the State Park, forms a grand plateau more than half a mile in length, and is adorned with series of bear mounds erected by the Bear Tribe of Indians. Upon the highest of these mounds, known as "Signal Hill," was placed with simple though impressive ceremony a bronze tablet, the gift of James Pyott, of Chicago. Its lettering proclaims the fact that these grounds have been taken over by the State of Wisconsin for a public park. Nothing in the State can better perpetuate to future generations the memory of the historical achievements of Père Marquette. Further appropriations will be made annually for the beautifying of the grounds, and a bridge will be constructed over the Wisconsin from the base of Mount Lookout.

S. H. C.
Prairie du Chien, Wisconsin.

The Coward Shoe

"REG. U. S. PAT. OFF."

For Men whose feet are small at the instep

A new Coward Last which is a further improvement on the Coward Combination Shoe. The waist is narrowed snugly to the instep, and rounded close in, under the arch of the foot, which the shoe helps support. While this shoe hugs the waist and heel, there is freedom of tread, because the toes cannot get into cramped quarters.

We call this shoe, the Coward NEW Combination Last.
Please ask for it by name.

SOLD NOWHERE ELSE

JAMES S. COWARD

264-274 Greenwich St., N. Y.
(NEAR WARREN STREET)

Mail Orders Filled | Send for Catalogue

Sarony

Photographer
256 Fifth Ave., New York
Favorably known to the Clergy and Laity for many years

WITH GLACIER WINDOW DECORATION

YOU CAN GET
Stained Glass Effects
on Ordinary Windows
Suitable for Residence
Churches and Schools

Special Ecclesiastical Designs

Write To-day for Booklet 6

Address WM. B. QUAILE, 752 Broadway, New York

You
Who Get Hungry
Between Meals

Don't deny yourself food till meal time.
When that midmorning hunger approaches, satisfy it with Uneeda Biscuit. These biscuits are little nuggets of nutrition. Each crisp soda cracker contains energy for thirty minutes more work.
Many business men eat them at ten in the morning. So do school children at recess.
They're more nutritive than bread. You can eat them dry — or with milk.
Uneeda Biscuit are always crisp and delightful.

5¢

In the moisture-proof package

NATIONAL BISCUIT COMPANY

Never Sold in Bulk

McCray Refrigerators

"Proven Very Satisfactory"

McCray Refrigerator Co., Kendallville, Ind.
GENTLEMEN—The large cooler placed in St. Joseph's Sanitarium by your Detroit agent has, during the short time we have used it, proven very satisfactory, articles placed in the compartments keeping perfectly dry and sweet.
Your icing from the outside is a very desirable feature in the way of cleanliness, which is very much appreciated by all.
Respectfully yours,
SISTERS OF CHARITY,
St. Joseph's Sanitarium Mt. Clemens, Mich.

McCray Refrigerators
are made in all sizes for every purpose that requires perfect refrigeration
Books describing the different varieties will be sent free on request:
No. A. H. Built-in-to-order for Residences;
No. 88 regular models for Residences;
No. 87 for Grocers;
No. 59 for Meat Markets;
No. 48 for Hotels, Clubs and Institutions;
No. 72 for floral shops.

McCray REFRIGERATOR CO.
254 Lake Street, Kendallville, Ind.
New York Branch, 231 W. 42d Street
Display Rooms and Agencies in all Principal Cities.

For Entrances, Corridors or Floor-Spaces
Exposed to Hard Service, Dirt or Wet

Cary's Everlasting Flexible Steel Mats

None so Clean, Durable and Sanitary for Churches, Hotels, Apartment Houses, Banks,
Stores, Restaurants and Public Buildings

Made of the
Best Cold Rolled
Steel. Rust Proof
Reversible, Self-
Cleaning.

Made in rolls and eight regular sizes. Special sizes to order.

Among the Churches which we have equipped with our mat are the CHURCH OF OUR LADY OF MERCY, FORDHAM, N. Y., with 270 square feet; ST.
CECILIA'S CHURCH, NEW YORK, with nearly 400 square feet, and we have put over 900 square feet in ST. AUGUSTINE'S CHURCH and SCHOOL, BRIDGEPORT, CONN.

Circular upon request. CAN YOU AFFORD TO BE WITHOUT THESE? (Telephone Worth 1445)

CARY MANUFACTURING CO. - 19 to 23 Roosevelt St., New York

The United States
Government uses
and specifies
for this mat
in all their Buildings.

PATENTED
IN THE UNITED STATES AND FOREIGN COUNTRIES.

A SHOPPING GUIDE TO

ABRAHAM & STRAUS

This store has a department organized for the purpose of supplying the convent, academy orphan asylum or school, hospital, etc., with serges, merinos, draps d'été, linens, etc., and clothing worn by children. The contract department, as it is called, also advises and estimates on carpets, furniture, shades, etc. A representative familiar with the requirements of religious communities will call, as soon as request is sent to Contract Department.

ABRAHAM & STRAUS

420 Fulton Street, Brooklyn, New York

NOW READY

Among the Algonquins

NOW
READY

VOL. III OF PIONEER PRIESTS OF NORTH AMERICA

By REV. THOMAS J. CAMPBELL, S. J.

The ethnic group that figured more extensively in our history than any other Indian family

WHAT THE PRESS SAYS:

Father Campbell's telling pages do full justice to the heroic and brilliant period of their apostolic labors. And many appropriate illustrations, portraits and maps add to the interest and explain more fully the narrative.—Catholic Columbian.

The present work is the third volume of a series in which are related the lives and sufferings of those heroic Roman Catholic missionaries who first evangelized and founded civilization among the aborigines of the North American continent. Father T. J. Campbell well maintains his reputation as a scholar and stylist in this fascinating and inspiring work.—The Literary Digest.

... But the story is not alone one of evangelization. It is a chapter in the birth of a continent, and as such is tense with the thrill of primeval battle with the elements and of herculean fortitude in the face of toil and danger and suffering.

Altogether it is a splendid volume that Father Campbell has produced. To those of the same faith as the pioneer priests whose lives it relates, it should prove no less edifying than absorbing. But even to those of other persuasion, "Among the Algonquins" offers an opportunity for serious and interesting reading, where solid historical worth is matched by charm of style and vigor of conception.—N. Y. Evening Sun.

336 Pages

Price, $2.00 By Mail 20c extra

22 Illustrations

The America Press, 59 East 83d Street, New York, N. Y.

WE OWN AND OFFER

$165,000

First Mortgage Real Estate $500 Gold Coupon Notes

EXECUTED BY
St. Joseph's Convent of Mercy in St. Louis
(A Corporation)

RATE OF INTEREST 5% PAYABLE SEMI-ANNUALLY

TOTAL ISSUE $300,000 PROPERTY VALUED AT $700,000
All Notes Dated April 10, 1911

Interest coupons payable May 1st and November 1st of each year, at the office of the Mercantile Trust Company, Trustee in Deed of Trust, securing this issue of Notes.

Principal Notes of $500 each, payable as follows:

Numbers 1 to 20, both inclusive, on May 1, 1914 (Sold).....	$ 10,000
Numbers 21 to 40, both inclusive, on May 1, 1915 (Sold).....	10,000
Numbers 41 to 70, both inclusive, on May 1, 1916 (Sold).....	15,000
Numbers 71 to 100, both inclusive, on May 1, 1917 (Sold).....	15,000
Numbers 101 to 130, both inclusive, on May 1, 1918 (Sold).....	15,000
Numbers 131 to 160, both inclusive, on May 1, 1919.....	15,000
Numbers 161 to 190, both inclusive, on May 1, 1920.....	15,000
Numbers 191 to 600, both inclusive, on May 1, 1921.....	205,000

Maturities available 1919, 1920 and 1921 Total.....$300,000

SECURITY—Six Separate Properties Valued at over $700,000

- FIRST: A magnificent tract of ground fronting 314 feet 10 inches on Euclid Avenue by the extraordinary depth of 432 feet 7 inches on Parkview Place and 396 feet on Audubon Avenue, just one-half block east of Forest Park, and one block south of Forest Park Boulevard. There is now in course of erection on this property at a cost of over $380,000 the handsome new fireproof building known as St. Johns Hospital, one of the most modern and complete buildings of its kind in the United States.

THIRD: The Southeast Corner of 22d and Morgan Streets. Lot fronting 168 feet on Morgan Street by a depth of 144 feet 7½ inches on 22d Street, together with the 3-story brick building, now used as the Girls' Industrial School.

FIFTH: Eighty-one acres fronting on the Laclede Station Road and Edgar Road in St. Louis County, near Webster Groves. A magnificent tract of land rapidly increasing in value.
- SECOND: The Southeast Corner of 23d and Locust Streets fronting 106 feet 6 inches on Locust Street by 155 feet on 23d Street, together with the 3-story brick building, known as the St. Johns Hospital and covering the entire lot. It is the intention to remove said Hospital to the new building above described as soon as same is completed. The Girls' Industrial School now at 22d and Morgan Streets will then be removed to and will occupy the property at 23d and Locust Streets.

FOURTH: A strip of ground fronting 451 feet 3 inches on the north line of Cook Avenue by a depth of 147 feet 6 inches on Newstead Avenue, just opposite the Rankin School of Mechanical Trades.

SIXTH: A tract of land fronting 320 feet on Nichols Street and bounded by Main and Concord Street in the City of Springfield, Missouri, together with the brick Hospital Building, known as St. Johns Hospital thereon, erected at a cost of Forty Thousand Dollars, exclusive of ground.

The Deed of Trust securing these notes is a first Mortgage on EACH OF THE SIX properties described, making the notes exceptionally well secured.

The Mortgage requires that the improvements be kept insured in a sum of at least $175,000 against fire and $100,000 against tornado. Loss, if any, payable to and policies held by the Mercantile Trust Company for the benefit of note-holders.

The Title to all this property is perfect. Titles have been examined and Certificates issued by Title Guaranty Trust Co. on the St. Louis City and County properties.

Notes payable to bearer, but if desired may be registered free of charge in name of purchaser.

A safe and convenient Investment of $500 or multiples of $500 netting purchasers 5%.

Purchases by non-residents filled with the same dispatch as locally.

Interviews and correspondence invited.

REAL ESTATE
LOAN DEPARTMENT

Mercantile Trust Company
Eighth and Locust Streets
ST. LOUIS, MISSOURI

FESTUS J. WADE, President.

J. B. MOBERLY, Real Estate Loan Officer.

Capital and surplus Nine and One-half Million Dollars.

The Catholic Mind

LIST OF ARTICLES NOT OUT OF PRINT

—1903—

- No. 9. THE ATTITUDE OF MODERN PROTESTANTS TOWARDS THE VIRGINITY OF OUR BLESSED LADY. A. J. MAAS, S.J.
 Nos. 10, 11. GALILEO GALILEI LINCEO.
 No. 22. THE END JUSTIFIES THE MEANS. Rt. Rev. BISHOP LUDDEN, JOHN GERARD, S.J., S. M. BRANDI, S.J.

—1904—

- Nos. 2, 4. STATISTICS OF THE LEADING RELIGIOUS DENOMINATIONS. H. A. KROSE, S.J.
 Nos. 8, 9. THE RELIGIOUS CRISIS IN FRANCE. A. DE MUN.
 No. 14. THE CONCORDAT OF 1901. D. M. O'CONNOR.
 No. 15. SUAREZ AND REGICIDE.
 Nos. 17, 18. THE VATICAN WHITE BOOK.
 No. 24. THE CATHOLIC PROTECTORATE OF FRANCE IN THE EAST AND IN THE FAR EAST.

—1905—

- No. 8. WHO STARTED THE SPY SYSTEM IN FRANCE?
 No. 18. A SINGLE CATECHISM: ITS ADVANTAGES AND DISADVANTAGES. Civiltà Cattolica.
 No. 19. PUBLIC CONTROVERSIES ON RELIGIOUS MATTERS. Etudes.

—1906—

- No. 1. THE FRENCH SEPARATION BILL. TEXT. J. G.
 No. 13. SCIENCE AND RELIGION.
 No. 15. I. OBJECT OF FEDERATION. Rt. Rev. J. F. REGIS CANEVEN, D.D.
 II. DIVORCE. Hon. DANIEL J. KENEFICK.
 No. 17. HOLY COMMUNION IN THE EARLY CHURCH. Edward KING, in the Month.
 No. 18. THE FRENCH ASSOCIATIONS OF WORSHIP AND THEIR SUBSTITUTES.
 No. 24. THE DELUSION OF CHRISTIAN SCIENCE. T. J. CAMPBELL, S.J.

—1907—

- No. 1. LEGAL OPINIONS ON THE FRENCH SPOILIATION.
 No. 4. FERDINAND BRUNETIERE. PIERRE SUAU, S.J.
 No. 19. RECENT PAPAL DOCUMENTS.

—1908—

- No. 4. A PRIMARY CIVIC DUTY.
 No. 7. SCIENCE AND HER COUNTERFEIT. J. GERARD, S.J.
 No. 8. UNIVERSITY EDUCATION IN IRELAND.
 No. 9. PLAIN WORDS ON SOCIALISM. I. C. S. DEVAS, M.A.
 No. 11. CATHOLICS AND THE SOCIAL MOVEMENT. Rt. Rev. MGR. PARKINSON, D.D.
 No. 12. THE MAKING OF A SAINT.
 No. 13. MR. BIRRELL'S UNIVERSITY BILL.
 No. 14. STATUS AND PROPERTY RIGHTS OF THE ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH.
 No. 15. APOSTOLIC CONSTITUTION ON THE ROMAN CURIA.
 No. 16. THE ROMAN COURTS.

- No. 19. THE GENIUS OF CARDINAL WISEMAN. WILFRID WARD.
 No. 20. THE MASS AND THE REFORMATION. J. CANON MOYES.
 No. 21. CHRISTIAN KNIGHTHOOD. JOSEPH G. ANDERSON.
 No. 22. REVISING THE VULGATE. F. A. GASQUET, Abbot, O.S.B.

—1909—

- No. 1. LORD KELVIN AND THE EXISTENCE OF GOD. H. V. GILL, S.J.
 No. 2. PRIMARY EDUCATION IN FRANCE. J. E. N.
 No. 3. PSYCHOTHERAPY. JAMES J. WALSH, M.D., LL.D.
 Nos. 4, 5. SOCIALISM AND CHRISTIANITY. I, II. Rev. J. F. HOGAN, D.D.
 No. 8. DARWINISM FIFTY YEARS AFTER. G. BONETTI, S.J.
 No. 9. CATHOLIC FEDERATION OF LONDON. Hon. CHARLES RUSSELL.
 No. 10. THE SALFORD DIOCESAN CATHOLIC FEDERATION. The Month, May, '09.
 Nos. 11, 12, 13, 14. CALVIN'S CONVERSION. I, II, III, IV. PAUL BERNARD, in Etudes.
 Nos. 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20. CATHOLIC UNIVERSITIES. I, II, III, IV, V, VI. ALFRED BAUDRILLART.
 No. 21. SOCIALISTS AND CATHOLICS. ETIENNE LAMY.
 No. 24. SERMON ON CARDINAL NEWMAN. JOSEPH RICKABY, S.J.

—1910—

- No. 1. THE FRENCH BISHOPS AND THE EDUCATION PROBLEM. CHAMBRUN.
 No. 2. ETERNAL PUNISHMENT. GEORGE R. ROCHE, S.J.
 No. 3. THE SONS OF ST. FRANCIS. HERBERT THURSTON, S.J.
 Nos. 4, 5, 6, 7, 8. CATHOLIC MISSIONS. I, II, III, IV, V. HILARIÓN GIL.
 Nos. 11, 12, 13. CALLISTUS III AND HALLEY'S COMET. I, II, III.
 Nos. 14, 15. ST. CHARLES BORROMEO ENCYCLICAL.
 No. 16. THE PASTOR AND EDUCATION.
 No. 17. HOLY COMMUNION FOR CHILDREN.
 No. 18. THE XXI EUCHARISTIC CONGRESS. E. SPILLANE, S.J.
 No. 19. THE HOLY EUCHARIST IN EARLY CANADA. T. J. CAMPBELL, S.J.
 Nos. 20, 21. PIUS X ON RECENT MANIFESTATIONS OF MODERNISM.
 No. 22. REMOVAL OF PARISH PRIESTS.
 No. 24. MAYOR NATHAN'S INSULT TO THE POPE.

—1911—

- No. 2. THE PORTUGUESE REVOLUTION.
 No. 3. SOME CAUSES OF THE PORTUGUESE REVOLUTION.
 Nos. 4, 5. SPAIN AS SHE IS. Catholic Herald of India.
 No. 6. SOCIALISM IN THE SCHOOLS. Hon. BIRD S. COLER.
 No. 7. CONDEMNATION OF MODERNISM. Rt. Rev. B. J. KEILEY.
 No. 8. ONE HUNDRED BEST CATHOLIC BOOKS.
 Nos. 9, 10. THE CHILD IN THE HOME AND THE SCHOOL. Rt. Rev. DR. CLEARY.
 Nos. 11, 12. CARDINAL GIBBONS' JUBILEE.
 Nos. 13, 14. PROTESTS OF PIUS X AND BISHOPS OF PORTUGAL.
 No. 15. THE TRUTH ABOUT THE "ENCYCLOPÆDIA BRITANNICA." T. J. CAMPBELL, S.J.
 No. 16. THE CATHOLIC PRESS. E. SPILLANE, S.J.
 No. 17. ENGLISH ECONOMISTS AND CATHOLIC ETHICS. Rev. MICHAEL MAHER, S.J.
 No. 18. CATHOLICISM AT HOME AND ABROAD.

Single numbers 5 cents each, $4.00 per hundred
 Double numbers 10 " " 7.00 " "

Copies of THE CATHOLIC MIND not included in this list will be accepted in exchange for any of the above

THE AMERICA PRESS, 59 East 83d Street, New York City

COLLEGES AND ACADEMIES

A CATHOLIC INSTITUTION FOR THE HIGHER EDUCATION OF WOMEN

College of Mount Saint Vincent
On Hudson

CITY OF NEW YORK

DAY PUPILS AND BOARDERSLocation Unsurpassed for Convenience, Healthfulness and Beauty
One-half Hour from Grand Central Station

PROFESSORS OF DISTINCTION . . . . . EQUIPMENT OF THE BEST

COLLEGE—Four years' course leading to the Degrees of B.A. and B.S.
SCHOOL OF PEDAGOGY—Required for entrance two years of college work

FALL TERM BEGINS SEPTEMBER 25, 1911 . . . . . WRITE FOR PROSPECTUS

PREPARATORY DEPARTMENT

ACADEMY MOUNT SAINT VINCENT ON HUDSON

CITY OF NEW YORK

*"When Love and Skill Work Together Expect a Masterpiece"*SET OF 30 HIGH CLASS ART POSTALS of RELIGIOUS SUBJECTS 50¢
SENT BY MAILWE SEND FREE WITH ORDER A WELL MADE ALBUM
WITH YOUR NAME STAMPED IN GOLD ON COVER

Set of 30 Souvenir Picture Cards of Religious Subjects, reproduced from Famous Paintings in the National Galleries of Europe. Each subject is elaborately lithographed in the most beautiful colors and of exceptional quality.

An appropriate remembrance gift to friends. Complete set of 30 pictures, including Album to hold 24, with your name stamped in gold on cover (if desired). Mailed to you complete on receipt of 50c. You will be pleased with the artistic beauty of these pictures, at such moderate cost.

IMPORT DISTRIBUTING CO.

25 West 42nd Street

New York

THE BOY-SAVERS' GUIDE

Society Work for Lads in Their Teens

By FATHER GEORGE E. QUIN, S. J.

Details twenty years' experience regarding the attractions, organization, meetings, instructions, dues, expenses, etc., etc., common to all juvenile religious fraternities. The "club" feature, treated as needless to priests, is discussed preferably with zealous laymen. A practical solution of the entire "parish-boy" question, invaluable to priests and others engaged in the important field considered. Benziger Brothers, New York, Cincinnati, Chicago. $1.35 net. Postage, 15 cents extra.

MENEELY BELL CO.
TROY, N.Y. AND
177 BROADWAY, N.Y. CITY.
BELLS*"We furnish any book published anywhere"Publishers, Importers
and Booksellers

MAY WE SERVE YOU?

LEO KELLY &amp; CO.

118 East 28th Street, New York

Sacred Heart Sanitarium

FOR REST, QUIET, RECUPERATION AND HEALTH

Unsurpassed results obtained in Nervousness, Rheumatism, Heart and Stomach troubles. No surgical, hospital nor insanity cases taken. A delightful, homelike, restful place—ideal for all run down conditions. Hydrotherapy, Electricity, Massage, Zander Gymnasium, Sun parlor; swimming pools, billiards, bowling, etc. Gaited saddle horses, large indoor riding pavilion; suspended running track connected by tunnel with bath department. 17-acre park.

A staff of five physicians give their exclusive services to the patients.

WRITE SISTER SUPERIOR FOR BOOKLET X. MILWAUKEE, WIS.

PETER THEIS' SONS

636-644 First Avenue . . . . New York City

ALL BRANCHES OF

ECCLESIASTICAL

Marble, Onyx, Stone Work and Statuary

DENTISTRY

Loose teeth tightened by a new process; teeth without plates. Extracting avoided. High-class and up-to-date dentistry in all branches at reasonable prices.

DRS. BURKE & BURKE
DENTISTS1947 BROADWAY AND 65TH ST
6th St. Subway, L station and all surface cars.TYPEWRITER RIBBONS
AND CARBON PAPERS

Especially adapted for use in Colleges and Schools

Send for our Circular as to how we will save you 50 per cent. on supplies

SNELLING & SON 225 34th Street,
South Brooklyn, N. Y.
Purveyors to U. S. Gov't

Plays, Drills, Tableaux

SUITED FOR

Catholic Schools and Churches

are contained in "HINTS," the entertainment magazine

Send for free Sample Copy

HINTS MAGAZINE, 3 W. 29th St., New York, N. Y.

EVER NEED DUPLICATES

of form Letters, Price Lists, bills, Invoices, Drawings, Menus, Reports, anything? Then take advantage of our offer of ten days' trial, without deposit, and become one of thousands of satisfied customers who will agree that DAUS IMPROVED TIP TOP DUPLICATOR with "DAUSCO" Oiled Linen Back, negative roll, is the simplest, easiest and quickest method of duplicating on the market. too copies from Penwritten and go copies from Typewritten Original. If you have tried other duplicators without success, you will be more than pleased with ours. Complete duplicator, cap size (prints 8 3/4 x 13 inches), $5.00
FELIX G. DAUS DUPLICATOR CO., Daus Bldg., 111 John St., New York

DIRECTORY OF COLLEGES AND ACADEMIES

Georgetown University WASHINGTON, D. C.

Directory for Catalogues or Information

The College (Graduates and Undergraduates)
Schools
The Registrar, 37th & O Sts., N. W.

The School of Medicine
The Dean, 920 H St., N. W.

The Training School for Nurses
Georgetown University Hospital

The School of Dentistry
The Dean, 920 H St., N. W.

The School of Law
The Dean, 506 E. St., N. W.

The Astronomical Observatory
The Director, Georgetown University

Rev. Joseph Himmel, S.J., President

College of St. Catherine, St. Paul, Minn.
A Catholic College for Girls.
Accredited by the Minnesota State Board of Public Instruction and by several prominent Universities.

Seventy Acre Campus. Fireproof Buildings.
COMPLETE COURSES IN THESE DEPARTMENTS.
THE COLLEGIATE, leading to the degree of Bachelor of Arts. THE ACADEMIC or COLLEGE PREPARATORY. MUSIC AND PAINTING in their various branches. DOMESTIC ART, HOUSEHOLD SCIENCE and COOKING. Year Book Forwarded on Application.
Address: THE SECRETARY.

COLLEGE OF ST. ELIZABETH CONVENT STATION

Near Morristown, N. J.

One hour from New York City.

A Catholic Institution for the Higher Education of Women

COLLEGE

Four years' course leading to the degrees of B. A. and B. S.

SCHOOL OF PEDAGOGY

Required for entrance two years of College work

SCHOOL OF MUSIC. COURSE LEADING TO THE DEGREE OF B. M.

ACADEMY A High School Course of Four Years. Full College Preparatory Work.
GRAMMAR AND PRIMARY DEPARTMENTS SEPARATE

REGISTERED

By the New Jersey State Board of Education and the University of the State of New York

Apply for Year Book to The Secretary

MT. ST. JOSEPH ON THE WISSAHICKON

For illustrated catalogue address MOTHER

A CATHOLIC COLLEGE FOR WOMEN situated in the romantic Valley of the Wissahickon. Degrees conferred. Also Academic, Commercial, Intermediate and Elementary Departments. Very special advantages in Music and Art. The piano student possesses superior opportunities in the use of the Virgil Clavier Method pursued throughout the course. The Art Studio is admirably equipped, and every attention is given to the study of Art, both in theory and practice. Gymnasium perfectly equipped. Outdoor exercise, tennis, basket ball, fencing, etc.

SUPERIOR, Chestnut Hill, Philadelphia, Pa.

HOLY CROSS COLLEGE WORCESTER MASS.

Conducted by the Jesuit Fathers.

Largest Catholic College in America

Extensive grounds and exceedingly healthy location. New buildings, large gymnasium, indoor running track, hot and cold baths, modern conveniences. Easily reached on main line from Albany or New York to Boston via Springfield. Board, tuition, washing and mending, use of gymnasium, library and reading room, physical instruction and medical attendance, $260 a year. Furnished room and attendance extra. Send for catalogue to
PREFECT OF STUDIES.

Seton Hall College

FOUNDED 1856

South Orange, New Jersey

COLLEGE AND HIGH SCHOOL

Bayley Hall for Students of Grammar Course

FOR CATALOGUE ADDRESS
Very Rev. James F. Mooney, D.D., Pres.

The Catholic Mind

The Truth About "The Encyclopaedia Britannica"

BY REV. T. J. CAMPBELL, S.J.

Single numbers 5 cents each, $4.00 per hundred

THE AMERICA PRESS, 59 East 83d Street, New York City

DIRECTORY OF COLLEGES AND ACADEMIES

"MARYMOUNT"

Sacred Heart of Mary. Magnificently situated on the Hudson. Ideal environment for study and recreation. European advantages. 46 minutes from New York. Preparatory and advanced courses. College preparation. Private Rooms. For catalogue, apply to THE REV. MOTHER.

TARRYTOWN-ON-HUDSON, N.Y. High-class Boarding and Day School for Young Ladies. Conducted by the Religious of the Sacred Heart of Mary. Magnificently situated on the Hudson. Ideal environment for study and recreation. European advantages. 46 minutes from New York. Preparatory and advanced courses. College preparation. Private Rooms. For catalogue, apply to THE REV. MOTHER.

Advantages: Winter in sunny Italy, summer in Switzerland, Germany and England

Stella Viae ROME

Finishing School for Girls
For Prospectus apply to the
Reverend Mother, Stella Viae College,
271, Via Nomentana, Rome, Italy

Lessons from the best Masters in Music and Art.
Lectures in Italian, French, German, Spanish and English by University Professors and others.
Special private and conversational lessons.
Chaperonage to Concerts; frequent visits to Basilicas, Art Galleries, Museums and the splendid ruins of Rome and its environs.
If desired, tours to Naples, Florence, Milan and Venice.
Atmosphere and comforts of a cultured and Christian home, with the devoted care of Nuns speaking one's own tongue.

Pleasant intercourse with foreign pupils of good social standing

The Winona Seminary, Winona, Minnesota

CATHOLIC COLLEGE FOR WOMEN
Faculty of Specialists. Separate college residence. Confers degrees B.A., B.S. and Litt. B.
Full college preparatory courses—certificates accepted by all leading universities. Secretarial course Conservatory of Music confers degree of B. Mus.—visiting director, Emil Liebling. Departments of Art, Household Economics, Dramatic Expression. Private Rooms. Moderate Prices. Splendid Gym nasium. Extensive Campus. Students from thirteen States. Direct lines of railway from Chicago Milwaukee, St. Paul, St. Louis.
Earnest, capable young women who have a purpose in study are solicited.
WRITE FOR CATALOGUE . . . . . DEPARTMENT BULLETIN

The Time To Advertise Is
ALL THE TIME
An Opportunity for Schools and Colleges
ADVERTISE HERE

For advertising rates, address "MANAGER"
AMERICA, a Catholic Review of the Week
59 East 83d Street, New York City

St. Mary's College

St. Marys, Kansas

BOARDING COLLEGE
Under the Jesuit Fathers

Two Courses of Study:
Classical and Commercial

For Catalogue, send to
REV. ALOYSIUS A. BRENN, S.J., President

Founded 1830

Chartered 1836

SPRING HILL COLLEGE

Spring Hill, Mobile Co., Ala.

Climate—Most Agreeable.

Conveniences—Most Modern.

Curriculum—Most Thorough

Write for Catalogue to

F. X. Twellmeyer, S.J., President.

MARY ALOYSIA HARDEY

RELIGIOUS OF THE SACRED HEART

1809-1886

WITH AN INTRODUCTION BY THE REV. THOMAS J. CAMPBELL, S.J.

440 Pages 16 Illustrations With Index

THE LIFE STORY OF A REMARKABLE WOMAN

PRICE TWO DOLLARS

By Mail 20 cents extra

THE AMERICA PRESS 59 EAST 83d STREET
NEW YORK CITY

HELEN AUGUSTA HAYES

VOCAL INSTRUCTOR

64 East 34th Street
NEW YORK CITY

Academy of St. Joseph

In-the-Pines

BRENTWOOD, N. Y.

A Boarding School for Young Ladies,

Affiliated with the State University

PROSPECTUS EXPLAINS THE TERMS, ETC.

The Only True American School System

Rev. THOMAS J. CAMPBELL, S.J.

PAMPHLET 24 PAGES

5 Cents per Copy. $2.50 Per Hundred

THE AMERICA PRESS 59 East 83d Street
NEW YORK

HOLY ANGELS

Conducted by School Sisters of Notre Dame

Location beautiful, healthy and convenient.
New Buildings, large gymnasium.

DEPARTMENTS: Academic, course of four years; Commercial, course of two years.
Grammar and Primary Departments separate.
Special advantages in Music and Art.

FOR YEAR BOOK ADDRESS SECRETARY

Convent of the Holy Child

SHARON HILL, DELAWARE COUNTY, PA.
15 Minutes from Philadelphia

ACADEMY FOR YOUNG LADIES

Highest English Course. French, Drawing,
Music by Certified Teachers. Preparation for foreign travel. As the numbers are limited, special care can be given to the formation of character and training of each child.
Address Mother Superior

IMMACULATA SEMINARY

Mount Marian, Washington, D. C.

Select School for Girls. Situated in the Suburbs

Classical, Literary and Special Courses.

Two-Year Course for High School Graduates.

Music and Art. Abundant outdoor exercise.

Sightseeing with experienced Chaperons.

For Year Book address, Sister Secretary

ST. MARY-OF-THE-WOODS COLLEGE

For Young Women. 71st Year
4 Years. Degrees, B.A., B.S., Ph.D.

Academic—College Preparatory—and
Grammar Departments. Elective
Courses. Conservatory of Music, Vocal and Instrumental. Art Studios.
Natorium, Gymnasium, Bowling,
etc. Out-of-Door Sports, Horseback Riding, Boating, Archery,
Tennis. For Bulletins, Address,
Sister Secretary, Box
70, St. Mary-of-the-Woods,
Vigo County, Indiana.

HAS NO SUBSTITUTE

ROYAL

BAKING POWDER

Absolutely Pure
The only baking powder
made from Royal Grape
Cream of Tartar
NO ALUM, NO LIME PHOSPHATE

Get Exhilaration and Energy From Your Bath

BY USING

HAND SAPOLIO

It cleanses and refreshes the skin, lets the pores breathe, removes dead cuticle and stimulates circulation.

All Grocers and Druggists

Pioneer Priests of North America

By Rev. T. J. CAMPBELL, S. J.

VOLUME I

Among the Iroquois

AN INTERESTING STORY OF THE MISSIONARIES AMONG THE IROQUOIS.

333 Pages

27 Illustrations

Price $1.60 By Mail
20c extra

VOLUME II

Among the Hurons

TELLS THE HEROIC STORY OF DE BRÉBEUF AND HIS ASSOCIATES.

480 Pages

24 Illustrations

Price $2.00 By Mail
20c extra

THE AMERICA PRESS

59 East 83rd Street

New York City

Interlocking Rubber Tiling

3-8 INCH THICK

Noiseless Sanitary Indestructible

FOR

Aisles, Sanctuary, Vestibule ETC.

Special Ecclesiastical Designs

Send for Beautiful Illustrated Catalogue "A"

The Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co.

Headquarters Tiling Department

64th STREET AND BROADWAY, NEW YORK CITY

AMERICA

A CATHOLIC REVIEW OF THE WEEK

Vol. VI, No. 4

(Price 10 Cents)

NOVEMBER 4, 1911

($3.00 a year)

Whole No. 134

CHRONICLE

New Cardinals—To Dissolve Steel Trust—Roosevelt Was Misled—Steel Trust Issues Statement—Pensions—Mexico—Canada—Great Britain—Ireland—China—Italy—France—Belgium—Spain—Portugal—Germany—Austria. 73-76

TIONS OF THE DAY

The New Cardinals—The Plays of the "Irish" Players—Religion and the Socialist Platform—With Workers for Boys in Their Teens—Turkey's Domestic Dangers ..... 77-83

CORRESPONDENCE

War and Cholera—Lourdes and Its Spiritual Influences ..... 83-85

EDITORIAL

The "Encyclopædia" and "The Tablet"—The Cruel Sex—Do "The Nicest Women" Go?—Careless Editing—A Converted Critic—Spain in Morocco—Protestant Dormitories for Catholic Filipinos—Purveyors of Historical Scandals ..... 86-89

LITERATURE

Ireland Under the Normans—Across China on Foot—Lilies—The Dixie Book of Days—Right and Might—The Louvain American College—Animal Secrets Told; A Book of "Whys"—La Vida Espiritual Reducida á Tres Principios Fundamentales—Stoff und Methode der Lebenskunde für Schulentlassene—Christian Mysteries, or Discourses for All the Great Feasts of the Year—El Catecismo Mayor de S. S. el Papa Pio X explicado al Pueblo—Notes—Books Received ..... 89-93

EDUCATION

Movement Against High School Fraternities—Success of the Schools of the Sisters of Providence in the Middle West—Report of the Superintendent of Schools in the Diocese of Newark ..... 93-94

ECONOMICS

Probable Reaction in the Canadian Boom.... 94

PULPIT, PRESS AND PLATFORM

Heretics Punishing Heresy—Anti-Catholic Violence of Portuguese Revolutionist Governor of Goa ..... 95

ECCLESIASTICAL NEWS

Catholic Foreign Missionary Seminary of America Established—Statistics of Methodism—Golden Jubilee of Beaumont College..... 95-96

OBITUARY

Right Rev. Peter Verdaguer—Rear Admiral J. H. Sands ..... 96

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

St. Francis Mission Burned—Anti-Socialist Propaganda ..... 96

CHRONICLE

New Cardinals.—It was officially reported in Washington on October 30 that the Holy Father would hold a Consistory, on November 27, and elevate the following to the Sacred College:

Mgr. J. M. Cos y Macho, Archbishop of Valladolid.
Mgr. Diomedea Falconio, Apostolic Delegate at Washington.

Mgr. A. Vico, Papal Nuncio at Madrid.

Mgr. G. Granito di Belmonte Pignatelli.

The Most Rev. John M. Farley, Archbishop of New York.

The Most Rev. Francis Bourne, Archbishop of Westminster.

The Most Rev. Francis S. Bauer, Archbishop of Olmütz.

Mgr. L. Amette, Archbishop of Paris.

The Most Rev. William H. O'Connell, Archbishop of Boston.

Mgr. F. V. Dubillard, Archbishop of Chambéry.

The Most Rev. Franz X. Nagl, Archbishop of Vienna.

Mgr. De Cabrières, Bishop of Montpellier, France.

Mgr. Bisleti, Papal Major Domo.

Mgr. Lugari, Assessor of the Holy Office.

Mgr. Pompili, Secretary of the Congregation of the Council.

Father Billot, of the Society of Jesus.

Father Van Rossum, Redemptorist.

To Dissolve Steel Trust.—The Government's long-planned suit to dissolve the Steel Trust was begun on October 26 in the United States Circuit Court at Trenton. The Government asks not only the dissolution of the United States Steel Corporation, but also the dissolution of all constituent or subsidiary companies which are alleged to have combined in violation of the Sherman law to "maintain, or attempt to maintain, a monopoly of the steel business." There are thirty-six subsidiary companies named as defendants. Among those named individually as defendants are J. Pierpont Morgan, John D. Rockefeller, Andrew Carnegie and Charles M. Schwab. Sensational allegations are plentiful in the Government's petition, which is an equity proceeding, praying for injunctions to estop continuance of the alleged monopoly and such other relief as the court may grant.

Roosevelt Was Misled.—The Steel Corporation's acquisition of the Tennessee Coal and Iron Company during the panic of 1907 is declared illegal and scathingly criticized. The petition declares that E. H. Gary and Henry C. Frick misled President Roosevelt when they told him that "but little benefit would come to the Steel Corporation from the purchase." "It is certain that the corporation availed itself of the embarrassment of Moore and Schley (New York brokers, who had large holdings of Tennessee stock) at a most critical period, and . . . the threatening of a general financial calamity, to acquire control of a competitor taking on a formidable aspect. The corporation thus . . . unlawfully acquired a power which is a menace to the welfare of the country and should be destroyed."

Steel Trust Issues Statement.—E. H. Gary, chairman of the United States Steel Corporation, issued a statement to the public on the suit brought by the Government. The statement was mild in its general tenor and reaffirmed the position taken a month ago by Mr. Morgan, that the corporation was innocent of monopolistic purposes, and had not violated any provision of the Sherman law. Any attempt to misrepresent the facts in the Tennessee Coal and Iron Company purchase to President Roosevelt was denied, and the possible disastrous effect of the suit on the numerous stockholders and employees of the corporation was deplored. According to Mr. Gary, "it is a time for everyone to keep cool, with a disposition to patiently await results, knowing that in the end justice will be done to all interests."

Pensions.—The Report of the Commissioner of Pensions for the fiscal year 1910-11 shows a net loss in pensioners of nearly 30,000 and a shrinkage of the roll to 892,098, the smallest total since 1891-92. In 1888-89 the roll of pensioners was 489,000, increasing to 946,000 ten years later, and passing the 1,000,000 mark in 1901-02. For the following seven years this number was nearly stationary, and is now sharply declining. The loss in 1909-10 was 25,000, and the loss from now on will probably exceed 30,000. From 1890 to 1908 the country's annual outlay rose from $88,000,000 to $161,000,000. Private pension bills have of late been adding to the general expenditures, so that with a shrinkage of 54,000 in the roll since 1908-09, the decrease in the last two years has been less than $5,000,000. There will be a much greater decrease in the next few years if the present system is left undisturbed.

Mexico.—Madero has given out his cabinet as follows: Foreign affairs, Manuel Calero, a rabid anti-Catholic; Interior, José María Pino Suárez, the vice-president elect; war, General González Salas; treasury, Ernesto Madero; communications and public works, Manuel Bonilla; justice, José Vásquez Tagle; development, colonization and industry, Rafael Hernández; public instruction, Miguel Díaz Lombardo.

Canada.—The efforts made to settle the coal strike in Alberta and Eastern British Columbia before winter sets in have succeeded. Work will be resumed by 7,000 men. The head of the Western Miners' Federation came from the United States lately to bring about, it is said, an agreement.—A few weeks ago the magistrate of St. Norbert, Manitoba, fined the school trustees for not providing an efficient teacher to carry on the school work in French for half the school time. The matter was appealed, and the action of the lower court was sustained. The bitterness of a certain part of the community against the bi-lingual schools is shown by the fact that a great Winnipeg newspaper, usually most courteous in its tone, spoke of four priests, who attended the appeal as "individuals in frocks." The opponents of bi-lingual schools propose to carry this case to England if necessary, but they will probably think better of it. It must be remembered that the Manitoba school law is a compromise. If the English element dislike it, so also does the French. Moreover, the French in Manitoba have reason on their side. They claim a constitutional right to separate schools, which has been violated, and they are compelled to put up with bi-lingual schools. If the English do not wish their children to learn French the solution is to return to the separate school system, not to deprive the French of the last remnant of their rights in the matter of their language.

Great Britain.—There has been a reorganization of the Cabinet. The principal change which has set the world wondering, is the exchanging of offices by Messrs. McKenna and Churchill, the former becoming Home Secretary, and the latter First Lord of the Admiralty. This is a descent in Cabinet rank for Churchill. We probably shall not learn the meaning of the change until the opening of Parliament.—The followers of Lord Halsbury in resisting the Parliament Bill have formed a club named after their leader. They profess perfect loyalty to Balfour and Lord Lansdowne, but it is evidently their aim to replace these as chiefs of the Unionists by men ready for a more vigorous policy.—The Railway Commission has issued its report. It recommends the continuation of conciliation boards and the maintenance of existing agreements until January 1, 1912. It refuses to recommend recognition of the unions in disputes between the companies and their men, and requires that strikers be restrained from intimidating men who wish to work. As the Unions will not allow their members to accept such terms, the whole question is where it was before the strikes of last summer.—Uneasiness in many trades, and especially among the coal miners, is becoming very marked.—The fourth cruiser squadron has been ordered to Halifax to supply members for the court-martial to investigate the stranding of the Niobe.—The Labor Governments in Australia are facing a serious difficulty. For years past the Unions have put every difficulty possible in the way of the immigration of skilled workmen. The result is such a deficiency of these as hampers trade. A royal commission reports the need of 3,247 artisans in Sydney alone. The Government will probably take action; but in doing so it will offend its supporters, the Unions.

Ireland.—Arising from the discussion at the recent Conference of the Catholic Truth Society, following an address by Canon Barry on immoral British newspapers and the evil effects of their dissemination in Ireland, practical steps are being taken towards effectively excluding them. With the warm approval of Bishop O'Dwyer, a laymen's Vigilance Committee has been formed in Limerick under the chairmanship of Rev. J. A. O'Connor, Adm., to suppress such publications in that city. As a result twenty-two of the city news agents have pledged themselves to sell no paper which the Committee pronounces objectionable. The newsboys have also been organized for the same purpose, and on Sunday, October 15, but one newsboy out of over seventy carried the objectionable cross-channel prints, and he was quickly relieved of his burden, which was cast into the Shannon. The extent to which the evil prevailed can be gathered from the fact that one news agent returned unopened fifty dozen copies of one British Sunday paper. The Committee is further engaged in excluding indecent postcards, low amusements and immoral literature of all kinds, and is taking measures to have the objectionable English papers replaced by others which are Catholic and national. With the aid of the local press, the clergy and the leading laity, Limerick is reported to have already stamped out the evil. Similar organizations are being established in Dublin and other centres, which have given a new significance to the watchword they have adopted: "Remember Limerick."—It is reported that Lord Clanrickarde, who is known as the extreme type of rack-renting and absentee landlord, has at length consented to sell his Galway estate of 20,000 acres to the Congested Districts Board. This will end the bitterest chapter in Irish landlordism.

China.—The rebellion against the Manchu dynasty has been spreading rapidly. Though all lines are cut, news came by wireless to Shanghai that Sian, a government stronghold, had surrendered to the revolutionists without a blow, and two easterly towns are reported taken after a short fight. These conquests were followed by that of two southern capitals, giving the rebels control of four provinces. Chang-chou, an important railway centre, has also yielded to the enemies of the government. This last victory cuts off from Peking the imperial troops gathered round Hankow. The entire Yangste region and most of southern China is in sympathy with the revolution. Meanwhile the National Assembly met at Peking and demanded the election of a parliament with full powers, that no severe measures be taken against the rebels, that certain officials be restored to office, and that objectionable ministers and viceroys be cashiered. Lo Sheng, the minister of posts and communications, considered the strongest member of the cabinet, but unpopular, owing to his railroad policy, was dismissed, and the government granted other demands of the Assembly. Feng-sen, a Tartar general, was killed with a bomb on his arrival at Canton, and several large detachments of imperial troops are said to have killed their commanders and gone over to the enemy. Foreigners in the revolted provinces seem to have little to fear, for the revolutionists are careful to see that Western nations shall have no grievance against them. Berlin and Washington think there is no need of intervention, though Americans in China have asked our consul-general for the protection of more gunboats, as there is a fear that the rebels will not be able to control the action of mobs. The imperial government is still seeking in vain a large foreign loan, but the revolutionists seem to have no trouble in obtaining financial aid. Later advices report that Yuan Shih Kai, the dynasty's most capable general, has taken supreme command of the land and sea forces, that Hankow was retaken by an imperialist force, and that the government has offered a constitution, which will probably result in establishing peace.

Italy.—On October 27 five hundred Turks and a number of Arabs made an attack on the Italians, whom they fought for three hours. They were repulsed with great loss. An Italian officer in an aeroplane was shot at by the Turks, and the wings of the machine were hit by the bullets. The whole population of Arabs, even those of the oases, are said to be heavily armed and bent on fighting. The first outbreak on October 23 was vigorously put down, and the chiefs are reported to have been awed by the fierce reprisals of the Italians.—As soon as the invaders are in control of the caravan routes to the interior, as well as of the coasts of Tripoli and Cyrene, it is the intention of the Italian Government to proclaim the end of Ottoman domination, and to treat all the Turks under arms as rebels. The limits of the territory will also be announced as extending east as far as Egypt, west as far as Tunis, at least along the sea-coast, and south down to the zones of British and French influence. Turkish auxiliaries were reported to have crossed over from Tunis to assail the Italians, but the authorities hastened to publish an official denial. The French are credited with keeping a watch on the borders to prevent any transportation of troops or ammunition.—A correspondent of the London Times says that the Tripoli fort made an extraordinary resistance to the Italian projectiles. The defenders had only three obsolete Krupp guns in the bastions; none of which were dismantled. An official statement issued October 28, says that in the battle of October 26, there were 12,000 Turks and that they lost 2,000 killed and 4,000 wounded, but the opinion seems to be largely held that the Government has exaggerated the losses of the enemy and minimized those of the Italian troops. A naval attack on other Turkish possessions in the Ægean was prevented by a protest from the Powers, who insist upon the war being confined to Tripoli. Cyrenaica has been declared annexed, but the act has been criticized as being inopportune—Italy still being on the defensive. The wholesale shooting of Arab prisoners has been loudly condemned and is regarded also as impolitic, as it will have the effect of uniting the Arabs against the Italians. Mountain batteries have arrived, which would seem to forebode an advance into the interior. There are already 50,000 troops in Tripoli, but the force is deemed insufficient. Meantime the meeting of Parliament has been deferred, as Giolitti fears the Socialist opposition to the war.

France.—On October 26, La Justice, the sister ship of the unfortunate La Liberté, was found to be on fire, the sparks falling in dangerous proximity to the powder magazines, which were immediately flooded.—The railroads of France are said to be in a sad state of disorganization.—The high prices of food show no signs of a change.—A statue of Servetus, whom Calvin burned at the stake in Geneva, October 27, 1553, was unveiled at Vienne, in Dauphiné, on October 15. Vienne was the place of his residence. He was the medical attendant of the archbishop. The ceremony had no Catholic significance. On the contrary, Deputy Buisson described him in one of the speeches delivered on the occasion as the man who "maintained with sublime simplicity against the Pope of Rome and the Pope of Geneva the right of free thought, and the right to be the servant of conscience and reason alone."

Belgium.—The communal elections have not brought the comfort that outsiders expected. The Socialist-Liberal gains were considerable. In Brussels the vote was only 13,000 Catholics, while the opposition polled 25,000, though this meant a gain of 3,000 for the defeated party. In the suburbs of the Capital there were other crushing defeats. The small towns and country districts, as at Hal, Nivelles, Waterloo, Diest, etc., told a somewhat different story. It is saddening to chronicle the fact that Louvain, the city of the great Catholic university, overcame the ticket on which the name of the illustrious Schollaert was inscribed. Antwerp went against the Catholics, and so did Malines, Mons, and likewise Ghent, but victory in the last-mentioned place would have been impossible. The Bien Public, however, announces that the efforts of the Fusionists have failed miserably. Such also is the tone of the XX Siècle. The Flemish country remained solid, and defeats elsewhere have been offset by brilliant victories.

Spain.—The lower House of the Cortes has received in all one hundred and forty-two petitions for the institution of criminal proceedings against some of its members. Among the charges are swindling, misappropriation of funds, falsifying documents, and counterfeiting trademarks.—The king's second son, Prince Jaime, who was believed to be deaf and dumb, has been so successfully treated by specialists in Switzerland that, as they confidently assert, he will be able to speak intelligibly and to hear.

Portugal.—Although the administration affects to make light of the royalist attempt at a counterrevolution, it was decided to ask of the Congress the proclamation of martial law. In the town of Almada a mob broke into the church, destroyed the altars and the statues of the saints, and made off with whatever money and jewels they could find. There are 6,700 prisoners in Lisbon, where they are crowded into jails and fortresses. The brutality with which they were conducted through the streets called forth angry protests from foreigners.—Owing presumably to the active censorship of the Government, our sources of direct information from Portugal have failed us; but the abuses under the republic must be extreme, for they are said to be greater than under the monarchy.

Germany.—The new Zeppelin IX, intended for the German army, is said to be at present the fleetest of these greyhounds of the air. The rapid succession of world records achieved by the airships of the Zeppelin type has completely reversed the opinion of experts in their regard. It has now been found that the strong skeleton frame of these crafts enables them to stem the force of the wind as no lighter structure can, and to leave them unequalled for speed. This result is hailed with special satisfaction, since these ships are said to offer the best safety; to afford the greatest utility, carrying with the utmost ease their heavy burdens of armament and men; and to make possible the most extended journeys. The new Zeppelin IX is to be stationed at Cologne as a "military cruiser." In the twenty-four-hour trial flight, in which it was directed by Count Zeppelin in person and carried the entire military commission, it recorded a maximum speed of twenty-one meters a second, or seventy-five kilometers an hour.—The official reception of the American ambassador, John G. A. Leishman, by the Emperor, and later by the Empress, in their apartments in Berlin, took place on October 24. They had come from Potsdam for the special purpose of granting this audience.—The election for members of the Reichstag is to take place January 12. The present session will probably continue until the end of November. Several important questions of social reform are to be under consideration, besides the international issues.

Austria.—On October 21 took place the marriage of the Austrian heir apparent, Karl Franz Josef, with the Princess Zita of Parma. The Holy Father had sent a message written in his own hand and conveying his blessing. This document, together with a valuable gift from the Vatican, was entrusted to a special embassy whose head was the papal majordomo, Mgr. Bisleti, who likewise was the celebrant at the marriage ceremony.—The attempted assassination of the Minister of Justice has had no intimidating effect upon the Austrian government officials. By October 12 sixty-six of the rioters had already received sentence of from five to ten months imprisonment. Great indignation is expressed against the Socialist leaders. It is pointed out by the press that although they may not have desired what has actually taken place, yet the offenders had merely taken them at their word. Even papers which had been inclined to favor them insist that it is useless to deny the connection between the threats which are daily thrown out and the execution of them by irresponsible individuals.

QUESTIONS OF THE DAY

The New Cardinals

The vast multitudes who throng the great cathedral of St. Patrick in New York when the solemn ceremonies of the Church invest the mysteries of the Mass with more than usual splendor, or who kneel at its altars during the quiet hours of the day in prayer and adoration, or who form a part of the never-ending procession that reverently wends its way at all times down the aisles to view the beauties of the sacred edifice, have for many years past seen suspended high above the sanctuary the red hat that once rested upon the head of the first cardinal whom we ever saw in this country. Naturally the question arises to every one's lips: When will it descend upon one of his equally distinguished successors? The answer was flashed across the ocean on Sunday last: the present beloved incumbent of the See is henceforth to be known as His Eminence John Cardinal Farley. The announcement has sent a thrill of pleasure through the great metropolis, with which he has been so long identified, and which has always regarded him with the sincerest veneration and affection. Every parish in the diocese will consider itself as participating in this honor bestowed by the greatest power in the whole wide world on the one whose paternal solicitude has been exerted continually in its behalf, no matter how remote and inconspicuous it may have happened to be. His great army of devoted priests, who have always looked to him for counsel, guidance and comfort in their difficulties and trials, hail the appointment with unalloyed delight. The members of religious communities, who have always found in him a father and a friend, will in the seclusion of their cloisters rejoice in it, and pour forth from their sanctuaries most fervent prayers for his happiness and welfare. Fordham University, his Alma Mater, will, no doubt, make it an occasion of great rejoicings; and may we not say our own AMERICA, in whose progress and success he has ever been most profoundly and substantially interested, and to which only a few days before the announcement of this new glory which has been added to his already distinguished career, he sent his paternal benediction, has more reason than ever to congratulate itself. When Pius X cast his eyes upon the world for those he would honor, he selected the illustrious Archbishop of New York, who step by step from the time he was Secretary of the first Cardinal of the United States, and through the successive degrees of Bishop and Archbishop, has been in the designs of God singularly well prepared for this new and exalted office. The most important See in the Western World is fittingly crowned by this recognition on the part of the Holy See of the ability and worth of its Chief Pastor.

Boston, too, shares in the jubilation. It sees its comparatively youthful and but recently enthroned Archbishop invested with the scarlet robes of a Prince of the Church. The virile, impressive and irresistible eloquence which has always characterized his utterances in the pulpit, the remarkably clear, cogent, forcible, learned and convincing argumentative power, and the unusual literary ability which is always so strikingly manifest in his writings, as well as the herculean energy which has been so conspicuous in his administration, whether in the Holy City, or in distant Japan, or his native country, have combined to win him this new and supreme honor. Boston College, of which he is an alumnus, and under whose impulse its aspirations for a wider influence can now more surely and easily be realized, will be particularly gratified at this appointment; and the priests and people of New England will see the glory of it reflected upon themselves by the selection of one whose personal merits and ability strengthen and adorn the great Archdiocese of the northernmost section of the Union. To him, too, the editors of this publication send their most cordial greeting, for he has been the staunchest of friends from the very beginning of their work.

Last in the line, as becomes one whose dignity is greatest, is the beloved Apostolic Delegate, Mgr. Diomede Falconio, whose administration of his exalted and difficult office has been invariably marked by sweetness, gentleness, moderation, but withal by such wisdom, firmness and strength that his benignant government, which was constantly confronted by a thousand difficulties, never crushed or shattered, but always built up, solidified and consolidated for the glory of God the many conflicting and clashing interests that met for adjudication and adjustment before his tribunal. Congratulations on his appointment come not from one diocese alone, but from every part of the country; from the Atlantic to the Pacific, from the Great Lakes to the Gulf. The illustrious Religious Order to which he belongs and which he has always adorned, sees in him one more of that great army of its sons upon whom the Church has conferred its highest honors. We ourselves shall never forget the unvarying kindness which he always manifested in the work in which we are engaged and which he always scrutinized with more than parental concern. To him also, on this great occasion, we send our respectful and affectionate greeting.

For the others that fill up this remarkably long list of men chosen simultaneously for the most splendid honors of the Church the same joyful salutation arises from all parts of the world. For though the cities which they have illustrated by their lives may be geographically remote, they meet with all the children of Christ in the warm and throbbing heart of the Church. The diversity of races and nations which they represent is a most vivid illustration of that universality and unity of the Kingdom which Christ has established, and is at the same time a most sublime exercise of that ever-young and undying power with which the Supreme Leader in God's army is invested. While the world lies in ruins round him and religion is at its lowest ebb in nations that once gloried in it as their most precious inheritance, he rises undisturbed in the midst of the almost universal disaster and summons to his side new champions to fight with him in the forefront of the battle, whose purpose is to win the world back again to Christ.

THE EDITOR.

The Plays of the "Irish" Players

Wonderful are the uses of advertisement. It has often coined patent nostrums and "yellow" literary trash into plenteous gold, and of late, manipulated by experienced hands, it has so flooded magazines and journals with fulsome eulogies of the "Irish Players" as almost to convince the public that the dramatic productions of Yeats, Synge and Co. are faithful and artistic portraits of Irish life. The strident chorus silenced for a time the organs of Irish-American and Catholic thought, and in some cases evoked an echo. The editors, like the patriots of the Boyle O'Reilly Club who fêted him in Boston, took Mr. Yeats at his own none too modest estimation. The United Irish Societies of this city denounced the "Playboy," and an advanced Gaelic organ exposed its barbarities, but gave a clean bill of health to Mr. Yeats and the rest of his program. Doubtless they also had not read the plays they approved. Well, we have read them. We found several among them more vile, more false, and far more dangerous than "The Playboy," the "bestial depravity" of which carries its own condemnation; and we deliberately pronounce them the most malignant travesty of Irish character and of all that is sacred in Catholic life that has come out of Ireland. The details, which are even more shocking than those of "The Playboy," are too indecent for citation, but the persistent mendacity of the Yeats press agency's clever conspiracy of puff makes it needful to give our readers some notion of their character.

Of Synge's plays only "Riders to the Sea," an un-Irish adaptation to Connacht fishermen of Loti's "Pêcheurs d'Islande," is fit for a decent audience. None but the most rabidly anti-Catholic, priest-hating bigots could enjoy "The Tinkers' Wedding." The plot, which involves an Irish priest in companionship with the most degraded pagans and hinges on his love of gain, may not be even outlined by a self-respecting pen. The open lewdness and foul suggestiveness of the language is so revolting, the picture of the Irish priesthood, drawn by this parson's son, is so vile and insulting, and the mockery of the Mass and sacraments so blasphemous, that it is unthinkable how any man of healthy mind could father it or expect an audience to welcome it. This is the "typical Irish play" which the "Irish Players" have presented to a Boston audience.

"The Shadow of the Glen" has four characters, all Catholic peasants, and the theme is marital infidelity. Virtue and religion and respect for the marriage bond are unknown to them; and their morals, it is implied, are typical of Glenmalure, one of the most Catholic districts in Ireland. It was in that neighborhood that Sir Samuel Ferguson found the original of "The Pretty Girl of Lough Dan," and it was there Synge says he found, while listening to servants' talk through a chink in the floor, the material for his "Playboy." A comparison of Ferguson's poem with the "comedies" thus garnered will reveal the difference between an Irish Protestant gentleman of cleanly mind and an Irish Protestant who is devoid of it.

The numerous Catholic peasants in "The Well of the Saint" are superstitious, lustful, uncharitable and irreverent, and the effect of a miracle is to make them more so. Again a priest is the central character, this time a miracle-working "Saint," and rude fun and blasphemy are the accompaniments of his miracle. As in "The Tinkers' Wedding," the priest's language is as uneducated as his sentiments are vulgar, and this is also characteristic of Yeats' extensive clerical gallery. From none of these plays of Synge is it possible to gather that the Irish Catholic peasantry have chastity, charity or reverence, or that the Irish priest is other than a grasping, domineering boor. This is the paragon whom W. B. Yeats pronounces the master dramatist who knew the mind of the Irish people better than any man.

The twain are kindred spirits; but in vileness of caricature and bitterness of anti-Catholic animus, even Synge must yield to Yeats. He also goes to tinkers for his types; and whereas Synge is content with three, and one priest, Yeats' "Where there is Nothing," glorifies a bevy of unbelieving tinkers and presents in contrast a dozen vulgar-spoken monks, who utter snatches of Latin in peasant brogue, while dancing frantically around the altar of God! A Catholic gentleman, tiring of Christian society, joins the tinkers and lives after their fashion; then suddenly becoming a monk, a priest, and wonder-working preacher, he proclaims the new Ibsenistic evangel that is to renovate humanity: "Law was the first sin: We must put out Laws as I put out this candle." Similarly he "puts out" churches, order and all morality. Throwing off his habit, "the rags and tatters of the world," he finally reverts to the tinkers' camp, "where there is nothing"—of law, order or religion—and, we are told, "he'll be made a saint some day."

The play is a dramatic modernization of Yeats' "Crucifixion of the Outcast," wherein Irish monks, the most cruel, repulsive and thoroughly un-Christian clerics we have adventured on in literature, crucify, and gloat over on his cross, a gleeman or bard who reproaches them for their dirt and inhospitality. Its anti-Catholic animus can best be gathered by those who know, as Yeats must know, that the Irish Church saved the bards when the State had determined to suppress them, and that the Elizabethan government, advised by Spencer, bent all its energies to "extirp" the bardic order as the stoutest supporters of Ireland's Faith and nationhood.

Yeats is more dangerous than Synge, not merely because "the rapt gaze and ethereal contemplation of this mystic minor poet are quite compatible with sound commercial principles," by which he has organized an industrious coterie of magazine and journalistic trumpeters; he has another precious string to his bow. When all else fails he can fall back on "Cathleen Ni Houlihan" and a few other mystical incarnations of patriotic greenery. But of "Cathleen Ni Houlihan" the apologue is "Countess Kathleen," who finds salvation by selling her soul to the devil to keep her people from starvation, thus illustrating how Ireland may attain prosperity by sacrificing her Catholic ideals. What matter that, as a patriotic Irish Protestant like Mr. Gwynn, M. P., could realize, "no normal Irishman would have expected an Irish audience to regard with equanimity an Irish peasant kicking about, no matter in what extremity, an image of the Virgin." Christ, Virgin, everything must be kicked down until we get to "Where there is Nothing," or to the paganism that prevailed before everything was spoiled by St. Patrick.

We read in the Boston Transcript and the Boston correspondence of the New York Times that there were hisses at "the naïve blasphemies" of the "Irish Players," and that "squalls and titters and loud guffaws" greeted the tragedies, while the comedies were heard in silence dour. The Boston Post speaks of one set as brutal and the other as inane. Those who have read our estimate—and they can verify it abundantly in the works of Yeats and Synge—will accept the appraisal of a cultured Boston auditor:

"Until Saturday I saw not the 'new art.' Then I beheld three specimens of the materials with which the new national structures are to be builded. I examined them. They were an abomination. They outraged every feeling of the Irish heart. I know almost every hill and glen in Ireland and the people who dwell therein. For thirty-five years I have seen almost every so-called Irish play, from the absurdly romantic to the burlesque in which the green whiskered baboon played his antics. But I never saw anything so vulgar, vile, and unnatural, so calculated to calumniate, degrade and defame a people and all they hold sacred and dear as the plays of the so-called Irish Players. Nothing but a hell-inspired ingenuity and a satanic hatred of the Irish people and their religion could suggest, construct and influence the production of such plays. On God's earth the beastly creatures of the plays never existed."

Ireland gave up her shadowy Tirnanoge for the Land of Eternal Youth promised her by St. Patrick, but Mr. Yeats would have her go back to those days "when," as he conceives it, "she was a Holy Land, before she gave her heart to Greece and Rome and Judea"; and he would find a road for her through his "tinkers," who, he falsely asserts, never accepted Christianity. He gave new expression to this purpose on October 12, when he told the students of Bryn Mawr that he wanted "to damn into eternal oblivion the virtuous colleen and gossoon of Dion Boucicault," and make "the Irish of Ireland the simple, superstitious, red-tongued stuff that Synge found in the Arran isles." Ireland would then truly be his "Land of Heart's Desire," in which the priest, Cross in hand, is overcome by the triumphant demon who spirits away defiantly before the eyes of Christ's minister the souls of his people.

These productions were correctly characterized some years ago as "the decadent commonplace of decadent Bohemias, an odious libel on Ireland which people, press and priesthood join in stigmatizing as intolerable to patriotism and religion alike." It was deemed particularly insufferable that Irish Protestants, alien by blood and tradition, should dare again to violate Catholic sanctuaries and homes, and hold up to ridicule that priesthood which their racial and religious associates had tried in vain to exterminate.

Plays less immoral and offensive have been prohibited in Boston and New York. M. KENNY, S.J.

Religion and the Socialist Platform

In dealing with Catholic workingmen the Socialist agitator has one unfailing argument which is made to do service on all like occasions, and which was prepared explicitly for this very purpose by the Socialist Party "in National Convention assembled at Chicago, May 10, 1908." We refer to the resolution there drawn up, which reads: "The Socialist party is primarily an economic and political movement. It is not concerned with matters of religious belief."

The circumstances attending the adoption of this clause will be the best comment we can make upon it. Though published before, they are not sufficiently known to prevent the deception which is still constantly practised upon unsuspecting victims.

The first recommendation laid before the meeting by the Committee on Platform was differently worded, namely: "That religion be treated as a private matter—a question of individual conscience." At the reading of this Mr. Arthur M. Lewis, Socialist author and lecturer, immediately arose and moved its rejection. "If we must speak," he said, "I propose that we shall go before this country with the truth, and not with a lie." He acknowledged, however, that honesty might not be the best campaign policy, and therefore preferred that nothing be said upon the matter. This was, at least, a negative truthfulness, and would, as one of the speakers later on expressed it, "let sleeping dogs lie."

Mr. Morris Hillquit, one of the most noted of American Socialists, then took the floor and suavely suggested an amendment. It is the clause quoted by us in the first instance as the famous subterfuge of the Socialist agitators. That it was intended for this purpose Hillquit himself declared. Some answer, he argued, must be made ready for the Socialist orators when set upon the soap-box to display their wares. If, then, they suddenly "are asked the question, 'Yes, but won't Socialism destroy religion?' they will answer, 'No, we don't agree on it.' I personally may not be religious, but Socialism has nothing to do with religion."

Ernest Untermann, Socialist translator and author, agreed with the speaker. He believed it was nonsensical to urge men to become atheists before they had become Socialists. His argument was that the former would readily enough follow from the latter. "We must first get these men convinced of the rationality of our economic and political program, and then, after we have made Socialists of them . . . we can talk to them inside of our ranks . . . of the logical consequences of our explanation of society and nature." These consequences, as intimated, are materialism and atheism.

The meaning and purpose of the amendment was becoming more and more clear. Robert Hunter, gentleman Socialist and writer, and Victor Berger likewise approved of it. The latter believed that the American people as a nation are essentially religious, and that Socialism can make little progress if confined to atheists alone. On every hand the Socialist party was being denounced as opposed to religion, and that, therefore, something must be done to show that it is an economic theory which has nothing to do with religion. What he meant is difficult to say, since his own practical idea of a Socialist campaign is to malign the Catholic Church and her representatives, showing thereby that there is one religion at least with which he believes that Socialism has a very great deal to do. That this was likewise the conviction of every single delegate in that assembly we have not the least reason for doubting.

Mr. Van der Porten, more bold and honest than others of the comrades, could not submit to the expressions of faint-heartedness and make-believe to which he had impatiently listened. "As long as we are too cowardly to express what we believe," he exclaimed, "we should be silent entirely." This had been the attitude of Lewis, who did not wish to go before the country with a lie. It may be noticed that these assertions are as strong as any which Catholic writers can possibly use in dealing with the delicate subject of Socialist veracity. Mr. Van der Porten then challenged the assembly: "Is there a man who will dare to say that religion is not a social question?" There was no one to take up the gauntlet. As a social question, moreover, they all knew that religion must be of interest in the most direct way to Socialism, as every Socialist author, wittingly or unwittingly demonstrates that it is. Legislation concerning the Church would be the first enactment of a triumphant Socialism, and Catholicism would be less respected in a Socialist commonwealth—if such a thing were possible—than it is to-day in Portugal.

"Let us say nothing," continued the delegate, "or say the truth. To spread forth to the world that religion is the individual's affair and that religion has no part in the subjection of the human race, we lie when we say it." To show how much this sentiment was appreciated the report here inserts the parenthesis ("great applause").

Several other speakers were heard, and among them Mr. Strickland, a comrade from Indiana, whose argument was no less invincible: "If economic determinism be true, and if the moral and ethical principles of society be based ultimately upon the manner of economic production, how dare you then say that we have nothing to do with religion?" It would be denying even a modicum of intelligence to the delegates present there to intimate that the unquestionable truth of this argument was not perceived by them all; but the intention of a great number was not to pass sentence upon the truth or falsity of the amendment under consideration. They were satisfied to overlook these and restrict themselves to the advisability of inserting it for campaign and propaganda purposes. Yet even with this point alone kept in view by many of the delegates the resolution declaring that the Socialist party "is not concerned with matters of religious belief" was carried by a majority of only one out of a total of 157 votes that were cast.

In the account of the meeting printed by the Chicago Daily Socialist Mr. Hillquit was accredited with having said during the course of the debate that ninety-nine per cent. of the Socialists are atheists or agnostics. When this statement later brought him into straits he simply disavowed it and referred for the correct words to the official report. This reads: "The fact that Comrade Lewis has, in the domain of religion, come to the position of an agnostic and that ninety-nine per cent. of us have landed in the same spot does not make Socialism agnostic."

If out of a hundred Catholics who join the Socialist party ninety-nine finally become agnostics, or virtually so—a fact we are willing to concede to Hillquit and the comrades—there is certainly every reason for saying that Socialism is concerned with religion. It is not, however, as Socialist writers argue, because of any profound science or truth contained in their literature that this is brought about, since in both it is most lamentably deficient. Too often Socialist authors have acquired merely that smattering of learning which prevents them from seeing their own ignorance and gives them a self-assurance which Solomon himself might have envied. "A little learning is a dangerous thing." Unfortunately, it proves itself so both for themselves and for others. The truly great thinkers of the world have all been religious in their beliefs; but this fact Socialists attribute to defective economic conditions or to capitalistic prepossessions.

The true reason for the loss of faith on the part of Catholics who affiliate themselves with Socialism is the fact that they have in that very act disregarded the authority of Christ and the Church by associating themselves with an organization which is begotten and reared in materialism, and which has never cleansed itself of this original sin; an organization whose first principle would demand the injustice of annulling all private right to productive property, and whose entire method of warfare is essentially unchristian, promoting an universal discontent and the hatred of class against class over all the world. Nothing else is wanting now for the Catholics duped into accepting the party principle than the Socialistic explanation of "society and nature," as Untermann has well expressed it, to bring about in them the "logical consequences," agnosticism and atheism. Socialists will see that this explanation, duly seasoned with constant slander against the Church, is thrust at every opportunity upon their new converts.

JOSEPH HUSSLEIN, S.J.

With Workers For Boys in Their Teens

While there is excellent reason for believing that, as a rule, priests can gather boys without the burden of the club, or permanent amusement centre, nobody will deny the necessity of that institution for certain localities. These are districts so wanting in religious feeling as to give very feeble response to priestly endeavor put forth in the usual way. In such places it is clearly a blessing when young people are attracted by a pleasure rendezvous to breathe a wholesome moral atmosphere while receiving the priceless favor of instruction preparatory to the Sacraments.

However the club established, as is supposed, for the benefit of spiritually famished in parts, does not seem to call for clerical superintendence; rather, the choice being possible, it might be placed under lay control. This opinion is presented on the ground that the management of the gathering place creates far less embarrassment for persons given to secular occupations than it does for men who are attached to the altar. At this point let us realize that the burden of the juvenile amusement centre is a heavy one. While the young men's club is generally a disappointment because the young men, led by other preferences, do not care for it, the boys' club—sure to be largely attended—becomes most trying by forcing a ceaseless struggle with the mischief, unruliness, and even the destructive spirit of the youthful element. Hence the person in charge, like the foreman of the workshop, must be constantly on the scene. But such presence is hardly to be hoped for in the American priest, busied, as he is, with ordinary parochial duties at all times, and especially during the very hours chiefly needed for the club. Here the layman is, as a rule, in advantage. He can spend certain evenings or, possibly every evening, with the boys.

It may be thought that the priest safely undertakes the management of affairs when he directs through lay assistants always on the spot, the priest himself appearing at his convenience and occasionally. This plan, however, can hardly be trusted. As results will probably show, the man who, in the last resort, holds the power of life and death in the matter of membership is the only one that the boys will really fear and heed. Accordingly, the reverend head of the movement, despite the fact that he has provided lay assistants, is likely to find himself confined to the rooms as long, practically, as they are open.

The advantage of lay over clerical control is again seen if we consider that in the amusement centre boys will surely take to doings necessitating stricter disciplinary action than the spiritual father can prudently bring to bear on any of his flock. No matter how well the club may be conducted, some of the guests will have tired of it after a while and from then on, like children abusing over-familiar toys, will be far more pleased in upsetting and wrecking things than in putting things to their intended use. If such chaps would only declare their sentiments and quit, all would be well. But unfortunately mischief-making is to them a real delight; so they continue presenting themselves until visited with suspension. Now the enforcement, by the priest, of this necessary penalty, can have the sad effect of alienating not only the offending boys but even their parents. This is a very important matter. That uncontrollable youngsters come to be at odds with a lay manager, has comparatively slight bearing on their spiritual welfare; but that spiritually neglected youngsters should close their club experience with a feeling of animosity towards one of God's ministers is quite another affair.

Foregoing considerations, then, seem to justify the view that the boys' gathering place wherever it may claim a true field at all should be, not a theocracy, but an institution governed by intelligent, warm-hearted, sympathetic persons from the ordinary walks of life. Meanwhile the writer is far from thinking that Catholic beginners in life can ever be brought together under lay auspices without forming a most tempting field for any priest who may be in position to act.

Indeed the ideal club, while governed by laymen, is, seemingly, one in which the juvenile members meet a congenial friend from the sanctuary, whose presence has for sole purpose the direction of all that concerns the good of their souls.

It is cheering to note, in connection with the present subject, the laudable endeavor through the agency of boys' clubs that is being displayed in New York City and elsewhere by the Ozanam Association, the sons of St. Vincent de Paul and other non-clerical workers. May undertakings under such auspices increase and multiply! And still it must be doubted whether efforts of the kind will be permanently crowned with complete success unless given generous financial support. To be sure utterly unpretentious accommodations prove wholly acceptable to lads of the class considered. And yet the plainest of city quarters, if suitably spacious, involve considerable cost.

Furthermore there will always be need of a fund wherewith to provide a salaried superintendent as well as his one or more paid assistants likely to be in demand. Volunteers usually on hand—but occasionally absent—can be most helpful as companions, advisors and especially as congenial catechists for the boys, but it is next to impossible that volunteers will find leisure for the unbroken personal attention that the club needs as a condition of thriving existence. Accordingly the juvenile appeal heard from quarters in which the recreation centre would exercise saving influence is directed primarily and with special earnestness to charitably disposed persons of means.

GEORGE E. QUIN, S.J.

Turkey's Domestic Dangers

There were two sets of men who started to reform Turkey: the idealists who professed to reconcile all creeds and races, and the patriots who hoped to restore the pristine greatness of the fatherland. As in other lands, the conflict between the home reformers and the advocates of empire led to periodical deadlocks, and to disagreement between the Ministries of Army and Finance. Shevket Pasha insisted on the augmentation of the ranks by forty-three new regiments and proposed the addition of fourteen more within a brief delay. He founded military schools, increased the officers' salaries, purchased 250 guns and 20,000 horses. The War Budget was, however, only increased by 1,700 Turkish pounds, a totally inadequate sum that was nevertheless grudged by the distressed taxpayers. All Shevket's plans for defence and pacification were resisted by the weak Minister of Finance and the vacillating Vizir Hakki Pasha.

For several months the Turkish Government was aware of the danger menacing Tripoli from Italian ambition; but, owing to lack of proper means of transport it abandoned the idea of reinforcing the local forces, and confined itself to the despatch of emissaries charged with the difficult mission of training and concentrating the Arab hordes. It would be a mistake to consider these absolutely devoted to the Sultan. The Young Turks' attempt to make Tripoli a Panislamite centre failed through the obstinate independence of the Senussi sect, which does not identify the cause of the Prophet with that of the Turkish Empire. These fanatical followers of the Mahdi control the caravan traffic in the hinterland of Tripoli and, from economical as well as religious grounds, are opposed to any intrusion on the part of "infidels" or foreign Mahommedans alike. The Government at Constantinople has not succeeded in creating the strong wave of religious solidarity that would unite the African tribes to its own progressive schemes. The Senussists recognize a certain spiritual supremacy of the Sultan, but do not acknowledge his temporal sovereignty except when it suits them.

The Young Turk Press has misled the world on this as on many other points. Berber patriotism is of too local a character to sacrifice much to the ambitious projects of the "Reformers." Not one of the indigenous forces in Africa has properly rallied to the deponents of the late Sultan, under whom the feeble tie that binds Moslems on both sides of the Mediterranean was already strained to breaking point. All the conciliatory methods of the present Vali, a notable Young Turk, do not obliterate the fact that the Senussists have been made to recede from Tunis at the demand of France, and again from several districts of Tripoli at the demand of Italy. It is not easy to explain to the Moslems of Africa that the Young Turk army is too busy quelling unrest in Europe to enforce their rights against the inpouring Giaours. Whatever the result of Italian aggression, and the efforts of the Senussists to cope with it, there will be hardly a recrudescence of loyalty from the Mahommedans in Africa towards the Sultan at Constantinople.

Henry Charles Woods, the best military authority on facts and figures in the Balkans, gives 300,000 men as the nominal peace strength of the Turkish army. Since this estimate was given, however, the troops have been decimated by cholera. They are, moreover, poorly clad and imperfectly trained. Of 1,500 soldiers returned from the pacification of Albania, 850 died of cholera at Therapai. Of 40 officers, only 16 survived the hardships of the campaign. This, in itself, throws a sombre light on the condition of Turkey's land forces, apart from the fact that the Turkish soldier is admittedly a fine and resolute combatant. Courage alone does not suffice in modern warfare.

An idea of Turkey's power on sea may be gathered from the result of a recent trial. The forts on the Bosphorus were unable to alter or impede the course of a steamer representing the Russian fleet, although sixty projectiles were fired. The laying down of two Dreadnoughts and several cruisers by Russia in the Black Sea inspired Turkey with a wish to emulate her. Thirty-five ships of different sizes were her program for the next three years. Naval officers have been sent to various countries to study, and the corps was reduced to 5,000 in order to secure greater efficiency. The Ministry of Marine, under the direction of the able Muktar Pasha, was reorganized and divided into eight departments. But all Turkey's straining could not enable her to meet the danger with which she was suddenly confronted. Her double task of armament and consolidation was impossible of realization. One by one the high-flown projects of social reform were abandoned. The difficulties of parliamentarism in Turkey gave rise to subterfuge by which government was carried on with as little appeal to the people as in the days of Abdul-Hamid. The Christian races were incensed by drastic measures, formed to make them "live in peace and love" with their persecutors. The most glaring abuses remain untouched. In spite of a pretended reform of the currency the medidjiya is still reckoned according to locality at eighteen, nineteen or twenty groshes. The movement for a partial emancipation of women has fallen flat.

Absolutism alone had never ruined Turkey as did the mixture of cruelty and semi-civilization actuating the Young Turks. Instead of a regenerated triumphant Turkey, we have a discredited, humiliated State. There is no deliverance from European tutelage, and Turkey's dearest interests will continue to be regulated by Cabinets far distant from Constantinople. Much sympathy went out to the Young Turks from all would-be social reformers who think they can reach human needs through human agencies alone. But there is a fundamental defect in Islamism which unfits a state built on its precepts from participation in a world that practises imperfectly—nay,—cravenly and hypocritically as it often does—the sublime principles of Christianity.

BEN HURST.

CORRESPONDENCE

War and Cholera

ROME, October 15, 1911.

War with a little "w" and cholera with a big "C": for the former is across the Mediterranean, shut within a ring-fence, and about snuffed out; while cholera is next door to us and looms large. The Powers have practically circumscribed the land limits of the war to the territory of Tripoli. Italy is mistress of the sea, with a strong part of her navy before the port of Tripoli, of which she has taken possession, closing off all its connections with Constantinople. There are not more than a couple of thousand Turkish soldiers in Tripoli, and Turkey, while prevented by the menace of Italy's navy from attempting to transport troops by sea, is forbidden the passage of Suez by the Canal Administration, an approach through Egypt by England, and on the Tunis side by France. So there seems little chance of a real land engagement. On the other hand, Turkey is heavily mobilizing her troops, and expelling Italian citizens and commerce from all her territory, with a view, perhaps, to have something in hand to yield in the inevitable hour of compromise.

The Socialists throughout Italy persist officially in opposing both the war and the principle of expansion. The Freemasons likewise; and it has leaked over from Paris that the French Freemasons are against their government's aggressive position in Morocco. A part of the press, not merely the clerical part, argue a Masonic sympathy with the Mussulman, and particularly with the Young Turks. Perhaps a Continental Mason does prefer a Mussulman to a Catholic; yet judging by Masonic treatment of Catholics in Italy, France and Portugal, it should be the other way about, and the Catholic prefer to fall into the hands of the Turk than to be at the mercy of the Freemason. All the newspapers (always excepting the Avanti) call attention to the studious absence of Mayor Ernesto Nathan (himself an ex-Grand Master of the Masons) from all the patriotic demonstrations in favor of the war; one of the scribes, ironically stating that at every public meeting this year, were it only a Congress of Midwives, the Mayor insisted on delivering a speech, while on the occasion of all Rome rising to cheer the army in the public squares, and gathering with all its notables at the railroad station to bid the soldiers God-speed, Nathan has been not only dumb, but missing. On the other hand, they remark the action of Prince Colonna, a predecessor of Nathan as Mayor of Rome, who has enlisted for the war, and been commissioned as a major in the cavalry.

In the general outburst of popular enthusiasm the Catholics have not been lacking in prominence. First we had the action of the Catholic Labor Organization frustrating the general strike, a fact repeatedly bemoaned and berated by the Labor Socialists. Then the Catholic Social Conference, closing its week at Assisi, at a reference in one of the papers to the war with Tripoli rose as one man and cheered and cheered for Italy and the war. At Lecca the Young Men's Catholic Association (Circolo Giovanile Cattolico) issued a ringing proclamation to all the Catholics of the municipality to rally to the support of their country. At Brindisi the corresponding association has sent forth a similar manifesto. At Casale the bishop has published a letter to his clergy and people full of the warmest patriotism, calling for the prayers of all for victory for the arms of Italy, and ordering the reading in the Mass of the collect "pro tempore belli" till the close of the war. At Cremona Bishop Bonomelli, a man prominent with voice and pen in every local movement towards social and civic betterment, has sent out a like letter to his diocese, in which he justifies at length the ground and purpose of the war, and calls upon all Catholics for loyal support of their country's flag and cause.

At Salerno a special service was held for the soldiers in the cathedral, where the vicar-general delivered an eloquent sermon on faith and patriotism, and the venerable Archbishop Lastro blessed the arms and the cause of Italy. At Naples, on the first Sunday of October, the Feast of the Holy Rosary, and the annual commemoration of the victory of Lepanto, a representative of Cardinal Prisco, the Archbishop went forth, followed by many thousands of citizens, and of soldiers and sailors gathered for the expedition, to bless the sea in memory of that ancient triumph. On the same day the Catholic Union of Rome passed a resolution inviting all Catholics to join in prayer on the coming anniversary of this famous victory over the Turks for a repetition of the success of the Christian arms of Italy.

At Cagliari, in Sardinia, on the 7th, the anniversary itself, the archbishop went aboard the transport to bless the soldiers departing thence for their rendezvous at Palermo, and in the course of a fervent appeal to them for patriotic bravery pointed to the ancient standard of the Sardinians raised by them at Lepanto in the victorious battle of Don John of Austria, three hundred and forty years ago that day. The standard is in the care of the Archconfraternity of the Rosary, and has been jealously guarded by the people of Cagliari all these years as a sacred treasure. The troops saluted the venerable banner with a frenzy of enthusiasm. From all sides have come to the government offers of chaplain service, even the proscribed Jesuits tendering a quota.

The government after accepting some few Capuchins and Salesians, has now confined the work to the Franciscan Minorites, a large number of whom have been commissioned into the service. These good Frati have a monastery and church at Tripoli, where, when every other Italian had withdrawn, they remained under the Prefect Apostolic, Father Rossetti, who refused to leave, press announcements to the contrary notwithstanding.

The Church in Tripoli, flourishing in the first centuries of the Christian era, was obscured after the devastation of the territory by the Persians and Saracens until after the establishment of the French African Protectorate, when in 1630 Propaganda sent two Franciscan Missionaries thither from Venice to found a mission. In 1643 the mission was made an Apostolic Prefecture, but it was not until towards the end of the seventeenth century that the first church was opened for the mission in Tripoli, the present church of St. Mary of the Angels. To-day there are some 4,400 Catholic residents under a Prefect Apostolic, who resides with twenty-eight of his brother Franciscans in the monastery attached to the church. In addition the Marist Brothers have there a flourishing college for boys, and the Sisters of St. Joseph of Cluny a convent school with some 350 pupils.

During all the present excitement the Vatican, as is to be expected, is silently attending to its own affairs. Early in the week Cardinal Merry del Val despatched a message of encouragement and blessing from the Holy Father to the Catholic Social Conference at Assisi. In this connection it is worthy of note that the Conference in its educational session made a vigorous protest for freedom of education in Italy. At the same time the Catholic Italian Electoral Union of Rome sent out a circular note to all the other similar unions in the country urging on them the necessity of bringing out a full Catholic vote for the provincial counsellors of education, with whom will lie the battle for religious protection of the Catholic children in the public schools and of the rights of the Catholic private schools.

The Cardinal Secretary of State has also sent to all the bishops of Italy a long letter of instruction about the care of departing emigrants. In substance it urges the appointment of diocesan committees on emigration, who will act as intermediaries between the official centres of emigration information and the parish priests. The latter will ascertain who of their parishioners are about to emigrate, and will furnish them with all possible information for their protection, both of soul and body, such information to be supplied by the committees. The parish priest will likewise endeavor to provide for his people, as far as possible, against all probable danger, spiritual and temporal; will have Mass and Holy Communion for them before their departure; will, through the medium of some more intelligent member of the party, keep in touch by correspondence with his absent children, and endeavor by his counsels to continue their protection. In case of return he is to see to remedying whatever spiritual harm may have befallen them in their absence.

During these days also there has been held here at Rome a council of the bishops of Armenia, under the presidency of the Patriarch, Mgr. Tursian. Among its transactions we may note the determination to establish a Seminary at Constantinople, for the training of priests of the Armenian rite; a plan for the foundation throughout Armenia of much-needed Catholic schools; and the launching of a Catholic newspaper in the East for the spread of Catholic principles and information among the Armenians. For the present there will be issued at once a weekly bulletin, printed at Rome, to be circulated from Constantinople, entitled The Catholic Echo.

On Tuesday the International Congress of Architects opened its sessions. The delegates from the United States are G. O. Totten, Irving K. Pond, Frank C. Baldwin and Richard Phillips. As the associated press has from time to time informed your readers, one after another of a long list of international congresses summoned to meet at Rome on the occasion of the Exposition, have been called off because of the cholera.

And the cholera? The press has been positively inhibited by the government from saying a word more about it for the present; so your correspondent would know little or nothing of it, had it not broken out early last week in the same block in which he dwells. In the course of the week it appeared in a half dozen distinct houses within the circuit of the block, in spite of the immediate removal to the lazaretto of the whole family on the discovery of each case. The sanitary commission has whitewashed much of the neighborhood walls, to a height of six or seven feet, with chloride of lime, and the air, constantly acrid with the odor of the same qualified with a scent of formaldehyde, keeps us ail aware that there is such a thing in town as cholera. The only specific for personal prevention that I have heard recommended is mint-julep. But mint-julep, if steadily persisted in as an article of diet, has a treacherous trick of its own for the uninitiate. Furthermore, as they premise in Tarascon, you cannot get mint-julep here—in bulk. So after all we shall have to take our chances with the cholera. It is admitted to have reached Tripoli; the foreign press report a hundred deaths a day from it in Tunis, and Naples' most comforting word is the ambiguous statement that the mortality from cholera in Naples is less than from typhoid fever. As Naples is the chief port from which the expedition for Tripoli is to embark, the patriotism of the Italian soldier is greater than it looks on the surface.

The returns from the census taken in the course of the year give 513,236 inhabitants to Rome, an increase of 73,332 in ten years.

C. M.

Lourdes and Its Spiritual Influences

LONDON, Oct. 19, 1911.

For many years French national and diocesan pilgrimages to Lourdes have taken with them gratuitously a number of invalids, who go in the hope of obtaining a cure. This year the English pilgrimage adopted the practice, and it is remarkable that—perhaps in reward for this corporate act of charity—there have been some really wonderful cures. I do not say miracles, for it is the wise tradition of Lourdes not to speak of a cure as a miracle till it has been thoroughly investigated, and till the lapse of some months, or even of a whole year, has shown that it is lasting, and is no passing amelioration.

Non-Catholics imagine that at Lourdes everyone is ready to hail as a miracle anything that looks like a cure, and one hears self-satisfied critics declaring that, after allowing for the effects of suggestion and imagination and for other purely natural causes, and after taking account of the readiness of people to delude themselves and accept insufficient evidence for what they are inclined to believe, one need not attach any real importance to the "alleged miracles" of Lourdes. People who talk in this way have not the remotest idea of the rigid methods of investigation used by the medical experts of the "Bureau des Constatations" at Lourdes, and of the thoroughly scientific and judicial spirit in which their examination of every cure is conducted. One may even say that few Catholics, unless they have seen for themselves the doctors of the Bureau at work, have any real idea of the weight of evidence they require before any case is placed on the register of miraculous cures.

The English pilgrimage affords some striking examples of this almost exaggerated caution. There were cures that any ordinary witness of them would at once accept as miraculous. But in the records of the Bureau they will stand for months on the list of cases "under investigation and observation."

The pilgrimage was the most numerous that has yet left England for Lourdes. There were more than 300 pilgrims, under the leadership of the Bishop of Southwark. Among them was a large number of invalids, including five men and five women taken at the cost of others. A London doctor volunteered to serve the sick on the journey, and he was assisted by two nuns and a number of lay nurses.

Among the pilgrims was Miss Maria Margiotta, of Fulham, the daughter of an Italian father and an Irish mother. She traveled to Lourdes on a bed placed on a stretcher, by means of which she was carried to the train, from the train to the boat and from the boat to the train at Boulogne. For a year and seven months she had been unable to stand or walk. For twelve years she had been an invalid. She had undergone eleven operations for the removal of tuberculous glands and other tissues similarly affected. One lung was seriously diseased, the other affected. The heart was weak, and she had been finally prostrated by spinal meningitis.

Humanly speaking it was an utterly hopeless case. During the journey between Boulogne and Paris she was frequently unconscious. Just after the train passed through Amiens the doctor declared that she might die at any moment, and the bishop administered the Sacrament of Extreme Unction. She rallied, however, but no one would have been surprised if she had died at Lourdes.

The pilgrims arrived at Lourdes on the afternoon of the first Wednesday in October. Miss Margiotta, though apparently at death's door, declared her absolute confidence that she should be cured. She had brought with her a white dress with a blue sash, the colors of Notre Dame de Lourdes, to wear as soon as she could rise from her bed. She was lodged at the hospice near the Basilica and the Grotto.

On the Thursday evening when the time came for the invalids to be put to bed for the night, she refused to be taken from her stretcher, and asked to be carried again to the Grotto. This is against all custom; but she pleaded so earnestly that at last her wish was granted, and accompanied by one of the nuns and some of the pilgrims, she was carried out shortly after 11 p. m. and laid on the ground at some distance in front of the rail of the altar that stands below the opening of the grotto. There she lay for a full hour, while prayers were said for her recovery. Shortly after midnight those who were present were startled at seeing her rise suddenly from the bed and walk towards the rail with her arms extended. As she reached it she fell flat on the ground. At first it was thought she was dead. Soon she came to and, rising up, declared she was cured.

Next day at the "Bureau des Constatations" there was a long examination by the doctors. Their report has not yet been published. One cannot, therefore, give the precise details of the cure. I believe there is still some trouble with the heart. But there is this broad and certain fact—this woman, ill for twelve years, a helpless, bedridden invalid for nineteen months, unable to stir from her bed or stand on her feet, and so lately at the point of death, was able to walk about at Lourdes, to go from train to boat and from boat to train with the other pilgrims on the return journey, and after the pilgrim train had reached London, was walking up and down the platform wearing her white and blue dress and receiving the congratulations of the friends who had come to meet her. There was another cure—equally wonderful—of a crippled young man, but this too is on the observation list.

As remarkable from another point of view are some of the cases of those who are not cured. At Lourdes the grace of serene, and even joyful, submission to God's will seems to be very freely given. Among the sick who went with the English pilgrimage was a man, who, like Miss Margiotta, had long been bedridden. He had paid the expenses of three other pilgrims as an act of charity, and was in great hopes of a cure. But he came back on his stretcher without the least improvement. "It is evident," he said, "that I have not yet suffered enough. God's will be done."

To those who have not visited Lourdes it may seem—as it seemed to me before I first went there—that it is mainly a place where people go in the hope of cures for bodily ills. But the invalids make only a small part of the crowds of pilgrims that are coming and going all the year round, and the spiritual work done at Lourdes is as wonderful as its record of continually occurring miracles. One may say, indeed, that the stream which sprang from the rocks of Massabielle one day in 1858, is not merely a fount of heaven-sent healing for bodily ills, but is also a fountain of spiritual life for the Church. We read of the miracles worked by saints, by great preachers and missionaries like St. Antony of Padua and St. Francis Xavier, but we do not always realize that these miracles were secondary events in their life work. By these they attested their mission and drew men to hear their preaching, and to accept from their ministry the Sacraments of the Church. Their spiritual work was what really counted.

One may say that in the same way the fame of the miraculous cures granted at the Shrine of Our Lady of Lourdes has made the place the centre of a perpetual mission, drawing hundreds of thousands from all parts of the world to renew their spiritual life, to receive the Sacraments in an atmosphere of the supernatural, and to realize, as they meet there thousands of fellow-pilgrims of many nations, the meaning of the world-wide brotherhood of the Catholic Church. They carry back a new influence to their homes. I have no doubt that much of the vigor of Catholic life in Belgium, (the one European country that has had a Catholic government for more than a quarter of a century) is due to the fact that there is hardly a Belgian Catholic that has not visited Lourdes once or oftener.

Lourdes is a centre of spiritual life because here, as elsewhere, the Mother leads men to the Son. The focus of its energy for good is not so much the miraculous grotto as the tabernacle of its basilica. The most marvellous sight of Lourdes is that of the thousands crowding hour after hour to the communion rails, while Masses are being said in unbroken succession at a hundred altars. The great event of the day is the afternoon procession of the Blessed Sacrament, when the sick are laid in long rows on the great paved space before the Church of the Holy Rosary, and each is blessed individually with the Monstrance, while the people pray aloud for their cure. During recent years an ever increasing proportion of the cures takes place during this solemn rite. "Jesus of Nazareth passes by," and, as in the days of His earthly life, the sick are healed. Lourdes is a great sanctuary of the Mother of God, and also of the Blessed Sacrament.

A. H. A.

A M E R I C A

A · CATHOLIC · REVIEW · OF · THE · WEEK

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 4, 1911.

Entered as second-class matter, April 15th, 1909, at the Post Office at New York, N. Y., under the Act of March 3d, 1879.

Copyright, 1911, and published weekly by the America Press, New York.
President, THOMAS J. CAMPBELL; Secretary, H. J. SWIFT;
Treasurer, MICHAEL J. O'CONNOR.

SUBSCRIPTIONS, POSTPAID:

United States, 10 cents a copy; yearly, $3.00
Canada, $3.50 Europe, $4.00 (16s.)

Address:

THE AMERICA PRESS, 59 East 83d Street, New York City, N. Y., U. S. A.

CABLE ADDRESS: CATHREVIEW.

The "Encyclopædia" and "The Tablet"

Why the London Tablet, which is a Catholic paper, and as such presumably interested in safeguarding the faith of its readers, should maintain an active crusade in favor and almost in approval of the recent edition of the "Encyclopædia Britannica" is difficult for Catholics on this side of the Atlantic to understand.

No doubt the multiplied misstatements of Catholic doctrine which are found throughout that production will do no harm to theologians and scholars, but in the latest of the many circulars issued by the publishers they urge that "the book would be an admirable Christmas gift and would appeal as a permanent possession to every kind of reader, to young people and children no less than to men and women."

In view of this avowed purpose of the "Encyclopædia" to reach all classes of readers, it is in order to ask if Catholic fathers or mothers would like to see this book, which is so unrelenting in its contempt for the most sacred Catholic doctrines and practices, put in the hands of their children for perusal? Or would any one whose opinion is worth considering dare to commend it to half-educated young men and women, packed as it is with falsehoods about the Faith and backed as it is by the authority of writers who are not only loudly proclaimed to be the last authorities on such matters, but who are, furthermore, patronized, if not approved, by a Catholic paper?

One might well imagine the consternation of such readers when they would be told, for instance, that "Pius X encouraged the faithful to drown all tendency of thought in an ever-increasing flood of sensual emotionalism;" that "on any conceivable question the Pope was fifty times more likely to be right than any one else;" that the words of absolution are "magical"; that "for most penitents all they cared for was to scrape through by the skin of their teeth;" that under Leo XIII there was in the Church "an ever-increasing displacement of all refined, educated and nobler elements of society by such as are rude and uncultured;" that "the worship of Mary, largely developed during the reign of Pius IX, received a further stimulus from Leo XIII; nor did he do anything during his pontificate to correct the superstitions connected with popular beliefs concerning relics and indulgences;" that Mary is not the Mother of God; that she was not a Virgin, and that she had other children besides Christ; that reverence for her is a relic of paganism and due to "the untrammelled exercise of a devout imagination;" that the water of baptism is "cathartic in its character and must be running to carry off the miasma or the unseen demon of disease and its virtue is enhanced by the introduction of suitable prayers and incantations of a divine or magical power."

We have mentioned only a few of the virulent anti-Catholic and anti-Christian sentiments set forth in this delectable Christmas book now offered to children, but they are surely more than sufficient to make people ask in amazement, what does the London Tablet mean by its apologies for it?

It is very unpleasant for us to refer to this matter at all, and we would have kept silence had not one of the contributing editors of the Tablet, the Rev. W. N. Kent, O.S.C., compelled us to break our resolution by attributing to us the authorship of the pamphlet entitled "Poisoning of the Wells," or "Poisoning of the Water," as he once calls it. "An American friend," he says, "points out that the pamphlet has the paper and print of AMERICA, the organ of the Jesuits in the United States." He twice gives utterance to this opinion or suspicion.

We have only to say that the "American friend" is a trifle too clever. He is evidently not a newspaper man. AMERICA is printed on calendered paper. The "Poisoning of the Wells" is not. With the authorship, printing or publication of that pamphlet which so worries the Rev. Mr. Kent neither the editor, nor any of the staff, nor any of the contributors has had anything whatever to do. The writer of it is fully competent to take care of himself. On the other hand, AMERICA's opinion of the "Encyclopædia" is perfectly well known even in England, and possibly to the Rev. Mr. Kent. We began to discuss it some months ago over the editor's signature; nor have we found any reason since then to retract or modify our judgment of that most objectionable work in any particular. We here reiterate all that we have hitherto said, while regretting that we have not been more severe in our strictures, and we add that we are heartily ashamed to see the "Encyclopædia Britannica" so persistently excused, and even defended, by the once respected London Tablet.

The Cruel Sex

Observers of feminine human nature inform us, with how much reason we do not venture to say, that one never knows what a woman is going to do next, and that very often she herself does not know, nor can she tell why she so acted. Possibly it was that curious uncertainty of purpose that prompted the Ladies' Home Journal for November to give a full page to an alleged poem by Rudyard Kipling, entitled "The Female of the Species." Four or five of the stanzas end with the refrain, "She is more deadly than the male." In proof of his discovery, this cruel artist of the lyre alleges the fury of the she-bear and the malignity of the female cobra. He also invokes the aid of the clergy to bolster up his pretensions, and assures us that:

"When the early Jesuit fathers preached to Hurons and Choctaws, They prayed to be delivered from the vengeance of the squaws; 'Twas the women, not the warriors, turned those stark enthusiasts pale,

For the female of the species is more deadly than the male."

This is poor stuff, but it shows that Kipling has as little knowledge of the squaws as he has of pronunciation and fact. There were no "early Jesuits" among the Choctaws or Chactas or Cha'htas or Chactas or Chassés, and when they did arrive they were treated with tolerable decency. Indeed, the tribe showed its affection for them on one occasion by lifting the scalps of eighteen Yazoos who had murdered a missionary; and perhaps it is worth recording that the corpse which was horribly mangled by the cruel males was given an honorable burial because of the entreaties of a captive squaw—white, it is true, but the red ones would have done the same. Nor were the Huron women notorious for their barbarity to "the stark enthusiasts." Could Kipling call up the spirit of de Brébeuf or of Chaumonot from the vasty deep he would hear how a heroic squaw had defended them for weeks in her cabin at the risk of her own life from a bloodthirsty mob of the other sex that was raging outside. Jogues also, who was slain by the cousins of the Hurons, would have told with gratitude how, again and again, the squaws wept over his bleeding wounds and tried in their helpless way to give him relief. They warned him of danger which beset him on all sides, and at the end of his terrible trial, before the hatchet descended on his head, one dear old squaw pleaded for his life with tears in her eyes, and offered to die in his stead. Indeed, there are many other examples in those savage days which show, if it were necessary to do so, how very much superior woman is, whether red or white, or black or yellow, over her male companion in those qualities which are inherently hers, of gentleness, tenderness, mercy and compassion. Of course, there were fiendish hags among those old copper-colored females, but as the noble Indian taught his children to be as fierce and cruel as wild beasts, to make them successful in life, he probably did the same for the unfortunate squaw, whom he commonly treated with the most atrocious inhumanity.

But Kipling's attitude of mind in this matter, whether real or assumed, is of little consequence. What surprises us is that the editors of the Ladies' Home Journal should not only admit to their pages this brutal attack on their sex, but should give us a full-length portrait of their cigar-smoking and rather worried-looking and badly dressed executioner. Perhaps it was an act of vengeance on their part.

Do "The Nicest Women" Go?

"Who see the questionable plays?" asks a writer in one of the November magazines. "Women, chiefly," answer the managers. Experience in twenty-six thickly populated states brought the inquirer to the conviction that the women who form two-thirds of every theatre's audience actually prefer salacious to harmless plays. If this is true, it is a serious indictment of American womanhood. For the effect of attending repeatedly such productions must be to blunt irremediably a woman's delicate moral perceptions, to make her conclude that everybody is more or less bad, that most people are hypocrites, and that it is downright folly to be virtuous. But if playgoing produces cynicism like this, what is to become of the American home?

Moreover, it is the "nicest women in the town," avers this writer, who frequent dangerous theatres. But such cannot, strictly speaking, be called "nice." For "nice," according to the Standard Dictionary, means, first of all, "characterized by discrimination and judgment; acute; refined and scrupulous in tastes or habits; fastidious." So from this definition a "nice" woman seems to be a lady. But ladies do not go to questionable plays. So it cannot really be the "nicest women in the town" who make up that deplorable "two-thirds." Catholic women, it is to be hoped, are among the true ladies who remain away. For Catholic women are Our Lady's children, and Our Lady's children, some one has said, should be ladylike.

Careless Editing

Our recent strictures on a Catholic journal which permitted, doubtless through lack of supervision, the advertisement of an immoral play to appear on its pages, have, we greatly regret, to be repeated. Several Catholic weeklies published box-office eulogies of the "Irish Players" productions, through want of acquaintance, we presume, with their contents and tendency; and a Boston organ continues a mild defence, we trust for the same reason. There are at least five of these plays: "The Tinkers' Wedding," "The Well of the Saint," "The Play-boy," "In the Shadow of the Glen" and "Where There Is Nothing," which are more dangerous than plays openly immoral, inasmuch as, besides being immorally suggestive, they tend directly and indirectly to destroy all respect for Religion, Church, priesthood and sacraments, the foundations and safeguards of morality.

We can understand how a clever press agent could slip in eulogies of such productions, and even how editors could accept much belauded exploiters on face value; but we cannot understand how a Catholic editor (of syndicate newspapers) could present as convincing the testimony of "George Moore, the famous Irish Novelist." Moore is notorious as a renegade Catholic, the writer of English novels which outrival the pornographic output of Paris, where he resides; who recently traduced his Catholic father and grandfather, and who has just made a new bid for notoriety by a blasphemous dramatic parody of the Gospel. It is fitting that such a man should trumpet the Yeats and Synge monstrosities, but it is more than scandalous that a Catholic journal should trumpet him.

A Converted Critic

It is a trite saying that "the whirligig of time brings its revenges," but one does not expect, however vengeful, that it will swing them round to his door in the circle of a single year. Just one year ago we had occasion to reprove the New York Independent for looking askance at Columbus Day and endeavoring to confine its observance to Catholics only. Holding itself loftily aloof, it declared, commenting on last year's celebration: "Columbus Day was created for Catholics, chiefly immigrant Catholics and their children, the principal Catholic holiday of the year." Pointing out the unpatriotic narrowness of an American who would restrain any of our citizens from joining in national tribute to America's discoverer, we insisted that he merited equal honor from all Americans. "To deny him that honor," we argued, "because he was a Catholic would be on a par with refusing to honor Washington because he was not." Deeming it the plain duty of all who sulked outside in the shadow of unpatriotic bigotry to come right into the sunlight of patriotism, we even hazarded the prediction: "We may yet behold the Independent following Catholic leadership in the growth of a national spirit."

We confess we spoke lightly, rather than hopefully. What, then, the delicious luxury of our surprise, to find our forecast already realized. "Columbus Day," said the Independent of October 12th, "might be, and should be, a day for all of us to honor the discoverer of America"—almost our very words. "But"—there is a small, querulous "but"—"it is being perverted to a specially Catholic holiday, a day to magnify the glory of the Catholic Church," precisely what it told us last year the day is and ought to be. It were ungracious to take umbrage at the slight misunderstandings incidental to such rapid conversion; suffice it to recall our statement of last year:

"Catholics honor Columbus primarily because they are loyal citizens of the Republic which his achievement made possible, and, secondly, because his character as a Catholic and a man was such that all good citizens should delight to do him honor. If Catholics have been the pioneers in such a worthy enterprise, it is not the first time they have taken the lead in national movements which finally swept over or brushed aside unpatriotic bigotry."

Whether or not the Catholic predominance which our critic noted in New York and Boston shall become universal, thus realizing the ambition of Columbus to spread the Faith throughout this continent, those who share in his religious ideals will always have an intenser interest in the celebration of his day than those who do not. But there is interest enough for all the beneficiaries of his discovery; and we are pleased to see that sectarian jealousies are ceasing to obscure the perception of it. We may now predict with confidence that on next Columbus Day the Independent will be an enthusiastic participant.

Spain in Morocco

The district of Ifni, on the western coast of Morocco and looking out upon the Canary Islands and the Atlantic, is about to be definitively occupied by Spain. By Art. 8 of the treaty of Wad-Ras in 1860, the Sultan of Morocco bound himself to grant to Spain sufficient land on the Atlantic at the place called Santa Cruz de la Mar Pequeña to establish a fishing station, such as Spain had formerly had there. The act of Algeciras having declared that all existing treaties with the Sultan were effective, thereby recognized Spain's right to occupy the land specified in the treaty of 1860.

During the past fifty years Spain and Morocco have been discussing the site of Santa Cruz de la Mar Pequeña, which was the name of a fortress constructed by the Spaniard Don Diego de Herrera, away back in the fifteenth century. It is generally believed that the place in question is that now occupied by Germany and known as Agadir; but the commission appointed by the Spanish and Moroccan governments have passed it by and decided that Ifni is the site of the ancient Spanish fortress.

Ifni is really valuable, both industrially and strategically, for it is the gate to the rich and fertile districts of Sus and Nien. It has an area of seventy square kilometers, and has six thousand Moorish inhabitants.

The districts of Sus and Nien did not recognize the sovereignty of the Sultan, as he himself declared to King Carlos III of Spain in 1767; and as far back as 1499 the inhabitants of those districts, then known as the kingdom of Bu-Tata, had declared themselves vassals of Spain. In 1867 they solicited the opening of Spanish commercial enterprises in their country; and in 1872, Sidi-Hussein, Governor of Sus, was moved by his friendliness for Spain to wish to have his sons educated in that country.

Such is the title that Spaniards can show for occupying a part of Africa, a title that has remained in abeyance during the past fifty years. It is at this stage of the proceedings that France is trying to obstruct by means of insults and threats in the French press and by means of difficulties and complications created in Spain and beyond its confines.

Protestant Dormitories for Catholic Filipinos

It may appear more than a coincidence that so shortly after the appointment of the rector of Bishop Brent's cathedral as President of the government university of the Philippines the Bishop should announce the erection of a $25,000 dormitory for the accommodation of the students. Of course, the dormitory will be under the control of the Protestant Episcopal Church: if carried on after the fashion of the other Protestant dormitories in Manila, it should prove an excellent proselyting institution. The Methodists, who at present rent a house there as a dormitory for government students, are now erecting a substantial building of concrete for this purpose. The Presbyterians have two dormitories in Manila, and the Y. M. C. A. have their plans ready for an immense dormitory to cost about $150,000. The young men living in the established Presbyterian and Methodist dormitories are compelled to assist at Protestant services every day. A large proportion of these young men attend Mass regularly on Sundays, finding themselves compelled to live in Protestant houses for lack of other accommodations. The Protestant dormitories have all been erected by donations from the United States. Catholics are, thus far, unable to provide a suitable house for their students. Among more than two thousand who are following the higher courses of studies in the government schools in Manila there is one American Jesuit priest laboring. He now conducts three services every Sunday morning in three distinct churches for these young men and women. More than three hundred are in attendance—a goodly number, considering that the students have no chapel of their own where they may listen to a sermon preached in English. He also looks after seven catechism classes each week for the students of the higher government schools.

Purveyors of Historical Scandals

There is a kind of literature that is now being advertised by publishers and puffed by reviewers which is little better than the erotic novels of the day. Certain writers search the dustbins of past centuries till they find in some royal rake or high-born courtesan what is considered a fit subject for a "historical study" or a "full-length biography." The reign of Charles II, of Louis XV, and of Napoleon, or the period of the Renaissance, of the great religious Revolt, and of the French Revolution furnish these artists, of course, with choice subjects for their historical portrait gallery. Diaries, correspondence and court chronicles are then carefully searched for anecdotes and intrigues that will give a vivid picture of the corruption of the age. These are woven together by the "sympathetic" author, the printer and binder do their part to make the book attractive, then the publishers announce "a work that no student of the Restoration," for example, "can afford to leave unread"; or a "contribution to the literature of the Regency that throws a strong light on the causes of the Revolution," and the frivolous reading public are at once seized with an overweening desire to study "history."

So they lay aside their novels for a spell and devour with equal zest the compilation of lewdness and treachery that is offered, and are really surprised to find "history" so interesting, as they had supposed it was all so very dull.

Of such books let Catholics beware. We yield to no one indeed in zeal for the study of history, as we know that the Church cannot be really harmed by the revelation of the truth. There is scarcely a work written nowadays on any portion of the Christian Era by a real scholar which does not expose some ancient calumny born of the Protestant tradition. In men like Pastor, Janssen, Gasquet and Shea we have historians to be proud of; but authors who gather the matter for their books exclusively from the chroniques scandaleuses of the past are not "historians" that Catholics, or any one else, should read.

LITERATURE

Ireland Under the Normans (1169-1216). By GODDARD HENRY ORPEN, late Scholar of Trinity College, Dublin, Editor of the "Song of Dermot and the Earl," Member of the Royal Irish Academy. 2 Vols. Oxford: At the Clarendon Press. Price, 21 shillings net.

Mr. Goddard H. Orpen, B.A., B.L., is already well known as a keen student of the history of Ireland in the second half of the twelfth century. In the present work he sets himself the task of giving as far as possible the documented history of the colonists in Ireland from 1169 to 1216, and undoubtedly he makes good use of Patent Rolls, Close Rolls, Pipe Rolls, Justiciary Rolls, Papal Letters and State Papers. The result is a very able presentation of the case from the colonial point of view.

In his Preface Mr. Orpen tells us that his reading of the documents of the thirteenth century has led him "to regard the domination of the English Crown and of its ministers in Ireland, during the thirteenth century, and indeed up to the invasion of Edward Bruce in the year 1318, as having been much more complete than has been generally recognized, and to think that due credit has not been given to the new rulers for creating the comparative peace and order and the manifest progress and prosperity that Ireland enjoyed during that period wherever their rule was effective." The very opposite is true. Wherever the Norman rule was effective "comparative peace" was generally obtained when there was no native left to kill, as "peace reigned in Warsaw," and self-aggrandizement was the objective.

As might be expected, we have a special chapter on the Brief Laudabiliter and, as also might be expected from one who writes from the colonial standpoint, the genuineness of the Bull is exploited. Then there is a long note on Professor Thatcher's position in relation to Laudabiliter, "who regards Laudabiliter as neither a genuine letter of Adrian IV nor a forgery in the true sense of the word."

Irish readers can well gauge the "impartial" views of Mr. Orpen by the following sentence: "The sovereignty or rather overlordship of Ireland, so far as it existed, was won partly by the swords of the Norman adventurers, and was established more legally by the personal submission of the Irish kings and prelates." Mr. Orpen, however, is to be congratulated on setting right the date of the letter of credence given to William Fitz Audelin, and for the publication of the Laudabiliter: this date, usually given as 1175 or else 1177, must really be April, 1173, and is quoted in Rymer's "Foedera." And he seems to admit that Giraldus Cambrensis was really "capable of concocting the privilegia," as is evident from Dermot's letter to Strongbow, "which certainly seems to contain much of Gerald's own fine writing."

In regard to the chapter on "King John in Ireland," Mr. Orpen gravely informs us of the appointment of Eugenius, Archbishop of Armagh, by King John, "to execute the episcopal office in the see of Exeter, left derelict owing to the Interdict," as an indication "that the Irish clergy did not enter into the spirit of the contest of their class in England against the King." This was, as he rightly says, in July, 1207, but he conveniently forgets the fact that the Interdict was not till 1208. Had he referred to the "Annals of Ulster," he would have found that the Primate of All Ireland had gone to England "to succour the churches of Ireland, and to accuse the Foreigners of Ireland," who had plundered Armagh. And, be it added, these "noble Normans" again plundered the primalatial city on the vigil of the Feast of St. Brigid, February 11, 1208.

Mr. Orpen's estimate of King John is admirable: "capricious, vindictive, tyrannical, only that in his tyranny he was even less under control." He also rightly concludes that the Anglo-Normans "regarded the Irish as uncouth and barbarous, and the fit spoil of their conquerors," and "those who guided the destinies of the colony (sic) were not farseeing enough to perceive the ultimate effect of a half-conquest carried out in such a spirit."

In conclusion, we can recommend this work to serious students of Irish history, as it contains a succinct documented history of Ireland from 1169 to 1216. Even though we differ from Mr. Orpen's reading and conclusions, we must accord him unstinted praise for the great labor of wading through thousands of calendered documents not easily accessible, and presenting them in a readable form. The notes are helpful, and there is a fairly good index. In addition there are two excellent maps of Ireland, one giving the old tribal divisions, and the other the castles and motes.

It only remains to add that the two volumes are printed in irreproachable style, and bound attractively in green cloth, by the Clarendon Press, Oxford; indeed, the fine large type is a pleasure to read, and the format is easy to handle.

W. H. GRATTAN FLOOD.

Across China on Foot, Life in the Interior and the Reform Movement. By EDWIN J. DINGLE. With numerous illustrations. New York: Henry Holt & Company. Price $3.50 net.

Are we to think with Admiral Evans that the present disturbances in China mark the beginning of the end of Tatar supremacy in the Flowery Kingdom? With only now and then a throb or fitful quiver, the great Chinese dragon has so long remained without any sign of strength and spirit that we can do no more than hazard a guess on the outcome. The author, now residing in Hangkow, the seat of the present disturbance, may have at hand already material for correcting or for confirming the opinion expressed in his volume. He sets himself down as a journalist by profession, but as he implies further on (p. 127) that he is a missionary, it may be that evangelization is only a side line with him. One needs a map to follow his wanderings, and that is provided at the end of the volume. Beginning his great feat at Shanghai and pursuing a westerly course, he pushed on, in spite of unfavorable weather and execrable roads and unreliable guides, until, after a thousand hardships, he reached British Burma. Penetrating into regions whither no Caucasian had preceded him, often surrounded by barbarous and unfriendly natives of whose language he was ignorant, the wonder is that he ever saw the boundary of China after he left Shanghai. Oh, what poverty, wretchedness and disease he witnessed! But it is in describing the wonderful scenery, undefiled by man's vandalism, that he is at his best. Does the Chinaman want the foreigner? Mr. Dingle thinks that he wishes to use him with the intention of casting him aside at some future day. More easily said than done, we fancy, and John may find it out too late. Over a hundred photographs confirm the author's lively descriptions of strange persons, places and things. He speaks from personal knowledge of the great improvement noticeable in certain utterly degraded tribes where Baptist and Methodist missionaries have been working. He does not say that the Baptists "souse" their converts, although he does say that the "Romanists" are aggressive. One word is as tolerable as the other.

Much curious information is summed up in a series of nine appendixes, one of which is somewhat vermiform, or at least vermiculate. It is a comparison to bring out the points of similarity between Catholicism and Buddhism. One vermiculose objection is our repetition of the "Hail, full of grace, the Lord is with thee," as found in St. Luke's first chapter, with what the Church has added in honor of her who was "highly favored," as the author might perhaps choose to translate it. Is it, then, so very naughty to repeat repeatedly a text of Scripture? The same failing may be noted in Psalm 135, where, in total disregard of "vain repetitions," we find put down twenty-six times, "for his mercy endureth forever." Wouldn't "Beautiful Isle of Somewhere" do well as a substitute here and there? Again, "Hold the Fort" would add explosive force and a chance for the tenor to "curl." Yet, "for his mercy endureth forever" is all that the psalmist could find.

But we must turn back to pages 178-179, where a footnote gives what purports to be the translation of a "Romanist" tract. It is made to say of the Protestant missionaries, "Adulterers and drunkards, there is no evil thing they do not practice!" The author does not pretend to give his own translation, for he asserts again and again his lack of familiarity with the language. We are constrained, therefore, to surmise that an outrage so grievous against the Protestant missionaries was committed, not by a "Romanist" missionary, but by a poorly equipped translator.

H. J. S.

Lilies. By A. GROVE. With Eight Colored Plates. New York: Frederick A. Stokes Co.

After one has vainly spent time and strength, not to mention patience and shekels, in an unequal struggle with certain glorious but capricious lilies, it is soothing to learn from an authority that "there is no genus of bulbous plants which has proved so difficult to manage in cultivation, or in which so many failures have to be recorded." But if Mr. Grove administers this comfort, scanty though it be, he raises our spirits with a chapter most welcome to the unsuccessful lily cultivator (as soon as we saw the title, we carefully pored over every word of it), for it bears the alluring heading, "Easily-Grown Lilies."

But this is anticipation. The frontispiece reproduces one of the most chastely beautiful of the whole genus, L. platyphylum, a fit introduction to a subject in which color, form and fragrance claim our attention. Whoever looks back to the day when, with infantile candor, he bought a few bulbs of Japanese lilies and then watched and waited for them so to people his garden that the lemon lily would be choked out and even the purslain, that psoriasis septennis of the garden would take to flight, may profitably read in the intervals of his watching and waiting (for that is what he is still doing) what the author has to say about managing those fickle foreigners. Like so many others not of the floral kingdom, they must be understood; like so many others, ditto, ditto, they are often shipped without a clean bill of health. There is some solace in the thought that at times the carelessness of the dealer makes our success impossible.

If we are in despair over our ill-luck with some of the most magnificent specimens and varieties, there is no reason why our garden should not be enriched with some that are of a more accommodating disposition, and of such there are many. Over thirty varieties are catalogued and briefly described in that well-spring of hope, "Easily-Grown Lilies."

So much of the beauty of the gem depends upon its setting, that the chapter on shrubs as fit associates for lilies will help the amateur landscape gardener. How he may rapidly increase his stock is also duly considered. * * *

The Dixie Book of Days. By MATTHEW PAGE ANDREWS. Baltimore: The Page Publishing Association, 849 Park Ave. Price $1.00.

Time was when, had we this book, we would have kept in hiding or we should have got one. Yes, come to think of it, "another" is perhaps the proper word, but let "one" pass. Each sheet of the roll gives the calendar for a week, and each day of the week is adorned with literary gems from southern sources or bearing on southern life, political or social. Great days in the life of the South (some of them are days of rejoicing, others are days of mourning) are commemorated as the ever-changing year brings them about. Some say that the seasons are changing and that our northern climate is becoming milder. Could it be that it is still a little too raw and chill for some of the poetical and oratorical flowers that have been culled for the Dixie Book of Days? There is in the Southerner's love for the South an ardor, an intensity, which the Northerner, though he may feel it as strongly, does not always show for his home land. Wherever the Southerner may be, whether at home or in the arctic regions, his heart will go out in gratitude to the compiler of so much that is heart-reaching in the Dixie Book of Days. * * *

Right and Might. By SOPHIE MAUDE. London: R. & T. Washbourne.

From the dedicatory verse, the author's foreword and the preface, one gathers that this latest work of Sophie Maude is to be catalogued as a historical novel. The story is a simple one, concerning itself with the last two representatives of the house of Tudor. The plot carries the reader back and forth between the country and London town, while the stage is set much as one would expect in a historical story of this period, with a royal palace, a manor house with double walls, and a priest's hiding place, and, of course, all the necessary adjuncts, such as spies and pursuivants, etc. The volume, however, has claim to a wide vogue, not because of the plot, interesting though it be, but because of the fund of accurate and valuable historical information with which its pages are replete. Frequent asterisks refer one to footnotes which give the information that this passage has authority in documents to be found in the British Museum. With this feature exception might be taken on two heads: it adds nothing to the information supplied by the author's introduction, and is not usual even in professedly historical novels. But all in all, librarians looking for suitable additions to their children's section will do well to place on their shelves this new work by Sophie Maude. R. R. R.

The Louvain American College, 1857-1907. By Rev. J. VAN DER HEYDEN. Louvain, Belgium: Fr. & R. Geuterick, 60 Vital Decoster St.

From New England to the Pacific Slope there are few dioceses which have not been beneficiaries of the Louvain American College. Begun in a humble way in 1857, it has prospered under the blessing of Heaven, and has widened its sphere of usefulness as the years have passed by. The present volume, commemorating the golden jubilee of the foundation, gives the history of those early days of trial and of the gradual rise in importance and usefulness until the college now holds a proud position. Those who helped to make it great and those who rose to positions of honor and responsibility after receiving its training find place in a work which will be a precious souvenir to those who know the college and the master minds that have directed it. The debt of gratitude which the Church in America owes the college for the archbishops, bishops and priests whom it has formed for America will be better understood by whoever reads this jubilee account. The pages are bright with portraits of distinguished alumni and others who have been identified with the college. * * *

Animal Secrets Told; A Book of "Whys." By HARRY CHASE BREARLEY. New York: Frederick A. Stokes Co.

If young New Yorkers were already highly favored in having within easy reach the Central Park menagerie and the elaborate collection of the New York Zoological Society, not to mention the very lifelike specimens in the Museum of Natural History, they owe a unanimous vote of thanks to Mr. Brearley, whose book of "Whys" will answer so many of the questions that bubble up in the youthful mind. Take the clumsy galápagos, which were frisking in the tortoise kindergarten when Columbus discovered America, or Mrs. Anaconda with her interesting family of "one-hundred-and-fifty-plets," or Flip, the baby walrus, or Gunda, the quondam cashier of the Elephants' Bank, who developed the very human trait of wishing to keep all the money for himself, and—Oh, so very many other living, breathing marvels out at the "Zoo." We have watched the children as they filed by, big-eyed and wondering, quite charmed with the novel sights but carrying away little information, because they had no book of "Whys."

The author must be fond of young people, for he talks in a way to interest good boys and girls, as all are, only some are better than others. The outward characteristics that a youngster's eyes can see, from eyes and noses to feet and tails, from the down of the owl to the wrinkled bullet-proof blanket of the rhinoceros, are explained in a pleasant, chatty way, as if by some amiable and very learned uncle to a group of nephews and nieces. Besides scores of smaller illustrations, there are twelve full-page photo-engravings, including a likeness of "Pete," the mild-eyed hippopotamus, who was "snapped" just as he was uttering a hearty guffaw over some venerable joke from his keeper. Mr. Brearley has given us a thoroughly delightful and instructive book. * * *

La Vida Espiritual Reducida á Tres Principios Fundamentales. Por el Padre MAURICIO MESCHLER, S.J. Versión Española por el Padre JUAN M. RESTREPO, S.J. St. Louis: B. Herder. Price, 70 cents net.

"Pocket asceticism" is what the venerable and enlightened author calls the work, and not unfairly, for in small compass he presents all those great principles of the spiritual life which have animated and directed God's chosen servants. Prayer, self-conquest and love for Our Divine Lord are the three principles which are studied, explained and applied. The intensely practical nature of Father Meschler's instructions and the clear way in which they are expressed will appeal to every pious reader and to every reader who would like to cultivate piety. * * *

Stoff und Methode der Lebenskunde für Schulentlassene. Von EDUARD KRUCHEN, Dr. Theol. et Phil. M. Gladbach: Verband für soziale Kultur. Volksvereins-Verlag, 1 Mark.

A golden booklet of inestimable value for all engaged in the work of education. It is thoroughly Catholic, beautiful and uplifting in sentiment, and full of pith and marrow in its thought. This is one of several volumes by the author, a priest and doctor of theology and philosophy, whose educational ability is devoted to the factory girls and textile workers of a little industrial town in the Rheinland, but whose reputation has spread through all the pedagogic circles of Germany. His object is to make of his pupils true women and good mothers, who will be equally fitted for the daily household duties and the noble mission of leading husband and children along with them to the height of Christian ideals. He is forever pointing to the transfigured Christ upon Tabor, while he keeps us in the vale of humility by insisting upon the knowledge of our nothingness and entire dependence upon God through prayer. The book will be read with profit by priests and teachers alike. * * *

Christian Mysteries, or Discourses for All the Great Feasts of the Year, Except those of the Blessed Virgin. By the Right Rev. JEREMIAS BONOMELLI, D.D., Bishop of Cremona. Translated by the Right Rev. THOMAS SEBASTIAN BYRNE, D.D., Bishop of Nashville. In four volumes. New York: Benziger Brothers.

The American priesthood is much beholden to the tireless Bishop of Nashville for all the good books he has turned into excellent English for them. Having translated the homilies of the Bishop of Cremona, he now offers the public that active prelate's "Christian Mysteries." In the four neat volumes there are in all fifty-seven sermons on but nine varied themes, the greater feasts of the year. It has been Bishop Bonomelli's custom to address his flock himself on such occasions, and as he has now governed the diocese of Cremona for many years, no doubt he had a large stock of sermons from which to make this selection. Though the author is an Italian, no discourses on Our Lady, oddly enough, are included in these volumes, but perhaps they are gathered into another book not yet translated.

The Bishop of Cremona used to jot down the outline of his subject, "giving particular attention to the order of the ideas, and then to develop them, trusting to the inspiration of the moment." These rough drafts were the ground-work on which the present series of discourses was built. The author aims to bring out clearly the rational part of the mysteries, and to set forth the Catholic doctrine in clear and precise language. The half dozen sermons on the feast of Corpus Christi are especially good examples of the Bishop's method.

El Catecismo Mayor de S. S. el Papa Pio X explicado al Pueblo. Por D. GILBERTO DIANDA, Pbro. Versión Castellana por el P. ENRIQUE PORTILLO, S.J. Madrid: Admón. de Razón y Fe. Precio 2.50 pesetas.

This first volume embraces the first seven articles of the Creed. As some four hundred and forty pages are given to them, it is clear how full the treatment is. The author's aim is to explain our holy faith so that even those of quite modest intellectual endowments may follow his instructions. Comparisons and examples are freely used. Whoever is called upon to give catechetical lessons in Spanish will find this work invaluable. It could be used to excellent advantage in the family, and in the smaller towns which are seldom visited by the priest. * * *

Charles Scribner's Sons have out an attractive little book on "Robert Louis Stevenson," by Isobel Strong, who knew the author intimately. Under captions like "The Writer," "The Poet," "The Traveller," "The Friend," and "The Chief" are found her appreciations and reminiscences of that "lord of language," while in every chapter apt and beautiful excerpts from "Tusitala's" writings abound. Stevenson's wonderful personal charm, which won him friends everywhere, is made to pervade the book, so Catholics in particular, who always feel grateful to that broad-minded Scot for his generous defense of Father Damien, ought to find this book especially enjoyable.

It is said that a large circle of silly women, among whom are doubtless many Catholics of a certain kind, have long been enriching Marie Corelli by purchasing her books. For, in a solemn prologue to "The Life Everlasting," that author's latest novel, we are told that this is the seventh in a series of successful books, written when she was not "playing with her pen," which "are linked together by the one theory." Any woman who has the courage to toil through the four hundred and forty pages of wild doctrines, "psychic" phenomena and unmitigated nonsense of this story deserves praise, perhaps, for her courage and persistency, but the sincerity of a reader who maintains that she understands "The Life Everlasting" is much to be suspected.

Longmans, Green & Co. have prepared a large second edition of the late Dr. Dwight's "Thoughts of a Catholic Anatomist," as the first was almost immediately exhausted, owing partly, no doubt, to the high praise the best reviewers gave this book. "I believed, therefore have I spoken," is the text placed by the author on the title page, and the hundreds of medical men who have sat at Dr. Dwight's feet during the many years he was Parkman Professor of Anatomy at Harvard, should be eager to hear their old teacher's last word on the relation of science to religion.

"Frequent Communion for Busy Men," a little book of Father Lintelo's, the Jesuit whose writings have done so much to bring multitudes to the altar, is published under the editorship of the Rev. Elder Mullan, S.J., by the Kenedys. The pamphlet is designed to correct the mistaken idea that to receive often the Holy Eucharist one must be a woman. If the Blessed Sacrament is food for the soul, men too need Communion often. "For they have to resist the more violent passions, are more exposed to perversion of mind by the deceptions of false doctrines, and carry the heavier burden of life's struggles and social responsibilities."

Benziger Bros. have brought out a meditation book called "The Life of Union with Our Divine Lord," which is a translation from the French of Abbé F. Maucourant. Religious will find under its thirty chapter headings thoughts that should deepen their love for Our Saviour.

"My Ragpicker" is an improbable but well told story of Paris, by Mary E. Waller. It recounts the fortunes of a fair little waif who plies her humble trade under the shadow of Notre Dame, and learns to look up to the towers of the great cathedral for comfort and protection. As the author of the tale is apparently a Protestant, "Nanette's" attachment to this "mother" of hers is made more poetical than religious, but it helps to keep her pure and joyous amid many trials and perils. Little, Brown & Co. are the publishers.

"Stevens Dane" is introduced by the Benzigers as the author of an entertaining little story called "Through the Break in the Web," which tells of the adventures of a London typewriter, who in her love for the beautiful finds the True Faith. A singular thing about the book is the fact that "Jessie" does not marry her employer, as the reader is led to expect, but he considerably dies and leaves her an annuity with which to continue her quest of the fair, the good, and the true.

BOOKS RECEIVED

The Reason of Life. By William Procher DuBose. New York: Longmans, Green & Co. Net $1.50.
 Garibaldi and the Making of Italy. By G. M. Trevelyan. New York: Longmans, Green & Co. Net $2.25.
 A Text Book of English Literature for Catholic Schools. By the Rev. William H. Sheran, M.A., LL.B. New York: The American Book Co.
 Motive Force and Motivation Tracks. A Research in Will Psychology. By E. Boyd Barrett, S.J. New York: Longmans, Green & Co.
 The Life of Venerable Francis Libermann. By G. Lee, C.S.Sp. St. Louis: B. Herder.
 St. Anselm, Archbishop of Canterbury. St. Louis: B. Herder.
 The Dream of Gerontius. By Cardinal Newman. St. Louis: B. Herder.
 My Ragpicker. By Mary E. Waller. Boston: Little, Brown & Co. Net 75 cents.
 Through the Break in the Web. By Stevens Dane. New York: Benziger Brothers. Net 45 cents.
 Little Uplifts. By Humphrey J. Desmond. Chicago: The A. C. McClurg Co.
 Further Essays on St. Paul. By Rev. Joseph Rickaby, S.J. New York: Benziger Brothers.
 Devotion to the Holy Angels. Translated from the French of Henri-Marie Boudon. By Edward Healy Thompson, M.A. New York: Benziger Brothers. Net 75 cents.
 The Life of Union with Our Divine Lord. By the Abbé F. Maucourant. Translated from the French. New York: Benziger Brothers. Net 60 cents.

Pamphlets:

Socialism, Individualism, and Catholicism. By Rev. J. J. Welch. St. Louis: B. Herder.
 When Informed Protestants Speak their Convictions. By the Rev. John F. Noll. Huntington, Ind.: The Author. Net 10 cents.

EDUCATION

With the reopening of schools the daily press begins again to run the story of the excesses perpetrated by members of the Greek letter societies and of the high school fraternities in their initiations. The New York World of October 22 sarcastically refers to action recently taken by the faculty of Sheffield Scientific School, a department of Yale, as "more tyranny and despotism." The entire freshman class of that well-known institution has been placed on probation by the faculty because of the unseemly pranks, to use a very mild term, with which its members inaugurated their term as matriculates of the school. "The New Haven Chief of Police," says the World, "announces that he does not purpose to let the Sheffield students set fire to bridges, steal signs, pull trolley-car poles off the wires, or do other diverting tricks that so amuse college communities. Thus does tyranny ever seek to bend free spirits to its will and iron out individualism into dull conformity."

* * *

"'Pranks' such as the Sheffield students played in the early days of the current term time, when committed by ordinary lads who earn their living are called hoodlumism," says the World writer. "The strong-arm squad gets after these, newspapers reprove them, justices send them to prison." But it is quite different in a college community. "Education must not be interfered with, culture chilled or genius checked." And with delicious sarcasm he recounts some of the strokes of student genius at which "fossils" like the Sheffield faculty and the New Haven Chief of Police take umbrage. Were it not so serious a matter one could enjoy the clever weaving into the writer's skit of the most reckless extravagances perpetrated by student bodies within a year. "Really," he writes, "the boys are ingenious. By way of 'initiation' they brand Greek letters on freshmen's foreheads in acids warranted to wear three months. They tie novices on railroad tracks, occasionally neglecting to remove them before train time. They make the lads dance on the edge of precipices with a comparatively small percentage of life lost. They do 'stunts' in public that annoy or outrage or insult thousands of plain people. In the New Haven case they merely sought to burn a few bridges spanning a railway track. These should be built of stone, steel, or cement, anyhow. What business has a college town with inflammable public property?"

* * *

A few days before the World writer thus scored in an editorial the more than extravagant horse-play of organizations which have come to exercise mighty influence in secular higher schools of the country, a western college president in a more serious way strongly assailed Chicago high school students who maintain fraternities in open defiance of the rules recently adopted by the board of education in that city. Charles A. Blanchard, president of Wheaton College, Wheaton, Ill., finds these high school fraternities to be "centres of dissipation and moral decay," but he takes courage from the fact that the general movement against them shows no symptoms of lessening. "From ocean to ocean," he declares, "and from lakes to gulf the testimony of high school principals, boards of education, courts and legislatures is to one effect, that secret societies in high schools are centres of evil which cannot be mended, and therefore ought to be ended."

Dr. Blanchard's address is quoted at some length in the Chicago Daily Journal of October 16, and he does not mince words in describing the attitude which the young folk in that city are said to have adopted towards the suppressing of the "frat" organizations by the board of education. "Is it not an astonishing thing that boys and girls supported by parents and educated by taxpayers, without effort or cost to themselves, should be so insolent and lawless as reports indicate them to be?" said Mr. Blanchard. "Children trained in Germany or England have more respect for their parents and teachers than to indulge in such talk.

"If a student who lives like the lily of the field, neither toiling nor spinning, and enjoys the wonderful privileges for which our people tax themselves hundreds of millions of dollars every year, has not the decency to conform to regulations, why does he not have the self-respect to get out of the school in which he is not willing to be a law-abiding member and get into some honest work where he can earn his living and direct his course at his own expense rather than at the expense of other people?"

"Right or wrong, it is a common opinion that a large number of young people in the Chicago schools have been defying the regulations of the board from the beginning of this discussion until now. The board makes rules and the young people trample them under foot, and from time to time their parents and others appeal to the courts to sustain them in their lawlessness."

* * *

The rebellious attitude of the Chicago students suggests another reflection to Wheaton's president—a reflection, be it said, that marks an extremely radical change of sentiment in this well-known advocate of the State school system among us. "I am impressed with the thought that the great need of our public schools is not for changes in course of study, is not for additional privileges, but is such a course in manners and morals as shall make young people grateful for costly privileges bestowed on them without their effort, and incline them to be decent and law-abiding in their enjoyment of them."

* * *

Nor is Dr. Blanchard content with sharp criticism of the viciousness of the situation as he finds it in Chicago. To him the fraternity question itself is an "abomination." An experienced educator and one long accustomed to deal with young people just out of high school, he has no hesitation in proclaiming "frat" organizations to be unquestioned sources of moral evils. And he is quite candid in explaining his position. Quoting Dr. Crosby, who years ago, when Chancellor of New York University, said in reference to college secret societies: "Out of darkness, dark deeds grow," the Wheaton president adds: "Who would expect anything else? Is not this the history of the human race—that secrecy is the instant afterthought of crime, and that it conduces to other crimes, naturally and inevitably."

A notable event and one of deep personal interest to more than one thousand religious women engaged in educational work in the Middle West was that celebrated Oct. 22-25, at St. Mary-of-the-Woods, Indiana. Seventy-one years ago six Sisters of Providence, missionaries from their home in France, arrived in a stage coach at a log house in a forest five miles northwest of Terre Haute, to found the first house of that remarkably successful teaching sisterhood in the United States. The growth of the community in the years that have run since that day of poor and humble beginnings is one of the marvels men pay little attention to, mayhap because it is a marvel of such frequent occurrence in the history of the teaching orders of the Catholic Church in this country. Aside from their creditable achievements in school work—the Sisters are a telling factor in parochial school development in the Middle West, besides conducting several well known academies, as well as a successful institution for advanced college work in St. Mary-of-the-Woods—the growth of the Congregation, with the acquirement of property is a splendid testimony to the capacity of the women who have given themselves to the service of sacrifice in that part of God's vineyard. A writer in the Chicago Tribune thus summarizes the story of their seventy-one years in Indiana:

"As the years have gone land has been acquired, buildings erected, landscape gardening done, until now the one time forest site is, not only a vast estate, but a beautiful one. Contracts have just been let for two more buildings, a music hall and a dormitory for students in the college course conducted for young women by Sisters at the mother home. The music hall is a project of the alumnae started some years ago at an annual reunion such as now is being held."

Rev. John A. Dillon, appointed Superintendent of Schools in the diocese of Newark, N. J., in April, 1910, published early in September the first report of the parish schools in that jurisdiction. It proves to be an excellent record of work accomplished in the cause of Catholic school training. Newark is not numbered among the very populous Catholic centres, yet Father Dillon tells of a registration of 52,274 pupils in the parish schools of the diocese last year, with a total attendance at the close of the school term in June last of 25,400 boys, and of 26,347 girls. The number of teachers engaged was 999; one new school was established and opened to pupils; eleven new and splendidly equipped school buildings have been recently constructed, three of these being completed during the past year, and two new buildings are actually in course of erection. A distinct advance in the character of the work accomplished in the diocesan schools within the year is chronicled as the result of the introduction of a revised uniform course of study in September, 1910. Father Dillon's report, besides a detailed statement of conditions existing in Newark's schools, with the usual statistical summary, discusses in an interesting way some of the problems facing Catholic school teachers in the accomplishment of their sacred charge. Teachers' meetings, examinations, school inspection, retarded progress of pupils, Catholic High Schools, are chief among the topics touched upon. We congratulate Newark's Superintendent upon the fine record he is able to show, and upon the testimony he gives that "everywhere those engaged directly or indirectly in the work of building up the parish schools are manifesting a deep interest and an intense personal zeal, before which indifference is gradually but surely melting away."

M. J. O'C.

ECONOMICS.

Many years ago, when California was a greater wheat growing country than it is now, travelers used to be surprised at seeing the shocks of grain lying in the fields day after day during July and August, waiting for the threshing machine. "How can you be so imprudent?" they would ask. "Should rain come your crop would be ruined." But any real rain in July and August is unknown in California. The damage done to grain left out in the fields came from the ground squirrels only, which used to carry off a good deal for their winter food.

One is surprised to learn that what thirty or forty years ago visitors looked on as bad farming in California, is the normal practice in the Canadian Northwest under a very different climate. This year has been very cold and wet. The harvest was very late—indeed, in some places the grain has not ripened. Yet when the wheat was cut at last it was allowed to lie in the fields until an opportunity could be found for threshing it, just as if rain was as improbable there during the last week of September and the whole of October, as during a California July and August. Some growers did not take the trouble to stack their crop, and of those that did, few knew how to thatch the stack so as to keep out the rain which fell in abundance. Consequently not a little wheat is sprouting in the shocks and stacks, while threshing is not half done. Indeed, the Winnipeg Free Press of October 21 tells that only in Manitoba has 50 per cent. of the grain been threshed, while in Saskatchewan and Alberta the proportion is no more than 10 and 20 per cent. respectively.

The quantity of the crop, according to most favorable reports, has been reduced some 20 million bushels in an estimated yield of 185 million. The chances are that before the end of the year we shall learn that the reduction is 40 or 50 million bushels. But the grade has suffered still more. In the literature published by emigration agencies we have read the praises of No. 1 northern; and every immigrant has dreamed of 25 to 30 bushels per acre of this wheat. He is now learning his mistake by experience. Last year was an indifferent one for quantity, but a fair one for grade. On October 20 more than 21 per cent. of the receipts at Winnipeg reached that grade. This year, on the same date, only 4½ per cent. did so. Last year on that date over 38 per cent. of the receipts graded No. 2 Northern, and only 22 per cent. No. 3 Northern. This year No. 2 Northern was only a little over 17 per cent., while No. 3 was nearly 30 per cent. Thus, then, last year, 81 per cent. of the crop graded from fair to good, with 59 per cent. good; this year only 51½ per cent. at present can be so graded, and only 21½ per cent. really good. Last year, on October 20, one carload out of 422 was refused grade, while this year that was the fate of 87 carloads out of 619. There is reason to fear that the deterioration of grade will increase.

A bad summer and a late harvest are God's providence which we cannot change. Hence, deficiencies in crops from those causes must be borne with patience. But it is hard to view slovenly farming with patience and to see its results of deterioration without feeling vexed. In European countries of which the climate is as uncertain as that of the Canadian Northwest, the grain would have been carried, as soon as cut, to the barns to be threshed at leisure during the long winter. This the Canadian grain-grower cannot do, as a rule, because he is using more land than he can manage. He crops it, without caring how he impoverishes it, having one idea, to enrich himself as soon as possible. This idea is in the mind of many of the immigrants of the past two years and animates them to face the rigors of winter. It is a mistake to suppose that men and women brought up in England can ever, as a class, be reconciled to the short fierce summer and the long horrid winter of the prairies. If, then, they see the promises made them by the agencies falsified by their incapacity to cope with the difficulties of the present year, many may return to England disheartened, others may come down to the United States, and many a message may be sent even by those who cannot leave, warning their friends against Western Canada. Altogether a reaction in the Canadian boom seems by no means improbable.

H. W.

PULPIT, PRESS AND PLATFORM

The Ceylon Catholic Messenger is edited where Catholicism and Protestantism are contending with the traditions and prejudices of ages for the advancement of the Christian cause. The following from it, on "Heretics Punishing Heresy," will hardly serve as campaign material for the Protestant propaganda among the unbelieving natives:

The Christian Commonwealth, the organ (non-Catholic, of course,) of the Progressive Movement in Religion and Social Ethics, published in London, brings us, in an article headed "The Leaven of Heresy," the rather amusing news—if news it be—that now-a-days the leaven of heresy is working in all denominations—Anglican, Methodist, Presbyterian, Congregational, Baptist, Lutheran—and in all parts of the world—in Australia, South Africa, Canada, the United States, Germany, Britain. Hence the heads of these various Protestant sects are in no small pet. They perceive that poor Protestantism is going to pieces, and they have seriously made up their mind to hunt down heresy mercilessly ere it is too late. Thus we learn that one Rev. Douglas Price, M.A., Rector of All Saints' Church, Brisbane, has been called upon by the Anglican Archbishop of the city to resign, on the ground that his preaching was not in accordance with the standards of the Anglican Church. In vain was a memorial, signed by 242 "regular worshippers at All Saints'," presented to the Archbishop, deploping the hasty decision arrived at by His Grace, and dwelling on the moral and intellectual qualities of their pastor. "If Mr. Price," the memorial said, "was removed, it would be detrimental to their whole church, because he had given them better things, and lifted them up as no other clergyman had ever done. . . . It was in his work in the intellectual life that his great value lay, and those who went to his three hours' service on Good Friday, and had any religious feeling at all, must feel they had trodden the steps of heaven," etc. Notwithstanding these and similar sterling qualities of Mr. Price, eloquently set forth in the memorial, the Archbishop did not relent, and Mr. Price had to resign.

Again there comes from Montreal a long report of the hearing of a libel action brought by Dr. C. G. Workman in the Civil Court, on the ground that he was dismissed from the Wesleyan Theological College through misstatement of his views. He was charged with disbelief in the Virgin Birth, in the doctrine of the Trinity, and in miracles generally. Dr. Workman contends that his views had been misrepresented, but claims that it was his duty to interpret the standards and the Scriptures, and that there is nothing in Methodist law to prevent it. During the hearing of the case, before Judge Weir, a Wesleyan Methodist minister, Rev. Ernest Thomas, of Merrickville, gave evidence likely to interest Methodists in general. Among other things he said, under examination, that it was a fact that there were in the Methodist Church, as in other Churches, different views as to the interpretation of Scripture; he never met any one who literally adhered to Methodist doctrinal standards; nowhere in the Bible was any passage to be found saying that Christ was God; he accepted the idea of original sin, but never heard any one explain or interpret it; there were not only two but twenty schools of belief in Methodism to-day. Another "heretic" is one Mr. R. W. Bartle from South Africa, who was charged by the Superintendent Minister of Wynberg Wesleyan Methodist Circuit with not believing in the "Deity of Jesus Christ." Lastly, there is Rev. W. D. Grant, of New York, tried on a charge of heresy. These and others accused by the heads of their respective sects of "heresy" "are," says the Christian Commonwealth, "almost invariably men of high character and of intellectual distinction, fearless of speech and self-sacrificing in service, men whose teaching meets the needs of perplexed minds and hungry souls, and to the value of whose ministry abundant testimony is forthcoming." Strange that they should be so! Evidently there is a screw loose somewhere!

The Christian Commonwealth thus winds up its leading article: "We long for the coming of the time when there will be a truly Catholic Church that will welcome all earnest aspiring souls, irrespective of mere intellectual belief." As the Jews are still waiting for the Messiah, so the organizers of the "Progressive Movement in Religion"—whose organ the Christian Commonwealth is—are still waiting for the Catholic Church, though the Son of God came nineteen hundred years ago to establish it! But it is not the Church of Christ that the "Progressivists" want. They wish for a Church of their own, in which everyone would be free to believe with impunity whatever he likes. Should their wish be ever fulfilled—we know it never will be—the world would be treated to a funny spectacle indeed! For no spectacle could be more amusing than that of a Catholic Church such as the "Progressivists" long to see. The spectacle of "heretics" hunting down "heretics" is already funny enough. The next scene will assuredly be the re-staging of the well-known comedy of the "Kilkenny Cats"!

Dr. Conceiro da Costa, Governor of Goa, delivered a violent speech on the 25th of August, the day on which the news arrived of the election of Dr. M. Arriaga to the Presidency of the Portuguese Republic. In his discourse, says the Catholic Register of Meliapore (Madras), Dr. Conceiro declared that on the least act of hostility shown against the Republic in Portuguese India, "he would not hesitate to go to the last extreme in order to crush the traitors." "We are not aware, however, of anything at Goa," says the Catholic Register, "that could justify such threats and such violence. On the eve of that day the Governor suppressed two Catholic papers, the Crente, a semi-official organ of the Archbishopric of Goa, for the heinous crime of publishing the last letter which Father Luiz Cabral, the Provincial of the Portuguese Jesuit Fathers, issued, defending himself and his brethren from the infamous calumnies; and the India Portuguesa, the organ of a large political party of Catholic traditions, for attacking the anti-religious deeds of the Government of the Republic. The suppression of the India Portuguesa may have had some connection with the fact that Dr. M. Loyola Furtado, a nephew of the editor of that paper, had been elected Deputy to the National Assembly by one of the districts of Goa, defeating Dr. Prazeres da Costa, the candidate supported by the official party.

ECCLESIASTICAL NEWS

The Rev. John J. Dunn, the New York Diocesan Director of the Propagation of the Faith, who is in strong sympathy with the contemplated Seminary, and who has been for several years looking forward eagerly to its establishment, announces that the Holy Father has sent the following blessing to the Catholic Foreign Missionary Seminary of America:

"To our beloved sons, Thomas Price and James Anthony Walsh:

"For the great work, projected in America, of erecting a Seminary for Foreign Missions, heartily congratulating them, and begging for them every salutary blessing, likewise also to our beloved children, the benefactors who will help them to carry out this work, We lovingly impart, as proof of Our interest and good will, Our Apostolic Blessing.

"Given at the Vatican,

"June 30th, 1911,

"PIUS P.P. X."

The United States is at last to have its own Foreign Mission Seminary. The announcement will bring joy to the army of missionaries now on the field and to thousands of noble Catholic hearts in this country. At the annual meeting of the American archbishops, held last Spring in Washington, it was unanimously agreed that the time was ripe for the training of priests especially destined to heathen missions. The Rev. Thomas F. Price, of Raleigh, North Carolina, and the Rev. James Anthony Walsh, of Boston, were instructed to go to Rome for the necessary authorization and to visit the seminaries of Europe for the purpose of securing information needed for the development of this important work.

These two priests were cordially received by the Holy See, and their project was personally commended by the Holy Father in an autograph letter and by the Congregation of Propaganda. They have since returned, making reports to His Eminence Cardinal Gibbons and to His Excellency the Apostolic Delegate.

The organizers of the new seminary will open temporary quarters at Hawthorne, New York, and proceed at once to form what will be known as the Catholic Foreign Missionary Society of America. They will make known soon afterwards to Catholics throughout the country the full character of their work and will appeal for students. Provision will be made to organize as soon as convenient an apostolic school, where boys fourteen years and over will be received.

Applications will be received also from senior students, who have completed their classical course, and from young priests, the former making the full curriculum of philosophy and theology, the latter spending one year in special preparation before their departure.

The seminary itself will be conducted along the lines followed successfully at Mill Hill, Paris, Milan, Steyl (Holland), and at several similar European institutions, all of which were visited during the summer by the organizers.

Father Price is already well known in this country as the editor of Truth, which has a wide circulation among Catholics and non-Catholics. For the present he will continue to publish the magazine. Father Walsh has been for the past nine years identified with the Society for the Propagation of the Faith, of which he has been Director in the Archdiocese of Boston. He has also for the past five years edited The Field Afar, an illustrated missionary publication, which will hereafter be the official organ of the new work.

The statistics of Methodism for the last ten years are none too reassuring for Methodists. The whole Methodist community of the world, for the sake of greater convenience, is divided into Western and Eastern sections, reports for which were submitted at the recent Ecumenical Conference held in Toronto. It was shown that during the last decade there had been, for the Western section, a gain of fifteen per cent. in membership; but this had to be contrasted with a gain of 28 per cent. for the previous decade and one of 33 per cent. for the decade preceding that. The report for the Eastern section was even more disconcerting. During the first five years of the decade the Wesleyan Church of Great Britain showed a gain of 44,000 members; but in the last five years there had been an actual loss of 13,000 members; and this condition was characteristic of other branches of the Church also. The correspondent of the Transcript (Boston) informs us that "there was no disposition to underestimate the gravity of the situation revealed by these figures. At the same time there was no note of discouragement." Why should there be any discouragement! There is even comfort in the thought of the successful Roman mission, where again, if numbers be wanting, at least the quality of those received, of which Verdesi is a type, will be cheering.

Beaumont College, Old Windsor, celebrated recently its golden jubilee. The college is situated about midway between Windsor and Staines, the Royal Park abutting on the estate to the west. On the river banks a few hundred yards east of the College is Runnymede, with Magna Charta Island. The estate comprises about one hundred acres, including large playgrounds, stretches of wood and farm. The number of students at present is 171 at the School, and 62 at Junior School, St. John's, situated in the college grounds. On leaving Beaumont a large proportion of the boys go to one or other of the two great universities, chiefly Oxford. The number of Beaumont boys who join the army is remarkable.

OBITUARY

Right Rev. Peter Verdager, Titular Bishop of Aulon and vicar apostolic of Brownsville, Texas, died suddenly, on Oct. 26, at Mercedes, Texas, while returning from a visit to a neighboring parish, where he had administered confirmation. He was the last of the Spanish bishops, and spent his life in apostolic poverty, marked by exemplary missionary zeal. Born in the Catalan village of San Pedro de Torrello, Dec. 10, 1835, he left Spain for the United States before the completion of his theological course, Sept. 27, 1860, and entered the seminary at Cape Girardeau, Mo. He was ordained priest by Bishop Arnat in San Francisco, Cal., in 1862. After a service of twelve years as a missionary, he was appointed pastor of the cathedral of Los Angeles, and appointed vicar apostolic of Brownsville July 3, 1890. He was consecrated Titular Bishop of Aulon, in the cathedral of Barcelona, Nov. 9, 1890, and took possession at Brownsville, May 21, 1891.

Rear Admiral James Hoban Sands (retired) died at his home in Washington, on October 27. He was born in Washington, in 1845, of a distinguished naval family. His father was Rear Admiral Benjamin F. Sands, who died in 1884, after having served his country in an able and efficient manner. James entered the Naval Academy from Maryland in 1859, and was graduated in 1863. In May, 1863, he became an ensign, and thereafter passed through successive grades until he reached the rank of rear-admiral in 1902. During his whole career he showed rare courage and devotion to duty. In 1901 he was made a member of the Naval Retiring Board, becoming its president in 1902. He was Superintendent of the Naval Academy from 1905 to 1907.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

To the Editor of AMERICA:

Without any warning, the main building of St. Francis Mission, St. Francis, S. D., caught fire, on October 19, and $30,000 went up in smoke. The Brothers, Sisters, Indians and boys worked hard trying to save what was possible, whilst the Indian girls went to the church and helped with their tears and prayers. One little Indian boy, Johnnie Flood, was hurt in his gallant efforts to put out the fire.

St. Francis' was the largest Indian mission school in the United States. Founded among the Sioux, perhaps the largest and best disposed tribe of Indians left, during its twenty-five years of existence it has been a great factor in their conversion, and we sincerely hope that our kind friends in the East will help us keep up the work now in our misfortune. It was providential that the wind was blowing favorably, as we managed to save the other buildings. The building consumed by fire was the shelter for some 150 Indian boys. It contained all their clothing, bedding and school supplies. Practically all was lost, and not a penny of insurance. One of our first friends here, now an old man, Chief Big Turkey, gave a good example trying to help us save what we could, and an old widow, Mrs. Bad Omaha, came tottering along on a stick and laid a silver dollar in Father Dignan's hand. That silver dollar, I hope, will be the corner-stone of the new mission building that is going to go up, if there are enough widows like her left in the world.

HENRY IGN. WESTROPP, S.J.

To the Editor of AMERICA:

After reading the article in the last issue of AMERICA on the large number of Socialists contributing twenty-five cents per month for the propagation of their nefarious work, it is my opinion that, if the matter were properly placed before our people, we could have easily 50,000 subscribers to the Catholic cause. Why can not AMERICA start the ball rolling? I don't think there would be much trouble in getting one hundred new subscribers in Albany. I shall be pleased to be a member of such an opposition movement to Socialism, and will agree to guarantee three others.

God bless AMERICA and all its staff.

Albany, N. Y., October 23. J. H.

Outfitters to Schools, Institutions and Hospitals for everything in CHINA, GLASSWARE, Cutlery, Cooking Utensils and Sundries used in the dining room and kitchen. A reminder of a few necessities carried in stock:

Pails	Matches	Coffee Urns	Umbrella Stands
China	Crockery	Coffee Mills	Ice Cream Freezers
Trays	Hampers	Toilet Paper	Mops and Wringers
Scales	Fruit Jars	Jelly Moulds	Glass Candle Sticks
Brooms	Glassware	Earthenware	Ash and Garbage Cans
Dusters	Dust Pans	Woodenware	Silver and Plated Ware
Baskets	Stock Pots	Meat Presses	Agate Cooking Utensils
Brushes	Toilet Sets	Flower Vases	Aluminum " "
Sponges	Jardinieres	Meat Choppers	Steel " "
Chamois	Stone Ware	Carpet Sweepers	Fire Proof Earthenware

Your inspection is invited, or our representative will call upon request

O'BEIRNE BROTHERS

317-319 WEST 42d STREET, NEW YORK CITY
Telephone 1177 Bryant One Block West from Broadway and Times Square Subway

Byrne & McDonnell
Members of New York Stock Exchange
Stocks, Bonds and Investment Securities

60 BROADWAY, NEW YORK
Telephone 594 Rector
BYRNE BUILDING, NEWARK, N. J.
Telephone 1890 Market

Correspondence Invited

TOUR OF EUROPE

For the Summer of 1912
A PRIVATE PARTY VISITING
IRELAND, ENGLAND, FRANCE, BELGIUM, HOLLAND,
GERMANY, SWITZERLAND AND ITALY
Arrangements have been made for an Audience with the Holy Father
Itinerary sent on application . . . Address all communications to
MISS AGNES J. KELLY
3828 Spring Garden Street, West Philadelphia, Pa.

Sacred Heart Sanitarium

FOR REST, QUIET, RECUPERATION AND HEALTH
Unsurpassed results obtained in Nervousness, Rheumatism, Heart and Stomach troubles. No surgical, hospital nor insanity cases taken. A delightful, homelike, restful place—ideal for all run down conditions. Hydrotherapy, Electricity, Massage, Zander Gymnasium, Sun parlor; swimming pools, billiards, bowling, etc. Gaited saddle horses, large indoor riding pavilion; suspended running track connected by tunnel with bath department. 17-acre park.
A staff of five physicians give their exclusive services to the patients.

WRITE SISTER SUPERIOR FOR BOOKLET X. MILWAUKEE, WIS.

DENTISTRY

Loose teeth tightened by a new process; teeth without plates. Extracting avoided. High-class and up-to-date dentistry in all branches at reasonable prices.

DRS. BURKE & BURKE
DENTISTS

1947 BROADWAY AND 65TH ST
66th St. Subway, L station and all surface cars.

NOTE THE SIMPLICITY

Of making perfect duplicates with the Daus Improved Tip Top Dupliator. No printer's ink. Always ready. 200 copies from pen-written and 50 copies from type-written original Useful in any business. Sent on Ten Days' Trial Without Deposit. Complete Dupliator, cap size, (prints 8 3/4x13 inches). Contains roll of "Dausco" Oiled Linen Back, duplicating surface which can be used over and over again. Circular of larger sizes free on request.

Felix G. Daus Dupliator Co., Daus Building, 111 John St., New York.

Stained Glass Windows

Mayer & Co.

..of..

Munich, London and
47 Barclay Street New York

Memorial and other Window
Statues and Stations of the Cross

Designs and Estimates Submitted

Specimens of our work may be seen in almost every City in the United States

Please write to Advertisers and mention AMERICA.

Sarony

Photographer
256 Fifth Ave., New York
Favorably known to the Clergy and Laity for many years

When Love and Skill Work Together Expect a Masterpiece

SET OF 30 HIGH CLASS ART POSTALS
of RELIGIOUS SUBJECTS 50¢
SENT BY MAIL
WE SEND FREE WITH ORDER A WELL MADE ALBUM
WITH YOUR NAME STAMPED IN GOLD ON COVER

Set of 30 Souvenir Picture Cards of Religious Subjects, reproduced from Famous Paintings in the National Galleries of Europe. Each subject is elaborately lithographed in the most beautiful colors and of exceptional quality.

An appropriate remembrance gift to friends. Complete set of 30 pictures, including Album to hold 24, with your name stamped in gold on cover (if desired). Mailed to you complete on receipt of 50c. You will be pleased with the artistic beauty of these pictures, at such moderate cost.

IMPORT DISTRIBUTING CO.
25 West 42nd Street New York

MENEELY BELL CO
TROY, N.Y. AND
177 BROADWAY, N.Y. CITY
BELLS

OF all the period styles of furniture, the most charming and graceful in appearance is known as the Sheraton.

That Sheraton was the most successful in originating forms of furniture which, while of delicate outline, were always of geometrically true proportions; strong, without being clumsy, is generally acknowledged.

Globe-Wernicke Bookcases

may now be obtained in the beautiful Sheraton as well as many other delightful art styles and finishes that will harmonize perfectly with any interior decorative scheme preferred, yet be quickly and easily arranged to suit varying wall spaces.

Furthermore—you can buy one or more sections with the absolute assurance of obtaining exact duplicates at any future time.

Sold by 1500 authorized agencies. Where not represented, we ship on approval, freight prepaid.

Complete catalog containing many delightful suggestions, in color, for Individual and Home Libraries, and a copy of "The Blue Book of Fiction" by Hamilton W. Mabie, containing lists of the world's best stories published in English, mailed on request.

Simply address Dept. AA.

The Globe-Wernicke Co., Cincinnati

Rolling at Side

Wilson's Rolling Partitions

A marvelous convenience and most effective method for dividing large rooms in Churches and School Buildings into small rooms, and vice versa; made from various kinds of wood; sound proof and air tight; easily operated and lasting. Made also with Blackboard surface. Fitted to new and old buildings. Used in over 25,000 Churches and Public Buildings.

Write for Partition Catalogue A.

JAS. G. WILSON MFG. CO.

3 & 5 W. 29th Street New York

Also Venetian Blinds, Wood Block Floors, and Rolling Steel Shutters.

Rolling Above

A Lady of experience offers her services as a guide in the Eternal City or other parts of Italy.

Correspondence Invited.

MISS RATHE

Via Paolo Emilio 28<sup>int</sup> 3. Rome, Italy

Pilgrim Walks in Rome

A GUIDE TO THE HOLY PLACES IN ROME AND ITS VICINITY

By F. J. CHANDLER, S.J.

Third edition enlarged $1.60, Postpaid
THE AMERICA PRESS

59 East 83d Street

New York

SURBRUG'S ARCADIA MIXTURE

In each pound there are three to four hundred pipe fulls—it costs $2.00 per pound—three-quarters of a cent a pipe.

If you smoke five pipes a day it's less than four cents—five hours of pleasure for four cents—certainly ARCADIA is cheap enough for you to smoke.

THE SURBRUG COMPANY

New York

The Catholic Mind

The Truth About "The Encyclopaedia Britannica"

BY REV. T. J. CAMPBELL, S.J.

Single numbers 5 cents each, $4.00 per hundred

THE AMERICA PRESS, 59 East 83d Street, New York City

WE OWN AND OFFER

$165,000

First Mortgage Real Estate $500 Gold Coupon Notes

EXECUTED BY

St. Joseph's Convent of Mercy in St. Louis
(A Corporation)

RATE OF INTEREST

5%

PAYABLE SEMI-ANNUALLY

TOTAL ISSUE $300,000

PROPERTY VALUED AT $700,000

All Notes Dated April 10, 1911

Interest coupons payable May 1st and November 1st of each year, at the office of the Mercantile Trust Company, Trustee in Deed of Trust, securing this issue of Notes.

Principal Notes of $500 each, payable as follows:

Numbers 1 to 20, both inclusive, on May 1, 1914 (Sold)	$ 10,000
Numbers 21 to 40, both inclusive, on May 1, 1915 (Sold)	10,000
Numbers 41 to 70, both inclusive, on May 1, 1916 (Sold)	15,000
Numbers 71 to 100, both inclusive, on May 1, 1917 (Sold)	15,000
Numbers 101 to 130, both inclusive, on May 1, 1918 (Sold)	15,000
Numbers 131 to 160, both inclusive, on May 1, 1919	15,000
Numbers 161 to 190, both inclusive, on May 1, 1920	15,000
Numbers 191 to 600, both inclusive, on May 1, 1921	205,000

Maturities available 1919, 1920 and 1921

Total.....$300,000

SECURITY—Six Separate Properties Valued at over $700,000

FIRST: A magnificent tract of ground fronting 314 feet 10 inches on Euclid Avenue by the extraordinary depth of 432 feet 7 inches on Parkview Place and 396 feet on Audubon Avenue, just one-half block east of Forest Park, and one block south of Forest Park Boulevard. There is now in course of erection on this property at a cost of over $380,000 the handsome new fireproof building known as St. Johns Hospital, one of the most modern and complete buildings of its kind in the United States.

THIRD: The Southeast Corner of 22d and Morgan Streets. Lot fronting 168 feet on Morgan Street by a depth of 144 feet 7½ inches on 22d Street, together with the 3-story brick building, now used as the Girls' Industrial School.

FIFTH: Eighty-one acres fronting on the Laclede Station Road and Edgar Road in St. Louis County, near Webster Groves. A magnificent tract of land rapidly increasing in value.

SECOND: The Southeast Corner of 23d and Locust Streets fronting 106 feet 6 inches on Locust Street by 155 feet on 23d Street, together with the 3-story brick building, known as the St. Johns Hospital and covering the entire lot. It is the intention to remove said Hospital to the new building above described as soon as same is completed. The Girls' Industrial School now at 22d and Morgan Streets will then be removed to and will occupy the property at 23d and Locust Streets.

FOURTH: A strip of ground fronting 451 feet 3 inches on the north line of Cook Avenue by a depth of 147 feet 6 inches on Newstead Avenue, just opposite the Rankin School of Mechanical Trades.

SIXTH: A tract of land fronting 320 feet on Nichols Street and bounded by Main and Concord Street in the City of Springfield, Missouri, together with the brick Hospital Building, known as St. Johns Hospital thereon, erected at a cost of Forty Thousand Dollars, exclusive of ground.

The Deed of Trust securing these notes is a first Mortgage on EACH OF THE SIX properties described, making the notes exceptionally well secured.

The Mortgage requires that the improvements be kept insured in a sum of at least $175,000 against fire and $100,000 against tornado. Loss, if any, payable to and policies held by the Mercantile Trust Company for the benefit of note-holders.

The Title to all this property is perfect. Titles have been examined and Certificates issued by Title Guaranty Trust Co. on the St. Louis City and County properties.

Notes payable to bearer, but if desired may be registered free of charge in name of purchaser.

A safe and convenient Investment of $500 or multiples of $500 netting purchasers 5%.

Purchases by non-residents filled with the same dispatch as locally.

Interviews and correspondence invited.

REAL ESTATE
LOAN DEPARTMENT

Mercantile Trust Company

Eighth and Locust Streets
ST. LOUIS, MISSOURI

FESTUS J. WADE, President.

J. B. MOBERLY, Real Estate Loan Officer.

Capital and surplus Nine and One-half Million Dollars.

The Catholic Mind

LIST OF ARTICLES NOT OUT OF PRINT

—1903—

- No. 9. THE ATTITUDE OF MODERN PROTESTANTS TOWARDS THE VIRGINITY OF OUR BLESSED LADY. A. J. MAAS, S.J.
 Nos. 10, 11. GALILEO GALILEI LINCEO.
 No. 22. THE END JUSTIFIES THE MEANS. Rt. Rev. BISHOP LUDDEN, JOHN GERARD, S.J., S. M. BRANDI, S.J.

—1904—

- Nos. 2, 4. STATISTICS OF THE LEADING RELIGIOUS DENOMINATIONS. H. A. KROSE, S.J.
 Nos. 8, 9. THE RELIGIOUS CRISIS IN FRANCE. A. DE MUN.
 No. 14. THE CONCORDAT OF 1901. D. M. O'CONNOR.
 No. 15. SUAREZ AND REGICIDE.
 Nos. 17, 18. THE VATICAN WHITE BOOK.
 No. 24. THE CATHOLIC PROTECTORATE OF FRANCE IN THE EAST AND IN THE FAR EAST.

—1905—

- No. 8. WHO STARTED THE SPY SYSTEM IN FRANCE?
 No. 19. PUBLIC CONTROVERSIES ON RELIGIOUS MATTERS. Etudes.

—1906—

- No. 1. THE FRENCH SEPARATION BILL. TEXT. J. G.
 No. 13. SCIENCE AND RELIGION.
 No. 16. I. OBJECT OF FEDERATION. Rt. Rev. J. F. REGIS CANEVIN, D.D.
 II. DIVORCE. Hon. DANIEL J. KENEFICK.
 No. 17. HOLY COMMUNION IN THE EARLY CHURCH. Edward KING, in the Month.
 No. 18. THE FRENCH ASSOCIATIONS OF WORSHIP AND THEIR SUBSTITUTES.
 No. 24. THE DELUSION OF CHRISTIAN SCIENCE. T. J. CAMPBELL, S.J.

—1907—

- No. 1. LEGAL OPINIONS ON THE FRENCH SPOILIATION.
 No. 4. FERDINAND BRUNETIERE. PIERRE SUAU, S.J.
 No. 19. RECENT PAPAL DOCUMENTS.

—1908—

- No. 4. A PRIMARY CIVIC DUTY.
 No. 7. SCIENCE AND HER COUNTERFEIT. J. GERARD, S.J.
 No. 8. UNIVERSITY EDUCATION IN IRELAND.
 No. 9. PLAIN WORDS ON SOCIALISM. I. C. S. DEVAS, M.A.
 No. 11. CATHOLICS AND THE SOCIAL MOVEMENT. Rt. Rev. MGR. PARKINSON, D.D.
 No. 12. THE MAKING OF A SAINT.
 No. 13. MR. BIRRELL'S UNIVERSITY BILL.
 No. 14. STATUS AND PROPERTY RIGHTS OF THE ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH.
 No. 15. APOSTOLIC CONSTITUTION ON THE ROMAN CURIA.
 No. 16. THE ROMAN COURTS.

- No. 19. THE GENIUS OF CARDINAL WISEMAN. WILFRID WARD.
 No. 20. THE MASS AND THE REFORMATION. J. CANON MOYES.
 No. 22. REVISING THE VULGATE. F. A. GASQUET, Abbot, O.S.B.

—1909—

- No. 1. LORD KELVIN AND THE EXISTENCE OF GOD. H. V. GILL, S.J.
 No. 2. PRIMARY EDUCATION IN FRANCE. J. E. N.
 No. 3. PSYCHOTHERAPY. JAMES J. WALSH, M.D., LL.D.
 Nos. 4, 5. SOCIALISM AND CHRISTIANITY. I, II. Rev. J. F. HOGAN, D.D.
 No. 8. DARWINISM FIFTY YEARS AFTER. G. BONETTI, S.J.
 No. 9. CATHOLIC FEDERATION OF LONDON. Hon. CHARLES RUSSELL.
 No. 10. THE SALFORD DIOCESAN CATHOLIC FEDERATION. The Month, May, '09.
 Nos. 11, 12, 13, 14. CALVIN'S CONVERSION. I, II, III, IV. PAUL BERNARD, in Etudes.
 Nos. 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20. CATHOLIC UNIVERSITIES. I, II, III, IV, V, VI. ALFRED BAUDRILLART.
 No. 21. SOCIALISTS AND CATHOLICS. ETIENNE LAMY.
 No. 24. SERMON ON CARDINAL NEWMAN. JOSEPH RICKABY, S.J.

—1910—

- No. 1. THE FRENCH BISHOPS AND THE EDUCATION PROBLEM. CHAMBRUN.
 No. 24. ETERNAL PUNISHMENT. GEORGE R. ROCHE, S.J.
 No. 3. THE SONS OF ST. FRANCIS. HERBERT THURSTON, S.J.
 Nos. 4, 5, 6, 7, 8. CATHOLIC MISSIONS. I, II, III, IV, V. HILARIÓN GIL.
 Nos. 11, 12, 13. CALLISTUS III AND HALLEY'S COMET. I, II, III.
 Nos. 14, 15. ST. CHARLES BORROMEO ENCYCLICAL.
 No. 16. THE PASTOR AND EDUCATION.
 No. 17. HOLY COMMUNION FOR CHILDREN.
 No. 18. THE XXI EUCHARISTIC CONGRESS. E. SPILLANE, S.J.
 No. 19. THE HOLY EUCHARIST IN EARLY CANADA. T. J. CAMPBELL, S.J.
 Nos. 20, 21. PIUS X ON RECENT MANIFESTATIONS OF MODERNISM.
 No. 22. REMOVAL OF PARISH PRIESTS.
 No. 24. MAYOR NATHAN'S INSULT TO THE POPE.

—1911—

- No. 2. THE PORTUGUESE REVOLUTION.
 No. 3. SOME CAUSES OF THE PORTUGUESE REVOLUTION.
 Nos. 4, 5. SPAIN AS SHE IS. Catholic Herald of India.
 No. 6. SOCIALISM IN THE SCHOOLS. Hon. BIRD S. COLER.
 No. 7. CONDEMNATION OF MODERNISM. Rt. Rev. B. J. KEILEY.
 No. 8. ONE HUNDRED BEST CATHOLIC BOOKS.
 Nos. 9, 10. THE CHILD IN THE HOME AND THE SCHOOL. Rt. Rev. DR. CLEARY.
 Nos. 11, 12. CARDINAL GIBBONS' JUBILEE.
 Nos. 13, 14. PROTESTS OF PIUS X AND BISHOPS OF PORTUGAL.
 No. 15. THE TRUTH ABOUT THE "ENCYCLOPÆDIA BRITannica." T. J. CAMPBELL, S.J.
 No. 16. THE CATHOLIC PRESS. E. SPILLANE, S.J.
 No. 17. ENGLISH ECONOMISTS AND CATHOLIC ETHICS. Rev. MICHAEL MAHER, S.J.
 No. 18. CATHOLICISM AT HOME AND ABROAD.
 No. 19. THE EARLY CHURCH AND COMMUNION. JOHN RICKABY, S.J.

Single numbers 5 cents each, $4.00 per hundred
 Double numbers 10 " " 7.00 " "

Copies of THE CATHOLIC MIND not included in this list will be accepted in exchange for any of the above

THE AMERICA PRESS, 59 East 83d Street, New York City

The Coward Shoe

"REG. U. S. PAT. OFF"

For Children Whose Ankles Turn-In

The effect on the ankles of wearing shoes that DO NOT support the arch.

The same feet in a pair of COWARD ARCH SUPPORT SHOES—ankle strain entirely relieved.

The Coward Arch Support Shoe is an approved orthopedic remedy and preventative of falling arch, weak ankles and "flat-foot", in both growing and matured feet.

Upon wearing this Coward Shoe, overstrained muscles are gradually relieved, and protected and strengthened in a marked degree.

Coward Arch Support Shoe and Coward Extension Heel, have been made by James S. Coward, in his Custom Department, for over 30 years.

SOLD NOWHERE ELSE

JAMES S. COWARD, 264-274 Greenwich St., N. Y.

(NEAR WARREN STREET)

Mail Orders Filled

Send for Catalogue

TYPEWRITER RIBBONS AND CARBON PAPERS

Especially adapted for use in Colleges and Schools

Send for our Circular as to how we will save you 50 per cent. on supplies

SNELLING & SON 225 34th Street, South Brooklyn, N. Y.
Purveyors to U. S. Gov't

ENTERTAINMENT SUPPLIES

For Schools and Churches
PLAYS, DRILLS and SUPPLIES

suited for all occasions

Send for free Catalogue
ENTERTAINMENT SUPPLY CO.
3 West 29th Street, New York, N. Y.

We can supply anything in the line of Kitchen and Bakers' Utensils

Catalogue "M" FREE upon request

French Cooking Ranges and Broilers

Cooking Equipments of Every Description

JAMES Y. WATKINS & SON 16, 18, 20 CATHERINE ST. NEW YORK, N. Y.

BOUND VOLUMES OF AMERICA

A CATHOLIC REVIEW OF THE WEEK

SIX MONTHS TO A VOLUME

$3.50

The AMERICA Press, 59 East 83d Street, New York

A SHOPPING GUIDE TO ABRAHAM & STRAUS

This store has a department organized for the purpose of supplying the convent, academy orphan asylum or school, hospital, etc., with serges, merinos, draps d'été, linens, etc., and clothing worn by children. The contract department, as it is called, also advises and estimates on carpets, furniture, shades, etc. A representative familiar with the requirements of religious communities will call, as soon as request is sent to Contract Department.

ABRAHAM STRAUS

420 Fulton Street, Brooklyn, New York

"We furnish any book published anywhere"

MAY WE SERVE YOU?

Publishers, Importers and Booksellers

Our Monthly Book List Free Upon Request

LEO KELLY & CO.

118 East 28th Street, New York

I Am Direct Importer of VINUM EX VITE Altar Wine

Mr. Joseph C. Butler, who imported Vinum ex Vite Altar Wine, died on September 23d, 1910, his heirs settling up his estate. I purchased his interest and trademarks in the wine business. This wine was imported in cases containing 20-litre bottles and in barrels containing 21 gallons, bearing the producer's certificate that the wine was made according to the rules of the Holy Congregation of Rites. I am making arrangements with the producer to ship me the wine in the same shape as Mr. Butler received it. All orders for this wine will be promptly filled. Price will be the same as heretofore, i.e., $12.50 per case and $1.80 per gallon, for the present. The certificate from the Vicar-General of Tarragone will be on the file in my office.

Depot for

GUILLON 8-DAY TAPERS

and

PERFUMED CHARCOAL

L. J. CALLANAN

41 and 43 Vesey Street, New York

Telephone No. 8585-8586 Cortlandt

DIRECTORY OF COLLEGES AND ACADEMIES

Georgetown University WASHINGTON, D. C.

Directory for Catalogues or Information

The College (Graduates and Undergraduates Schools)
The Registrar, 37th & O Sts., N. W.

The School of Medicine
The Dean, 920 H St., N. W.

The Training School for Nurses
Georgetown University Hospital

The School of Dentistry
The Dean, 920 H St., N. W.

The School of Law
The Dean, 506 E. St., N. W.

The Astronomical Observatory
The Director, Georgetown University
Rev. Joseph Himmel, S.J., President

COLLEGE OF ST. ELIZABETH

CONVENT STATION
Near Morristown, N. J.

One hour from New York City.

A Catholic Institution for the Higher Education of Women

COLLEGE Four years' course leading to the degrees of B. A. and B. S.

SCHOOL OF PEDAGOGY Required for entrance two years of College work

SCHOOL OF MUSIC. COURSE LEADING TO THE DEGREE OF B. M.

ACADEMY A High School Course of Four Years. Full College Preparatory Work.
GRAMMAR AND PRIMARY DEPARTMENTS SEPARATE

REGISTERED By the New Jersey State Board of Education and the University of the State of New York
Apply for Year Book to The Secretary

MT. ST. JOSEPH ON THE WISSAHICKON

For illustrated catalogue address MOTHER

CATHOLIC COLLEGE FOR WOMEN
situated in the romantic Valley of the Wissahickon. Degrees conferred. Also Academic, Commercial, Intermediate and Elementary Departments. Very special advantages in Music and Art. The piano student possesses superior opportunities in the use of the Virgil Clavier Method pursued throughout the course. The Art Studio is admirably equipped, and every attention is given to the study of Art, both in theory and practice. Gymnasium perfectly equipped. Outdoor exercise, tennis, basket ball, fencing, etc.

SUPERIOR, Chestnut Hill, Philadelphia, Pa.

HOLY CROSS COLLEGE

WORCESTER
MASS.

Conducted by the Jesuit Fathers.

Largest Catholic College in America

Extensive grounds and exceedingly healthy location. New buildings, large gymnasium, indoor running track, hot and cold baths, modern conveniences. Easily reached on main line from Albany or New York to Boston via Springfield. Board, tuition, washing and mending, use of gymnasium, library and reading room, physical instruction and medical attendance, $260 a year. Furnished room and attendance extra. Send for catalogue to
PREFECT OF STUDIES.

Seton Hall College

FOUNDED 1856

South Orange, New Jersey

COLLEGE AND HIGH SCHOOL

Bayley Hall for Students
of Grammar Course

FOR CATALOGUE ADDRESS
Very Rev. James F. Mooney, D.D., Pres.

College of St. Catherine, St. Paul, Minn.

A Catholic College for Girls.

Accredited by the Minnesota State Board of Public Instruction and by several prominent Universities.

Seventy Acre Campus. Fireproof Buildings. COMPLETE COURSES IN THESE DEPARTMENTS. THE COLLEGIATE, leading to the degree of Bachelor of Arts. THE ACADEMIC or COLLEGE PREPARATORY. MUSIC AND PAINTING in their various branches. DOMESTIC ART, HOUSEHOLD SCIENCE and COOKING. Year Book Forwarded on Application. Address: THE SECRETARY.

Academy of St. Joseph

In-the-Pines

BRENTWOOD, N. Y.

A Boarding School for Young Ladies,

Affiliated with the State University

PROSPECTUS EXPLAINS THE TERMS, ETC.

ISAAC JOGUES

Discoverer of Lake George

BY T. J. CAMPBELL, S.J.

Aside from its historical value it presents a vivid pen picture of a saintly and heroic missionary, with all the stirring setting of early pioneer days.

55 PAGES

9 ILLUSTRATIONS

Leatherette, 25 cents; green silk cloth, gilt top, deckled edge, 50 cents; edition de luxe, full flexible green cowhide, stamped with gold, gilt top, deckled edge, $1.00.

By mail 10 cents extra

THE AMERICA PRESS

59 East 83rd St. NEW YORK

Convent of the Holy Child

SHARON HILL, DELAWARE COUNTY, PA.
15 Minutes from Philadelphia

ACADEMY FOR YOUNG LADIES

Highest English Course. French, Drawing, Music by Certified Teachers. Preparation for foreign travel. As the numbers are limited, special care can be given to the formation of character and training of each child. Address Mother Superior

Advantages: Winter in sunny Italy, summer in Switzerland, Germany and England

Stella Viae ROME

Finishing School for Girls

For Prospectus apply to the
Reverend Mother, Stella Viae College,
271, Via Nomentana, Rome, Italy

Lessons from the best Masters in Music and Art. Lectures in Italian, French, German, Spanish and English by University Professors and others.

Special private and conversational lessons.

Chaperonage to Concerts; frequent visits to Basilicas, Art Galleries, Museums and the splendid ruins of Rome and its environs.

If desired, tours to Naples, Florence, Milan and Venice.

Atmosphere and comforts of a cultured and Christian home, with the devoted care of Nuns speaking one's own tongue.

Pleasant intercourse with foreign pupils of good social standing

St. Mary's College

St. Marys, Kansas

BOARDING COLLEGE

Under the Jesuit Fathers

Two Courses of Study:

Classical and Commercial

For Catalogue, send to

REV. ALOYSIUS A. BREEN, S.J., President

Boarding & Day School

HOLY ANGELS

FORTLEY
New Jersey

Conducted by School Sisters of Notre Dame

Location beautiful, healthy and convenient.
New Buildings, large gymnasium.

DEPARTMENTS: Academic, course of four years; Commercial, course of two years. Grammar and Primary Departments separate. Special advantages in Music and Art.

FOR YEAR BOOK ADDRESS SECRETARY

The Winona Seminary, Winona, Minnesota

CATHOLIC COLLEGE FOR WOMEN

Faculty of Specialists. Separate college residence. Confers degrees B.A., B.S. and Litt. B. Full college preparatory courses—certificates accepted by all leading universities. Secretarial course. Conservatory of Music confers degree of B. Mus.—visiting director, Emil Liebling. Departments of Art, Household Economics, Dramatic Expression. Private Rooms. Moderate Prices. Splendid Gymnasium. Extensive Campus. Students from thirteen States. Direct lines of railway from Chicago, Milwaukee, St. Paul, St. Louis.

Earnest, capable young women who have a purpose in study are solicited.

WRITE FOR CATALOGUE . . . . . DEPARTMENT BULLETIN

An Opportunity for Schools and Colleges

ADVERTISE HERE

For advertising rates, address "MANAGER"
AMERICA, a Catholic Review of the Week
59 East 83d Street, New York City

THE Paine
BUSINESS SCHOOL
1931
BROADWAY, COR. 62ND

Shorthand
Typewriting
Telegraphy
Bookkeeping, Etc.
Taught Day
and Evening
Catalogue.

DIRECTORY OF COLLEGES AND ACADEMIES

A CATHOLIC INSTITUTION FOR THE HIGHER EDUCATION OF WOMEN

College of Mount Saint Vincent On Hudson

CITY OF NEW YORK

DAY PUPILS AND BOARDERS

Location Unsurpassed for Convenience, Healthfulness and Beauty
One-half Hour from Grand Central Station

PROFESSORS OF DISTINCTION . . . . . EQUIPMENT OF THE BEST

COLLEGE—Four years' course leading to the Degrees of B.A. and B.S.
SCHOOL OF PEDAGOGY—Required for entrance two years of college work

FALL TERM BEGINS SEPTEMBER 25, 1911 . . . . . WRITE FOR PROSPECTUS

PREPARATORY DEPARTMENT

ACADEMY MOUNT SAINT VINCENT ON HUDSON

CITY OF NEW YORK

HELEN AUGUSTA HAYES

VOCAL INSTRUCTOR

64 East 34th Street
NEW YORK CITY

CARLTON ACADEMY

Summit, New Jersey

A Catholic School that meets college requirements in Greek, Latin, English, French, German, Mathematics and the Sciences.

Charles H. Schultz, A.M., Headmaster.

St. Mary's College & Academy

MONROE, MICHIGAN

FOR YOUNG WOMEN AND GIRLS

CONDUCTED by the Sisters of the Immaculate Heart. Beautifully located between Detroit and Toledo. A high standard maintained for sixty-five years in Culture, Education and Discipline. Courses include Collegiate, Academic and Preparatory. Special attention given to Music, Art, Expression and Domestic Science University affiliation. Separate department for little girls.

For illustrated prospectus apply to Mother Superior

The Only True American School System

Rev. THOMAS J. CAMPBELL, S.J.

PAMPHLET 24 PAGES

5 Cents per Copy. $2.50 Per Hundred

THE AMERICA PRESS 59 East 83d Street
NEW YORK

IMMACULATA SEMINARY

Mount Marian, Washington, D. C.

Select School for Girls. Situated in the Suburbs

Classical, Literary and Special Courses.
Two-year Course for High School Graduates.
Music and Art. Abundant outdoor exercise.
Sightseeing with experienced Chaperons.

For Year Book address, Sister Secretary

ST. MARY - OF - WOODS

COLLEGE

For Young Women. 71st Year
4 Years. Degrees, B.A., B.S., Ph.B.

Academic — College Preparatory — and
Grammar Departments. Elective
Courses. Conservatory of Music, Vocal and Instrumental. Art Studios.
Natorium, Gymnasium, Bowling,
etc. Out-of-Door Sports, Horseback Riding, Boating, Archery,
Tennis. For Bulletins, Address, Sister Secretary, Box
70, St. Mary-of-the-Woods,
Vigo County, Indiana.

Georgetown

Visitation Convent

A boarding and day School for
Young Ladies and Little Girls

Delightfully Situated on Georgetown Heights

WASHINGTON, D. C.

Founded in 1799 Address Sister Directress

St. Joseph College Bardstown, Ky.

CONDUCTED BY XAVERIAN BROTHERS

Preparatory, Academic, Commercial and Collegiate Courses.

A Catholic home-like institution for boys and young men. Send for prospectus.

ST. JOSEPH'S ACADEMY, 6400 Minnesota Avenue, St. Louis, Mo.

CONDUCTED BY SISTERS OF ST. JOSEPH

BOARDING
AND DAY SCHOOL
FOR YOUNG LADIES
AND GIRLS

THE site of the Institution is in the highest degree healthy;
situated on the west bank of the Mississippi; commanding a fine view of the river and vicinity.

Grounds ample for exercise and well kept. Guarantees a solid and refined education in: Classical,
Literary, Scientific and Commercial Courses. Preparatory, Intermediate and Primary Courses. Highest facilities in all Departments of Art and Music. For other particulars address, Sister Directress.

MARY ALOYSIA HARDEY

RELIGIOUS OF THE SACRED HEART

1809-1886

WITH AN INTRODUCTION BY THE REV. THOMAS J. CAMPBELL, S.J.

440 Pages 16 Illustrations With Index

THE LIFE STORY OF A REMARKABLE WOMAN

A book sure to do good and sure to give pleasure.—The Ave Maria.

It is worthy tribute to a great soul.—The Irish Monthly.

We congratulate its author and the AMERICA PRESS in giving us such a valuable work dealing with the life and labors of this eminent and noble religious.—New World, Chicago.

To miss reading this book is to miss a great blessing.—The Pilot, Boston.

Teachers especially will find the life abounding in valuable suggestions.—The Republic, Boston.

A book of special religious interest.—New York World.

An edifying and intensely interesting life.—Catholic Times, Liverpool.

PRICE TWO DOLLARS

By Mail 20 cents extra

THE AMERICA PRESS 59 EAST 83d STREET
NEW YORK CITY

THE W. J. FEELEY COMPANY
Ecclesiastical Art Metal Workers
 PROVIDENCE, RHODE ISLAND

Illustration of Chalice

of special design. The chalice is 10½ inches in height, is richly embossed and mounted with diamonds. It was presented to Cardinal Gibbons by a number of his Southern friends on the occasion of his

Golden Jubilee
October, 1911

JUST PUBLISHED

Masses For The Dead

By REV. J. T. ROCHE, LL.D.

32 pages, paper cover, 4½ x 6 inches

Price $2.50 per hundred

$22.50 per Thousand

FOR FREE DISTRIBUTION

This brochure by Father Roche is intended for distribution at Churches for the purpose of showing the great good that can be done for the helpless souls in Purgatory by prayer, and particularly by Masses for their special intention.

WRITE FOR FREE SAMPLE

The Prayer Book for Children

By MOTHER MARY LOYOLA

Size 3 x 4¼ inches, 154 pages, well printed on extra fine paper and containing fifteen reproductions of well chosen religious pictures.

IDEAL IN ITS SIMPLICITY

Paper binding ..... 15 cts.
 Cloth binding ..... 30 "
 French Morocco, gilt edges..... 50 "
 Real Morocco, gilt edges.....$1.00
 Discount to Reverend Clergy and Religious.

For Sale By All Catholic Booksellers

Published by

P. J. KENEDY & SONS

44 Barclay Street - - - New York

Pioneer Priests of North America

By Rev. T. J. CAMPBELL, S. J.

VOLUME I

Among the Iroquois

AN INTERESTING STORY OF THE MISSIONARIES AMONG THE IROQUOIS.

333 Pages

27 Illustrations

Price $1.60 By Mail
 20c extra

VOLUME II

Among the Hurons

TELLS THE HEROIC STORY OF DE BRÉBEUF AND HIS ASSOCIATES.

480 Pages

24 Illustrations

Price $2.00 By Mail
 20c extra

THE AMERICA PRESS

59 East 83rd Street New York City

Among the Algonquins

The ethnic group that figured more extensively in our history than any other Indian family :: :: ::

VOL. III OF

PIONEER PRIESTS OF NORTH AMERICA

BY

Rev. Thomas J. Campbell, S.J.

336 Pages

22 Illustrations

Price, $2.00 By Mail
 20c. extra

THE AMERICA PRESS, 59 East 83d St., New York, N. Y.

AMERICA

A CATHOLIC REVIEW OF THE WEEK

Vol. VI, No. 5

(Price 10 Cents)

NOVEMBER 11, 1911

($3.00 a year)

Whole No. 135

CHRONICLE

The New Cardinals—The Initiative and Referendum—President's Tour—The Naval Review—Violation of Election Law—The Philippines—Mexico—Canada—Great Britain—Ireland—Rome—Italy—Portugal—France—China—Germany—Austria.....97-100

QUESTIONS OF THE DAY

The Cardinalate—Care of the Unemployed—A Great Catholic Soldier—The "Teaching Assembly of Contradictory Overseers".....101-106

CORRESPONDENCE

Italy's Prime Minister at Turin—An Unexpected Champion—French Freemasons—Second Year of the Portuguese Republic—Where Every Prospect Pleases.....106-109

EDITORIAL

More Modern Scholarship—A Costly Failure—Ingersoll Monument—Gallantry or Bravado—Freemasonry and the Church—Notes.....110-112

NEW YORK CHURCH CORPORATIONS.

112-113

LITERATURE

The "Anonymous Poet" of Poland—Socialism, the Nation of Fatherless Children—History of Modern Europe—Garibaldi and the Making of Italy—Our Daily Bread—Daffodils—St. Anselm, Archbishop of Canterbury—When "Toddlers" Was Seven—Notes—Books Received....113-117

EDUCATION

Strong Plea for Christian Education at a Methodist Gathering—Mr. Coler Warns His Fellow Protestants Against the Growth of Socialistic Influence in the Public Schools—Statistics of Jesuit Colleges in the Middle West.....117-118

SOCIOLOGY

Canada's Condition from the Commercial Point of View—Progress in Boston's Italian Colony. 118-119

PULPIT, PRESS AND PLATFORM

Catholics and Science.....119

ECCLESIASTICAL NEWS

Cardinal-elect Falconio's Farewell to the Hierarchy of the United States—A Wonderful Religious Parade in Philadelphia—Cardinal Gibbons Visits the Juvenile Court.....119-120

SCIENCE

New Code of International Electric Symbols—Conductivity of Iron at Different Temperatures—Determination of Longitude by Wireless—Oxygenation of Water by Sunlight.....120

OBITUARY

Rev. Charles Eberschweiler, S.J.....120

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

Neglect of Citizenship.....120

CHRONICLE

The New Cardinals.—Archbishops Farley and Falconio, Cardinals-elect, have arranged to leave New York on November 15, en route to Rome, for the Consistory to be held on November 27, at which they will receive the insignia of their new offices. The New York clergy have sent the following cablegram to the Pope: "Five hundred priests of the archdiocese of New York, assembled at the monthly recollection, thank most profoundly your Holiness for having named for the honor of the cardinalate our beloved Archbishop."

The Initiative and Referendum.—The constitutionality of the right of the people of a State or municipality to legislate by the initiative and referendum is to be tested by an appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States. The test case was begun by Oregon, but the States of Washington and Oklahoma have also filed briefs. An impressive array of counsel will appear in the case.

President's Tour.—After reviewing, in New York harbor, on November 2, the assembled vessels of the Atlantic fleet, mobilized to demonstrate the right of the United States to be classed as the second greatest naval power of the world, President Taft went on to the Virginia Hot Springs for a rest before taking up the last stage of his tour throughout the country. It has been the longest trip ever taken by a President. Official figures show that it covered 15,270 miles, and included 29 States, in 23 of which he made speeches. Up to his arrival in New York he had been on the road 48 days and had stopped at 205 cities, towns and villages. He made 306 speeches, and spoke to more than 1,500,000 persons, while nearly 5,000,000 saw him. In the seven weeks he was never out of touch with the White House and government affairs. More than 4,800 letters and telegrams were received.

The Naval Review.—The greatest war fleet that has ever been seen on this side of the Atlantic brought its review in the Hudson River to a close on Thursday, November 2, when President Taft, standing bareheaded on the bridge of the Mayflower, in a 50-mile gale and a temperature of 40 degrees, heard 462 guns roar out their salute, while 30,000 officers and men stood with their hands to their caps to pay him tribute. In that review 22 first-class fighting ships, 20 battleships and 2 armored cruisers, led by the flagship Connecticut, and the rear brought up by the Florida, passed him at a 15-knot gait, crews at the salute and bands playing the Star Spangled Banner, as they passed out to sea. "This demonstration," said the President, "has shown the skill of the officers, the preparedness of the fleet and its high military efficiency. Unless," he added, "a navy is maintained at the highest possible state of efficiency it is a needless extravagance. This demonstration has had an educational value in arousing patriotism," etc., etc. He regretted that there were but 22 destroyers, whereas to meet the full requirements there should be 100 destroyers, or an average of four to each battleship. We should also have high-speed cruisers capable of twenty-eight knots an hour.

Violation of Election Law.—It is announced that certain periodicals have been printing political advertisements without proper compliance with the law of Massachusetts, and that Governor Foss charges the editors of the "Outlook" of New York, with violating the law. This, according to the report from Boston, makes Doctor Abbott, Colonel Roosevelt and others of the editorial staff liable to investigation by the Grand Jury of Massachusetts. The specific offense appears to be the publication on October 28th of an advertisement paid for by the American Wool Company which did not bear the company's name, and which is regarded by Governor Foss as a campaign document. The statute says that no corporation doing business in the State and no officer or agent in behalf of it shall pay or contribute in order to aid, promote or prevent the nomination or election of any person to public office, or aid or antagonize the interests of any party. The law also says that no person shall solicit or receive such contribution, and the penalty is a fine of not more than $10,000 for a corporation, and of not more than $5,000 or imprisonment for not more than six months for an officer or agent violating the statute, but the case has been dropped.

The Philippines.—The Chinese district in Manila disappeared in fire on November 2. The loss is estimated at $1,000,000. The Chinese of the city are jewellers, goldsmiths, dyers, painters and carpenters. There are restaurants and a Chinese theatre there. The district is just beyond the Escolta, the principal business street, where there are many American and foreign business houses.

Mexico.—Leopoldo Batres, conservator of archeological monuments under Diaz, who fled the country when the autocrat fell, is accused by his successor, F. M. Rodriguez, of having sold many articles to foreign museums, to his own personal pecuniary advantage, the exportation of such objects being forbidden by law. The charge is also made publicly that Batres manufactured antiques and disposed of them in quantities, a museum in New York City having enriched its collection with some of his clever imitations. An attempt will be made to extradite him.—President De la Barra asked and obtained permission from the Congress to appear personally before the two Houses in joint session and make a report on his whole administration.

Canada.—It seems certain that the idea of a Canadian Navy is to be abandoned, and that a plebiscite will be taken to determine whether Canada will contribute to the Imperial navy. The Montreal Star is taking the lead in favoring such a contribution; but it is very doubtful whether it will be carried. In the meantime a dozen young cadets from the wrecked Niobe are serving with the British fleet, and one wonders what is going to become of them, if there is to be no fleet to receive them.—There is an immense amount of wheat still lying unthreshed in the western fields. Farmers now say that if November is frosty without snow, they will be able to save it. As noted a week ago, the quality of the grain received at Winnipeg is growing worse steadily.—The entire vote cast in the late elections was between 1,100,000 and 1,200,000; the Conservative majority was somewhat less than 40,000.—The provincial elections are impending in Ontario. The Orange wing of the Conservatives are working to make the abolition of bi-lingual schools an issue. They claim to have a pledge from Sir James Whitney to this effect.—Though Vancouver, B. C., is a city of over 100,000 inhabitants, big game is found within its limits. Last year two bears were killed in the suburbs, and last month a panther took possession of Stanley park, where it killed 18 animals of the menagerie before it was slain.

Great Britain.—Parliament has reassembled.—A strike of Taxicab chauffeurs has begun in London.—There is much dissatisfaction with the details of the Insurance Bill. Nevertheless, Mr. Lloyd George declares that he will pass it as it stands.—The Court of Enquiry holds the Olympic to blame for the late collision with the cruiser Hawke. The latter had the right of way, yet the former passed so close as to draw it in by suction, while shallows prevented it from deflecting from the line of the Olympic's course.

Ireland.—There were some remarkable Home Rule pronouncements towards the end of October. "Our scheme involves," said Mr. Birrell, "a Parliament of two Chambers, with an Executive responsible to it, having full control over purely Irish concerns," which should become "a training school for Irish statesmen and administrators." They would "face the monetary difficulty, boldly and with no niggardly hand." The bill will be introduced in March, and Mr. Asquith announced, October 21, that it would be "not a shadow or simulacrum of power and responsibility, but full self-government." Speaking the following day in Wicklow, Mr. Redmond said: "The Bill is not only in course of preparation; it is nearly completed. I may not now tell you all its details, but I can say that both in its principles and in its details it will be a Bill satisfactory to the Nationalists of Ireland. . . . I understand the conditions that are necessary to make this a final settlement from the financial, as well as the political point of view, and I ask my fellow-countrymen to trust me and my colleagues for a few months, till the Bill in all its details will be before Irish public opinion." The Irish leader's appeal referred to articles and letters in certain Nationalist papers and resolutions of public boards, insisting that the Bill must give Ireland full control of its own taxation, including Customs and Excise, as otherwise it could not effect a satisfactory and final settlement. Mr. Redmond also announced that the Government would accept the Irish Party's amendments on the Insurance Bill in regard to its application to Ireland. Mr. Devlin said this Bill would be as advantageous to agricultural as to industrial workers, especially when the Irish Parliament had nationalized the railways—and that would be its first work—thus providing quick and cheap transit for agricultural products.—The Customs and Excise Commissioners report a decrease of a million gallons in the whiskey distilled during the year, and a slight increase in beer, but the revenue is increased 70 per cent. There were 87,907 pounds of tobacco grown in Ireland, 1910-1911, and the duty charged was $61,575, somewhat over seventy cents a pound. This illustrates how "free trade" affects Irish industries.—The Limerick Vigilance Committee on the exclusion of unclean literature boarded the trains bringing the British Sunday papers, October 21, and persuaded the agents to have them all readdressed to England. The Committee was headed by Father O'Connor, Adm., and supported by several hundred sturdy men. Similar action is being taken in other centres.—The National Education Commissioners report favorably in regard to teachers' pensions and salary, improvements in the elementary school system and suitable preliminary provisions for the formation of teachers qualified to teach Gaelic. They protest against the continued delay of Parliament to accede to their proposals.

Rome.—On October 22 the Pope received the Fathers of the First National Armenian Council ever held in Rome. It was presided over by the Patriarch Mgr. Terzian. On the Tuesday following nine new Armenian bishops were consecrated by the Patriarch. It is regarded as next in importance to the famous consecration of fourteen French bishops by Pius X after the breaking of the Concordat. There are considerable factional troubles in Armenia, due to the opposition of two or three bishops of the Armenian rite who are Turkish officials. But the greatest unanimity prevails among the sixteen prelates who took part in the Council.

Italy.—On October 30 news came of a massacre of 4,000 Arabs, including women and children, in the oasis some miles in extent between the city of Tripoli and the Italian outposts. In retaliation the Arabs attacked the outlying forts and drove the Italians into the city proper, killing many and capturing many prisoners, stores and ammunition. The usual denials of these events come from the sources interested. It is announced that 100,000 reserves will be called to the colors, and also that an Italian fleet will attack the Turkish possessions outside of Tripoli. Meantime, the Turks in France are contributing funds to the campaign, and some of the tribes of Tunis are crossing the frontiers into Tripoli. Fears were entertained at one time that an anarchist propaganda had been begun among the Italian troops. A Lieutenant-Colonel was shot by one of the soldiers.

The clergy appear to be enthusiastic upholders of the war. One paper reports Cardinal Vincenzo Vannutelli as reminding the Marquis Patrizio Patrizi-Montoro, whom His Eminence was uniting in wedlock to an Odescalchi, that one of his forbears was a standard bearer in olden times against the Turks, and a chance for similar glory had come again, etc. The Osservatore Romano made no mention of the marriage or the discourse. At Tripoli the Prefect Apostolic, after a Te Deum was sung to celebrate the landing of the troops, made a great speech on the Pope, the King, the navy, and even alluded to a possible expulsion of the Turks from Constantinople; but the whole thing was condemned by an Italian Deputy named De Felice Giuffrida, as calculated to make the Turks believe it was a religious war. If they get that impression the missions are doomed. It is hoped that the Prefect did not speak as he is reported to have done. Official Italy took care to make no such mistake. Two proclamations were issued by the King, one to the army of occupation, in which not even the name of God is mentioned; another to the Turkish and Arab population. In the latter, the opening phrase is "In the name of God, merciful and clement, the King of Italy, whom may God save," etc. It bubbles over with piety and then promises the people that their religion will not be interfered with. The document closes with two quotations from the Koran.—As far as the attitude of the Holy See is concerned, the Osservatore, quoted by Rome, says: "Not a few journals which wish to serve in the Catholic ranks and several orators, ecclesiastical and lay, in discussing the war express themselves as if they regarded it as a Holy War, undertaken in the name and with the support of religion and of the Church. We are authorized to say that the Holy See, not only does not assume any responsibility for such interpretations but, while bound to remain outside the actual conflict, cannot approve of it and very much deplores it."

Portugal.—Families of political prisoners who have been kept incomunicado for the past two or three months have petitioned the Government for their release, if they are still alive, on promise of emigrating at once to America.—At a recent political demonstration in Oporto, a red, white and purple flag, said to be that of the coming Spanish republic, headed the parade. President Arriaga uncovered as it passed him.—The Post Office is using the remainders of the stamps commemorating the fifth centenary of Prince Henry the Navigator, first issued in 1894. They are surcharged Republica, in black.—The protected cruiser, San Rafael, went aground in the night off Villa do Conde and could not be floated.—A few more churches have been looted in Braga, Setubal, and elsewhere. Soldiers of the republic have taken part in the outrages.—The long heralded royalist invasion, under Paiva Couceiro, does not seem to have proved an unqualified success. The Spanish Government has hampered the invaders by redoubling its vigilance on the border.

France.—It is consoling to hear that in Paris alone 65 parochial committees of laymen have been formed, 40 of which are in full operation in bringing priests and people together. It will be news to many that there are comparatively few parishes in the great city; some of them number 100,000 souls. The yearly average of civil funerals is 10,000, partly due to lack of churches. All this is being changed. Within the last six years twenty-one new parishes have been formed and forty others planned.

China.—The Imperial Government has made a complete surrender to the demands of the National Assembly and to the threats of a large section of the army, and has issued an edict for the establishment of a constitutional government with a cabinet, from which nobles shall be excluded, and full pardon of political offenders granted. The decree, which is ostensibly from the hand of the five-year-old Emperor, is written in the first person, and is most humble and apologetic in tone. So the Manchu rule is at an end, Yuan Shi Kai is made Premier and will organize a new cabinet. Regarding the form of the new constitution, while the National Assembly would have one like Great Britain's, the southern provinces prefer a government more resembling ours. Desperate fighting was going on meanwhile at Hankow, which the Imperialists had retaken from the revolutionists. An army of 25,000 drove the rebels from their position and a massacre followed in the streets of the city. It was announced that during the fight a conflagration was sweeping the city. But at Shi-Kia-Tan, a Chinese regiment in the Emperor's pay, mutinied, killed their brigadier-general, then slaughtered one thousand Manchus. Peking has been in great fear of a similar outbreak, hundreds are leaving the city, many shops are closed, and missionaries are preparing to defend themselves. But it is hoped that on the new Premier's return to Peking from the seat of war a greater sense of security will be established. On November 3 the capture of Shanghai was reported. It surrendered without opposition. The fall of Nanking and Ching-Kiang is expected.

Germany.—The second part of the Morocco treaty has now received the signature of Kiderlen-Waechter and Cambon. It determines the compensation to be made in the Congo and shows that perfect harmony exists at present between Germany and France. Germany acknowledges the right of France to establish a protectorate in Morocco, and both nations pledge themselves to seek for this purpose the ratification of the powers. Germany is, in return, to receive a compensation of about 250,000 square kilometers of land in the Northern French Congo, along the border of the German Cameroons. The country is inhabited by a million of blacks and yields a yearly trade income of about $2,400,000. Of the Congo river Germany receives just enough mileage to establish her steamship trading stations, while she yields up to France a small delta of land south of the Tsad sea. France reserves for herself the right to erect railroads over German territory in order to connect the various parts of French Central Africa. All disagreements relative to the treaty are to be submitted to the Hague tribunal. In Morocco itself Germany is placed upon precisely the same footing as England, as far as French operations are concerned.—Early in the past week the Frankfurter Zeitung mentioned the following items as contained in the first part of the treaty which is restricted to Morocco. Germany, according to this source of information, is to have her representatives in all commissions entrusted with the supervision of government contracts in Morocco. The right of carrying on her commerce, purchasing land and extending her fisheries along the coast is likewise said to have been secured by her. The operation of mines, as well as the unlimited exportation of mineral ores, has furthermore, been conceded, and she is to have her share in the management of the railroads. Finally, a number of harbors are opened to her. The Kölnische Zeitung writes that Germany has asked for nothing more than for unrestricted commercial freedom, and has been willing to grant the supremacy of France in Morocco in return for a proper compensation. "France acknowledges the reasonableness of this proposition, and so the long deliberations are at an end." To have precipitated a world-war, the paper adds, could in nowise have been justified.—The Colonial Secretary, Dr. Friedrich von Lindequist, has renewed his petition, made during the course of the summer, that his resignation be accepted, since he had from the first been opposed to the governmental policy in Morocco.—The new Roosevelt Professor, Dr. Paul Reinsch, of Wisconsin University, is to be engaged during the winter semester at the University of Berlin. The subject of his installation lecture is announced as "The New Nationalism in the United States." The Emperor will be represented upon the occasion by one of his sons, a Doctor of Political Science. During the summer semester Dr. Reinsch is to lecture at the University of Leipzig as exchange professor.

Austria.—The Minister of Public Worship, Count Karl von Stürgkh, has been entrusted by the Emperor Franz Josef with the commission to form a new cabinet. The Minister President von Gautsch had not been able, in spite of his supreme efforts, to create a majority in parliament, which would have made further operation possible. A dismissal of the entire ministry had, therefore, become a necessary measure. The appointment of Count Karl von Stürgkh came most unexpectedly for all parties. He had entered public service in 1881, and since 1901 had been Privy Councillor and member of the Upper House in the Reichstag. It is believed that his tenure will be short, and that another cabinet may soon be expected under Dr. von Bilinski, the leader of the "Polen-Club."

QUESTIONS OF THE DAY

The Cardinalate

Empowered to designate the Head of the Church, and constituting with him as auxiliaries and counsellors the spiritual body known as the Sacred College, the Cardinals of the Catholic Church rank next to the Sovereign Pontiff in ecclesiastical dignity and official importance. Though not of divine origin nor essential to the constitution of the Church, the office grew with the Church's external development as by natural necessity, and had risen to its present eminence before the discoverer of America was born. The official announcement that three American prelates will be elevated to the Sacred College at the approaching Consistory makes an outline of its historical evolution appropriate and opportune.

It was only in the twelfth century that the Sacred College was definitively constituted substantially as it exists to-day; but the beginnings from which it grew had their roots in the Catacombs. The word "cardinal" (from cardo, a hinge) was first applied, in the sense of principal, to the clergy who were permanently and officially attached to a particular church, then to the archpriest of that church. In Rome, according to some, twenty-five "titles" or churches in which the Sacraments were administered and the liturgical offices celebrated were established in the first century, according to others from the second to the fifth, and the priest in charge was called the presbyter Cardinalis. Such presbyters were entrusted by the Pope with the supervision of discipline and other ecclesiastical and administrative functions in the Roman See. The title of Cardinal priest, which was at first extended to archpriests elsewhere, was soon restricted to the arch-presbyters of Rome, and was definitively confined to the Roman Cardinals by Pius V. The number of "titles" was increased, but the rearrangement of titular churches, begun by Innocent III and completed by Paul V, remained fixed until Leo XIII added the Church of San Vitale. The titles are now fifty-three, though by the ordination of Pope Sixtus V the actual number of Cardinal priests is limited to fifty.

Of equal antiquity are the Cardinal deacons, who may be said to have sprung from the graves of the martyrs. Pope St. Clement (88-97) is said to have divided Rome into seven regional districts, in each of which a rotary or deacon was appointed to collect the Acts of the martyrs. St. Evaristus, his successor, charged them also with bearing witness to the teaching of the bishops, and Pope St. Fabian (236-250) enlarged their duties, appointed seven subdeacons to assist them, and had buildings (diaconia) erected, in connection with a neighboring church, for the reception of the poor and other charitable works, in the cemeteries of the martyrs whose Acts they recorded. Besides being official executors of the Papal charities the regional deacons assisted the Pontiff at Mass and at the liturgical services in the principal Papal churches, and, being gradually assigned to disciplinary and other ecclesiastical functions of continually extending scope, attained a fixity of relation to the Church of Rome, which made the term Cardinal Deacon analogous to that of Cardinal Priest. With the change of Roman topography other charitable institutions replaced the original deaconries. There were eighteen under Gregory the Great, and these are still existent, but the actual number of Cardinal Deacons were reduced to fourteen by Sixtus V.

As the Papal headship of the Church became more externally manifest and ecclesiastical business accordingly increased, the Popes called in the seven neighboring or "suburbicarian" bishops to assist them in counsel at synodal meetings and represent them at episcopal functions; and these were known as Cardinal Bishops. When Porto was in ruins Rufina was joined to it, thus reducing the Cardinal Bishops to six, a number which was made permanent by Sixtus V. By a Decretal of Alexander III, 1159, the three orders of Cardinals were definitively unified into one body, to which the election of the successor of St. Peter was exclusively attached. Thereafter they were the only official legates and counsellors of the Pope. Sixtus V fixed their number at seventy, which has been seldom reached; the additions to be made at the Consistory of November 27 will bring them to within four of the canonical limit.

From the earliest period, therefore, the Cardinals, in various degrees, were assistants of the Pope in the care of the poor, in liturgical functions, in the administration of Papal finances and possessions, and the disposition of important ecclesiastical business. Their manifold activity was exercised in the Consistory, that is, the formal assembly of the Cardinals under the presidency of the Pope. There they dealt with practically all the affairs of Christendom, for when Christendom was Catholic religious and secular matters usually touched or overlapped, and hence they gradually outranked bishops and archbishops, and towards the fourteenth century, even patriarchs. Innocent III granted them the privilege of the red hat, and extended to all the scarlet robe previously worn by Papal legates. They have a ring with sapphire stone, and may wear the pectoral Cross even in the presence of the Pope. Leo X placed them immediately after the Pope in order of precedence; in secular courts they rank with princes of the blood royal, and they were long acknowledged as equals by Emperors and Kings.

The Cardinals have charge of the Roman Congregations, and the Pope alone is their ecclesiastical judge. Among other rights and privileges, they have place and vote in general councils, and they alone can be sent abroad as legates a latere. In private Consistory they counsel the Holy Father on the nominations of cardinals and bishops, on the conclusion of concordats, and on all important ecclesiastical and politico-ecclesiastical matters; and on the death of the Pontiff they assume the management of necessary church affairs and proceed to elect his successor. Their powers and duties were increased and simplified in our own day. The Congregations of Cardinals, including among others the important Consistorial Congregation and the Holy Office, established or regulated by Sixtus V, have been completely reorganized by Pius X according to the great Constitution Sapiénti Consilio, June 29, 1908, which enlarged and demarcated the powers of the Roman Cardinals and made the famous Immensa of Sixtus V applicable to modern conditions.

The Popes have been always free in the nomination of Cardinals, but the Tridentine decrees, enforced by Sixtus V and ratified by the Vatican Council, ordained that all Christian nations should be represented in the Sacred College. It was also established that the College of Cardinals should contain doctors of theology, four at least to be taken from the mendicant orders, and that every person nominated must possess the qualifications required of a bishop. Their creation, which is the function of the Pope, is effected by the publication of their names in secret Consistory. The new dignitary, who has been informed of his nomination some weeks in advance, is invested by the Pope with the rochet and red biretta, and a few days later, in public Consistory, with the Cardinal's hat, while the Holy Father pronounces the words:

"To the glory of the omnipotent God and the honor of the Holy See receive the red hat, the mark of the singular dignity of the Cardinalate, whereby it is signified that, for the exaltation of the holy faith, the peace and quiet of the Christian people and the increase and permanence of the Holy Roman Church, you should show yourself fearless even unto death and the shedding of your blood, in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost."

The Pope makes the sign of the Cross thrice over the new Cardinal, and in secret Consistory confers on him the ring, assigns him his title or diaconia, and performs the ceremony of the opening and closing of the mouth, signifying his duty and right to observe secrecy and express his opinion on matters presented to his consideration. A Papal Ablegate conveys the red biretta to foreign Cardinals who cannot attend the Consistory, but the red hat is always conferred in public Consistory by the hands of the Sovereign Pontiff.

On November 27-30 the Cardinalate will be conferred on the Apostolic Delegate to the United States, and the Archbishops of New York and Boston. The Pope sometimes announces that he reserves in petto (in pectore or in his breast) a certain number of Cardinals which he will publish later. There is some reason to hope that our Holy Father has "in his breast" and in his heart a still further number of American Cardinals, whom he will summon to assist him in the government of Christendom.

M. KENNY, S.J.

Care of the Unemployed

The American Federation of Catholic Societies at its last four conventions has endorsed the formation of Catholic Aid Societies, to take care of the poor and needy. It has especially recommended that homes and employment bureaus be opened for men and women who come to our large cities in search of work. This timely recommendation deserves further consideration, and the work done by the Catholic Aid Society of Buffalo may serve as an illustration of how much good can be accomplished in this way.

The Catholic Aid Society of Buffalo was organized, May 16, 1904, and was incorporated under the laws of the State of New York, April 23, 1908, with these particular objects:

First—To assist the needy and provide a temporary shelter for homeless men and women; to prevent the wanton and indiscriminate arrest and imprisonment of persons whose only offence is lack of money and inability to find work.

Second—To urge upon the city and county authorities the need of a municipal lodging house, where honest but unfortunate persons of both sexes willing to work may find shelter and food until employment is found for them.

The Buffalo Express, editorially commenting on this "Admirable Movement," said in its issue of June 14, 1904:

"The new Catholic Aid Society should be welcomed by Buffalonians of every creed, for it is entering a field of philanthropic endeavor which must be threshed over by private organization before the authorities can be stirred to proper action therein.

"The Express has never been sparing in its criticism of the brutal and dangerous practice of indiscriminately sending men to the penitentiary who, seemingly, are vagrants. There is an endless array of evidence tending to show how society is harmed by this system of commitment. By this treatment of the unemployed we are making criminals of men who have been honest and self-sustaining, but who, for one cause or another, practically beyond their control, are temporarily out of work. Idleness itself is a serious enough affliction for an honest man, to add to the mental depression caused by an empty pocket; when one is willing to work the dishonor of a term in a penitentiary is little short of a crime. Who can wonder that the man who is made to suffer this indignity comes out of the prison mocking at justice; that he is then ready to beg or steal and become, in fact, an offender against society? It is a dreadful system, and any organized effort to overthrow it deserves hearty support."

This organized effort had already been made when the Catholic Aid Society sent a delegation to the Board of Supervisors with the following resolution:

Whereas, A careful investigation has brought to light the fact that many poor workingmen who come to Buffalo for the purpose of looking for employment are arrested as vagrants and sent to prison for a term of several months for the mere reason that they are out of work, have no shelter for the night, and no visible means of support; and

Whereas, By such treatment men who have been honest and self-supporting are made criminals and become a burden to taxpayers; be it

Resolved, That a committee duly appointed by the Catholic Aid Society represent this state of affairs to the Honorable, the Board of Supervisors of Erie County, and prove to them that it would save dollars and men if the Board of Supervisors would grant money to open a Municipal Lodging House and an Employment Bureau, so as to shelter these poor men a few nights and enable them to find suitable work.

The purposes of such a lodging house and employment bureau would be: To afford a temporary asylum for homeless and unfortunate men who are out of work; to give them an opportunity to clean up and to secure employment; to encourage self-respect on the part of unfortunates who are not guilty of crime; to preserve the public health by medical examinations; to reduce street begging to the minimum; to reduce the public expense of providing for those people at the penitentiary; to secure employment for these men.

From the beginning this movement of obtaining a lodging house was heartily supported by the Charity Organization Society. A joint committee of both organizations decided that on account of the connection with the county penitentiary and county almshouse a county lodging house could be more appropriately and more easily obtained from the Supervisors than from the City Council. The Supervisors gave the committee a hearing February 10, 1905, and then referred the matter to their counsel, to see if they had the power to open a public lodging house without proper legislation. He reported that a new law was necessary, and such a law was drafted by the committee. The committee was told that it was too late to introduce a bill that year, but it thought otherwise, and the bill was introduced March 22d. After the committee had appeared several times before the Supervisors, they voted on April 11th to approve the bill and took it up as their measure. The bill failed from over-confidence on the part of the committee. The committee met again December 29, 1905, and it was decided to wait until the new Board of Supervisors was organized and then to proceed at once. A second year was lost in a tedious attempt to persuade the county attorney that no establishing act was necessary. There were many hearings upon this question before the Supervisors, and in April, 1906, they again voted that an enabling act be introduced. This act was passed, and was signed by Governor Hughes in April, 1907. There were more hearings, and in June the Supervisors voted an appropriation of $10,000, and asked the joint committee of the Charity Organizations and the Catholic Aid Society to take charge of the details. Many buildings were seen by the committee, and fairly suitable one was found in the old building of the Children's Aid Society, 29

Franklin Street, which was opened in January, 1908, as the Erie County Lodging House.

The success that has characterized the Erie County Lodging House since its institution, about four years ago, has attracted widespread attention throughout the country. Several other large cities have become interested in the Buffalo institution, and some of them contemplate opening lodging houses, patterned after the one in Buffalo. It is one of the greatest charitable institutions of its kind in the country, and its work is recognized by criminologists as one of the greatest for the lessening of crime. It is at the same time an institution which, as the records show, saves the county a great deal of money.

In the year 1907, prior to the establishment of the Lodging House, 2,460 men were arrested in the city of Buffalo as vagrants and tramps. Of this number 823 were committed to the penitentiary, the average confinement for each one being fifty-three and one-half days. In other words, the 823 men served a total of about 44,000 days, and the number of meals served to them totaled 132,000. Figuring these meals at ten cents each (which is a very moderate price) the cost to the county in meals alone was $13,000, which is three times more than it cost the county to maintain 7,963 at the Lodging House in the first year of its existence. In the year 1908 there was a total of 6,926 men arrested as vagrants or tramps in this city, and of this number 1,157 were committed to the penitentiary, the average confinement for each being twenty and one-half days, almost three times less than the preceding year. This was due, in a measure, to the fact that in the preceding year one of the morning justices made a practice of sending men to the penitentiary for six months each. These 1,157 men served a total of 28,835 days and ate 71,505 meals, which, at the low estimated cost of ten cents a meal, meant an expense to the county of $7,150.50.

It will be noticed that while the arrests were nearly three times as many as they were in 1907, the number of convictions was proportionately very much smaller than for 1907. This is explained by the fact that about June of that year the County Lodging House was in shape, so that it could begin to take care of men sent to it from the morning courts. If the Lodging House could have accommodated these men earlier that year, there is no doubt that the number of men sent to the penitentiary would have been fully 500 less.

Omitting the year 1909, in which equally good results were obtained, we may pass to 1910. During that year the Lodging House received from the courts 679, from the Police Department, 4,634; from the Probation officers, 56; from the penitentiary, after discharge, 160. The Lodging House cared for 9,722, and secured employment for 4,778. (Of these 6,936 proved to be skilled workmen, and 2,786 unskilled laborers; 453 secured permanent positions on farms).

Thus over one-half were not only aided temporarily, but they were given opportunity to get a fresh start in life. One hundred and seventy-seven who seemed unable to help themselves through employment were sent to hospitals, Superintendent of the Poor, Charity Organization Society, U. S. Pension Agent, and various philanthropic societies. Two joined the United States Army; twenty-one were rejected by the Superintendent of the Lodging House as being totally unworthy of such aid as the Lodging House offers. That is to say, the management was thoroughly convinced that the applicants turned down were confirmed idlers or drinkers, completely imbued with the idea that the world owed them a living.

These statistics, although mere figures, show that the Lodging House is filling a long-felt want, and justified the Grand Jury of the Supreme Court for the April, 1910, term in declaring: "This is an institution that is doing grand work, and from its records shown us is evidently saving the county much money."

H. J. MAECKEL, S.J.

A Great Catholic Soldier

A noble figure has passed away. A knight of the Cross and a soldier of France, a champion of the Church, a defender of outraged justice and slandered truth, has fought his last fight and laid down his arms. The sword, which at Castelfidardo and Mentana leaped from its scabbard to guard the right and smite the wrong, which flashed before the Zouaves at Loigny and Auvours, has been surrendered at last to the conqueror—death. The warrior's soul, accompanied in its flight by the blessing and the prayer of the successor of that Pontiff-King, to whom it had plighted its knightly troth, has gone to meet the spirits of the last of the Crusaders, of Lamoricière and Pimodan, where the God of Battles binds the wreath of triumph on their warrior brows.

Athanase de Charette de la Contrie came of good fighting stock, and was a glorious relic of a glorious past. He stood like some lonely sentinel left on the field of battle when the dust and smoke have rolled away. He spoke to us of other days. His name was a household word in many a Catholic home, in every home in France, where bravery is honored and the torch of patriotism and faith still sheds its rays. The story of his life is a martial, an inspiring lesson.

He was grand-nephew of the chivalrous Vendéan chieftain, François Athanase de Charette, one of the heroes of that "war of giants," as Napoleon called it, (1792-1796) in which the hardy peasants of La Vendée, fighting for altar and king, kept at bay such men as Kléber, Marceau and Hoche, the most skilful leaders of the Republican army. The grand-uncle of the dead hero should be gratefully remembered by Americans. Before his campaigns in La Vendée he had served as a young naval officer in the American Revolution, in the French squadron which so materially helped the colonists.

The hero of Castelfidardo was born at Nantes, September 18, 1832. His father was another Athanase de Charette, his mother a daughter of a Bourbon Prince, the Duc de Berry. Loyalty to the king, fidelity to duty, the unquestioning yet intelligent faith of a vanished past, a bravery that laughed at fatigue and courted danger, a knightly courtesy, blended with a soldier's frankness, an iron will and the staying power of the born fighter, were family heirlooms in this ancient house. Young Charette grew up in this invigorating atmosphere. The call of duty had but to sound; he was ready.

The summons came in 1860. The Vicar of Christ was girt on all sides by deceit, conspiracy, treachery. Wherever he looked he met the face of a foe. The Powers had abandoned him, the enemy's regiments were on his soil. He called for volunteers to check the invader. From France, from Canada and Ireland, from Holland, Austria and Spain hundreds answered the Crusaders' call, and mustered under the white and yellow flag. The Marquis de Lamoricière, the hero of the siege of Constantine, the ex-Governor of Algeria, the conqueror of Adbel-Kader, as brave a soldier as ever drew a sword, was the commander-in-chief of this Spartan band. Charette was one of the first to bring his heart and his sword, and to consecrate them to the cause of justice. The keen eye of Lamoricière quickly discerned his qualities and entrusted him with the formation of a regiment of Papal Zouaves. The young nobleman was a dashing soldier. Not gifted perhaps with supreme genius in war, he was an ideal officer to lead a regiment, or command a brigade. He was a soldier of the stamp of Hancock, or "Jeb" Stuart, a man whom Grant would have flung on the Grey lines at Shiloh, or Lee ordered to charge the Federal batteries at Gettysburg.

On September 18, 1860, at Castelfidardo, a few miles southwest of Ancona, Lamoricière's 8,000 men met 28,000 Italian troops under Cialdini. Outnumbered, swept at close range by the deadliest fire, the Pontifical lines were repulsed with heavy loss. Charette had his Zouaves in the forefront of the fray. The young lieutenant-colonel yielded only when to fight any longer meant a useless holocaust. He was beaten, but not broken. The Pope still needed his sword. He stayed. At Mentana, November 3, 1867, brave Kanzler has no better officer in his 3,000 Papal troops than Charette, no braver regiment than the Zouaves. From sunrise until late in the afternoon this devoted band, supported now by 2,000 French soldiers, met 10,000 Garibaldian troops and utterly rout them. The Pontiff still needs the Zouaves and their gallant colonel. Charette stays.

Evil days are falling fast on the sorrow-stricken Pope. When at last 60,000 Piedmontese, under Cadorna march through the battered and crumbling walls near the Porta Pia, Charette, still at the post of danger, fights like a lion at bay, and sheathes in defeat, but not in dishonor, the sword which he had drawn for the truth and the right.

The chivalrous Breton had not been allowed the privilege of a soldier's death in the service of the Pope. He courts it on the encrimsoned plains of France, writhing in the throes and agony of the Franco-Prussian war. His Pontifical Zouaves are incorporated into the seventeenth corps of the army of the Loire. A fighting, a praying general, the pure and saintly de Sonis, the Stonewall Jackson of that dreadful campaign, is in command. Castelfidardo, Mentana, Porta Pia! these are the magic names that gleam on the regimental colors of the Zouaves. To the glorious roll they will add Orléans, Loigny, Auvours. At Loigny, on December 2, 1871, de Sonis calls on the Zouaves to save the army. Over the blood-stained snow, with deadly rifle-hail beating down their ranks, Charette in the van, the men of Castelfidardo and Mentana hurl themselves on the veterans of Prince Frederic Charles. In vain. Severely wounded, Charette falls. Soon restored to health, he stays at the front for suffering France, just as before he stayed for the Pope. A month later, as brigadier-general, he leads his decimated ranks up the heights of Auvours, iron-crowned and fire-wreathed. He could not lead them to victory; he led them to honor and undying fame. It was his last, great fight.

A royalist by family tradition and personal inclination, de Charette kept aloof from politics. The Departments of Brittany begged him to represent them in the National Assembly. He declined. Elected as deputy of the Bouches-du-Rhône, he again refused. The veteran, no doubt, would have felt ill at ease in the halls of a Republican Legislature. He was essentially a man of action. Yet he could wield a picturesque pen, as his "Souvenirs du Régiment des Zouaves" eloquently proves, a book that reveals the soul of a great soldier, of a staunch and faithful Catholic. For many years Charette lived quietly on his estate at Basse-Motte, in Brittany. A devout Catholic, a courteous gentleman, a friend of the poor, he calmly awaited his last summons. He met it with knightly courage and Christian fortitude, the cross for which he had so nobly fought resting on his heart, the rosary, which his soldier sires bore with musket and pike on many a well-fought field, twined around his trembling hands.

Athanase de Charette nobly recalls the glorious names of Sobieski, Hunyady and Scanderbeg, those undaunted champions of the Cross. And it is the privilege of the heroes, who fight in the cause of Christ and His Church, to stir a sympathy and regret, which no others can evoke in a like degree. Their memory will not die. For justice, truth, loyalty, self-sacrifice and faith are the surest titles to glory. Others, favored of fame and fortune for one brief day, though laden with honors in life and death, are soon forgotten. But the valiant souls, who like the hero of Castelfidardo, fight for a noble but down-trodden and seemingly losing but ever-victorious cause, are destined, even in suffering and defeat, to immortality. The unbeliever himself lays a wreath upon their tomb.

And the Church of Christ, the Heir of Ages, writes their names on her heart and on the muster-roll of the world's true heroes.

JOHN C. REVILLE, S.J.

The "Teaching Assembly of Contradictory Overseers"

The fifty-first Anglican "Church Congress" met the first week in October at Stoke-on-Trent. Though somewhat loosely described as the "Parliament of the Church of England," it has no official status. Nevertheless, the fact that some of the bishops take part in its proceedings, gives it a certain importance as an exponent of Anglican opinion. The meeting begins on a Sunday, when "Congress sermons" are preached. On the following days, meetings are held and papers read and discussed, but no vote is taken. This is one of the precautions against accentuating the divisions of the Establishment.

The attendance is usually largely composed of High Churchmen. The ultra-Protestant element has always shown a tendency to boycott the congresses, which were originally organized by enthusiastic adherents of the Oxford High Church movement. This year's gathering is notable for the fact that one of the bishops preached a remarkable sermon which showed in a startling way the deep cleavage that exists between rival schools in the Church of England. Two bishops preached in different churches on the same Sunday. One was the Bishop of London. He devoted his address to the problems raised by the labor movement. This kept him off any dangerous ground. Dr. Ingram, Bishop of London, is a High Churchman, who believes in priesthood and sacraments and sacrifice. He labors under the delusion that he represents the old pre-Reformation Bishops of London, shutting his eyes to the clear fact that in the days of Elizabeth, the line of those bishops came to an end. They ordained priests to offer up the sacrifice of the Mass and consecrated altar stones for their churches. The first bishop of the new kind destroyed in one night every altar in his cathedral, and directed that the altar stones should be broken up or "devoted to base and common uses." But this did not prevent Dr. Ingram from being a champion of the "Continuity" theory. His favorite argument is that he must really represent the good old Catholic bishops, because he happens to live at Fulham in the palace that once belonged to them. The readers of AMERICA will remember how he urged this argument at the Jamestown general convention, appealing to the frogs of Fulham moat to confirm it. Well-informed Americans must have opened their eyes wide at hearing an argument on a level with that of the gentleman in one of Gilbert and Sullivan's comic operas, who declares that he must not disgrace the heroic ancestors whose portraits hang on the walls of his recently purchased old castle. "But these are not your ancestors," he is told, and he replies: "They are. The portraits were sold to me with the castle."

We'll, here in one pulpit was the Bishop of London, who "says mass," as he believes, and thinks that he holds nearly every Catholic doctrine except the supremacy and infallibility of the Pope. In another was the Bishop of Carlisle. He is a bishop of the same Church, and Dr. Ingram is in full communion with his "brother of Carlisle." But the Bishop of Carlisle, instead of keeping to safe neutral ground and giving forth smooth platitudes on social problems, devoted his sermon to an outspoken attack on the Bishop of London's whole position. The Church of England, he said, was being brought into danger and disrepute by a school of clergy and laity who would take away its Protestant character, and who are trying to bring back priesthood and priestcraft, and all that the glorious Reformation had swept away. "Ordination" is not a "Sacrament," he declared, and striking this keynote he denounced the whole doctrine and practice of the High Churchmen. Once more it was demonstrated that in the Church of England there is no authoritative teaching, and what one bishop solemnly declares to be black, another may as solemnly pronounce to be white.

Then comes another strange thing. The Church Times, the organ of the High Church party, gave several columns to reports of, and commentaries on, the congress. But not one word does it say of the Bishop of Carlisle's sermon. It does not even say that he preached at the congress. It is evidently trying to hide the scandal of division from the eyes of its readers.

It is said that when the Protestant Episcopalian mission in China was drawing up a manifesto in Chinese, the native translator was asked to explain the exact literal meaning of the characters he had selected to express the title of the Church, and it then came out that they meant literally "The Teaching Assembly of Contradictory Overseers." "Contradictory" was an attempt to translate Protestant, and the "Overseers" were the bishops. The native secretary was wiser than he knew. The Church Congress with the Bishop of London in one pulpit and the Bishop of Carlisle in the other was assuredly an "Assembly of Contradictory Overseers."

An English judge declared once "Truth will sometimes come out, even in an affidavit." It comes out sometimes in a Church Congress address. Canon Beeching, just promoted to the Deaconry of Norwich, read a paper on the English Bible in which he said:—

"The sixteenth century translation of the Bible broke the English Church into a hundred sects. No Churchman, no Englishman, but must deplore the fact, even though he recognizes that under the circumstances it was inevitable. To the English Bible we owe it that the Catholic Church of England is in ruins; but to that same Bible, more deeply studied, we shall, I believe, also owe it—and who knows how soon it will be—that the ruins will be repaired."

This is a frank admission of the breakdown of the good old Protestant theory of the Bible needing no living interpreter. As to the Canon's optimistic belief that somehow in the future the same causes will produce diametrically different results, he must be a hopeful man who sees any sign of the forecast being realized. Certainly it requires optimism to express such a hope on the morrow of a day that saw one Bishop of the Establishment denouncing as mischievous folly, the whole theory of the Church, and the Christian life held by one of his episcopal brethren. It does not help that, though each believes the other to be a teacher of error, they "agree to differ" and met on the same religious platform in the name of the same so-called "Church." A. H. ATTERIDGE.

CORRESPONDENCE

Italy's Prime Minister at Turin

ROME, October 15, 1911.

Last week closed with a banquet to the Prime Minister, Giolitti, tendered him by the Liberal Monarchical Union at Turin. There were eleven hundred guests at the dinner; of these three hundred were parliamentary deputies, one hundred members of the National Senate; and there was besides a host of local officials from all the neighboring cities. It was the most notable political gathering of the year, and was organized by the nationalists to give Giolitti a chance to go on public record at this moment without the trouble of calling Parliament.

Though everybody looked to Giolitti for a full declaration of the administration's program in regard to the war in hand, they were destined to disappointment. Pleading the privilege of his portfolio and reminding his audience that no Minister dealing with Foreign Affairs had ever repented of being sparing of speech, he confined himself to stating that the government has proceeded first to a full understanding with the Powers and then to a defence of Italian economic and political development in Africa, as well as of the dignity of the country, by a military occupation of Tripoli. He then sought to soothe the Socialistic opposition by insisting upon the government's intention to proceed with electoral reform, raising the percentage of the electorate from its present 32 per cent. of all male subjects not minors to something like 85 per cent. by extending the suffrage to all males of thirty years of age, as well as to all others who had completed their military service. This will lift the number of voters in Italy from about three million to eight. He furthermore justified his postponement of the question of the extension of the suffrage till after proper disposal of his plan for a government monopoly of insurance on the ground of instant and imperious necessity.

The general opinion of the speech is that it was very clever but of dubious security to the present cabinet. It did not prevent the Socialist Congress at Milan from passing a resolution the following Wednesday to the effect that the Socialists could not and should not further support the Giolitti administration. It may, however, have awakened Mayor Nathan,—that or public opinion: for he has at last found voice and has wired the King at Naples that "Rome turning loyally to the King, the head of the army, as the safe interpreter of the sentiment of the Nation, tenders its warmest greeting to the brave brethren who are bearing to the farther shore of the Mediterranean the breath of Italian civilization."

Catholic enthusiasm still continues in the support of the government's military enterprise. At Orte and at Casciana the Catholic Union has enthusiastically endorsed the war. The conscripts from the parish of St. James in Augusta, here at Rome were gathered in the parish church for Mass and Holy Communion on the day of their departure and warmly encouraged by their pastor to do their full duty for their country. The Bishop of Trivento delivered a discourse in his cathedral pulpit on the glorious victory of Lepanto, exhorting his hearers to pray for a like success of Italian arms at Tripoli. At Capua the archbishop, Cardinal Capecelatro, issued a pastoral letter urging the prayers of all for the army, insisting that its success would be a victory, not only for their country, but for the Catholic faith and Christian civilization in that Africa from which in the past there came to us the towering genius of St. Augustine. At Pisa the archbishop, Cardinal Maffi, has ordered the collect pro tempore belli, and at the gathering of the Pisan troops in the Church of the Knights of St. Stephen, before their departure, he delivered an eloquent sermon of benediction upon the sons of Pisa, marching to the wars as of old under the protection of the Mother of God.

The Vatican has made no statement, in spite of the industrious repetition in the English and American press of their correspondents' inventions attributed to the Holy Father and to the Cardinal Secretary of State. The Vatican is concerned with other things. The Cardinal has sent in the name of His Holiness, to Bishop Marbeau, of Meaux, a letter of sympathetic approval for the dedication on October 23d of a monument to Bossuet.

He has also addressed to the Cardinal Archbishop of Toledo, in Spain, a letter of instruction for the bishops of Spain in their treatment of the duties of Catholics in public affairs. He insists upon the Catholic laity being allowed the fullest freedom, consistent with the teachings and laws of the Church, in all civil and political affairs, and urges the bishops not to interfere in party contentions, nor to lend their approval and benediction to any political party, and to abstain from censure of any party and of any Catholic journal or journalist in matters that are civil and political, but to accord them their rightful freedom therein, provided they offend not against charity or justice.

The Congregation of Regulars has followed the lead of the Consistorial Congregation in the matter of Duchesne's "History of the Church," and has addressed a letter to the heads of religious orders forbidding its use in their houses of studies in Italy, either as a textbook or a book of reference for their students.

In mid-week Rome was distressed to hear of the serious illness of Cardinal Capecelatro. On Friday he received the last sacraments, and though his condition has since slightly improved, he is still in serious danger. The Queen Mother, Margherita, was one among many who telegraphed to Capua to inquire anxiously of his condition.

An echo of the attempt at murder in St. Peter's last year has just been heard in the announcement of the sentence of the would-be assassin, De Santi, to two years' imprisonment, plus the payment of costs and damages. This is a case where the mills have ground slowly without grinding small.

The cholera has disappeared from the circuit of our block, after having within five days taken toll of sixteen cases with twelve deaths.

C. M.

An Unexpected Champion

STOCKHOLM, Oct. 15, 1911.

When Leonidas and his Spartans were defending Thermopylae against the overwhelming odds of the Persian host, someone is recorded to have said that the enemy were so numerous that their arrows would obscure the sun. "So much the better," answered the brave Spartan King, "we shall then be able to fight in the shade."

Against odds almost as overwhelming as these must the handful of Catholics in Sweden, in the kingdom of Gustav Wasas, make their fight. And in this battle for our Faith and our rights we Catholics have not been spoiled by the favor of Protestants, much less of the Protestant pastors of the established Church. But "no rule without exception," says an old saw. To their great and most agreeable surprise Catholics have found an ally even in these dark days. As a champion of justice, and therefore as a champion of the rights of Catholics, a most famous Protestant divine has taken up their cause, Doctor Nathan Soderblöm, professor of theology at Upsala University.

In an article published in the Stockholms Dagblad, one of the most widely circulated and important papers of Sweden, he says:

"The right to keep church records which shall be officially acknowledged, a right which the four Catholic parishes of Sweden had hitherto possessed, was restricted by the royal ordinance of December 25, 1910. Catholics must hereafter enter their names on the registers of the Swedish (Lutheran) parishes within whose territory they reside. They must obtain from these the papers required by the law and the testimonies regarding their freedom from former contracts. Even though both parties are Catholic and the marriage takes place before a Catholic priest, it is required that the certificates be drawn up by a minister of the Swedish established Church. It is this last demand especially which the local Vicar Apostolic, in his address to the king, has declared to be a most detrimental and humiliating condition for the spiritual welfare and the parish life of Catholics. In the press, likewise, the dissatisfaction of Catholics has been publicly voiced, while in foreign countries this legislative act is looked upon as a violation of religious toleration in a Protestant country."

In his article Professor Soderblöm farther instances the fact that several prominent Lutheran ministers, and especially the Lutheran Consistory of Stockholm, had strongly opposed this restriction of Catholic rights. Finally he deals with those who in their superior wisdom would look upon the entire matter as too unimportant for consideration, a mere bagatelle.

"The fact is," he continues, "that the present representatives of the Catholic Church in Sweden look upon these restrictions as an unwarranted interference in their care of souls. Since there is question of only four parishes it would seem that an exception could be made and their rights, which have been limited, be restored entirely. This is the only way of ridding ourselves of a matter which is not so altogether unimportant. . . . In no case, however, is the Lutheran Church to blame. The work of Lutheran ministers has not been very much increased by this legislation; but it is easily appreciated that their task of burdening obligations upon Catholics, which the latter would rather fulfil before their own priests, cannot be a pleasant one."

Thus far the Professor of Lutheran theology. Is his admonition likely to produce results? The question is of the greatest importance, as we have shown in a former article in AMERICA (No. 102, "Religious Liberty in Sweden"). The ancient rights are at stake which Catholics have possessed since the days of Gustav III. It was this illustrious ruler who, in the year 1781, issued the famous edict of toleration, which for the Catholics of Sweden was a ray of light that shone forth after the dark night of two long centuries.

BARON G. ARMFELT.

French Freemasons

PARIS, October 21, 1911.

The yearly Assembly of the French Freemasons took place in Paris last September, at a moment when war clouds hung heavily over the country. In spite of the secrecy that surrounds their deliberations, echoes of the proceedings of the "Brethren" were heard outside the precincts of the "Grand Orient," and some of their utterances are curiously significant.

Two symptoms were especially striking: the anti-patriotic tone of the speakers when touching on political questions, and the large number of professors and school masters who are now enrolled in the ranks of Masonry in France.

The French Freemasons make no secret of their so-called "humanitarian" opinions and Socialistic proclivities. One of them, M. Rivière, openly declared that he was absolutely opposed to the idea of war under any circumstances; another, M. Bessière, urged his colleagues to work for the deliverance of the notorious Hervé, the anti-patriotic leader, whose insults to the army are well known. "Hervé is an honest man, he is the defender of Freemasonry," added the orator. Another member, M. Sadoul, proposed an alliance between the French and German Freemasons, for the prevention of war. Other subjects were discussed with no less violence: the monopoly of education; the necessity of defending the lay schools; of confiscating the churches; of influencing the mothers of families, as well as the fathers. In France women's influence is great, among the middle classes especially, and so far Freemasonry has not made much progress among French wives and mothers; they may be indifferent to religion, but they are seldom openly hostile.

It is alarming to discover that it is among the professors and schoolmasters of the country that Freemasonry has the greater number of followers; the baneful influence of the sect is thus brought to bear on the rising generation, and this influence is not only irreligious, it is plainly anti-patriotic and revolutionary, and it constitutes a real danger to society. The tendency of the French Freemasons to become more and more Socialistic, anti-patriotic and radical has lately been noticed by all the Conservative papers. There is no denying the fact that at the present moment the Freemasons are the real masters of France, their adepts are prominent in the Ministry, indeed, the zeal with which one Minister, M. Malvy, hunts down the dispersed monks and nuns won for him the warm recognition of his brethren; their theories are professed by hundreds of schoolmasters throughout the country, and the strenuous banding together of the Catholic forces alone can effectually cope with an evil so wide-spreading and so insidious in its methods.

ANGLO-FRENCH CATHOLIC.

Second Year of the Portuguese Republic

LISBON, October 8, 1911.

What will be the upshot of the monarchistic counter-revolution? Those who are directing it speak confidently of their ultimate triumph, and they look upon the imitation republic as a thing doomed, if not dead. The Arriaga people, however, make light of the supposed invasion and of its effects on those Portuguese who are ill affected towards the present régime. The facts of the case, whatever they may be, are hardly within reach of the newsgatherer, for the Government has muzzled the press and controls the telegraph.

We are not to suppose that the monarchists are the only opponents of the present administration. Far from such being the case, some of its bitterest and most uncompromising antagonists are found among those, who having little or no sympathy with the house of Bragança, have even less with the men who are now at the head of public affairs. O Correio de Beira, for example, which is an influential newspaper of radical tendencies, sums up the "blessings" of the new régime as follows: A law that demoralizes the family by making divorce shockingly easy; a law that destroys proprietorship, made simply as a means of rewarding certain classes in Lisbon; a law called the Civil Register, which, as it stands, inflicts many inconveniences and hardships on the rural population; a law on freedom of the press which is more reactionary than anything in the time of the dictator Franco; and an education law which educators call detestable.

The famous (or rather infamous) Separation Law is to be rigidly enforced as far as Catholics are concerned, but it has been modified for the convenience of Protestants. Take the single provision which forbids public religious services in the evening. It is relaxed in favor of Protestants, but strictly enforced against Catholics.

The monarchist uprising has caused a change in the cabinet. A new Minister of War, in the person of Alberto Silveira, until now chief of police in Lisbon, has been placed at the head of military affairs.

The archbishops of Portugal have sent a warm letter of thanks to the French Cardinals who had sent them a message of consolation and encouragement.

JULIÁN BLANCO.

Where Every Prospect Pleases

COLOMBO, CEYLON, Aug. 18, 1911.

"Ceylon is the beautiful pearl set on the brow of India, where every prospect pleases, and only man is—" It would be preposterous and a crime of lèse-nation to add the final word of the Protestant Bishop Heber's quotation of some fifty years ago. Ah! the lovely Lankâ, the sweet isle of spices, the land of the cocoa-nut palm, of tea and rubber—the land of unsurpassed scenery! Is it a wonder that a Singhalese gets heimweh whenever he is away from his dear Tapobrâne? Is it a wonder that tourists come from every part of the world to visit its hospitable shores, its famous Buddhist shrines and ruins, the sacred (!)—spurious—Tooth of Buddha in Kandy, that charming capital of the last Singhalese Kingdom? Traveling is made easy and comfortable, railways run everywhere, and motor cars and mail coaches bring you wherever you like to go. In seven hours time, by day or by night, you go by train from Colombo to the Sanatorium of the Island, Nuwara-Eliya (Town of Light) which is nearly seven thousand feet above sea level. There you can enjoy an ideal climate and all the comforts of big European hotels. Last February I met there two solid American priests, of the Archdiocese of New York, Fathers L.— and G.—, who seemed enraptured with their visit to Ceylon. Our metropolis, Colombo, the first harbor of the East until Panama is opened to the world, will remain seated as a queen at the centre of the highways of the ocean. It saw the American fleet and fêted its gallant crews on their great journey around the world. It welcomed at different times numbers of Americans who had snatched themselves away from their giddy commercial avocations to get a glimpse of the Orient. One who makes his first acquaintance with the East at Suez or Port Said must find himself in an earthly paradise when he enters Colombo. He is bewildered as he beholds the Fort, the busy native quarters, with their quaint buildings, their streets filled with rickshaw-men rushing in every direction, and a motley crowd where all the Asiatic types commingle, and where queer fashions of dress attract the white man's eye. A drive in the vast cinnamon gardens brings him, as it were, to a city of palaces, where the well-to-do, the grandeës, the intellectuals have built for themselves bungalows and villas, all in Oriental style, full of comfort for the owner or occupant and pleasant to look at. We have in this enchanting isle the happiness of living under British rule, and are so far completely free from the fearful unrest that prevails in many places of India, our next neighbor. The coronation of our King George V gave to all classes and creeds the occasion of showing their loyalty, and the 22d of June was a glorious day in the annals of the Island. The Ceylonese understand that no foreign rule could equal England's in giving true liberty, genuine protection, equal justice to all and sincere toleration for a babel of creeds.

As the census was taken in March of this year, we know the exact figure of each nationality and religion. In the whole of Ceylon there are 4,109,470 inhabitants; the Singhalese are still far ahead, with 2,714,880. Then come the Tamils, 1,060,432 strong; the Moors are next, with 266,876. The Europeans reach a good figure, 8,555; the Burghers, of Dutch origin—very few are of unmixed blood—have increased up to 26,867. A great many of them are fine trustworthy men, and occupy high places in Government offices and the liberal professions. There are 13,092 Malays, all Mahometans; 5,342 Veddahs, or aborigines, and 13,426 of different other nationalities. It goes without saying that the Buddhists come first in point of number: 2,479,343. The Hindoos, i. e., Sivaites and Vishnuites follow with 934,083 adherents. There are 410,310 Christians of various denominations. Then come the Mahometans, with 284,434 members; the remaining 1,300 are Parsis, Afghans, Kaffirs, etc., etc. The proportion of the Protestants of different sects to Catholics is about 1 to 6.

For some time to come Buddhism will be the religion—or let us say—the philosophical system of the bulk of the Singhalese. Twenty-five years ago, when it was at a low ebb, it was helped powerfully by Col. Olcott with money got in America. He established theosophical schools and lectured everywhere. Yet perspicacious Buddhists; in the long run, found out that the Colonel had been distorting their religion and would soon knock it to smithereens. Modernism is rife even here. We saw it in the late London Race Congress, where agnostics and theosophical Buddhists when defining the essentials of Buddhism, took and left of its tenets just what they pleased. Thus, a short time before old Olcott's death, his aureola had vanished, leaving only a theosophical glimmering behind. It has always been a puzzle to me how it is possible for a Western mind, be it American or European, to take a fancy to Buddhism. Surely the very few white men who came over here to join—for a time!—the Buddhist monks, must have known very little of Christianity. It is only a month ago that a European—I shall not mention his nationality—said he believed that Buddhism and Catholicism are very like each other. After a few days in a Buddhist paṇsalā (a kind of Buddhist convent) he had his eyes opened, and hurried back ashamed and broken-hearted to his country. What brought him over here, he told us, was his intention to learn singhalese, pali and sanskrit. But seeing what practical Buddhism is, he fled away a disgusted, but a wiser man.

Buddhism, which as its founder says, should be peace-loving and tolerant of any other form of religion, has of late become, at least in our Island, arrogant, harsh, bigoted, aggressive and troublesome. There are many among the native theosophical Buddhists who hold that by becoming a Christian one loses his nationality. Is it due to our closeness to or the contagion of India? A crusade was decided upon. The Christians must be won back, and all of a sudden the news was trumpeted abroad, and big posters were put all over Colombo and the other towns, that a learned book was published in the capital, and that, without the slightest doubt, it was going to give the deathblow to Christianity, and bring over all its deluded followers to the old religion by sheer force of conviction. Every Christian was surprised by such a tremendous flourish. Without loss of time, Mr. A. G. Fraser, M.A., and Mr. Kenneth Saunders, B.A., both of the Kandy C. M. S. Trinity College, took up the cudgels and gave a course of lectures in the Colombo Town Hall, which completely vindicated "The Credentials of Christianity." They were then published under that title in book form. The Buddhists, who take all the atheistic stuff that is made in Germany, England and America, were dumfounded and crushed. Then came Father John Pahamunay, O.M.I., a native priest and learned Oblate of Mary Immaculate, the editor of the bi-weekly Ceylon Catholic Messenger, "with the Buddhist and Catholic positions," which brought the war into the enemy's camp and gave blow for blow with crushing effect. All over the Island the Christians were triumphant, and there was not a single apostasy heard of. D.

The Franz Liszt centenary was commemorated with great festivity at Budapest. The celebration continued for five days, closing on October 25 with a most impressive rendition of the famous oratorio, "Christus." The admirers of the great master had gathered in vast numbers and the enthusiasm grew with the days. Special appreciation was shown for the work of the American musician, Arthur Friedheim, of New York, and a magnificent ovation was tendered to Sofie Menter for her part in the "Es-Dur-Konzert."

A M E R I C A

A · CATHOLIC · REVIEW · OF · THE · WEEK

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 11, 1911.

Entered as second-class matter, April 15th, 1909, at the Post Office at New York, N. Y., under the Act of March 3d, 1879.

Copyright, 1911, and published weekly by the America Press, New York.
President, THOMAS J. CAMPBELL; Secretary, H. J. SWIFT;
Treasurer, MICHAEL J. O'CONNOR.

SUBSCRIPTIONS, POSTPAID:

United States, 10 cents a copy; yearly, $3.00
Canada, $3.50 Europe, $4.00 (16s.)

Address:

THE AMERICA PRESS, 59 East 83d Street, New York City, N. Y., U. S. A.

CABLE ADDRESS: CATHREVIEW.

More Modern Scholarship

The other day, consulting the new "Encyclopædia Britannica" concerning a point in the civil marriage laws of England, we came across some gems of modern scholarship worth recording.

Under the general title "Marriage" and the sub-title "Canon Law" (Vol. xvii, p. 755), we read that for the marriage of a "heretic" with a Catholic, "a dispensation is now (i.e., since the papal decree ne temere of the 2nd of August, 1907, which came into force at Easter, 1908) only granted on condition that the parties are married by a Catholic bishop or a priest accredited by him, that no religious ceremony shall take place except in a Catholic church, and that all the children shall be brought up in the Catholic faith."

Such abundance of detail impresses one with the author's learning. He must have had the decree Ne Temere before his eyes. Yet not one of the conditions he alleges is found in that decree. Provision for the Catholic education of the children was made long before the decree was thought of; no religious ceremony for a mixed marriage has ever been prescribed, still less a religious ceremony in a Catholic church, nor does the decree allude to a non-Catholic ceremony, which is prohibited elsewhere. It certainly regulates the persons before whom all marriages are to be contracted, but it neither lays new burdens on bishops nor grants a general commission to every bishop. It requires marriages to be contracted before the parish priest or the ordinary, or a priest delegated, not "accredited," by either.

To elucidate the supposed condition of the Ne Temere regarding the children, the following footnote is given: "The customary rule for more than three centuries since the Council of Trent was that male children followed the religion of the father, female children that of the mother."

It is true that in some places positive civil law, and in others, public opinion thus divided families; and that to avoid greater evils the Church was passive in face of this abuse. But the ordinary reader, finding the note under "Canon Law" and noticing the words "customary rule" and the mention of the Council of Trent, would gather that the custom had acquired the force of law in the eyes of the Church and that the Council of Trent was in some way responsible. If some enthusiastic Radical were to write, "The English spring was cold and late in 1911, but with the reintroduction of the Parliament Bill into the House of Commons came a sudden change, and the passage of the Bill by the House of Lords was followed by a glorious summer," a Unionist would naturally object that though each proposition is sufficiently true in itself, there was no such connection between the Bill and the season as the context implies. Had the writer in the Encyclopædia wished to connect the custom with some legislation not entirely Protestant, he would have done better had he mentioned the "Interim." As for the "more than three centuries," the Council of Trent closed in 1563, and we find Pius VI in 1782 prescribing to the bishops of Belgium the condition regarding children falsely ascribed to the Ne Temere by the "Encyclopædia Britannica."

On page 759 we read: "In Roman Catholic countries the parties usually supplement the obligatory civil marriage by a religious ceremony, more especially since the Ne Temere decree, etc." In Roman Catholic countries the decree made no change regarding the necessity of the presence of the parish priest at the marriages of Catholics; because in such countries generally the Tametsi of the Council of Trent had been proclaimed.

Two reflections suggest themselves. First, that there must be a purpose in making the very harmless Ne Temere responsible for everything displeasing to Protestants in Catholic marriage legislation; and, second, what a paltry thing, after all, is that bullying modern scholarship of which some foolish Catholics are afraid.

A Costly Failure

Socialist rule in Milwaukee has not merely proved itself a failure, but has been a very costly one besides. In spite of photographic reproductions of sample pages from the assessor's book, which were carefully published in the "Coming Nation," the fact remained, even before the present disclosure, that the increase of taxes had been such as to create an outcry throughout the city. The climax has now been reached by the announcement that the Socialist tax levy exceeds that of the last year of the Rose administration by nearly a million dollars. It is expected, moreover, that the State tax will increase the happiness of tax-payers by an additional excess of two hundred thousand, as far as Milwaukee is concerned. This increase of taxes, it must be remembered, will not merely affect those who are called upon to pay them, but the entire city. The general depression must leave its effects upon all.

The change in the percentage basis of valuation brings about an apparent decrease in the rate of taxation from $19.20 to $11.40. From an assessment upon sixty per cent. of the property valuation the new taxation has been made to rest upon a hundred per cent. basis. The fact is, that according to experts at the City Hall, there has taken place a most substantial increase in the rate for every thousand dollars worth of property. Socialists by their usual sleight of hand methods will, of course, attempt to demonstrate before the country that the city's loss has been its gain. We might allow the entire matter to pass without comment were it not for the boast which has been so persistently made by Socialists in the past, that in every department of the public administration of Milwaukee, wherever their influence has extended, they have most materially reduced the expenses of the city.

Ingersoll Monument

A statue to Robert Ingersoll, the agnostic, was recently unveiled at Peoria, Ill. We are not surprised at this. The Carducci admirers in Italy and the new president, Arriaga, in the Portuguese republic, went farther in their devotion. They proposed the erection of a monument to the master himself, of whom Colonel Ingersoll was but a mere mercenary apostle. Charles Frederick Adams, of Boston, a descendant of John Adams, delivered the principal address before an audience gathered, we are told, from various parts of the nation.

Although the fame of Ingersoll has passed away with the sound of the blasphemies he uttered, yet there is still a considerable sale of his works. Now and then a Socialist journal strives to galvanize his reputation into life again, but it is only a forced vitality he can enjoy. "The almost complete absence of reference to Ingersoll in the serious literature of to-day does, nevertheless, indicate," writes the editor of the Nation, "that he has quite lost such significance as, in his lifetime, could provoke the controversial ire of Gladstone. His particular method of attacking Christianity is a dead thing of the past."

Gallantry or Bravado?

One of the most thrilling scenes in our military annals was that which might have been witnessed in 1791 near the Miami towns in Ohio when old General Arthur St. Clair's force was surprised and routed by Chief Little Turtle's warriors. So crippled by infirmity that he could not walk, St. Clair improvised a sort of litter, on which he caused himself to be placed. Then, ordering some of his men to grasp the carrying poles, he was conveyed up and down the line of attack. Giving his orders with as much calmness as if this were some sham encounter, the venerable old man, with his long gray hair streaming in the wind, urged on the regulars and strove to encourage the terror-stricken militia. Though the bullets of the concealed redskins whistled about him and pierced his garments, he seemed utterly unconscious of danger or fear during the three hours that he stood his ground. That was gallantry.

During the Boer war it will be remembered that the British officers suffered severely at the hands of the enemy's sharpshooters. The same comment is now made upon the minor military operations that Spain is carrying on in Morocco. Thus in a series of recent engagements against certain warlike tribes near the Spanish colony or military station of El Rif, sixty-four per cent. of the Spanish killed or wounded were officers. Did they fall through gallantry or through bravado? Was the error, if such there was, with the officers or with the privates, or with the body of the people at home in Spain?

It may be said in general, we think, that civilians have a very erroneous notion of what constitutes military valor, or any kind of valor, for that matter. How rigorously they exact the most exalted heroism from the solitary policeman who patrols the streets in the darkness of the night! And they take it for granted that to a fireman no gymnastic feat is impossible, so he may well risk his life to save that of a parrot.

But, we may ask, is it gallantry for an army officer to expose himself to the fire of the enemy? Examples like that of the heroic Farragut will occur to us, yet such are highly exceptional and cannot serve as a rule. Are generals and colonels and captains named to be targets or to be commanders? The resourcefulness of a subaltern has saved many a day. But what if general and subordinates go down at the first volley?

Military men, just as policemen and firemen, know the difference between gallantry and foolhardiness; but all three know likewise the unreasoning mental attitude of people in general. They sometimes find themselves, therefore, in some way driven by force of circumstances to attempt what their better sense condemns.

We have heard words of praise from our troops for the military bearing of the Spanish soldiers during our little tilt with Spain. It was not their cowardice that gave the victory to us. Yet, when those troops returned to Spain, what was the reception they got? "You are cowards, or at least you are good for nothing and don't earn your pay!" There is now on in Spain an active anti-military propaganda, under the mask that military operations in Morocco are for the furtherance of private interests, not for the sake of maintaining and protecting the interests of the country, and that the rank and file are sent over there to be shot down for a purpose so unworthy. The officers know of this campaign against them, they know how false is its foundation, but they also know what might be the effect upon the enlisted men if they were themselves to observe that prudence which military strategy enjoins. They disregard prudence, and they sacrifice themselves for the sake of undeceiving and encouraging their men. This, too, is gallantry. The pity is that such gallantry should ever have to be.

Freemasonry and the Church

The Freemason, Robert Scheu, writing in the Wiener Presse, tells of the vast possibilities for great internal development which lie within the reach of Catholic countries as soon as they can arrive at the determination to throw open "that gigantic bank of the nations," the Catholic Church, and pour out its treasures for the use of the State. "Will it not be possible to conjure again with the magic of secularization?" he eagerly asks. "The pagan, military, industrial, socialistic, domineering and commercial state is crystalizing itself before our eyes with the most startling rapidity. It finds no more dangerous obstacle in the way than the Catholic Church, nor yet a more enormous reservoir for its purpose. With this program in view cannons would be welcome, but only such as are cast from the bells of the churches." Freemasonry then is opposed to war, but not if the Church can be made to suffer by it.

—•••—
The Paris Matin has the following notes on the peace palace now building at the Hague. When its construction was decided on, the Anglo-Boer war broke out, and the Russo-Japanese war was prepared. When the first stone was laid the German Emperor's visit to Tangier laid the foundations of the troubles in Morocco. When the first floor was completed Austria seized Bosnia and Herzegovina. When the second floor was finished the Franco-German controversy became acute; and when the roof was put on the Turco-Italian war broke out. The Matin concludes that if it be completed its inauguration will be followed by a great war.

Sixty years ago the Great Exhibition that was to bring peace and good will to all nations, opened in London, and was followed by twenty-five years of almost continuous war. These are coincidences worth noticing; for Pius X has pointed out to the world that there is only one way to reduce the number of wars.

—•••—
The Springfield Republican reports that Mr. Shane Leslie, the distinguished poet-orator and convert, who has come to this country as the authorized delegate of the Gaelic League, fortified with written recommendations from the Irish Episcopate, the Irish parliamentarians and the leaders of public opinion among all classes in Ireland, delivered a remarkable address before an audience of some three thousand people at the Hibernian Hall, Springfield, November 4. He spoke on the nature and history of Irish Nationality, what it means to Ireland and the world from a moral and religious standpoint, and its unconquerable persistence. Mr. Leslie's initial meeting in New York is announced for November 11, in Carnegie Hall. The most Eminent Cardinal-elect will preside, and the Hon. Bourke Cockran will introduce the speaker.

NEW YORK CHURCH CORPORATIONS

The Religious Corporations Law of the State of New York, being Chapter 51 of the Consolidated Laws, is the most comprehensive and impartial law for the incorporation of churches enacted in any State. It provides for the management of the physical and tangible properties of the various churches by those who make use of them, yet it gives to the duly constituted ecclesiastical authorities the control of the spiritual and jurisdictional government of them.

The Law is divided into (a) general provisions affecting all churches, and (b) particular provisions composed of separate articles affecting (1) Protestant Episcopal, (2) Presbyterian, (3) Roman Catholic, (4) Reformed Presbyterian and Lutheran, (5) Baptist, (6) Congregational and Independent, and (7) Free churches, and then (8) other denominations not classified. An incorporation is made under one of these separate articles applicable to the particular church. The general provisions point out and limit the powers of trustees, whilst the separate particular provisions deal with the church corporation in a manner which best accords with the discipline and usages of the denomination.

It is a just and flexible law, guarding property rights and conserving the tenets and discipline of the particular church. In the Catholic churches five trustees are provided for, the bishop (or archbishop), the vicar-general, the pastor, and two laymen. In purely ecclesiastical matters the clergy trustees are in a majority; in the physical management and care of the church the pastor and the lay trustees may have control; and in actual working the system is free from friction.

The chief provisions which affect Catholic churches are as follows, among the general provisions applicable to all churches:

"§ 5. The trustees of every religious corporation shall have the custody and control of all the temporalities and property, real and personal, belonging to the corporation and of the revenues therefrom, and shall administer the same in accordance with the discipline, rules and usages of the corporation and of the ecclesiastical governing body to which the corporation is subject. . . . But this section does not give to the trustees of an incorporated church any control over the calling, settlement, dismissal or removal of its minister or the fixing of his salary; or any power to fix or change the times, nature or order of the public or social worship of such church.

"§ 12. A religious corporation shall not sell or mortgage any of its real property without applying for and obtaining leave of the Court therefor pursuant to the provisions of the code of civil procedure. . . . The trustees of an incorporated Roman Catholic church shall not make application to the Court for leave to mortgage, lease or sell any of its real property without consent of the bishop or archbishop of the diocese to which such church belongs.

"§ 25. No provision of this chapter authorizes the calling, settlement, dismissal or removal of a minister, or the fixing or changing of his salary, other than according to the laws, regulations, practice, discipline, rules and usages of the religious denomination or ecclesiastical governing body with which the church corporation is connected.

"§ 26. No provision of this chapter authorizes the fixing or changing of the times, nature or order of public or social or other worship of any church, in any other manner or by any other authority than in the manner and by the authority provided in the laws, regulations, practice, discipline, rules and usages of the religious denomination or ecclesiastical governing body with which the church denomination is connected.

The particular provisions affecting Catholic churches are:

"§ 90. An unincorporated Roman Catholic church in this State may become incorporated as a church by executing, acknowledging and filing a certificate of incorporation, stating the corporate name by which such church shall be known and the county, town, city or village where its principal place of worship is or is intended to be located.

"A certificate of incorporation of an unincorporated Roman Catholic church shall be executed and acknowledged by the Roman Catholic archbishop or bishop, and the vicar-general of the diocese in which its place of worship is, and by the rector of the church, and by two laymen, members of such church, who shall be selected by such officials or by a majority of such officials.

"On filing such certificate such church shall be a corporation by the name stated in the certificate.

"§ 91. The archbishop or bishop and the vicar-general of the diocese to which any incorporated Roman Catholic church belongs, the rector of such church, and their successors in office shall, by virtue of their offices, be trustees of such church. Two laymen, members of such incorporated church, selected by such officers or a majority of them, shall also be trustees of such incorporated church, and such officers and such laymen trustees shall together constitute the board of trustees thereof. The two laymen signing the certificate of incorporation of an incorporated Roman Catholic church shall be the two laymen trustees thereof during the first year of its corporate existence. The term of office of the two laymen trustees of an incorporated Roman Catholic church shall be one year. Whenever the office of any such layman trustee shall become vacant, his successor shall be appointed from the members of the church by such officers or a majority of them. No act or proceeding of the trustees of any church so incorporated shall be valid without the sanction of the archbishop or bishop of the diocese to which such church belongs."

ANDREW J. SHIPMAN.

—•••—

In Guatemala twenty thousand troops guard the northern border and prevent all commercial intercourse with Mexico. Work on the Pan-American railway is at a standstill, for President Estrada Cabrera has forbidden its continuance on Guatemalan soil. The international bridge over the River Suchiate is at present useless; for there is no traffic.

—•••—

The annual convention of the Protestant school teachers of Quebec Province finds great inefficiency in the teachers of the lower grades. It was said that outside Montreal over 40 per cent. of the elementary teachers have not permits, and of 1,234 such teachers in the province over 46 per cent. have less than three years experience.

LITERATURE

The "Anonymous Poet" of Poland

At the time of the Polish rising of 1830 a Polish boy, torn by a terrible struggle between his devotion to his nation and his love for a father who had betrayed the national cause, poured out to an English friend his despair at the thought that he, and he alone, could do nothing in his country's behalf. That boy lived to become not only one of the greatest of Polish poets, but perhaps the most inspired moral teacher that Poland has ever known.

He was Zygmunt Krasinski. Chiefly on account of his father's attitude, and partly to protect himself against the Russian government, it was under the secret of his chosen name, "The Anonymous Poet," that he gave utterance to his patriotic pain, his entreaties and his counsels to the nation to whom he consecrated his sad life.

Brilliantly gifted, morbidly sensitive and highly strung, consumed by mental and physical suffering, he learnt through his sorrows the lesson that he taught his people. He watched the Russian persecution that devastated Poland after the fall of the Rising. In anguish he struggled for some ray of light that would save his nation and those who, like himself, suffered with and on account of her sufferings, from despair. Then he sank, as he tells us in his "Dawn," into a pit of misery where one only inscription stood, "There is no hope here," where he "dwelt, dwelt long, driven by wild rage and a measureless despair." After years of spiritual darkness he found his soul; and henceforth he devoted his whole life to teaching Poland that only by abjuring hatred and evil methods and by living in love could she reach salvation; that pain is the road which leads to light, joy and glory; and that because the nation suffered she was chosen by Heaven and destined to a high calling. Through bitter trials Krasinski, once having found the answer for which he had sought, stood firm to the same message of hope and moral purity and to the same sublime ideal.

Even in the work of his first youth, "The Undivine Comedy," his great and later teaching is faintly foreshadowed. This drama, presenting the war of class in almost unrelieved gloom, closes on a scene of desolation where everything perishes together. But in its last lines the Cross rises over the darkness, and "Galilee Vicisti" is the dying cry of the godless leader of the revolution.

Writing in those troubled times, when the works of the Polish poets were banned by the Russian censorship, and too often meant Siberia to the young Poles who read them, Krasinski couched his first great summons to his people under the form of allegory. "Trydion," written in 1836, when Poland was groaning under the iron hand of Nicholas I, is the tale of a Greek who, having sworn vengeance against Rome, sacrifices all—happiness, conscience, honor—if only his country's conqueror may be destroyed. He fails, because he lived for revenge and worked in hatred. But at the judgment passed on his soul one plea saves him, namely, that, although he had hated Rome, yet he loved Greece; and, as the mystical embodiment of the great Thought that Krasinski believed was Poland's one hope, Trydion is sent to the north to labor in love for the nation that will live again by love.

"Go and dwell among the brothers whom I give thee. There is thy second trial. For the second time thou shalt see thy love transpierced and dying: and the sorrows of thousands shall be born in thy one heart."

"And the sun rose above the ruins of Rome. And there were none whom I might tell where were the traces of my Thought—but I know that it lasts and lives."

In "Dawn" Krasinski appears as the prophet, the rapt seer of his nation's exaltation. "The mist," he sings, "becomes the golden house of God." Pain is the bridge of stars leading through the night to the splendor of the sun's rising. Visions of Poland's glory, won by her long agony, unfold themselves to his gaze: the enigma of her wrongs is made clear at last; and, in an ecstasy of joy, the poet thanks the "Eternal God of our fathers" for the martyrdom that has led to life.

The significance of this apotheosis of suffering, as "Dawn" may justly be called, is the more noteworthy when we remember that it is the outpouring of a liberated soul that had itself dwelt in the shadow of death.

Krasinski's "Psalms of the Future" carry the same high teaching as that of "Irydion" and "Dawn." About the "Psalms of Love" clings a peculiar pathos as being the voice of one who spoke nobly, but in vain. Krasinski wrote it as a passionate appeal to his countrymen to avoid a revolution that, pushed to its extreme conclusions, ended in the Galician massacres, instigated by the Austrian government, in 1846. Far from being merely episodic, the "Psalm of Love" remains as an eternal plea to both Poland and the human race to spurn the weapons of carnage and barbarity, and to bring about their salvation by self-sacrifice and purity of heart. He saw his darkest fears realized and his beloved country stricken by one of the most overwhelming catastrophes in her history: but the refuge of a great soul was still his. Despair and cynicism were not for him; and in the extremity of mental suffering he still—in the "Psalm of Grief" and the "Psalm of Good Will"—spoke to his nation of hope and faith. The "Psalm of Good Will" marks the summit of Krasinski's power. It breathes the dignity and calm of one who, after long battling with the tempest, has at last found sure foothold. His farewell prayer for his people is that they may take no step towards the spirits of evil that would drag them down, but that by the cross they may mount to the stars.

"O Lord, Lord, not for hope, nor for the destruction of our foes, nor for the weapons of power, do we entreat Thee, but only for a pure will. We, suspended betwixt the abyss and Thy kingdom, in the midst of perishing governments and worn-out times, with our foreheads bowed to the earth, we beseech Thee create in us a pure heart, renew our thoughts within us, uproot the weeds of sacrilegious falsehood, and give us that gift, eternal among all Thy gifts—give us good will." M. M. GARDNER.

Socialism, The Nation of Fatherless Children. By DAVID GOLDSTEIN and MARTHA MOORE AVERY. Boston: Thomas J. Flynn and Co.

The main difficulty in dealing with Socialism is to decide in what century we are living. Are we heirs of all the ages or are we pervenus who have just appeared on the stage of history? Are we beginning now for the first time to form civilization, or have we a civilization which, with all its defects—and they are many—is substantially worth keeping? Lord Bacon, in "The Advancement of Learning," raises the apparently paradoxical question: Are we the ancients? "These times are ancient when the world is ancient," he says, "and not those which we count ancient by a computation backward from ourselves." We are, therefore, the ancient, if standing on the structure raised by the wisdom of the race, we build securely our superstructure. We are the moderns—the juventus mundi—if, despising and discarding the foundation laid in the long travail of time, we attempt to tear down the very pillars of our civilization, and to rebuild with the reeds of negations and dreams a statelier and more balanced civilization. The ancients and the moderns we shall always have with us, as we shall have men of forty-five and boys of sixteen.

Now, the Marxian Socialists are the moderns in the Bacon sense. With the unwavering confidence of the race's freshmen, and the proud contempt of its youth for the past and the present, they are certain—with the kind of certainty that makes a boy of sixteen such an attractive bore—that the reign of plenty and peace would the day after to-morrow prevail on earth if they could get men to believe that the religious, family, social and economic forms of society are—not to be bettered—but abolished. They ask us to believe that "all social, political, legal, moral and religious institutions are built on an economic basis;" that the hearth, the throne and the altar are venerable and contemptible institutions; that the ten commandments are "a set of rules of conduct enforced and inculcated for the benefit of a class;" that all the blessedness we are ever going to have is at this side of the grave; and that we ought to get busy and possess ourselves of it at once, for to-morrow we die. After dubbing this balderdash science, they scold us and screech at us if we refuse to accept it; we are bourgeois, slave-minds, enemies of progress.

Is this doubted? The doubter can satisfy himself by reading the book which we are noticing. It is the work of those who have been behind the curtain and been disillusioned. The authors indulge in no fictions, draw no dubious inferences from remote premises, prove their contentions from no hostile or unauthorized sources. They do not substantiate their conclusions from the vaporings of soap-box orators, but from the teachings of leading and accredited exponents of socialism. Their appeal is not to Christians only, but to those who believe in God and morality, and love their home and their country. The book will serve not only to safeguard those who have not yet been inveigled into socialism, but to enlighten the proselytes of the outer gate, who, sincerely and justly condemning the diseases that affect the social and economic body, put their trust in loudly advertised fakir medicines.

It will be denounced through all the gamut of abuse by those whom it exposes. It will be declared to be "vile and slanderous," "false and foul," "dishonest and malicious"—but it will not be refuted. It ought to be—not one, but many copies—in every library to which the wage-earner has access.

TIMOTHY BROSNAHAN, S.J.

History of Modern Europe. By FERDINAND SCHWILL, Ph.D., Instructor in Modern History at the University of Chicago. New York: Charles Scribner's Sons.

This book is absolutely valueless as a historical work and reflects no credit on the University of Chicago, where the author is an instructor. Mr. Schwill is not an admitted authority in history himself, and in this very elementary volume of 417 pages—an extraordinarily restricted space for such a vast theme as the "History of Modern Europe"—he does not condescend to refer us to any of the great writers in support of his assertions, many of which have long ago been dismissed as old wives' tales. Indeed the whole book is for juvenile readers, and seems to have been written for the purpose of perpetuating religious misstatements that have been dissipated long ago.

The story of Luther as given by the author might be cited as an example. Thus, for instance, we are told: "A journey undertaken in 1510 to Rome may have planted in the rigorous young monk the seed of his later antagonism to the Papacy." As a matter of fact, Hausrath, Luther's latest biographer, and one of the most scholarly of Luther specialists, says in "Martin Luther's Romfahrt," p. 98: "He returned from Rome as strong in the faith as when he went to visit it. In a certain sense his sojourn in Rome even strengthened his religious convictions." Bayne, in his "Martin Luther," I, 234, says substantially the same thing, and so does Boehemer.

Of course one does not expect Mr. Schwill to know anything about Catholic doctrine, and consequently we may pass over the note at the foot of page 33, in which he informs his readers that "the Catholic Church taught that man is saved or justified by works, whereas Luther's view of Justification by Faith tried to lead men back to the necessity of the inner acceptance of God." This is very enlightening indeed, but one is quite puzzled to know why a writer who is presumably a German should describe such a conspicuous leader in the Reformation as Carlstadt, who in reality blazed the way for Luther, as "one Carlstadt."

The writer's concept of monks and monasticism connotes a limited knowledge of past and present conditions, when he asks our pity for Luther, "the poor monk," in the centre of what is called "the most impressive spectacle of history" when "for the first time in his life he stood before a brilliant concourse of princes and bishops." It is the old Protestant superstition that the monk is generally a rough, boorish lout, with no culture or training, and always in awe of and shrinking from the world outside. It must not be forgotten that "poor monks" have worn the papal tiara, and that there are to-day, as there have always been, monks who are bishops and archbishops and cardinals. Martin Luther was not at all dazzled by that "brilliant concourse of bishops and princes" of which he was the centre. He was a professor of philosophy, a doctor and lecturer of theology, a member of the Senate of the University, and the official representative of the Vicar-General of Saxony and Thuringia. Such a man was quite at ease in brilliant assemblies.

Nor is it true that Luther desired "to keep the problem of Church reform as uninvolved as possible with social and political aspirations." According to Thudichum and Stichard, the whole movement of the Reformation, from its very beginning, was a national rebellion, a mutiny of the German spirit and consciousness against what was regarded as Italian despotism. It was not primarily the desire of a new religion that prompted the Rebellion of the Peasants, but the need of a change from the oppressive conditions in which that class of people were living that created the unrest throughout the country. Luther fanned the smouldering fire to a fierce flame by his turbulent and incendiary writings, which were read with avidity by all, and by none more voraciously than the peasants, who looked upon "the son of the peasant" not only as an emancipator from Roman impositions, but the precursor of social advancement. "His invectives," says the Cambridge History, II, 173, "poured oil on the flames of revolt." There was surely enough of the political and social element in such a proceeding.

When he strove to allay the storm which he had evoked he wrote his famous "Exhortation to Peace," for which, says Lang, "he dipped his pen in blood." "He calls upon the princes," says Schreckenbach, "to slay the offending peasants like mad dogs: to stab, strangle and slay, and he holds out as a reward the promises of heaven." All that is surely political and social.

"If he has become dear to the German people and to the Protestant world in general," we are told, "it is not only because he created the new faith, but also because his large, hale figure, which we picture seated at the family board and surrounded by a circle of fresh young faces, breathes a broad sympathy and humanity." In other words, Luther is to be loved because he married a nun who had violated her vows as he had his, and because he lived publicly and defiantly in violation of the most sacred obligations of purity. One might just as well praise a reprobate for living with another's man's wife.

What is particularly offensive about this scene of connubial bliss which we are asked to admire is that his honeymoon with this apostate nun coincided with the slaughter of the peasants, of which the groom was the chief instigator. The family rejoicings were made more delightful by the cold-blooded witticisms of Luther about the horrible catastrophe that was then occurring, and by the circumstantial details which he gave to his friends about his married life, which are irreproducible in English. The author had better read De Wette and Melancthon about that portion of Luther's career.

But enough; Mr. Schwill does not know or does not want to disclose the real history of Luther. And the same may be said about many other personages and events mentioned in this very unreliable schoolbook, but we have no time or inclination to dwell on them.

* * *

Garibaldi and the Making of Italy. By GEORGE MACAULAY TREVELYAN. New York: Longmans, Green & Company.

This volume, the latest contribution of its author to the glorification of the revolutionary leader whose name dominates its title, is more moderate in tone than its predecessor, "Garibaldi and the Thousand," and takes greater account of the political side of the events of 1860. In his zeal for his hero Mr. Trevelyan maintains that Garibaldi was confronted with the real opposition of Napoleon III to any further progress in the Italian Revolution, and was in danger of losing the half-hearted support of the English Ministry headed by Lord John Russell. He would prove the former by the fact that Napoleon recommended an alliance between Naples and Piedmont, and the latter by the fact that Lord John Russell had to be pushed on by Sir James Hudson, who himself was dragged into supporting the invasion of Naples by the irresistible current of events and was prevented from signing a convention with France to prevent Garibaldi from crossing the Straits of Messina by Giacomo Lacaita and Lady Russell. They by a ruse drew him from the room where he was engaged with Persigny, the French Ambassador, in discussing the convention. There it was decided on the Italian's statement that to stop Garibaldi would be to throw the Revolution back into the condition it was in after 1848.

The obvious conclusion of Mr. Trevelyan's theory would be that the modern Kingdom of Italy is not the outcome of a long Masonic plot, with ramifications in nearly every European chancery, as Catholic historians assert. We must be allowed to say that Catholic historians are much better informed on the Revolution, its agents, its methods, its aims, than their adversaries are ready to admit. These have only such sources of information as the Revolution sees fit to grant them: the Catholics have at their disposal all the information collected in the Catholic courts, and especially in the Holy See, which, perhaps, is more extensive and more convincing than the ordinary reader thinks. However this may be, we think that from Mr. Trevelyan's facts alone can be shown the falseness of his theory.

This requires one to believe that Napoleon really wished his advice to be taken. This would suppose in him very little political acumen; yet none knew better than he that a Piedmontese-Neapolitan alliance was as impossible as would be friendly feelings brought about between a cat and a dog by the putting of them together into a sack. Napoleon was in the habit of saying one thing aloud to quiet his Catholic supporters at home, and of whispering its opposite in the ears of his revolutionary associates in Italy. He would then wait for the "accomplished fact," with which he would not interfere. Such, however, was the feeling in France against Garibaldi that he was compelled to take steps to prevent the invasion of Naples; but he was not the least pleased man in Europe when they proved abortive. As for Lord John Russell and Sir James Hudson, their opposition came, not from hostility to Garibaldi, but from their suspicion of Napoleon. No one pretends that all who were in the conspiracy to bring about the Italian Revolution were single-minded in the matter; and they feared that he might seize the opportunity to set up once more a French throne in Naples, to the manifest detriment of English interests in the Mediterranean. Moreover, even in England public opinion was divided as regards Garibaldi, and the sovereign was utterly opposed to him.

Still Piedmont understood that all this opposition was but apparent, and Mr. Trevelyan tells us how it dissolved instantly before the representations of Lacaita, a mere private emissary. Garibaldi crossed the Straits of Messina knowing well that Naples was to be left to its fate, and that neither England nor France would move a ship to save it. But he knew more. He knew that Naples was to perish through the treachery of the Neapolitan chiefs, military and civil, who, false to their king, were pledged body and soul to the Revolution. Men like Mr. Trevelyan may pretend that Garibaldi's military skill and personal bravery won the kingdom for New Italy: the fact is that the one and the other are almost fictitious, and that the treason of Liborio Romana, Minister of the Interior and of Police to Francis II, and that of his instruments and associates did what a dozen Garibaldis never could have done.

The idea once prevailed amongst those whose charity exceeded their knowledge, that Victor Emmanuel was an unwilling tool of the Revolution. Victor Emmanuel had a conscience; and, no doubt, this conscience often troubled him. But no one can hold that he did not, in violation of his conscience, go willingly into the lawless schemes that were to give him the whole peninsula, who reads his private letter, recently come to light and recorded by Mr. Trevelyan, in which he tells Garibaldi to ignore the official despatch he had just signed. It is true that the letter was not delivered, as Garibaldi divined the answer the king would have him give; but it remains to show that Victor Emmanuel was as thoroughgoing a conspirator as any in the tremendous revolution that changed the map of Europe fifty years ago. H. W.

Our Daily Bread. Talks on Frequent Communion. By WALTER DWIGHT, S.J. New York: Apostleship of Prayer. Price, 56 cents postpaid. 12 copies for $5.00.

The purpose of these papers by Father Dwight, now a member of the editorial staff of AMERICA, is to encourage the frequent reception of Holy Communion. Many of them excited favorable comment when they appeared in the pages of The Messenger of the Sacred Heart. It is in answer to repeated inquiries that they are now presented in a permanent form. Whilst the author urges no new motives to induce our Catholic people to go often to the Holy Table, and willingly acknowledges his indebtedness to the writers who have been before him in this field, the reader will surely be pleased with the easy, familiar tone that characterizes his exhortations.

After a preliminary chapter to show that the fourth petition of the "Our Father" is a daily appeal for the Divine Bread of the Eucharist, Father Dwight describes, under fifteen headings, Our Lord's attitude in the Blessed Sacrament towards those whose hearts He is permitted to enter as often as possible. Some of the papers, notably "The Victor's Guerdon," answer the oft-repeated objections to daily Communion. The book will prove an efficient aid for priests in overcoming the reluctance of some of their flock to heed the Holy Father's decree. Eight beautiful illustrations and the handsome binding, similar to the earlier volumes, "Under the Sanctuary Lamp" and "The Heart of the Gospel," published by the Apostleship of Prayer, make this book a most acceptable gift for Christmas in schools and Catholic households. Its moderate price places it within the reach of all.

JOHN CORBETT, S.J.

Daffodils. By Rev. JOSEPH JACOB. New York: Frederick A. Stokes Company.

It is high time to make preparations for a grand display of them in the spring. Why is it that more flower lovers do not take those few easy steps? If they feel somewhat distrustful of their ability to succeed, if they are at a loss among so many fine varieties, if they really do not know the simple wants of the daffodil and its more than ample repayment at a time when without it the garden would be bare indeed, here is a manual under whose guidance a child could have some measure of success, and the lover of flowers is almost bound to score a triumph. The daffodil can gratify all tastes and all purses. If one wishes to have a choice variety he may obtain a bulb of it for $250;

if one is satisfied with the good, old, tried and true varieties, they are to be had for twenty-five cents a dozen. The point to be insisted on is that every garden should have daffodils.

The color plates picture sixteen varieties to the life. Personally, our preference is for the Poetaz group, which, though comparatively new, is within the reach of modest purses. Chapters that will be found particularly helpful are those on Propagation, Cultivation, and Lists for Different Purposes. Why not hybridize and perhaps become famous? Amateurs have accomplished wonders with the daffodil. For those disposed to test their skill in this fascinating floral work very full directions and suggestions will be found in Chapter VII. A glance at this charming storehouse of daffodil lore and a thought of the bleak spring days ought to multiply orders for these cheerful and sturdy heralds of summer glory. * * *

St. Anselm, Archbishop of Canterbury. St. Louis: B. Herder.

This attractive volume is another of the "Notre Dame Series of Lives of the Saints." St. Anselm, confessor and doctor, was born in 1033 at Aosta in northern Italy, entered while still young the famous Benedictine monastery of Bec in Normandy, was in due time elected abbot by acclamation, and finally, as successor to the great Lanfranc, became Primate of All England in 1093. As Archbishop of Canterbury, single-handed, for years he defended the liberties of the Church and the supremacy of the Holy See against an overbearing king, who made servile flatterers of the other prelates in the country.

The author does not lay much stress on the technicalities of investiture and homage, but emphasizes rather the principles they encroached upon, and well portrays a fearless shepherd's fidelity to his charge. Anselm became archbishop much against his will. The nolo episcopari of the humble Benedictine, moreover, took that violent form we read of in early Fathers like St. Cyprian and St. Augustine, but which has now become somewhat obsolete. For while Anselm protested and struggled, several bishops seized him and dragged him to the Red King's bedside, forced the primate's crozier into the weeping abbot's clenched hand, and raised the cry, "Long live the Archbishop!" Only then, with a bad grace, did he consent to be consecrated and enthroned.

The primate's reign was a stormy one, and much of it was passed in exile, for he seemed to be the only man in England who dared oppose the tyrannical exactions of William Rufus. But his life has been an inspiration and example to subsequent defenders of the Church's rights, and his books have proved him a pioneer in the field of scholastic theology. St. Anselm died April 21, 1109, and was entombed in his own cathedral. The readers of the "Notre Dame Series" would like to be entrusted with the secret of their authorship. W. D.

When "Toddles" Was Seven. By Mrs. HERMANN BOSCH. New York: Longmans, Green and Co.

The original "Toddles" was a singularly favored little girl, whose mother had leisure and love enough to unfold before her daughter in simple, motherly fashion some of the beautiful lessons in the life of Our Blessed Lord. There are twenty-two chapters, about evenly divided between explaining some of the parables and dwelling on the tragedy of Holy Week. Very touchingly is the Scripture story set forth; very lovingly are little lessons for little listeners drawn from the story. All are cleverly woven together by means of events in the everyday life of "Toddles." We cordially recommend the book to every mother; and we know of no book that could serve better for that precious half-hour which is devoted to reading stories after the fidgety young pupils have been preternaturally "good" for some time. * * *

Pastors whom the fear of having their motives suspected deters from preaching on the efficacy of requiem Masses will welcome a pamphlet written by Father T. A. Roche, called "Masses for the Dead." The Church's doctrine and practice in the matter are well explained in the booklet, and it can be had from the Kenedys for $2.50 a hundred.

B. Herder is sending out a neatly printed edition of Newman's beautiful "Dream of Gerontius," which will make a good November "unbirthday present."

Those interested in the problems of conservation should not fail to see the "Annual Reports of the Forest, Fish and Game Commissioner of the State of New York for 1907-1908-1909," lately published in one handsome volume. All that was done during those three years to save the forests, protect the game and stock the rivers with fish is carefully recorded, and the importance of conservation work is strongly urged. The book is made very attractive by the insertion of over a hundred fine illustrations, many of them in colors, representing scenes and life in the forest or by the stream.

"Little Uplifts" is the name of a daintily dressed book that A. C. McClurg & Co., of Chicago, are publishing for Humphrey J. Desmond, the well-known promoter of Catholic weekly papers. The volume's ninety pages of short reflections on moral subjects and its shrewd counsels on the conduct of life many will find helpful reading.

"Devotion to the Holy Angels" is a reprint the Benzigers are issuing of a book which first appeared forty years ago, when Edward Healy Thompson translated it from the French of Archdeacon Boudon. Theology, pious tradition and hagiology have apparently been forced by the author to yield nearly all they contain about God's ministering spirits. The work, however, is more devotional than critical and abounds in fervent appeals to the reader.

BOOKS RECEIVED

The Brownings, Their Life and Art. By Lillian Whiting. Boston: Little, Brown & Co. Net $2.50.
The Five Great Philosophies of Life. By William de Witt Hyde. New York: The Macmillan Co. Net $1.50.
France and the French. By Charles Dawbarn. New York: The Macmillan Co. Net $2.50.
Everyman's Religion. By George Hodges. New York: The Macmillan Co. Net $1.50.
Social Pathology. By Samuel George Smith. New York: The Macmillan Co. Net $2.00.
Socialism; The Nation of Fatherless Children. By David Goldstein and Martha Moore Avery. Boston: Thomas J. Flynn & Co. Net $1.25.
Cambridge Bible for Schools and Colleges. 2 volumes: An Introduction to the Pentateuch; with notes by A. T. Chapman. The Book of Exodus, with notes by the Rev. S. R. Driver. New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons. Net $1.00 each.
The Coming Order. By Lucy Re-Bartlett. New York: Longmans, Green & Co. Net 75 cents.
Mother. By Kathleen Norris. New York: The Macmillan Co. Net $1.00.
The Innocence of Father Brown. By Gilbert K. Chesterton. New York: The John Lane Co. Net $1.30.
Alias Kitty Casey. By Mary Gertrude Williams. New York: P. J. Kenedy & Sons.
When "Toddles" Was Seven. Bible Stories. By Mrs. Hermann Bosch. New York: Longmans, Green & Co. Net $1.00.
State of New York. Forest, Fish and Game Commission. Annual Reports, 1907, 1908, 1909. Albany.

German Publications:

Luther. Von Hartmann Grisar, S.J., Drei Bände. Zweiter Band: Auf der Höhe des Lebens. St. Louis: B. Herder. Net $4.50.
Grundriss der Wohnungsfrage und Wohnungspolitik. Von Dr. Eugen Jaeger. M. Gladbach. 1911. Volksvereins-Verlag.

French Publication:

Recherches sur les Superstitions en Chine. Par Henri Doré. Shanghai: Imprimerie de T'ou-se-we.

Spanish Publication:

El Catecismo Mayor de S. S. El Pana Pio X Explicado al Pueblo. Madrid: Administración de Razón y Fé. Tomo I. Par G. Fianda. Precio 2.50.

EDUCATION

Speaking at the solemn pontifical Mass with which the eighth national convention of the American Federation of Catholic Societies was opened, August 9, 1909, Bishop Maes delivered an impressive sermon on the purpose of the gathering. The Covington prelate emphasized particularly the "glorious results of the self-sacrifice of Catholics in maintaining their own schools in which religious instruction of children holds its proper place in the program of studies." In view of the recognized benefits accruing to them in the untrammelled liberty they now enjoy, Bishop Maes, too, urged Catholics to move cautiously in reaching conclusions regarding the various schemes proposed to right the wrong done them in taxing them for the support of a school system of which conscience will not permit them to avail themselves.

* * *

The prudence suggested by the right reverend speaker was and is timely. The injustice of the double burden carried by Catholics is, to be sure, a grievous one; yet until the existence of the burden will have come to be clearly manifest to the majority of our citizens, prejudice and misunderstanding of the position of Catholics in reference to the educational question will make remedial legislation difficult. Whilst they smart under the unfair imposition, Catholics realize that their leaders are right when these bid them be patient. The leaders themselves are inspired, no doubt, to adopt a waiting policy by the conviction that their non-Catholic fellow citizens ultimately will come to acknowledge the sanity of the Catholic contention in regard to religious instruction in schools, and that the looked-for relief will follow as a matter of course.

* * *

That their conviction is sound recent developments would appear to indicate. The growth of socialistic sentiment at home and abroad seems to be the occasion of the long-awaited change of sentiment in the minds of earnest non-Catholics regarding the need of religious training in schools. That the socialistic program is essentially non-Christian and that the one safe remedy to oppose to its advance is to be found in the religious training of the young is a thought which is quietly filtering into the minds of Protestants. It is with considerable satisfaction, then, that we chronicle certain utterances heard at a recent men's dinner at the New York Avenue Methodist Episcopal Church in Brooklyn. These dinners, a feature of the social work of the church in question, serve as the occasion of frank, informal discussion of topics touching the activities in which the members of the church are interested. Mr. Bird Coler, chief speaker at the dinner referred to, called attention to the fact that "one of the distinctive things about the Christian religion was Christ's saying, 'Suffer little children to come unto Me,' and that one of the weakening things about the Protestant Church is that it is not taking care of the children."

* * *

Continuing, Mr. Coler said: "It has allowed materialism and the materialistic philosophy of socialism to be instilled into the minds of children through the public school system, which studiously excludes all reference to religion and to God.

"The consequence of this policy is that Socialism is becoming a State religion and that the Protestant churches are losing their affirmative character, and with it their efficacy for the cause of Christianity.

"Some of the denominations and some who are not of the Christian belief are awakening to the danger to the State resulting from godless schools. Regardless of the State system of education they are maintaining their own schools in order that their children may receive instruction in the faith of their fathers.

"The Catholics have a widespread system and are maintaining parochial schools everywhere. In the Middle West the Lutherans have a very complete primary school organization. The Episcopal Church is beginning to establish schools in which secular and religious instruction is commingled, and in this City of New York, within the last year or two, the orthodox Jews have established similar schools for their children.

"All these things indicate that this nation is not going to allow materialism to control its educational system. Thoughtful men expect that the State under this growing impulse will find some way of so expending its funds for educational purposes as to pay for service rendered and to discriminate in such payments against no church and, indeed, against no competent teacher of any kind.

"Some day it will be constitutional to hire a religious teacher to furnish secular education."

* * *

Times are changing surely. One needs not go back many years to find statements such as these violently denounced as un-American and as hostile to the principles upon which our boasted common school system rests. Yet Mr. Coler is a representative American; he is not a Catholic, nor were there any Catholics among the one hundred and fifty who sat about the table of the Methodist Church dinner when the plea for religious training in our schools was urged. More gratifying still to those who have fought the good fight for fifty years and more is the assurance given that scarcely an objection was made to the contention advanced by Mr. Coler. Results, it is said, is the argument that appeals to the practical American. Can it be that the claim advanced by men well versed in school affairs that nearly twenty-five per cent. of the graduates leaving certain of our high schools are active Socialists, is beginning to open the eyes of earnest Christians outside of the Church to the deplorable truth of the disastrous effects upon young people of non-religious training.

Early in October the registrars of the various Jesuit schools in the Middle West published the usual announcements of attendance at these institutions for the current school year. The bulletins show a grand total enrollment of 6,727 students on October 1 in the schools controlled by the Jesuits in St. Louis, Chicago, Milwaukee, Omaha, St. Mary's, Kansas, Cincinnati, Cleveland, Toledo, Detroit, and Prairie du Chien, Wisconsin. In three of these cities the number of students listed passes the 1,000 mark—in St. Louis, which has a registration of 1,372; in Chicago, where 1,172 are in attendance; and in Milwaukee, where 1,146 follow the different courses. Creighton University, the one endowed Catholic educational institution in the country, reports a total of 898 in its various departments. Of the grand total, 2,722 are following post graduate courses in universities under Jesuit supervision; 689 are doing work in college and advanced special classes; and 3,337 are registered in classical and English high schools preparatory to entrance into the advanced classes of the university schools. The record, with its testimony of substantial increase in registration this year, offers comforting assurance that the interests of advanced training for our Catholic boys are being carefully considered, and that Catholic schools are keeping abreast of the progress of our people in that section of the country.

From the East the only report that has as yet come to us is that of Georgetown University. This, the Nestor of our Catholic institutions for advanced training, has 1,300 students, a number breaking all previous records of attendance. The freshman class is the largest in the history of the university.

M. J. O'C.

SOCIOLOGY

Canada, from the commercial point of view, is much what the United States was some fifty years ago. Its principal function is to furnish raw material, chiefly the products of the soil, and is far from being a manufacturing country. Yet the census just completed shows that in the older provinces there is that tendency of the rural population to come into the cities which lies at the root of most of the sociological problems of the United States and Great Britain. This is seen most of all in the Maritime Provinces and Ontario. The condition of Quebec is fairly satisfactory. The population of this province is now, in round figures, two million, an increase of a little over 350,000 during the past ten years. Of this increase over 250,000 belong to the cities and less than 100,000 to the country. Ten years ago the population was about 460,000 in the cities and nearly 1,200,000 in the country, so that the increase of rural population was about 8 or 9 per cent.; and as very little of this is due to immigration, notwithstanding a constant outflow to the New England States, which is less than in former decades, the figures show that the tendency of rural Quebec towards the cities is less than that of the surrounding provinces. On the other hand, there has been considerable immigration into the cities from abroad, especially into Montreal, and this explains satisfactorily their growth beyond their natural increase.

The discrepancy between the estimated and the actual population is chiefly in the western provinces; and these are complaining that the census has been taken very inefficiently. As it was made under the late government, which was looking to the West to increase its supporters, the complaint is antecedently groundless; while, on the other hand, every one keeping his eyes open has noticed that a considerable number of the European immigrants into those provinces have drifted down to the United States. For this reason we remarked a year ago, in discussing the large increase of English and Scottish immigrants into this country, that if the government would indicate the points at which these entered much light would be thrown on the fruit of the efforts to settle them in the western Canadian provinces.

A fact in connection with this has come to light in one of the western cities, apparently most prosperous. In 1901 Vancouver, B. C., had only 27,000 inhabitants. With its suburbs, it has now 127,000. But it is at this moment engaged in revising its list of voters. The list under revision contains some 20,000 names, and from it no less than 6,000 are to be removed as no longer resident. If the last revision occurred three years ago, this means that every year one-tenth of its voters leave Vancouver. As the larger proportion of its floating population cannot consist of voters, this would imply that during the past ten years some 200,000 people have spent some time in Vancouver, and of them nearly half have declined to settle there. Some, of course, have gone to other parts of the province; but it seems more than probable that the greater number have crossed the border to the United States.

Altogether, the immigrant population of Canada is in a very fluid condition. If this be the case after ten years of apparent prosperity, one can judge what will be its condition if a reaction should set in.

H. W.

E. N. Vallandigham, in the Boston Evening Transcript, Oct. 21, has a good word for the immigrants living in the North End, Boston's "Little Italy." Settlement workers are surprised at the culture of the quarter. But let us quote Mr. Vallandigham. "Few Bostonians," he says, "know the Italian quarter, and it has its surprises even to those who have long been acquainted with it. The quarter has a culture of its own higher than that of any other mainly given over to strangers, higher, indeed, than that of some quarters where English is the speech of the inhabitants. One meets in the quarter young men, often with little or no English, who are far better informed and more systematically educated than most native American boys about to enter college. Some of the Italians who have picked up a reading knowledge of English have long been familiar with the great works of the language either in the original or in Italian translations. In manners the Italians of almost all sorts are apt to put Americans a little to shame. In spite of the loud and excited talk that one hears on the street and at indoor gatherings of Italians, they have a smiling courtesy and a tactful ease that are altogether charming."

PULPIT, PRESS AND PLATFORM

The Rev. J. Keating, S.J., sends the following on "Catholics and Science," translated from the XX Siècle of September 7, 1911, to the Catholic Times of Liverpool. The significance of the XX Siècle's appreciation, Father Keating says, will escape no one who is aware of the high and quasi-official position it holds in the Belgian press:

"In a meeting of a private and friendly character, held at Louvain from the 1st to the 3rd September, about forty representatives of various missionary societies, and of Catholic universities, institutions and associations, assembled.

"This unofficial reunion was due to the initiative of the Rev. Father W. Schmidt, S.V.D., director of the international review of ethnology and philology, Anthropos. After an instructive and extremely cordial interchange of views, the resolution was agreed to that an international organization be created, not later than next year, if the scheme can be realized in so brief a space. This in no sense implies a new Congress, but it should, under Providence, become a practical means of offering, in a series of 'Free Vacation Schools' (Cours libres de vacances), to give such missionaries or Catholic workers as should wish it a technical initiation into the sciences which throw light upon the various aspects of the religious fact. It might be named an 'Ethnology-Religion Week' (Semaine d'Ethnologie Religieuse). Catholic experts would be asked to join it, less in order that they might there produce dissertations or monographs suited only to an audience of specialists than to communicate to such voluntary students as we have mentioned something of the fruits of their professional knowledge, or of the accumulated resources of their experience.

"It is hoped that in this way the invaluable ethnological data which are already being collected with so much zeal by Catholic missionaries will be treated in a most satisfactory and scientific manner, and that more light may thus be shed by them upon the delicate questions on which, in our times, philosophy, theology, apologetics, and the press are so constantly called to speak, or at least to touch.

"We trust that the enterprise thus initiated at Louvain, with the cooperation of numerous missionaries and Catholic experts, and with the emphatic encouragement and express sympathy of a distinguished ecclesiastical patronage, will shortly take definite shape. We shall then be able to supply our readers with further details, certain as we are that this new departure cannot but arouse their keenest interest. Indeed, it may be said that, in one shape or another, this venture had been living in the hopes of every expert and of every intelligent Catholic. It would appear destined to render marked service at once to science and to Catholic apologetics.

"A movement in which, besides a number of University professors, Franciscans, Dominicans, Jesuits, Marists, Fathers of the Society of the Sacred Heart, of the Holy Spirit, White Fathers and others are already in collaboration, cannot but excite the widest sympathies, and be fertile in results. For efficiency and permanency, needless to say, a firm financial basis will be imperative. Few contributions to the modern needs of the Church could be better advised than the foundation of a lecture, or course of lectures, in the 'summer school.'"

ECCLESIASTICAL NEWS

The following circular letter has been sent by Cardinal-elect Falconio to the Archbishops and Bishops of the United States: Your Lordship:

By a letter of the 18th instant, His Eminence, Cardinal Merry del Val, informs me that His Holiness, Pope Pius the Tenth, will be pleased to promote me to the high dignity of the Cardinalate on the occasion of the next consistory, which will take place on the 27th of November. In obedience to the wishes of our Holy Father, I have deemed it my duty to accept the great honor which he has thus been pleased to confer upon me, and I do so trusting that, as a member of the Sacred College, the rest of my life may still, with the assistance of God, be of some service to the Church.

And since my elevation to the Cardinalate will mark the end of my mission as Apostolic Delegate to the United States, I deem it a sacred duty to express, before my departure, my highest appreciation of all the kindness which the people of the United States have at all times and in all places shown to me during my tenure of the office of representative of our Sovereign Pontiff, Pius the Tenth; a kindness for which I desire to offer to them all my sincerest thanks and my deepest gratitude.

In a most especial manner, however, my thanks are due to the American Hierarchy the lustre of the Catholic Church in the United States. I am glad to say that I carry with me to Rome the best and most consoling proofs of the great religious and social work which is being successfully carried on in this vast Republic through the earnest zeal of the Bishops and the efficient cooperation of their beloved clergy and faithful people. When at Rome, under the shadow of St. Peter's, though far away from you, I shall ever remember with joy and pride this flourishing portion, now so endeared to me, of Christ's divine Church, and I shall constantly pray that God may shower in abundance upon you all His choicest gifts.

I take pleasure in announcing to you in conclusion that, until a new Delegate has been appointed, Very Rev. Monsignor Bonaventura Cerretti, at present Auditor of this Apostolic Delegation, will, by appointment of the Holy See, act as Chargé d'Affaires.

I expect to leave Washington for Rome on the 12th day of November.

Recommending myself and my future to the prayers of Your Lordship, I remain very sincerely yours in Christ,

✠ D. FALCONIO,

Washington, D. C., 31 October, 1911. Apostolic Delegate.

There was a wonderful religious parade in Philadelphia on October 29. Thirty thousand members of fifty branches of the Philadelphia Archdiocesan Union of Holy Name Societies marched in the third annual demonstration to show their reverence for the Holy Name. After passing the Cathedral rectory, on the steps of which Archbishop Prendergast reviewed them for three hours and a half, the marchers crowded into Logan Square, where they assisted at the Solemn Benediction of the Most Blessed Sacrament. The spectacle was most impressive and never to be forgotten by the participants.

In Baltimore, the other day, Cardinal Gibbons went down to the Juvenile Court to sit with Judge Williams and see him try the morning docket of the court. The benches where sit the youthful penitents were crowded when the Cardinal entered, and there were none, even of the boys, who did not recognize the slight figure as it passed up to the rail and sat beside the judge. A little tow-headed lad with a cowlick was the first offender to face the tribunal. He had been throwing stones, and an indignant woman said that he had broken six windows in her store.

The lad was sorry and he wanted to cry; but when he caught a glimpse of the twinkling eyes of the Cardinal, he faintly smiled and hung his head. "Charley," said Judge Williams, "you know it's bad to throw stones, don't you? If everybody were allowed to throw stones this city would be a dangerous place to live in. It is against the law to throw stones, and we must all obey the law. You understand that, don't you?" Charles understood and walked away, promising, on his month's parole, that he would be a good boy and not throw stones. The Cardinal gazed after the boy with keen interest. There was something in Charley's manner that pleased the prelate. Case after case was tried—some of the offenders with smiles, others with tears. One little boy, when asked what he had done, said he had done nothing, adding as clinching evidence, "I've been to my grandmother's." At the end of the session the Cardinal congratulated Judge Williams on what his Eminence said was an admirable institution, which was doing splendid work for the state and for society. The wise counsel of the Judge and the temperate way in which he dealt out justice would be the means of saving many children from criminal lives. The whole incident is quite characteristic of Cardinal Gibbons, showing how democratic are his ways and how he ever keeps in touch with all the people.

SCIENCE

At the International Electrochemical Congress held recently at Turin it was agreed to adopt provisionally a new code of international symbols. Mass, length and time are to read Mm, Ll, and Tt; electric current, electromotive force, and resistance, I, E, R; quantity of electricity, Qq; magnetic field and induction, H and B; inductance, L. The maximum value of any quantity is to be indicated by the subscript m.

Dr. A. R. Meyer, of the University of Greifswald, offers new figures regarding the conductivity of iron at different temperatures. There is a rapid falling off with a rise in temperature until the 700 degree Centigrade mark is reached. Above this point the decrease is smaller and more nearly uniform. The wattage loss in the wire, the current through it, the electromotive force at its ends, and the resistance are all proportional to powers of the absolute temperature up to 700 degrees C.

The recent tests of Messrs. Claude, Ferrier and Driencourt for the determination of longitude by wireless have proven highly reliable. The positions chosen were Paris and Brest, a distance of about 375 miles, and Paris and Bizerta, close to 968 miles. A comparison of this method with the telephonic indicated a mean error of 0.01 second.

Kernbaum has succeeded in showing that the "oxygenation" of water, which two years ago he proved could be effected by the ultra-violet rays, may be obtained by sunlight. Since it is the ultra-violet rays which are effective, the action is most marked at high altitudes, but it is pronounced enough at sea-level if the water is in the presence of air. F. TORNDORF, S.J.

OBITUARY

The death of Rev. Charles Eberschweiler, S.J., is mourned by countless friends among the Catholic clergy of our country who have been trained to the sweet service of the Lord under his spiritual guidance. His life was passed under many skies, and amid many varieties of labor. Born at Trierischen, September 19, 1841, he entered the German province of the Society of Jesus in 1860. The course of his theological studies was interrupted by the Franco-Prussian war, during which he served in the German army in charge of the wounded. He was finally ordained to the priesthood at St. Beuno's, Wales, and two years thereafter sailed for India, where his activity continued for ten years. Sickness took him back to Europe, whence after a short stay he departed for America, whither he was twice sent, laboring for a time among the Indians in Dakota. In 1900 he went to the Josephinum at Columbus, O., where he was stationed as spiritual father for the students until death summoned him from this most fruitful field. His gentle, child-like, loving, earnest, zealous soul has answered to the last call of obedience and has found its home at the Heart of the Master.

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

NEGLECT OF CITIZENSHIP

To the Editor of AMERICA:

After reading the able editorials in last week's AMERICA on Catholic citizenship and on the vote and propaganda of Socialism, and in to-day's issue the article on "Catholics and Labor Unions," it has seemed to me that a practical way of furthering the interests of Catholic truth through Catholic citizenship would be a more general use of the privileges of citizenship by Catholics.

Statistics show that thousands of Catholics who are eligible for citizenship and the voting privilege fail to avail themselves of either. Many of various nationalities who come to this country, intending to make it their permanent home, either do not become naturalized at all or put the matter off for many years. Moreover, many of those who are native born do not take the trouble to have their names placed on the voting list or to vote when registered.

In the city in which I live, which is sixty-five per cent. Catholic, there are between 26,000 and 27,000 males assessed for a poll tax. The actual registration of voters is less than 16,000; so that between 10,000 and 11,000 who are assessed have no power in the government. It is reasonable calculation that 7,000 of these 11,000 are of the Catholic Faith. The whole of Massachusetts is about sixty-five per cent. Catholic, and it is certain that at least twenty-five per cent. of the eligible Catholic population fail to avail themselves of the privileges of voters. There is reason to believe that similar conditions exist in many parts of the country. It seems plain that the forces of Socialism, and other forces more or less objectionable, can most effectively be dealt with by the elective franchise. It is the duty of every man to take part in the government of his nativity or adoption.

The editor of one of the leading Catholic journals of the country recently admitted that the condition of France to-day is directly attributable to the failure of Catholics, who are in an overwhelming majority, to take part in the government. This certainly is wrong. It is equally so in America, so far as the neglect extends. The responsibility cannot be avoided in either case.

I respectfully suggest that through AMERICA and other Catholic journals the Catholic laity be urged to avail themselves of the privileges of citizenship. It is unnecessary to say that they will use the intelligence and virtue which they possess in passing upon matters of public moment, no matter with what political party or policy they may align themselves. As you have stated, and as every one who has investigated the matter knows, the Socialist organization is constant in spreading its propaganda and increasing its power, through just such practical agencies as I have suggested, and particularly by its voting strength at public elections, in labor unions and elsewhere. Clearly it is both policy and duty for us to follow similar methods. Constant insistence upon this duty, not at any particular season, but throughout the year, would be certain to produce results.

JAMES B. VALLEY.

Boston, Mass., Oct. 28.

CLEANLINESS OF OPERATION

is one of the strong features that has helped to earn the present world-wide reputation and endorsement of the Daus Improved Tip Top Dupliator. No printer's ink used, thus avoiding soiled hands and clothing. No expensive supplies. 100 copies from pen-written and 50 copies from type-written original. Sent on ten days' trial without deposit. Complete Dupliator, cap size (prints 8 1/2 x 13 inches), contains roll of "Dausco" Oiled Linen Back Duplicating surface (which can be used over and over again). Price $5.00
Felix G. Daus Dupliator Co., Daus Building, 111 John St., New York

Plays, Drills, Tableaux

SUITED FOR

Catholic Schools and Churches are contained in "HINTS," the entertainment magazine

Send for free Sample Copy

HINTS MAGAZINE, 3 W. 29th St., New York, N. Y.

WITH GLACIER WINDOW DECORATION

YOU CAN GET
Stained Glass Effects
on Ordinary Windows

Suitable for Residence
Churches and Schools

Special Ecclesiastical Designs

Write To-day for Booklet 6

Address WM. B. QUAILE, 752 Broadway, New York

DENTISTRY

Loose teeth tightened by a new process; teeth without plates. Extracting avoided. High-class and up-to-date dentistry in all branches at reasonable prices.

DRS. BURKE & BURKE
DENTISTS

1947 BROADWAY AND 65TH ST
66th St. Subway, L station and all surface cars.

Sarony
E. N. BURRILL, PROP.

Photographer
256 Fifth Ave., New York

Favorably known to the Clergy and Laity for many years

HIGGINS'

DRAWING INKS
ETERNAL WRITING INK
ENGROSSING INK
TAURINE MUCILAGE
PHOTO MOUNTER PASTE
DRAWING BOARD PASTE
LIQUID PASTE
OFFICE PASTE
VEGETABLE GLUE, ETC.

Are the Finest and Best
Inks and Adhesives

For School, Home and Business Use

Emancipate yourselves from the use of corrosive and ill-smelling inks and adhesives and adopt the HIGGINS' INKS AND ADHESIVES. They will be a revelation to you, they are so sweet, clean, well put up and withal so efficient.

At Dealers Generally

271 Ninth St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

Branches: Chicago, London

CHAS. M. HIGGINS & CO., Mfrs.

If Soda
Crackers
Grew on Trees

Nature would cover them with shells, like nuts, protecting from moisture, mildew, dirt and insects.

Just so are Uneeda Biscuit protected by the moisture-proof, dust-proof package. It keeps them oven-fresh and crisp, retaining all their flavor and goodness till used.

Think it over and you will always buy the protected kind

Uneeda Biscuit

Never Sold
in Bulk

5¢

In the moisture-proof package

NATIONAL BISCUIT COMPANY

McCray Refrigerators

"Proven Very Satisfactory"

McCray Refrigerator Co., Kendallville, Ind.

GENTLEMEN—The large cooler placed in St. Joseph's Sanitarium by your Detroit agent has, during the short time we have used it, proven very satisfactory, articles placed in the compartments keeping perfectly dry and sweet.

Your icing from the outside is a very desirable feature in the way of cleanliness, which is very much appreciated by all.

Respectfully yours,
SISTERS OF CHARITY,
St. Joseph's Sanitarium Mt. Clemens, Mich.

McCray Refrigerators

are made in all sizes for every purpose that requires perfect refrigeration

Books describing the different varieties will be sent free on request:

- No. A. H. Built-in-to-order for Residences;
- No. 88 regular models for Residences;
- No. 87 for Grocers;
- No. 89 for Meat Markets;
- No. 48 for Hotels, Clubs and Institutions;
- No. 72 for floral shops.

McCray Refrigerator Co.

254 Lake Street, Kendallville, Ind.

New York Branch, 231 W. 42d Street
Display Rooms and Agencies in all Principal Cities.

BROKAW BROTHERS

ASTOR PLACE AND FOURTH AVENUE

Our Clergymen's clothes are made with the most exacting care, because we know down to the smallest detail what is correct in cut, materials and fit.

We are showing Clerical Sack Suits in smooth and rough black, dark oxford mixed and narrow self-stripes.

Clerical, Cassock and Lay Waist-coats in all materials.

Mail Orders Filled.

We send samples upon request.

ESTAB. OVER HALF A CENTURY

WARD & CO. Fulton Ave. & East River
ASTORIA, NEW YORK

Telephone 22 Astoria

Shipbuilders
Shipwrights
Machinists

Saw Mills
Planers
Blacksmith Shops

DRY DOCKS

Established 1876 Estimates Cheerfully Furnished

Has It Ever Occurred to You
THAT THERE ARE

MANY KINDS OF SODA
WATER AND SOFT STUFF
FOISTED ON THE PUBLIC

New York Bottling Co.

OUR PRODUCTS

COST NO MORE

OVER BAR THAN THE CHEAP
ONES MADE FROM GLUCOSE,
SACCHARIN AND
ANILINE DYES

Get Your Money's Worth

The Coward Shoe

"REG. U. S. PAT. OFFICE"

Imitation

Unscrupulous dealers are attempting to deceive the public by making misleading and unlawful use of the COWARD name.

THE PUBLIC—is informed that the Coward Shoe is sold only from our one place of business, at 264-274 Greenwich St. (near Warren St.,) New York City.

JAMES S. COWARD 264-274 Greenwich St. NEW YORK
(Near Warren St.)

Mail Orders Filled

Sold Nowhere Else

Send for Catalogue

"We furnish any book published anywhere"

MAY WE SERVE YOU?

Publishers, Importers and Booksellers

Our Monthly Book List Free
Upon Request

LEO KELLY & CO.

118 East 28th Street, New York

PRINTING OF EVERY DESCRIPTION
FOR
Churches and Schools

Periodical Publications

Catalogues

Programs

Stationery

Etc., etc.

THE MEANY PRINTING CO.

6th Avenue, Cor. 11th St., NEW YORK

Pioneer Priests OF North America

By Rev. T. J. CAMPBELL, S.J.

VOLUME I

Among the Iroquois

AN INTERESTING STORY OF THE MISSIONARIES AMONG THE IROQUOIS

188 Pages

27 Illustrations

Price $1.60 By Mail
20c extra

VOLUME II

Among the Hurons

TELLS THE HEROIC STORY OF DE BRÉBEUF
AND HIS ASSOCIATES.

480 Pages

24 Illustrations

Price $2.00 By Mail
20c extra

THE AMERICA PRESS 59 East 83d Street
NEW YORK

When Love and Skill Work Together Expect a Masterpiece.

SET OF 30 HIGH CLASS ART POSTALS
of RELIGIOUS SUBJECTS 50¢
SENT BY MAIL

WE SEND FREE WITH ORDER A WELL MADE ALBUM
WITH YOUR NAME STAMPED IN GOLD ON COVER.

Set of 30 Souvenir Picture Cards of Religious Subjects, reproduced from Famous Paintings in the National Galleries of Europe. Each subject is elaborately lithographed in the most beautiful colors and of exceptional quality.

An appropriate remembrance gift to friends. Complete set of 30 pictures, including Album to hold 24, with your name stamped in gold on cover (if desired). Mailed to you complete on receipt of 50c. You will be pleased with the artistic beauty of these pictures, at such moderate cost.

IMPORT DISTRIBUTING CO.

25 West 42nd Street

New York

WE OWN AND OFFER

$165,000

First Mortgage Real Estate $500 Gold Coupon Notes

EXECUTED BY

St. Joseph's Convent of Mercy in St. Louis
(A Corporation)

RATE OF INTEREST

5%

PAYABLE SEMI-ANNUALLY

TOTAL ISSUE $300,000

PROPERTY VALUED AT $700,000

All Notes Dated April 10, 1911

Interest coupons payable May 1st and November 1st of each year, at the office of the Mercantile Trust Company, Trustee in Deed of Trust, securing this issue of Notes.

Principal Notes of $500 each, payable as follows:

Numbers 1 to 20, both inclusive, on May 1, 1914 (Sold).....	$ 10,000
Numbers 21 to 40, both inclusive, on May 1, 1915 (Sold).....	10,000
Numbers 41 to 70, both inclusive, on May 1, 1916 (Sold).....	15,000
Numbers 71 to 100, both inclusive, on May 1, 1917 (Sold).....	15,000
Numbers 101 to 130, both inclusive, on May 1, 1918 (Sold).....	15,000
Numbers 131 to 160, both inclusive, on May 1, 1919.....	15,000
Numbers 161 to 190, both inclusive, on May 1, 1920.....	15,000
Numbers 191 to 600, both inclusive, on May 1, 1921.....	205,000

Maturities available 1919, 1920 and 1921

Total.....$300,000

SECURITY—Six Separate Properties Valued at over $700,000

FIRST: A magnificent tract of ground fronting 314 feet 10 inches on Euclid Avenue by the extraordinary depth of 432 feet 7 inches on Parkview Place and 396 feet on Audubon Avenue, just one-half block east of Forest Park, and one block south of Forest Park Boulevard. There is now in course of erection on this property at a cost of over $380,000 the handsome new fireproof building known as St. Johns Hospital, one of the most modern and complete buildings of its kind in the United States.

THIRD: The Southeast Corner of 22d and Morgan Streets. Lot fronting 168 feet on Morgan Street by a depth of 144 feet 7½ inches on 22d Street, together with the 3-story brick building, now used as the Girls' Industrial School.

FIFTH: Eighty-one acres fronting on the Laclede Station Road and Edgar Road in St. Louis County, near Webster Groves. A magnificent tract of land rapidly increasing in value.

SECOND: The Southeast Corner of 23d and Locust Streets fronting 106 feet 6 inches on Locust Street by 155 feet on 23d Street, together with the 3-story brick building, known as the St. Johns Hospital and covering the entire lot. It is the intention to remove said Hospital to the new building above described as soon as same is completed. The Girls' Industrial School now at 22d and Morgan Streets will then be removed to and will occupy the property at 23d and Locust Streets.

FOURTH: A strip of ground fronting 451 feet 3 inches on the north line of Cook Avenue by a depth of 147 feet 6 inches on Newstead Avenue, just opposite the Rankin School of Mechanical Trades.

SIXTH: A tract of land fronting 320 feet on Nichols Street and bounded by Main and Concord Street in the City of Springfield, Missouri, together with the brick Hospital Building, known as St. Johns Hospital thereon, erected at a cost of Forty Thousand Dollars, exclusive of ground.

The Deed of Trust securing these notes is a first Mortgage on EACH OF THE SIX properties described, making the notes exceptionally well secured.

The Mortgage requires that the improvements be kept insured in a sum of at least $175,000 against fire and $100,000 against tornado. Loss, if any, payable to and policies held by the Mercantile Trust Company for the benefit of note-holders.

The Title to all this property is perfect. Titles have been examined and Certificates issued by Title Guaranty Trust Co. on the St. Louis City and County properties.

Notes payable to bearer, but if desired may be registered free of charge in name of purchaser.

A safe and convenient Investment of $500 or multiples of $500 netting purchasers 5%.

Purchases by non-residents filled with the same dispatch as locally.

Interviews and correspondence invited.

REAL ESTATE
LOAN DEPARTMENT

Mercantile Trust Company

Eighth and Locust Streets
ST. LOUIS, MISSOURI

FESTUS J. WADE, President.

J. B. MOBERLY, Real Estate Loan Officer.

Capital and surplus Nine and One-half Million Dollars.

The Catholic Mind

Fortnightly (24 Numbers) $1.00 per year

LIST OF ARTICLES NOT OUT OF PRINT

—1903—

- No. 9. THE ATTITUDE OF MODERN PROTESTANTS TOWARDS THE VIRGINITY OF OUR BLESSED LADY. A. J. MAAS, S.J.
 Nos. 10, 11. GALILEO GALILEI LINCEO.
 No. 22. THE END JUSTIFIES THE MEANS. Rt. Rev. BISHOP LUDDEN, JOHN GERARD, S.J., S. M. BRANDI, S.J.

—1904—

- Nos. 3, 4. STATISTICS OF THE LEADING RELIGIOUS DENOMINATIONS. H. A. KROSE, S.J.
 Nos. 8, 9. THE RELIGIOUS CRISIS IN FRANCE. A. DE MUN.
 No. 14. THE CONCORDAT OF 1901. D. M. O'CONNOR.
 Nos. 15. SUAREZ AND REGICIDE.
 Nos. 17, 18. THE VATICAN WHITE BOOK.
 No. 24. THE CATHOLIC PROTECTORATE OF FRANCE IN THE EAST AND IN THE FAR EAST.

—1905—

- No. 8. WHO STARTED THE SPY SYSTEM IN FRANCE?
 No. 10. PUBLIC CONTROVERSIES ON RELIGIOUS MATTERS. Etudes.

—1906—

- No. 1. THE FRENCH SEPARATION BILL. TEXT. J. G.
 No. 13. SCIENCE AND RELIGION.
 No. 15. I. OBJECT OF FEDERATION. Rt. Rev. J. F. REGIS CANEVIN, D.D.
 II. DIVORCE. Hon. DANIEL J. KEMEFICK.
 No. 17. HOLY COMMUNION IN THE EARLY CHURCH. EDWARD KING, in the Month.
 No. 18. THE FRENCH ASSOCIATIONS OF WORSHIP AND THEIR SUBSTITUTES.
 No. 24. THE DELUSION OF CHRISTIAN SCIENCE. T. J. CAMPBELL, S.J.

—1907—

- No. 1. LEGAL OPINIONS ON THE FRENCH SPOILIATION.
 No. 4. FERDINAND BRUNETIERE. PIERRE SUAU, S.J.
 No. 10. RECENT PAPAL DOCUMENTS.

—1908—

- No. 4. A PRIMARY CIVIC DUTY.
 No. 7. SCIENCE AND HER CONTOURFEIT. J. GERARD, S.J.
 No. 8. UNIVERSITY EDUCATION IN IRELAND.
 No. 9. PLAIN WORDS ON SOCIALISM. I. C. S. DEVAS, M.A.
 No. 11. CATHOLICS AND THE SOCIAL MOVEMENT. Rt. Rev. MGR. PARKINSON, D.D.
 No. 12. THE MAKING OF A SAINT.
 No. 13. MR. BIRRELL'S UNIVERSITY BILL.
 No. 14. STATUS AND PROPERTY RIGHTS OF THE ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH.
 No. 15. APOSTOLIC CONSTITUTION ON THE ROMAN CURIA.
 No. 16. THE ROMAN COURTS.
 No. 17. THE CHURCH THE STRONG SAFEGUARD OF THE REPUBLIC. Most Rev. Wm. H. O'CONNELL, D.D.

- No. 19. THE GENIUS OF CARDINAL WISEMAN. WILFRID WARD.
 No. 20. THE MASS AND THE REFORMATION. J. CANON MOYES.
 No. 22. REVISING THE VULGATE. F. A. GASQUET, Abbot, O.S.B.

—1909—

- No. 1. LORD KELVIN AND THE EXISTENCE OF GOD. H. V. GILL, S.J.
 No. 2. PRIMARY EDUCATION IN FRANCE. J. E. N.
 No. 3. PSYCHOTHERAPY. JAMES J. WALSH, M.D., LL.D.
 Nos. 4, 5. SOCIALISM AND CHRISTIANITY. I, II. Rev. J. F. HOGAN, D.D.
 No. 8. DARWINISM FIFTY YEARS AFTER. G. BONETTI, S.J.
 No. 9. CATHOLIC FEDERATION OF LONDON. Hon. CHARLES RUSSELL.
 No. 10. THE SALFORD DIOCESAN CATHOLIC FEDERATION. The Month, May, '09.
 Nos. 11, 12, 13, 14. CALVIN'S CONVERSION. I, II, III, IV. PAUL BERNARD, in Etudes.
 Nos. 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20. CATHOLIC UNIVERSITIES. I, II, III, IV, V, VI. ALFRED BAUDRILLART.
 No. 21. SOCIALISTS AND CATHOLICS. ETIENNE LAMY.
 No. 24. SERMON ON CARDINAL NEWMAN. JOSEPH RICKABY, S.J.

—1910—

- No. 1. THE FRENCH BISHOPS AND THE EDUCATION PROBLEM. CHAMBRUN.
 No. 2. ETERNAL PUNISHMENT. GEORGE R. ROCHE, S.J.
 No. 3. THE SONS OF ST. FRANCIS. HERBERT THURSTON, S.J.
 Nos. 4, 5, 6, 7, 8. CATHOLIC MISSIONS. I, II, III, IV, V. HILARION GIL.
 Nos. 11, 12, 13. CALLISTUS III AND HALLEY'S COMET. I, II, III.
 Nos. 14, 15. ST. CHARLES BORROMEO ENCYCLICAL.
 No. 16. THE PASTOR AND EDUCATION.
 No. 17. HOLY COMMUNION FOR CHILDREN.
 No. 18. THE XXI EUCHARISTIC CONGRESS. E. SPILLANE, S.J.
 No. 19. THE HOLY EUCHARIST IN EARLY CANADA. T. J. CAMPBELL, S.J.
 Nos. 20, 21. PIUS X ON RECENT MANIFESTATIONS OF MODERNISM.
 No. 22. REMOVAL OF PARISH PRIESTS.
 No. 24. MAYOR NATHAN'S INSULT TO THE POPE.

—1911—

- No. 2. THE PORTUGUESE REVOLUTION.
 No. 3. SOME CAUSES OF THE PORTUGUESE REVOLUTION.
 Nos. 4, 5. SPAIN AS SHE IS. Catholic Herald of India.
 No. 6. SOCIALISM IN THE SCHOOLS. Hon. BIRD S. COLER.
 No. 7. CONDEMNATION OF MODERNISM. Rt. Rev. B. J. KEILEY.
 No. 8. ONE HUNDRED BEST CATHOLIC BOOKS.
 Nos. 9, 10. THE CHILD IN THE HOME AND THE SCHOOL. Rt. Rev. DR. CLEARY.
 Nos. 11, 12. CARDINAL GIBBONS' JUBILEE.
 Nos. 13, 14. PROTESTS OF PIUS X AND BISHOPS OF PORTUGAL.
 No. 15. THE TRUTH ABOUT THE "ENCYCLOPEDIA BRITANNICA." T. J. CAMPBELL, S.J.
 No. 16. THE CATHOLIC PRESS. E. SPILLANE, S.J.
 No. 17. ENGLISH ECONOMISTS AND CATHOLIC ETHICS. Rev. MICHAEL MAHER, S.J.
 No. 18. CATHOLICISM AT HOME AND ABROAD.
 No. 19. THE EARLY CHURCH AND COMMUNION. JOHN RICKABY, S.J.

Single numbers 5 cents each, $4.00 per hundred
 Double numbers 10 " " 7.00 " "

Copies of THE CATHOLIC MIND not included in this list will be accepted in exchange for any of the above

THE AMERICA PRESS, 59 East 83d Street, New York City

A Fine Biography of a Great Pioneer

FATHER LACOMBE

THE BLACK ROBE VOYAGEUR

By KATHERINE HUGHES

8vo, Illustrated. $2.50 net. By mail, $2.70.

This biographical story of Père Lacombe, whom Archbishop Ireland calls the most remarkable priest Western America has ever seen, is written from the standpoint of historical and human interest. It opens with pictures of life in old Quebec; from 1849 onward it deals mainly with the West.

The subject—strong, humorous, and dominant—passes with a great joy-of-life from one dramatic experience to another in the wilderness, and on to the crowded life of big cities, where he still refuses to be commonplace. He is always a Knight-errant of charity, a raconteur par excellence, a Genius for friendship, a diplomat among diplomats.

MOFFAT, YARD & COMPANY UNION SQUARE NEW YORK

TYPEWRITER RIBBONS AND CARBON PAPERS

Especially adapted for use in Colleges and Schools

Send for our Circular as to how we will save you 50 per cent. on supplies

SNELLING & SON 225 34th Street, South Brooklyn, N. Y. Purveyors to U. S. Gov't

A Lady of experience offers her services as a guide in the Eternal City or other parts of Italy.

Correspondence Invited.

MISS RATHE

Via Paolo Emilio 28<sup>int</sup> 3. Rome, Italy

THE

KNOX

HAT

Is universally recognized as the Standard by which all others are judged.

452 FIFTH AVE. (Cor. 40th St.)

FIFTH AVENUE BUILDING (5th Ave. & 23d St.)

161 BROADWAY. (Singer Building).

ONLY 75 CENTS EACH, POSTPAID

Keep every number of AMERICA in a handsome ADJUSTABLE BINDER

THE AMERICA PRESS, 59 East 83rd Street, New York

Sacred Heart Sanitarium

FOR REST, QUIET, RECUPERATION AND HEALTH
Unsurpassed results obtained in Nervousness, Rheumatism, Heart and Stomach troubles. No surgical, hospital nor insanity cases taken. A delightful, homelike, restful place—ideal for all run down conditions. Hydrotherapy, Electricity, Massage, Zander Gymnasium, Sun parlor; swimming pools, billiards, bowling, etc. Gaited saddle horses, large indoor riding pavilion; suspended running track connected by tunnel with bath department. 17-acre park.

A staff of five physicians give their exclusive services to the patients.

WRITE SISTER SUPERIOR FOR BOOKLET X. MILWAUKEE, WIS.

BOUND VOLUMES OF AMERICA

A CATHOLIC REVIEW OF THE WEEK

SIX MONTHS TO A VOLUME

$3.50

The AMERICA Press, 59 East 83d Street, New York

VASELINE

The Purest Petroleum Jelly

Don't confuse "Vaseline" with "petrolatums" or the ordinary petroleum jellies sometimes offered as the same thing. Absolute purity and safety are certain in Vaseline because of the special process of refinement and extra filtration by which it is obtained from petroleum.

MANY KINDS—MANY USES

Safe, reliable and effective home remedies for ordinary ills and accidents are provided by these combinations of Vaseline with standard specifics.

CAPSICUM VASELINE—Better than a mustard plaster, easier to apply and does not blister the skin. Rub on at night for sore throat or cold in the chest.

CARBOLATED VASELINE—A perfect antiseptic dressing. Safest way of utilizing the healing values of Carbolic Acid with the soothing comfort of Vaseline.

VASELINE COLD CREAM—Safest for sensitive skin. Cleanses, heals, beautifies, preserves the complexion. Produces a healthy, clean, creamy skin.

WHITE VASELINE—Colds and sore throats are always helped by White Vaseline taken internally. Tasteless. Children like it.

VASELINE CAMPHOR ICE
Best for chapped hands and lips, roughness, cold sores, fever blisters. Combines the soothing effect of camphor with the healing qualities of Vaseline.

Besides these there are:

Mentholated Vaseline
Vaseline Camphorated Cream
Vaseline Oxide of Zinc
Borated Vaseline
Perfumed White Vaseline
Pomade Vaseline

Each of these has its specific use described in our free book.

No better—no safer home medicine chest than an assortment of these Vaseline specialties in

Sanitary Pure Tin Tubes

(No danger of lead poisoning)

Recommended and used by physicians and nurses. Preserves the absolute purity of Vaseline and keeps it free from dust and germs. Especially convenient.

Send for Free Book

It describes all these different varieties and tells how and when to use them. Free on request. Send for it to-day.

CHESEBROUGH MFG. CO.

44 State Street, NEW YORK

Branch Offices: London and Montreal

Proprietors of Every "Vaseline" Product

MENEELY BELL CO

TROY, N.Y. AND 177 BROADWAY, N.Y. CITY

BELLS

DIRECTORY OF COLLEGES AND ACADEMIES

Georgetown University WASHINGTON, D. C.

Directory for Catalogues or Information

The College (Graduates and Undergraduates)
Schools
The Registrar, 37th & O Sts., N. W.

The School of Medicine
The Dean, 920 H St., N. W.

The Training School for Nurses
Georgetown University Hospital

The School of Dentistry
The Dean, 920 H St., N. W.

The School of Law
The Dean, 506 E. St., N. W.

The Astronomical Observatory
The Director, Georgetown University

Rev. Joseph Himmel, S.J., President

College of St. Catherine, St. Paul, Minn.
A Catholic College for Girls.
Accredited by the Minnesota State Board of Public Instruction and by several prominent Universities.

Seventy Acre Campus. Fireproof Buildings.
COMPLETE COURSES IN THESE DEPARTMENTS.
THE COLLEGIATE, leading to the degree of Bachelor of Arts. THE ACADEMIC or COLLEGE PREPARATORY. MUSIC AND PAINTING in their various branches. DOMESTIC ART, HOUSEHOLD SCIENCE and COOKING. Year Book Forwarded on Application.
Address: THE SECRETARY.

MT. ST. JOSEPH ON THE WISSAHICKON

For illustrated catalogue address MOTHER

CATHOLIC COLLEGE FOR WOMEN
situated in the romantic Valley of the Wissahickon. Degrees conferred. Also Academic, Commercial, Intermediate and Elementary Departments. Very special advantages in Music and Art. The piano student possesses superior opportunities in the use of the Virgil Clavier Method pursued throughout the course. The Art Studio is admirably equipped, and every attention is given to the study of Art, both in theory and practice. Gymnasium perfectly equipped. Outdoor exercise, tennis, basket ball, fencing, etc.

SUPERIOR, Chestnut Hill, Philadelphia, Pa.

The Winona Seminary, Winona, Minnesota

CATHOLIC COLLEGE FOR WOMEN
Faculty of Specialists. Separate college residence. Confers degrees B.A., B.S. and Litt. B. Full college preparatory courses—certificates accepted by all leading universities. Secretarial course. Conservatory of Music confers degree of B. Mus.—visiting director, Emil Liebling. Departments of Art, Household Economics, Dramatic Expression. Private Rooms. Moderate Prices. Splendid Gymnasium. Extensive Campus. Students from thirteen States. Direct lines of railway from Chicago, Milwaukee, St. Paul, St. Louis.
Earnest, capable young women who have a purpose in study are solicited.
WRITE FOR CATALOGUE . . . . . DEPARTMENT BULLETIN

HOLY CROSS COLLEGE WORCESTER MASS.

Conducted by the Jesuit Fathers.
Largest Catholic College in America

Extensive grounds and exceedingly healthy location. New buildings, large gymnasium, indoor running track, hot and cold baths, modern conveniences. Easily reached on main line from Albany or New York to Boston via Springfield. Board, tuition, washing and mending, use of gymnasium, library and reading room, physical instruction and medical attendance, $260 a year. Furnished room and attendance extra. Send for catalogue to
PREFECT OF STUDIES.

Seton Hall College

FOUNDED 1856

South Orange, New Jersey

COLLEGE AND HIGH SCHOOL

Bayley Hall for Students
of Grammar Course

FOR CATALOGUE ADDRESS
Very Rev. James F. Mooney, D.D., Pres.

The Catholic Mind

The Truth About "The Encyclopaedia Britannica"

BY REV. T. J. CAMPBELL, S.J.

Single numbers 5 cents each, $4.00 per hundred

THE AMERICA PRESS, 59 East 83d Street, New York City

AMERICA

A CATHOLIC REVIEW OF THE WEEK

Vol. VI, No. 6

(Price 10 Cents)

NOVEMBER 18, 1911

($3.00 a year)

Whole No. 136

CHRONICLE

Election Results—Success of the Red Flag—Lincoln Memorial Dedicated—Profit in Postal Service—Mexico—Canada—Great Britain—Ireland—Tripoli—Portugal—China—Germany—Hungary .....121-124

QUESTIONS OF THE DAY

Catholics and Non-Catholic Worship—Was Bishop Ketteler a Socialist?—The Hotel Biron—New Theological "Convictus" in Innsbruck—A Great Catholic Admiral—Balm for Easy Consciences .....125-131

CORRESPONDENCE

New Curia for Franciscan Minorites—India's Curse the Caste System—Cuban Politics.131-133

EDITORIAL

Socialism and the Catholic Church—The "Britannica" and the Deaf Mutes—The Holy War—

A Missouri Method—A New Epoch in the Church—Our Indian Wards.....133-137

LITERATURE

Present Day "Realistic" Novels—Further Notes on St. Paul—Stuore—Songs of Oriel—The Home of Evangeline—Katechesen für die vier oberia Klassen der Volksschule—Notes—Books Received .....137-140

EDUCATION

Horace Mann School Suppresses Fraternities—Annual Report of the Superintendent of Philadelphia Parochial Schools—New York Chamber of Commerce Seeks to Improve Commercial Education .....140-141

SOCIOLOGY

Spreading the Light on Social Questions—A Directory of Catholic Charities to be Published—Pension Fund for Armour & Co.'s Employees. 141

ECONOMICS

California's Gold Mines—A Billion Dollar Year of Exports of Manufactures.....141-142

ECCLESIASTICAL NEWS

Cardinal-elect Billot's Distinguished Career as a Scholar—Departure of the New Cardinals for Rome—Georgetown's Farewell to Mgr. Falconio—Père Dandurand's Seventieth Anniversary—Washington Condemns Spurious "Irish" Plays. 142-143

SCIENCE

The World's Production of Quicksilver—Increase in the World's Consumption of Coal—Wind Velocity and Direction—Differences Regarding the Topography of the Planet Mars..143

OBITUARY

Martin I. J. Griffin—Professor William C. Robinson .....143-144

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

Pervverting St. Augustine .....144

CHRONICLE

Election Results.—In an off election year the Democrats held a very fair share of the landslide of votes that changed the political map of the country in 1910. Probably the most important gains of the Republicans were in New York State, where they recaptured the Assembly, overturned or greatly reduced many up-State Democratic pluralities of last year, captured the Board of Aldermen in New York, and almost wrested from Tammany the control of New York county. The Republicans also won back the lower house of the Legislature in New Jersey, and elected a Republican Legislature in the new State of New Mexico, adding two Senators to that party's strength in the National Senate at Washington. New Mexico's Governor, however, will be a Democrat. Governor Foss, Democrat, won his re-election in Massachusetts, strengthening himself in his party, and scoring a victory over the protectionists after a strenuous contest, in which the tariff was made a leading issue. The Massachusetts Governor will have a Republican Legislature in his coming administration. Mississippi and Kentucky elected Democratic Governors, but Rhode Island's Republican Executive carried the State for a fourth term. For the second time since the civil war, Maryland chose a Republican Governor, Phillips Lee Goldsborough winning over Arthur P. Gorman by a plurality estimated at 2,500 the remaining fruits of victory as far as the State is concerned going to the Democracy. The Democrats scored a signal triumph in the Republican stronghold, Philadelphia, where the Democratic-Keystone candidate, Blankenburg, defeated Earle, the candidate of the Penrose organization by a plurality estimated at 3,000. The significance of this result is clear when these figures are compared with the Republican Philadelphia pluralities of former years, which have sometimes reached 125,000. The results of this off-election have been very largely disastrous to well-organized party machines. Tammany received a severe setback in its attempt to control the State Government; the Penrose machine is wrecked in Philadelphia; the labor union machine has been defeated in San Francisco, and the Cox organization is overwhelmed in Cincinnati.

Success of the Red Flag.—The most significant result of the late election is the great success of the Socialists in nearly every State that voted this year. In New York they captured Schenectady, a city with a population of 80,000, electing a Mayor and eight out of thirteen councilmen. The first Socialist Assemblyman in the State was also elected from that city. Two good-sized Ohio cities—Lima and Canton, the latter the home of McKinley—put in Socialist Mayors, and there were eight lesser cities in Ohio that did the same. The State of Mississippi, supposedly indifferent, like all the Southern States, to the creed of collectivism, almost put the Socialist candidate in the Lieutenant-Governor's chair. Rhode Island, the smallest State of the Union, elected its first Socialist member of the General Assembly. In Pennsylvania the Socialists lost Reading by a narrow margin, but they captured New Castle. In the latter city a free speech fight has been waging, and Socialist editors of the local "Free Press" weekly have been sent to jail. Socialist Mayor Tyler, of New Castle, is a railroad brakeman. Reading added five Councilmen to its last year's record of a Socialist member of the legislature. Perhaps the most noteworthy feature of the situation is that, contrary to expectation, Socialism has not made its progress in the great centres of population but in the small cities and towns.

Lincoln Memorial Dedicated.—A granite temple enshrining the rude log cabin in which Abraham Lincoln was born one hundred and two years ago, was dedicated at the Lincoln farm, near Hodgenville, Ky., on November 9. The ceremony marked the consummation of a nation-wide movement to convert the Lincoln birth place into a national park, and to erect therein a suitable monument to the great War President. On the hundredth anniversary of Lincoln's birth, Theodore Roosevelt, then President, laid the cornerstone of the memorial. Throngs from all parts of the United States witnessed the acceptance of the memorial and farm for the nation by President Taft. Former Governor Joseph W. Folk, of Missouri, president of the Lincoln Farm Association, introduced the speakers, President Taft responding for the nation; Governor Augustus Willson, of Kentucky, for Lincoln's native State; General John C. Black, former commander-in-chief of the Grand Army of the Republic, for the soldiers of the North, and General John B. Castleman, of Kentucky, for the soldiers of the South. Senator Borah, of Idaho, delivered an address on "Lincoln the Man." Cut into one wall of the memorial hall are these words: "Here, over the log cabin where Abraham Lincoln was born, destined to preserve the Union and free the slaves, a grateful people have erected this memorial to humanity, peace and brotherhood among the States." The land on which Lincoln spent part of his boyhood was bought a few years ago by Robert J. Collier, of New York, and by him transferred to the Lincoln Farm Association, which decided that the farm should be turned into a national monument, not through the subscriptions of a few rich men, but by the aid of many thousands of American citizens. The cost of the completed monument is $112,000, with a surplus fund of $50,000, which has been invested in safe securities and presented to the commonwealth of Kentucky to provide the necessary maintenance.

Profit in Postal Service.—For the first time since 1883, the Post Office Department during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1911, was carried on at a profit. In twenty-four months the conduct of the postal service has resulted in changing a deficit of $17,479,770 for the fiscal year 1909 to a surplus of $219,118 for the fiscal year 1911. During the last year the audited revenues of the Department were $237,879,823, and the audited expenditures $237,648,926. Certain small losses reduced the surplus by $11,779. These facts are detailed in a report of Charles A. Kram, auditor for the Post Office Department.

Mexico.—One of President Madero's first official acts after his inauguration on November 6 was to request the Washington Government to increase its vigilance over Mexican plotters at San Antonio, Texas, where he had put the finishing touches to his plan for the overthrow of Diaz.—Insurrectionary movements in various parts of the republic and the ominous departure for foreign shores of staunch friends of old General Reyes bespeak a stormy and dangerous time for the new administration.—The cabinet as announced before the inauguration has undergone changes, for there was a very general protest against assigning to Vice-President Pino Suárez the portfolio of the Interior. Don Abraham González, recently elected Governor of Chihuahua, will hold it.—The official returns for the Presidential election show that of the 25,000 electors only 20,145 actually cast valid ballots, all but 148 being for Madero. Pino Suárez received only 10,247. The votes in six districts were thrown out for irregularities.

Canada.—Sir James Whitney, the Conservative Premier of Ontario, and Mr. Rowell, the Liberal leader, have issued their manifestos in view of the general election. Both avoid very carefully the bi-lingual school question; the former gives no sign of having pledged himself to the Orange element of his party to procure their abolition.—Mr. McBride, Premier of British Columbia, has reached Ottawa to seek concessions from the Government which will put public lands, fisheries, etc., more into the hands of the provincial Government. There is a general idea that when these matters are settled, he will enter the Borden cabinet. This, however, will depend very much upon the Conservatives' prospects of remaining in power. The naval policy is their great difficulty, and they are far from speaking on it with one voice. If they do not accept the referendum their days, apparently, are numbered. If they do, and the country accepts the position of the Nationalists, their own party will be divided. If the Ontario Conservatives insist on the abolition of bi-lingual schools there will be a breach in Federal politics between the Government and its Nationalist supporters. If Mr. Borden's influence is thrown against that abolition he will offend Ontario Conservatives and bring about dissensions in his own cabinet.—The feeling is growing that the snow will destroy a good deal of the unthreshed wheat in the West, a misfortune we foresaw some weeks ago.

Great Britain.—Now that the House of Lords no longer impedes Liberal legislation, Mr. Asquith finds an obstacle in the discussions of the House of Commons. He announced, therefore, that the Insurance Bill must go through in 18 days; and to obtain this, he has not only provided for wholesale cloture, but also has published a time-table, showing the clauses that must be disposed of each day, an unheard-of proceeding.—On November 8 Parliament was surprised by the statement that the Government intended to pass a manhood suffrage bill. Besides conferring the suffrage on all over 21, this measure will remove all other existing qualifications; and consequently no one will have more than one vote. —The next day Mr. Balfour resigned the leadership of the Unionist party. He has been out of touch with many of the members for some time, but the general impression is, that looking on a political reaction as so far off that he cannot hope to lead the party to victory, he thinks the time has come to make way for a younger man. —The municipal elections show considerable gains by Labor and Socialism in the larger towns. —The joint executive committee of the railway trades unions has ordered a ballot, returnable December 5, to determine whether the report of the royal commission shall be accepted, or whether the recognition of the unions shall be forced on the companies by a general strike. —Lieutenant Schultz, a German officer of hussars, has been found guilty of espionage, and has been sentenced to 21 months' imprisonment. His specific offence is the trying to find out the way in which English officers, especially of the navy, regard a possible war with Germany.

Ireland.—In answer to criticisms of the Irish Party's action in supporting the Government's method of expediting the Insurance Bill, Mr. Redmond said that the amendments he was offering to the measure met the objections of the Irish Bishops and County Councils, and these amendments would be passed into law. Various forecasts, alleged to be authoritative, of the details of the Home Rule Bill, were declared by Mr. Asquith to be unfounded. The statement of the Daily News that the Irish Parliament would have control of Customs and Excise but without power to erect a tariff wall against England, has received some credence. The Customs and Excise yield over two-thirds of Ireland's total revenue. —The Protestants of Northeast Ulster, the only part of Ireland that is predominantly Unionist, are becoming much divided on the subject of Home Rule. Lord Pirrie and Mr. Shillington, representing the shipping and linen industries, and some two hundred leaders in other important business concerns, have declared in its favor, and a meeting in Belfast of three thousand Liberals, chiefly Protestants, demanded such a measure of self-government as would give Ireland control of Customs and Excise, immediately or ultimately. Mr. Sloan, ex-M. P., the leader of the "Orange Democrats," has protested against the efforts of Sir Edward Carson and others to stir up passion among the workingmen of Ulster, whose interests had been promoted, not by the official leaders of Orangeism, but by the Irish Party. The religious cry would no longer serve; "the day of hypocrisy is past." Ulster would not fight to retain "the nest of incompetency and political corruption called Dublin Castle." The Orange workingmen would not condemn the Home Rule Bill until they had seen it, and then they would probably find in it their own emancipation. —Archbishop Walsh, of Dublin, referring to a Protestant bishop's fears that an Irish Parliament would confiscate Protestant church property or, at least, restore to Catholics the churches that had been taken from them, said there was no ground for alarm. Such Protestant churches as St. Patrick's Cathedral in Dublin, which had been violently seized by Henry VIII, without vestige of legal process, might be restored by amicable arrangement, but Irish Catholics would not copy the methods of Henry VIII and his successors.

Tripoli.—Through his Minister of Foreign Affairs the Sultan has asked the United States Government to protest against the atrocities which he declares are committed by the Italian military authorities in Tripoli against unoffending citizens. —On Monday, November 6, it was officially announced at Constantinople and elsewhere that the Turks had recaptured Derna in Tripoli from the Italians, killing 500 and taking the rest of the defenders prisoners. This was denied later by the Italian Government. —A large number of the best Turkish army officers have gone to Tripoli to direct military operations. They reached the front by passing through Egypt. —The Herald correspondent, on November 9, cables that the reprisals of the Italians were severe, but that they were called for by the fiendish attack on the ambulances, the Turks imagining that the nurses were priests on account of the red cross which they wore. The "atrocities" reports are held to be "baiting" by the English press. Worse things happened, it is said, in the British occupation of India, the Soudan, and the Transvaal. The cruelties are emphatically denied by General Caneva, and whatever occurred was due to the unparalleled treachery of the Arabs, who had been kindly treated by the Italians, but who, nevertheless, fell on the unsuspecting troops and not only murdered many, but shamefully mutilated them. —The newspaper correspondents, both Italian and foreign, are forbidden to follow the troops in the African campaign. The order was probably given subsequently to the recent stories that had been sent out to the world.

Portugal.—Owing to opposition in the Congress, the Chagas ministry resigned. Augusto Vasconcellos is the new premier. While agent of the republic in Spain, his insistence and importunity won for him the significant title of "the unavoidable." —President Arriaga has signed the law creating a special court for trying conspirators. The measure has caused little outside comment, yet when Spanish tribunals of long standing tried certain conspirators, the press of the world wailed and groaned. —Great Britain has insisted that Portugal, as an ally, shall spend $25,000,000 on a navy, the vessels to be built in England. But as the treasury is hard pressed to meet the outlay entailed by keeping the army on a war footing and by employing so many spies, it is difficult to see where so vast a sum is to be found.—The name of the Patriarch of Lisbon is not found among those to be created Cardinals on November 27. The Concordat between the Holy See and the Portuguese kingdom provided that a Patriarch of Lisbon should be raised to the purple at the first consistory after his induction into office. There is now but one Portuguese member of the Sacred College, Cardinal Netto, O.F.M., formerly Patriarch of Lisbon, who is aged and infirm.

China.—The revolution has been carrying all before it, and the death knell of the Manchu dynasty is thought to be sounding. The imperialists retook Hankow and ravaged with fire an area two miles long and a half mile wide, but republican successes are recorded nearly everywhere else. Shanghai, a city of great commercial and strategic importance has quietly surrendered to the rebels, three of the Emperor's gunboats went over to the enemy, and Ching Kiang, another large and wealthy town also yielded, while Canton, the largest city of China, with its population of more than a million, declared itself independent on November 9th. In fact, Nanking, a great literary center, and Peking, the capital, are the only important strongholds of the Manchus that are left. The former city succeeded in repelling an attack of the rebels, and Peking has an imperial army in it of more than 22,000, but Prince Chung, the acting Premier, doubted whether they would defend the city. Differences meanwhile have arisen between the National and Provincial Assemblies regarding a constitution. Yuan Shi Kai, the new prime minister, seemed loath to come to Peking, fearing assassination it is said. General Chang, commander of the twentieth division of the imperial army, who was to cooperate with Yuan Shi Kai in saving the dynasty has resigned, while General Wu Tu Chen, a popular general of the Emperor's, has been killed by the order, as is believed, of the supporters of the dynasty. Li Yuan Hing, the rebel chief, would not cease fighting at the command of the National Assembly, great uneasiness prevails at the capital, and foreign warships are in readiness to protect Americans and Europeans.

Germany.—The announcement of the various articles of the Morocco-Congo agreement have stirred up a mighty wave of disapproval, which is at present sweeping over Germany. The official organs strove in vain to proclaim the value and advantages of the extensive territorial acquisitions, while the conservative papers were guarded in their remarks and emphasized especially the industrial securities which Germany had gained in Morocco. In general, however, the tone of the press was one of open hostility to the policy of the government.—On November 9 the Morocco-Congo debate was opened in the Reichstag by the imperial Chancellor, Dr. von Bethmann-Hollweg, who vigorously defended the terms of the agreement. He declared that territorial aggrandizement had not been the object of sending the Panther to Agadir, that British interference had not influenced in the least the course of the recent negotiations, and that Morocco was not worth the fearful price of a world-wide war. He argued that the industrial advantages in Morocco and the gain in the Congo were sufficient compensation, and maintained that the national dignity had in nowise been lowered. "We are not living in the Homeric age," he exclaimed, "when threats and boasting were thought necessary. Germany is strong enough to dispense with such shield-rattling and will know how to draw the sword when the time comes." His words met with no response, except now and then with questions or bitter laughter, especially from the Socialist wing. General applause was, however, elicited by the sentiment that his duty was to avert war where it was avoidable and not demanded by his country's honor. The conduct of von Lindequist in his relations with the press he stigmatized as indiscreet. His final words, as he sat down amid an intense silence on the part of the House, were characteristic of the man: "I expect no praise and I fear no blame."—He was followed by the Centralist leader, Baron von Hertling. He declared that the Moroccan policy, dating back to the Kaiser's journey, was not a golden page in the history of Germany; that it began with a mistake, and had since been carried on with indecision.—Deputy Heydebrand then began a most violent attack upon the government and the Chancellor, and appealed to the policy of the armed hand. The Crown Prince, who occupied the royal box, gave evidence of most enthusiastic satisfaction, especially when the speaker, in reference to England, said that Germany knew where to find her foe, and spoke of the "German sword which alone can guarantee the German prestige." The entire speech was intensely belligerent and met with loud applause.—The attitude of the Crown Prince towards the imperial Chancellor was offset by the invitation extended to him and his wife by the Emperor to dine that night with the imperial family.

Hungary.—The obstructionists in the Hungarian Chamber of Deputies, who for months past had blocked every measure that came before the House and had brought about the resignation of a president of the Chamber by their persistent opposition, have unexpectedly made their peace with the governmental faction. The national workingmen's party, which forms the governmental majority, was determined to stand solidly by the Minister President, Count Kuehen. The latter had only two days previous declared his intention to wage a relentless war against the opposition, whose purpose it was to overturn him and dissolve the House. Now that the leaders of the various factions have sheathed their swords and given each other the embrace of friendship we may look to see energetic measures taken in the near future, since the long spell of forced inactivity is finally broken.

QUESTIONS OF THE DAY

Catholics and Non-Catholic Worship

We have to take a great deal on trust in this world. We trust our butcher and our baker and our milkman even more than they trust us; if we did not we should be very miserable. We do not, as a rule, ask for testimonials and diplomas; but take for granted that our banker, should we be fortunate enough to have one, is not a thief, and that our doctor, should ill health make us consult one, is no charlatan. But this natural tendency to trust our fellow-men may get us into trouble if not controlled with prudence; and so Protestants are continually being deceived through their readiness to take for granted theological science in their ministers.

As a general rule these have no theology, and frequent examples of their ignorance prove it. One of the latest of these examples was given in England by Bishop Welldon, formerly of the Protestant diocese of Calcutta, now comfortably settled in the Deanery of Manchester. Speaking at the St. Asaph Diocesan Conference he said that the "Church of Rome" held every act of Protestant worship to be a sin. Bishop Vaughan, Coadjutor of the Bishop of Salford, accused him of misrepresentation, and he tried to prove his assertion by the following argument: The Church of Rome regards participation in Protestant worship as sinful; therefore it holds every act of Protestant worship to be a sin. Ignoring the suppressed minor premises: "Every act of Protestant worship is a participation in Protestant worship," which would be true only in the supposition that there is no such thing as private individual prayer distinctively Protestant, something we, at least, cannot admit, he proceeded with a show of great learning to establish his major proposition. "It is a matter of common notoriety," he said, "It is found in most manuals of Roman Catholic theology. Let us take the first that comes to hand, etc." The suggestion that Bishop Welldon was writing in his library, of which the shelves were groaning under the weight of Catholic manuals of theology, is exquisitely absurd, since "the first that came to hand" was "Father Bertrand Conway's 'Replies to Questions received in Missions to Non-Catholics,'" for which he was indebted to a lady correspondent. Father Conway would hardly call his book a "manual of theology," but a Catholic priest's notion of such a manual must necessarily differ widely from a Protestant clergyman's. One will notice, too, the pretence to an exhaustive knowledge of Catholic theology implied in the careful restriction: "most manuals." Yet the qualification only makes Bishop Welldon's ignorance the more glaring. Probably one-half of our manuals treat of dogma; and in none of these does the statement occur, except by accident. On the other hand, it is found practically in every manual of moral theology. So much for Bishop Welldon's logic and for his acquaintance with Catholic authors. Let us come to the question: what do Catholic theologians mean when they say that to participate in Protestant worship is a sin.

In one of the good old books which Bishop Welldon must have known in his childhood, was the following useful tale: Two brothers, Tommy and Harry, asked their uncle's permission to play in the barn. The uncle granted it, and admonished them to be careful to close the door on entering, lest a calf confined there should escape. In their glee they forgot all about the door. After some time they noticed it wide open, and the calf was nowhere to be seen. "Never mind!" cried Tommy, "We'll shut it now. Then we shall be able to say we shut the door, and the escape of the calf will not be blamed on us." As he returned to the house his uncle asked him whether they had let the calf out. "No, sir," was the reply, "the calf is safe in the barn." A few moments later Harry entered. "Well, Harry, did you have a fine game?" said his uncle. "Alas!" he answered, "We forgot all about the door, and the calf has escaped." The uncle examining into the matter found the animal in the barn hidden behind the corn-bin. The question then arose which of the two boys told the lie. Objectively Tommy's statement was true and Harry's was false. Because the calf was really safe in the barn. But, as lying consists in contradicting, not what is objectively true, but what the speaker's mind judges to be true, Tommy was punished as a liar and Harry received the truthful boy's reward.

Let us apply this very distinction to the matter in hand. Protestant worship considered objectively and in the abstract is evidently unacceptable to God, for it rests on a religion He has not instituted. An act of that worship considered subjectively as a concrete human act is sinful or the reverse, according to the state of the intellect and will of its agent. If he apprehends it as it really is, and, nevertheless, performs it deliberately, it is a sin. If he apprehends it as pleasing to God and therefore wills its performance, though he be wrong as regards the fact, his act is no sin, and if he be in the state of grace it is a meritorious act of religion. The Catholic participating in Protestant worship is in the former case: the Protestant exercising his worship either privately or in common, is, so far as we know, in the latter. Unless, therefore, his bad faith be evident we must always presume that he is in good faith, not only because God reserves to Himself the judgment of the secrets of the human heart, but also because his worship has its origin in the recognition of man's obligation to acknowledge exteriorly his dependence on God, and becomes vitiated objectively because the means it uses to do so are not those appointed by God. The moral theologian, therefore, will say to every Catholic—and it is to these only that the moral theologian speaks directly—"It is sinful to participate in Protestant worship." No moral theologian will say without the distinction we have indicated: "Every act of Protestant worship is a sin," and the prudent moral theologian would avoid this formula and say instead: "Protestant worship, inasmuch as it is Protestant, considered objectively and apart from the dispositions of the subject, cannot be acceptable to God." The reason is sufficiently evident. The distributive phrase "every act" fixes the attention on each individual act in all its individuating notes of time, place, circumstances and the subject, with his particular apprehension of the nature of his worship and the particular quality of his will in performing it. Hence it tends to exclude the abstract objective order to which the Catholic doctrine would confine it, and to push forward the concrete subjective order in which no Catholic would dare to assert it.

The Protestant clergy ought to realize that Catholic theology is a science which they have not the training to understand, and that if they dabble in it they are bound to fall into many blunders. If out of these blunders comes misrepresentation, however innocently expressed, the injury done cannot be considered small.

HENRY WOODS, S.J.

Was Bishop Ketteler a Socialist?

"LaSalle, the most brilliant of all the leaders of Socialism, won over Archbishop von Ketteler, of Mainz, Germany, to his line of thought. Von Ketteler was in a fair way to fill the ranks of the German Socialists, when Windthorst, able as a leader, statesman and economist, kept the Catholic masses tied up to his Central party."

The author of these astounding statements is a prominent American Catholic publicist and lecturer, and the Catholic journal that gave them publicity counts its readers by the hundreds of thousands. Bishop (not Archbishop) von Ketteler is here held up as a mere dupe of Ferdinand Lassalle (not LaSalle), as a more or less successful "whip" of the German Socialist Labor Party. There is no telling what havoc he would have worked in the Catholic ranks if Windthorst had not sent him about his business.

Perhaps it will interest the readers of AMERICA to know what Windthorst really thought of Ketteler. In the introduction to the fourth edition of Ketteler's famous book, "Die Arbeiterfrage und das Christentum" (The Labor Question and Christianity), Mainz, 1890, he says:

"In Bishop Ketteler we venerate the doctor and leading champion of Catholic social aspirations. . . . It is and will ever remain our glory that it was a Prince of the Catholic Church who, at a time when the Manchester Theory completely dominated public opinion, had the courage to raise the flag of Christian social reform, adopting what was just in Lassalle's criticism of prevailing conditions and ideas, but also pointing out the errors and weak points of his system. I do not know a better exposition of the Christian point of view on the social question or a clearer presentation of the defects and the one-sidedness of the naturalistic position [than 'The Labor Question and Christianity']."

Three years later, in 1893, Professor Hitze, the greatest Catholic sociologist of Germany, during the memorable debate in the Reichstag on the Socialistic Labor State of the Future, declared in the name of the Centre party: "We shall always return to the grand socio-political ideas of Ketteler; we shall always look on Ketteler as the man to whom we owe our social platform; we shall continue to build on the foundations laid by him."

And what does our Holy Father think of Ketteler?

"We rejoice," he wrote to the Committee charged with the preparations for the fifty-eighth Katholikentag, "that preparations are being made for the annual German Catholic Congress to be held in Mainz, and that, at the same time, the hundredth anniversary of the birth of Bishop von Ketteler is to be solemnly commemorated. It is indeed a laudable wish to celebrate the praises of a man who deserved so well of the Church and the State, and we were rejoiced to hear that, not merely the citizens of Mainz, but the Catholics of all Germany were anxious to do honor to his memory with thankful hearts, knowing as they do with what enthusiastic ardor he ever defended the rights of religion and of the Apostolic See; with what wisdom he expounded the Christian teachings, especially on the social question, for whose solution, as he showed conclusively, the Catholic Church offers such marvellously efficacious and salutary remedies; with what zeal he championed the cause of the men and women whose lot in life is daily toil, knowing also what glory his splendid words and deeds shed on the city whose Bishop he was."

Ketteler's political and sociological ideas have been repeatedly analyzed by German, French and Swiss writers. In 1896 M. de Girard, of Fribourg, made them the subject of an academical dissertation. The conclusions he arrived at may be summed up briefly as follows:

Politically Ketteler was an anti-Liberal, an Ultramontane in the true sense of the word. His principles were, so to say, borrowed from the Syllabus of Pius IX, though developed before the publication of that famous document. (Cf. Ketteler, "Liberty, Authority, and the Church," Mainz, 1862).

The substance of the political problem, according to Ketteler, consists in harmonizing the principle of authority with the principle of liberty in the State. Contrary to the tendency of his age, he showed himself a warm partisan of local autonomy, of self-government, and an inveterate enemy of absolutism and centralization. The political order can have no other purpose than to make the way to heaven as smooth as possible for man by permitting him to develop his personality to its full extent here below: the best Constitution is that which gives the individual, the family and the other social organisms the greatest amount of liberty and at the same time subordinates their private interests to the common good.

Economically Ketteler steers a middle course between Schultze-Delitzsch and Lassalle. He cannot be said to have belonged to any school of economists; he gave the impulse to the movement that resulted in what is called the Catholic school. When he formulated his theories, they formed a category apart. Some of his ideas he found in the writings of the Fathers, others he drew from the storehouse of the Summa of St. Thomas, all of them were latent in Catholic tradition, but when he proclaimed them in 1848, they appeared extraordinarily new. No one had gone to the trouble of searching out the Catholic sociological principles under the centuries of débris that hid them from view.

Ketteler's criticism of the capitalistic, or unregulated régime is at times bitter and even violent. Occasionally he repeats the reproaches hurled at the so-called Manchester School without examining them as to their foundations in fact. The economical laws of modern society as they were developed by Lassalle appealed strongly to him, but it is an ugly calumny to class him on this account amongst the Socialists or their abettors.

Indeed, an impassable abyss divides the Bishop of Mainz from Marx and Engels, from Lassalle and Bebel. First of all his Catholicity. He takes his stand on the dogmas of the existence of God and the immortality of the soul, the Fall of man and his Redemption, while positivism and materialism are the traits which the various forms of Socialism have in common. In regard to the right of private property Ketteler and the Socialists cannot be reconciled. Communism, collectivism constitute the foundation of the Marxian theory; Ketteler proclaims on all occasions the inviolability of private property, which is, in his eyes, a necessary postulate of human progress.

Neither is there anything Socialistic in Ketteler's views on the intervention of the State. He appeals to the State only for the protection of certain essential rights of the workingman, rights violated by our actual régime; his aim is to forestall as much as possible the direct interference of the law by regulations emanating from autonomous professional groups. Lassalle wished to transform stage by stage the régime of private property. With the aid of the State, capital was to pass gradually out of the hands of its present possessors into those of the workman. Ketteler would not hear of this, because he thought that such interference exceeded the legitimate powers of the State.

A glance at any one of the bishop's social brochures shows that he was no State Socialist in the accepted sense of the word; on the contrary, he assigns a very restricted mission to the State in the work of social reform. (Cf. "The Catholics in the German Empire: Draft of a Political Programme," Mainz, 1873.)

As a constructive economist Ketteler is also far removed from Economic Liberalism, as well as Socialism. The means from which he expects most for the amelioration of labor conditions is cooperation, provided it be adapted to the exigencies of modern industrial life. He believes in cooperative production, but insists that the capital required be furnished by voluntary contributions—by a "taxation of Christianity." Lassalle wished to establish a net-work of cooperative unions with the aid of capital supplied by the State and raised by taxation. (Cf. "Christianity and the Labor Question," Mainz, 1864.)

Marx and Lassalle began by preaching that social reform is possible only by subverting the actual social and economical order of the world; Ketteler taught that all social reform must begin with the interior regeneration of the heart. Christianity, religion, the Church, has no place in the Socialistic Labor State of the future; Ketteler insists that, without the aid of the Church there is no hope of ever adequately solving the social problem. The watchword of Socialism is war—war of the masses against the classes until the fourth estate shall have dispossessed the others; Ketteler's watchword is peace, his ideal, conciliation, true fraternity—both the employer and the employed have rights that must be respected and duties that must be observed. Poverty will not disappear from the earth, but the vast majority of men can be put in a position to obtain the necessities and conveniences of life, and Christianity will provide for the rest.

If anyone wishes to form his own judgment on the absolute orthodoxy of Ketteler's sociological teachings, let him take the Encyclical Rerum Novarum, of May 15, 1891, in one hand and "The Labor Question and Christianity" or "The Catholics in the German Empire" in the other; he will find the word of the bishop confirmed point by point by the Pontifical authority. (Cf. American Ecclesiastical Review, 1911, July, August, etc.)

No, Ketteler was not "in a fair way to fill the ranks of the German Socialists." On the contrary, to his initiative it was due that the Church of Germany was brought into closer relations with the great social problems of the day, and that the inroads of Socialism into the ranks of the Catholic working classes were effectually checked.

GEORGE METLAKE.

The Hotel Biron

In consequence of the iniquitous laws passed against religious orders by the French Government a number of monastic buildings have been swept away in Paris, and commonplace six-storied houses are quickly replacing these homes of prayer and the shady gardens that surrounded them.

These rapid transformations not only represent a crying injustice, the fact that peaceable, law-abiding citizens are deprived of their property and sent adrift; they are also deplored by archeologists and antiquarians, who, apart from any religious feeling, are indignant at the barbarous destruction of these historical or picturesque landmarks.

Among the religious buildings to which are attached many interesting memories, the Hotel Biron, belonging to the nuns of the Sacred Heart, stands first and foremost. It is an excellent specimen of architecture under Louis XIV, and when the nuns' property was seized by the liquidateur a group of archeologists resolved to save the noble mansion from wanton destruction. Yielding to the pressure of public opinion, the Government bought the Hotel Biron and tacitly agreed to preserve it as an historical monument. A Russian hired the chapel, and the "fêtes" that he gave within its walls seemed organized with a view to wounding the feelings of Catholics; other tenants, chiefly artists, were allowed to live in the big rooms; only the park, with its wide alleys and noble trees, was left untouched, a wilderness in the heart of the city, with a pathetic beauty all its own.

Then, a few weeks ago, it was found that a well-known actor, M. de Max, had hired part of the chapel and was busy establishing a bathroom in the sacristy. The newspapers took up the subject and summoned the Government to keep its promise of preserving the building, whereupon M. de Max and his fellow-tenants had orders to depart, and the Hotel Biron has now relapsed into solitude and silence. It is generally believed that it will become a Lycée de filles, and this seems a cruel irony to those who are acquainted with the methods of the Government schools, where so-called neutrality generally conceals a spirit of insidious and active irreligion.

The big, solemn-looking "hôtel," a familiar object to the Parisians of to-day, has a chequered history. It was a dwelling house and a prison before becoming a convent.

Its first master was a successful financier named Abraham Peyreuc, originally a barber, who made a large fortune under Louis XV through lucky speculations. He died in 1732 and left a daughter, Anne Marie Peyreuc de Maras. She grew up between a frivolous mother and a convent home which, like many convents of that day, resembled rather a comfortable and refined boarding-house than a cloistered establishment. The pupils, who all belonged to wealthy families, had their own apartments and attendants, and were allowed to receive visitors. Among those of Anne Marie was a gentleman from Poitou named M. de la Roche Courbon, who, when the girl was fourteen years of age, asked her hand in marriage. According to the ideas of the time, Anne Marie was of a marriageable age, but her mother had other views, and discouraged Monsieur de la Roche Courbon's attentions. The child, she was little more, wept and entreated, but her pleadings being disregarded, with extraordinary resolution she took the law into her own hands.

On October 22, 1737, she informed the Superioress of her convent that her mother was going to send a carriage for her. At the stated time the carriage appeared, and Anne Marie, accompanied by her governess, drove away. Suddenly the governess noticed that they were following what was to her an unknown road, and she was about to stop the driver, when Anne Marie, quietly drawing a pistol from under the cushions, pointed it at the woman's head. In a few words she informed her that she was on her way to join M. de la Roche Courbon, whom she intended to marry, that the driver was in the secret, and that if her governess raised an alarm she would not hesitate to use her pistol. The carriage stopped at Poitiers, where the girl wrote her mother a letter which is a curious mixture of resolution and diplomacy; then it drove on to the Château de Roche Courbon, where, that same evening, Anne Marie was married by the frightened parish priest of a neighboring village. A week later the bride's uncles appeared on the scene, and, in spite of her resistance, carried her off by force. A lengthy lawsuit began, in which the King took a personal interest, and finally the abduction of the child heiress was punished with a severity that contrasted somewhat illogically with the general laxity of morals. M. de la Roche Courbon's property was confiscated and he was sentenced to be beheaded, a fate he escaped by flying to Italy, where he died; the priest was banished from the country; the governess whipped and branded on the shoulder with a red hot iron, and the heroine of the adventure kept a prisoner in a convent, stricter than that from which she had escaped. Only at the age of twenty-seven did she recover her liberty, and she made use of it to marry a young officer. Like many others, she and her husband fled across the frontier in 1789, and died in some unknown spot abroad. One of their daughters was guillotined in 1794, and their only son shot in 1789.

The great upheaval that wrecked Anne Marie's restored happiness turned her old home into a prison. The Hotel Biron, after belonging for some years to the whimsical Duchesse du Maine, passed into the hands of the Maréchal de Gontant Biron and into those of his nephew, the Duke de Biron. The latter, handsome, witty, totally unprincipled, was a spoilt favorite in court circles; but he so far forgot the traditions of his race as to take service under the Revolutionary government, an unworthy act that did not save him from death on the guillotine in 1794. His wife, a timid, gentle woman, whose married life was a long martyrdom, followed him to the scaffold some months later.

During those evil days of the Reign of Terror Biron's stately home was used as a prison, and the spacious salons, where the careless eighteenth century men and women had danced and talked, were crowded with an anxious crowd of doomed victims. Then came more peaceful days, and the hôtel passed into the keeping of the Duke de Charost, whose widow sold it to the foundress of a new Congregation of religious women, Madeleine Sophie Barat.

This daughter of a Burgundian vine grower had been led step by step to found a Congregation for the education of girls. It was placed under the patronage of the Sacred Heart, and soon became extraordinarily popular.

C. DE C.

New Theological "Convictus" in Innsbruck

An event of no little interest to American Catholics, especially, to large numbers of the clergy, took place in Innsbruck on the 14th and 15th of October, when the magnificent new home of the theological seminary, or "convictus," was solemnly blessed by His Grace Dr. Joseph Altenweisel, Prince-Bishop of Brixen, in which diocese Innsbruck lies. In the fifty-three years since its restoration the Innsbruck "convictus" has been the home of nearly 500 candidates for the priesthood from American dioceses; during the scholastic year 1910-1911, in fact, the American students numbered one-sixth of the whole. A short sketch of the history of the seminary will, then, not be inopportune, nor without interest for readers of AMERICA.

The foundation of the "convictus" goes back to the year 1569, when Father Nicholas de Lanoy, rector of the college founded by Blessed Peter Canisius in 1562, and which later developed into Innsbruck University, opened a dormitory for the students of the college who flocked thither from various parts of Tyrol. A new building was erected for this dormitory in 1588, when the name Nikolai-haus was bestowed upon it, a name it bore until the present year, when its new home was christened the "Canisianum," in honor of the great apostle of Germany during the Reformation. The origin of the name Nikolai-haus is in dispute. One opinion is that it was bestowed in honor of Father de Lanoy; another has it that it was so named because St. Nicholas was the friend and protector of the poor, and the "convictus" was intended chiefly for poor students. The building was enlarged in 1681 with the growth of the university, and boys from well-to-do and noble families were received as convictors or boarders. Several further extensions took place in the eighty years that followed. Then came the suppression of the Society of Jesus, the Brief of suppression being published in Innsbruck on October 1, 1773. A former Jesuit, Father Ignatius von Mohr, kept the "convictus" open, however, for ten years more; but the degradation of the university into a lyceum in 1782 by the Emperor Joseph II, together with the opening of a theological seminary in Innsbruck, made the "convictus" unnecessary, and it was closed at the end of the year.

After the re-establishment of the Society by the Brief of Pius VII, in 1814, the Jesuits did not at once return to Innsbruck. At first the whole of what is now the Austrian-Hungarian monarchy formed a single province of the Society of Jesus, called the Galician province, because the foundation took place in Galicia, to which country the Jesuits were welcomed by Francis I in 1820, upon their expulsion from White Russia in that year. In 1839 the legislature and people of Tirol once more entrusted to the care of the Society the staats-gymnasium and the Theresianum, the latter a "convictus" for boarders of noble birth, founded by Maria Theresia, to which was added in 1845 the direction of a "convictus" for students of all classes. The Austrian province was separated from the Galician in 1846. The building of the old Nikolai-haus had, meanwhile, passed once more into possession of the Society. It was used as the dwelling of the professors of the staats-gymnasium, and later, in 1842, as a theologate for the scholastics of the province. During the revolution of 1848 the Innsbruck houses of the Society, in common with all others under its care in Austria, were closed, and the Fathers, Scholastics and Brothers scattered far and wide. The Society was recalled by the present Emperor, Francis Joseph, in 1852; in 1856 classes in theology for the students of the Society were resumed, and in 1857 the theological faculty of the university was reopened and given over once again to the Jesuits. This result was accomplished mainly through the efforts of Vincent Gasser, the then Prince-Bishop of Brixen, who later took a prominent part in the deliberations of the Vatican Council. Finally, in the beginning of the school year 1858-59, the venerable Nikolai-haus was given over a second time to the students of theology at the university.

Since that year the "convictus" has grown steadily in numbers, and long since outgrew the quarters of the old Nikolai-haus. In the fifty-four years that have elapsed since 1858, over 3,000 students have received their ecclesiastical training there, the record number for any one year being reached during the school year 1910-1911, when there were 271 convictors, forty-five of whom were from the United States. The convictors are not, however, the only students who frequent the university lectures in theology. They have formed, as a matter of fact, about half the total number in attendance since 1858, the externi being made up of candidates for the secular clergy, as well as of the scholastics of the Society of Jesus and of other orders and congregations having houses in or near Innsbruck. Since 1858 the buildings have been enlarged several times, until the seminary consisted of four separate, but adjoining, houses, two of them in particular being ill-adapted for the purposes of a house of study. The last decade especially, having witnessed so rapid an increase in the number of students that some thirty of them had to be lodged in the immediate vicinity, had made increasingly evident the necessity of a new structure. Accordingly, a splendid site was secured in the residence district in Innsbruck, about eight minutes' walk from the University, and the corner-stone of the "Canisianum" was laid on the feast of St. Aloysius of last year. The work was completed with astonishing rapidity, so that the opening could take place at the beginning of the present scholastic year.

The building is of brick, covered with concrete, in which material the entire exterior ornamentation has been executed. The most striking feature of the exterior is the great mosaic over the main entrance, representing the Blessed Peter Canisius teaching the catechism to people of all classes, an exercise of zeal which he performed many times during his life in Innsbruck and its neighborhood. This mosaic is 4.80 meters high by 9.82 meters long (about 16 by 32 feet), and is the work of the Tyrolese Art Glass Works, of Innsbruck, Vienna and New York. It is a worthy monument to the great and holy man who opened the gymnasium in Innsbruck in 1562 and was Visitor of the original "convictus" in 1577 and 1578.

Another feature of interest is the coat of arms of the various nations that are or have been represented among the seminarians. These coats of arms are placed just below the capitals of the columns of the main facade, and the countries are: Austria, Bohemia, Hungary, the United States, the British Empire, Ireland, Switzerland, Holland, France, Germany, Italy, Turkey, Roumania and Russia. The "convictus" is nothing if not international; indeed, it may well be doubted if there is a single seminary in the world where students from so many different races live under one roof. Seldom is the Catholicity of the Church brought so forcibly home to the observer as at Innsbruck. M. J. AHERN, S.J.

A Great Catholic Admiral

Rear Admiral James H. Sands, son of Rear Admiral Benjamin Franklin Sands, of Maryland (Superintendent for many years of the United States Naval Observatory at Washington) was born at his father's Washington residence, July 12, 1845. He entered the Naval Academy from Georgetown College at an early age, and was graduated in 1863. While at the Academy during the years immediately preceding the war, the midshipmen, boys though they were, split sharply on the great question, and Sands, at fourteen years of age, was called upon to make the most momentous decision of his life. He decided, though his dearest friends held otherwise, that his oath bound him to support the Union, and stood firm, with his father and his elder brother, William Franklin Sands, also in the Navy. At the outbreak of hostilities Sands, as spokesman of his class, applied to Congress for permission to go to the front before graduation. Permission was refused to the class as a whole, but granted personally to Sands, who refused to take advantage of it, and accepted his commission a year ahead of his comrades.

During the war he was conspicuous for his activity in the blockade. He took part in both attacks on Fort Fisher, together with another brother, Francis P. B. Sands, now a lawyer in civil life. Under a withering fire from the fort, he turned to help a comrade, Robley D. Evans, (later Rear Admiral) who had fallen severely wounded, bound his wounds, and remained with him under fire in a most exposed position till he could detail a seaman to carry his classmate back to the boats, thus saving his life, after which he took his place again at the head of his men and led the attack, being recommended later for promotion for conspicuous gallantry in action. He also took part in the evacuation of Charleston. After the war he was on the China station, where through his courtesy and tact he did much to relieve the strained relations between our navy and British Naval officers, whose sympathies had been openly with the Confederacy. Among other incidents of his service in the Far East, he surveyed Pearl Harbor in Hawaii, and first pointed out to the Government its strategical importance as a naval fortress, foreseeing the future power of the United States in the Pacific. His plans are now being carried out by the Government. He was complimented officially for gallantry in a bloody and disastrous punitive expedition against the Formosan head-hunters, turning defeat into success.

He was recommended also on the occasion of the sad death of Admiral Bell at Osaka, Japan. The admiral, in the face of a hurricane, had decided to make a landing from his flagship. Sands, a very young officer, advised against the attempt, but on the admiral's insistence quietly withdrew, called his boat's crew together, stripped to the waist, to give assistance if necessary. Hardly had the admiral's barge left the side when the surf overturned it. Sands' boat touched the water at the same moment, and followed a few moments later by the life boats he raced for the struggling crew. Only three sailors survived, the admiral going down on the reef just as the rescuers reached him. No one on board expected the little band of heroes to return from the terrible surf, but they eventually reached the ship's side in safety.

Admiral Sands was for several years also on the South American coast, where he rendered efficient service in protecting American interests at various times. While noted among gallant sailors as a particularly brave man, cool commander and daring and skillful navigator, he did not cease his usefulness when the old wooden ship became obsolete. He became an expert on armor, steel work, and all the modern equipment of the new fighters. His work at the Boston Navy Yard, and in New York, Philadelphia and Portsmouth is known, and his name revered by the workmen and laborers, who owe to him in a large measure the continuance of two of those labor centres.

In his maturer years Admiral Sands had new opportunity for daring and active service in the Spanish War. He asked for and received command of a small squadron of our fastest cruisers, the famous commerce destroyers, Columbia and Minneapolis, and others. He carefully picked his officers and men, with the intention of intercepting the Spanish relief squadron, and of blocking any attempt by foreign sympathizers to aid the Spanish army in Cuba. It is well known in Spain that his squadron so greatly interfered with the plans of the Spanish Admiralty as to contribute materially to the final victory at Santiago. Together with this duty he was given, at the urgent request of the inhabitants of the New England coast, the duty of patrolling and guarding them until the whereabouts of the Spanish fleet was ascertained. He took also a conspicuous part in the Porto Rico expedition and surrender.

He was at various times on important Naval Boards, had the training of the navy apprentice boys, and was delegated by the United States as its representative to the International Naval Court of Inquiry in Paris on the Dogger Bank incident of the Russo-Japanese War, when the Russian fleet fired upon English trawlers in the Channel. He declined this duty. Admiral Sands' last and crowning duty was as Superintendent of the Naval Academy, whence he retired in 1907 at the required age of sixty-two.

He was chosen for the organization of the new Academy, then being completed, at the expense of ten million dollars, for the accommodation of eight hundred midshipmen. He was selected among his many able comrades for his traditional qualities of loyalty and unswerving devotion to his duty, his ability as an executive and as an educator, his rare combination of old, deep-water seamanship and knowledge of essentially modern navigation and naval organization, and, probably not least, for his profound and manly religious convictions.

He had entered the navy when he was under fourteen, and it was at a time when the service, naturally rough, was made more so by the war which was imminent, and there was, besides, a feeling of hostility to Catholics which does not exist now. All these were influences calculated to destroy faith in a man, and it is remarkable that a boy should not only have withstood the test, and led an irreproachable and stainless life, but, by his insistence and perseverance, should develop a splendid character and make it possible wherever he was for Catholics to practise their faith openly. That a Catholic may do so now in the navy is not entirely due to increased tolerance; it is due also in a great degree to the man who made all respect him and gave his comrades who were Catholics, whether officers or men, a pride in being associated with him.

Although he never intruded his own religious beliefs upon those with whom he was associated in duty, he always let it be known that he was a Catholic, and by his conduct and example proved the sincerity of his convictions, which were always respected by his messmates and by his superiors. He saw to it that all of the Catholics who were in the crews of the vessels to which he was attached had ample opportunities for the performance of their religious duties.

Admiral Sands was a strict disciplinarian, but always regardful of the rights and the comforts of those who served with him, with the result that when a junior officer his shipmates were devoted to him, and when he was in command those under him were happy and comfortable, and the efficiency of the crew ever manifested the success of his methods. He was at all times looked up to as a conscientious officer, and his character has left a deep impression on the rank and file of the rising American navy.

W. SANDS.

Balm for Easy Consciences

The clergy of the Church of England sometimes spend their holidays on the continent, and it is a perennial grievance that they do not attend service in the English Churches abroad. The matter has been brought up again by a correspondent of the London Guardian, and the guilty parties are hastening to justify themselves. The way they take is entertaining.

The general position is that all they are obliged to do is to recite Morning and Evening Prayer publicly or privately, and that it's nobody's business which alternative they choose. As tourists, they claim a tourist's privileges, and are happy to be free from the obligations of public services that weigh heavily on them in their parishes. One clergyman takes a higher tone. He boasts that when abroad he follows the advice of St. Cyril of Jerusalem, and asks the way to the Catholic Church. He has never been directed to the institution presided over by a continental chaplain, and only once, in Geneva, did his inquiry result in his being landed in an Old Catholic church. With this exception, he has always found himself in some Catholic church pure and simple, where he has read Morning Prayer or Evening Prayer with much devotion.

Another is still more naïve. He finds it a most useful discipline to abstain from the routine of public services while holiday-making. This, he says, gives one an opportunity to examine his conscience with regard to the spiritual effects of a rigid adherence to Sunday and week-day services during the greater part of the year. We think we see him in a railway carriage, or on a Rhine steamer, or on some Alpine slope, examining his conscience.

All this goes to show that when a man, even an Anglican clergyman, does not want to do something, he can always compel his reason to furnish him with an excuse—which is sound psychology.

CORRESPONDENCE

New Curia for Franciscan Minorites

Rome, Oct. 29.

On Thursday, Oct. 26, the Sovereign Pontiff announced through his special delegate, Mgr. Doehling, the appointment of a new curia for the Order of Franciscan Minorites, naming Father Pacifico Monza as Minister General of the Order; Father Placido Leukas as Procurator General, and Fathers Masulli, Bottaro, Begio, Antomelli, Drayer and Bendes as General Associates (Definitori Generali). The retiring Minister General, Father Dionysius Schüler, becomes titular Archbishop of Nazianzum. At the same time he published a Man-

Proprio letter, under date of October 23, modifying the government of the Order.

Hereafter there are to be but six Assistants instead of twelve, two for the Italian language, and one each for the German, French, English and Spanish, who shall respectively be conversant with the language they represent, but not necessarily of the nation whose language it is. The term of office of the members of the curia shall be six years; the Minister General, the Procurator General and any two of the Assistants shall be eligible for a second term upon a two-thirds vote of the electors in the General Chapter; none may be elected for a third term without special permission of the Holy Father.

The letter also provides for the mode of election. Provincials, i. e., General Superiors of the different provinces, and provincial Guardians shall hold office for only three years, when the provincial chapter must meet for an election. Reelection for a second term requires the permission of the Minister General, and for a third term the approval of the Holy See. In the absence of the Minister General the ordinary business of the whole Order shall be transacted by the Procurator General, and in the absence of a Provincial the affairs of the province are in the care of the provincial Guardian. All titles of precedence are annulled. All the studies are to be reorganized on a plan to be laid down in a new law shortly forthcoming from the Holy See. A new constitution is to be drawn up for the Order by a special commission named by the Holy See, and will be in force within six months from now.

From the seat of the war comes the news of the zealous work and heroic bravery of the army chaplains and an authoritative denial of the stories of massacred religious; none of the religious missions have as yet been the scene of bloodshed, though one of them, at Bengasi, was threatened by the Turks for some forty-eight hours. The first chaplain to land with the troops at Tripoli, the Franciscan Minorite, Father Bevilacqua, had served before with the Italian force as chaplain in China in the Boxer trouble.

At Modena the Socialists are holding a Congress, a live, volcanic Congress. About the only thing there was unanimity upon was a resolution of condemnation of the war, with fraternal greetings to their fellow-socialists among the Turks, "at this moment when we Socialists of the world stand in united protest against the systems and methods of capitalism." For the rest there was bedlam, out of which shrieked the voice of a delegate denouncing Podrecca, the familiar of the Asino, for charging a fee of forty dollars every time he delivered an address for the Socialists.

The times are dull for anti-clericalism. A call was issued for a solemn commemoration of Francis Ferrer for Sunday morning last in the Piazza Romana in Trastevere. There were a half-dozen speakers on hand, but they could muster only some one hundred and eighty listeners, and, strange to say, in the revolutionary twaddle which they perpetrated they forgot to mention Ferrer.

At Pavia on Saturday week, a student who had failed in the summer examinations and failed again on his repetition in the fall, shot and seriously wounded one of the Professors of the University, who happened, by the way, to be an instructor in English. A similar incident occurred some time ago at Palermo, and again at Pisa. It threatens to be as dangerous over here to make a stand for scholarship in an examination as it is in the United States to hint at straightening out professionalized college athletics.

On Tuesday, at Valle di Pompeii, took place the official opening of the Vesuvian Museum, founded by the present director of the Observatory on Vesuvius, Professor Guido Alfani. The exercises were held in the Pontifical Basilica, and were attended by a distinguished gathering of Scientists. The Holy Father sent his benediction. On the list of those congratulating Professor Alfani I noticed the name of the Director of the Vatican Observatory, Father John Hagen, well known in the United States as the former director of the Georgetown University Observatory. C. M.

India's Curse, The Caste System

COLOMBO, CEYLON, Sept. 10, 1911.

It has been long since the custom with some Buddhist laymen, even women, to go and preach in public places or under the sacred Bo-tree—figus religiosa—under which tree Gautamā is believed by the Buddhists to have obtained enlightenment or buddhahood. Those trees are surrounded with a fence or enclosure, decked with flowers and offerings, and are even given divine worship by the ignorant and uncritical Buddhist devotees. Public preaching is a good profession, as a collection is made and Buddhistic pamphlets in prose and verse are sold on the spot. So long as the preacher sticks to the exposition of Buddhism no exception can be taken. But often he becomes a nuisance, and more frequently than not he treads on forbidden ground; for having received a special training in Colombo, he goes out of his way and falls foul of Christianity, just as only an ignorant and rabid pagan can do. Should there be Christians in his audience they become enraged, and though few in number, are unable to stand it any longer. Blows have been given on many occasions, but are followed with condemnation in the court. Thus two months ago it happened that a preacher of that kind was running down Christianity in a sacrilegious and shocking way in Ratnapura, some seventy miles from Colombo. Christians of good position heard of it and came to listen, and they immediately lodged a complaint against that Buddhist apostle. He was condemned to ten months' rigorous imprisonment and one hundred rupees fine (a rupee here is the third part of a dollar) by Mr. W. H. Carbery, the district judge of Ratnapura. No doubt this sentence will prove salutary to himself and many others.

The caste system will ever be a curse for India, and even for Ceylon, although caste distinctions are not so sharply defined here as in the peninsula. We have two high castes, the Wellālus (farmers) and the Karāwās (fishers). All the others are considered somewhat low—very low. There is also a class of most wretched people, the Rodiyās, (rodidi in Singhalese means filth) who were long ago expelled from the highest caste by a Kandyan King. All of these Rodiyās are condemned to beg, and are not allowed to enter the towns. How often is the European not shocked with the overbearing haughtiness of higher castes and the cringing servility of the lower ones! In their daily intercourse with one another they regulate their second personal pronoun and conjugate the imperative present tense of some verbs, according to the person they deal with. Formerly, in old France, we had vous and tu and toi with a very distinct meaning, which has been lost since the French Revolution. Here we have to express the same singular you in three words: tamoosé, for high castes; oomba for ordinary people, and to for low castes; and often one hears even moo, it, addressed to a man of very low caste. St. Paul tells us there is no real charity between pagans. Brotherly love is unknown among them: there is not even a word for it in the language. So castes stand one upon another, a superior one crushing the inferior one, and so on down to the bottom. Fancy what cringing humanity one finds by stepping down the social ladder! The British, who are no respecters of persons, do not encourage the caste system; but if they wished to crush it out they could not. The higher castes hold to their fancied and admitted privileges and have not the slightest wish to see their inferior fellow-men raised to a higher level. It is their interest to keep them down and to have the old machinery going on as in the time of their kings.

Catholicism, which is so prosperous in many parts of the Island, has smoothed away many angular roughnesses by bringing to the mind of the children of the Universal Church the brotherhood of Christ and the equality of man, trying to make them somewhat understand what Thomas à Kempis said so tersely in three little words: es quod es: you are what your character and works make you before God; all the other paraphernalia are of no account. Here and all over the East wealth and appearances count for all and excuse all. But how is it, some may ask, that there being no castes among the Bonzes or Bhikkus, i. e., the Buddhist priesthood, they have not done away with castes? How could they do it with consistency? Caste is the punishment or reward for demerit and merit in former existences, and besides when the blind lead the blind both fall into the ditch. But I have no more time to enlarge on this subject. Let me finish my letter, which is already too long, by a famous stricture on a big portion of the Ceylon Buddhist priests by no other than Mr. J. A. Rambukpotta, the Ratamahatmayā, of Kegalle, some time ago. A Ratamahatmayā (the Lord of the country) is the highest native official under the control of the Government Agent, or provincial governor. There was in the court house of Kegalle a land claim lodged by a Buddhist priest—which he lost—versus this Ratamahatmayā. This high official is a Buddhist, belonging to a distinguished Kandyan family. So, Mr. J. A. Rambukpotta, stating his case publicly before the European judge of Kegalle, explained that he had kicked the priest, and he went even so far as to declare Urbi et Orbi—for all the Colombo English dailies published the stricture—that in the whole district of Kegalle, i. e., in the half of the Sabaragamuwa province, he did not know a single Buddhist priest worthy to wear the robe. Fancy one of the highest officials of New York saying publicly in a court of justice: “I know of no Protestant minister in the whole of New York worthy of wearing the clerical garb.” No doubt all the reverend clergymen would band together and stand as one man to bring that high official to book. But the Buddhist priests kept quiet. Only the laity held a meeting, asking the Ratamahatmayā to apologize, which he did not do. D.

Cuban Politics

CIENFUEGOS, CUBA, Oct. 31, 1911.

In my last letter I spoke of how the politicians were beginning to bestir themselves in preparation for the coming presidential election. What was then somewhat hazy is now clearer. The division in the Liberal party, which is the one now in power, becomes more manifest day by day. Vice-President Zayas is bent on being a candidate for the presidency, his reason being, as his supporters say, a secret agreement made at the time of the preceding election, when also there were divided counsels in the Liberal camp. Others, however, deny the existence of any such pact.

As President Gómez has indicated clearly that he does not wish a reelection another candidate has sprung up in the party. He is Governor Asbert, of the province of Havana. It is bruited that he has the favor and support of the President, and reasons for thinking so are not wanting; for at a recent banquet held in his honor, there was read a letter from Gómez congratulating Asbert on the attention shown him.

There is still another candidate, a Señor Hernández, who declined the nomination for vice-president. Who will come out the winner of the prize it is now quite impossible to say, though Asbert seems to be in the lead. The Liberals are so split up that, not political principles, but personal ambitions are the engrossing topics of conversation.

Meanwhile the Conservative party is organizing and giving more signs of life. Who is its candidate? That point has yet to be settled, but it is more probable that the choice will fall upon Sr. Menocal, the manager of one of the largest sugar plants in Cuba.

It is safe to assert that life in Cuba is fitly described as constant agitation. Politics swallow up everything. The press of more moderate tone has more than once spoken deprecatingly of this endless agitation, and has even gone so far as to suggest the advisability of a constitutional amendment prohibiting the reelection of a president. As the Constitution now reads, reelection is not prohibited, but since the revolution that overthrew Estrada Palma there is a certain amount of latent opposition to it. The proposal is to lengthen the term to six or eight years and limit the incumbent to one term.

Not long since the President excited no little commotion by expelling two Spanish subjects. It seems that the opposition press were rather fiery in their comments on the present administration; and, leaving aside the question of what warrant they may have had for their violence, the two Spaniards achieved notoriety in the fray. A few hours before the steamer Alfonso XIII cast off for her voyage to Spain, the two newspaper men were arrested and taken aboard with the notification that the President had expelled them. Thereupon, the Spanish minister sent an official note to the Secretary of State, requesting an explanation of this action. Public feeling ran high and many Cubans condemned the President, but it was the Conservative party that undertook most actively the defence of the expelled journalists. The outcome was another decree which permitted the return of the two Spaniards.

Not only the two newspaper men have tasted the sweets of expulsion, for some ten or a dozen Socialists and Anarchists, who had come from Spain to propagate their subversive doctrines, were forced to return. The Government had the approval of all good citizens in its energetic action towards those disturbers of the public peace, for it would have done great harm to the sugar industry if strikes and disturbances had occurred during the grinding of the cane. The sugar industry is being greatly developed by Americans, the Cuban American Sugar Company alone having invested forty million dollars.

S. B. S.

A M E R I C A

A · CATHOLIC · REVIEW · OF · THE · WEEK

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 18, 1911.

Entered as second-class matter, April 15th, 1909, at the Post Office at New York, N. Y., under the Act of March 3d, 1879.

Copyright, 1911, and published weekly by the America Press, New York.

President, THOMAS J. CAMPBELL; Secretary, H. J. SWIFT;
Treasurer, MICHAEL J. O'CONNOR.

SUBSCRIPTIONS, POSTPAID:

United States, 10 cents a copy; yearly, $3.00
Canada, $3.50 Europe, $4.00 (16s.)

Address:

THE AMERICA PRESS, 59 East 33d Street, New York City, N. Y., U. S. A.

CABLE ADDRESS: CATHREVIEW.

Socialism and the Catholic Church

It is an undeniable fact that modern Socialism is characterized by unbelief, hostility to religion and, above all, by uncompromising and bitter hatred and denunciation of the Catholic Church. The public utterances of its leading advocates, its newspaper organs and periodicals, breathe hatred and threats against revealed religion, its doctrines and institutions. Books published by Socialist leaders deny the existence of God, the immortality of the human soul, the redemption of mankind by Christ, the rightful existence of our present social organization, and the independence of the Church as a society complete in itself and founded by God. And yet, when blamed for such utterances, they will maintain that the Church is opposed to the Socialist party, not because it is a party of unbelievers, but because it is a party of workingmen; not because it attacks religion, but because it attacks capital.

Socialism, they say, is the cause of the poor man, it is the philosophy of the suffering classes; but the Church is the paid guardian of the interests of the capitalists. The Socialists, however, forget that the Catholic Church is the Church of the poor, and has been the Church of the poor since the days of the Apostles. They ignore the fact that the Catholic Church has opened orphan asylums, hospitals and other institutions of benevolence and charity for the poor, "has aroused everywhere," as Pope Leo says, "the heroism of charity and has established congregations of religious and many other useful institutions for help and mercy, so that hardly any kind of suffering could exist which was not afforded relief."

And she has always succeeded so well as to have even extorted the praise of the enemies." But, what have the Socialists done? Nothing at all. They hold out promises, they clamor for the emancipation of labor, the amelioration of the lot of the poor man, and his full participation in the material, intellectual and spiritual heritage of the human race; they will have no charity, but only justice. Now, the Catholic Church does not want to curtail the right of the workingmen. Pope Leo XIII, in his encyclical on the labor question, recognizes the right of the workingmen to organize for the protection of themselves and their families against the greed of capital; he recognizes the sacredness of their contracts and warns employers against the awful sin of which they make themselves guilty when they use their power and the possible helplessness of the workingman to force contracts from him that do not bring him a just wage for his labor. He does not hesitate to declare such forced contracts as oppression and fraud—sins that cry to heaven for vengeance.

In brief, it is because, in the interest of God and religion and honest workingmen, the Church raises her voice in warning against the irreligious and atheistic principles with which Socialism seeks to poison the pure life of labor, that the Socialists cry out in frenzy that the Catholic Church is the enemy of organized labor in the interests of capital.

The "Britannica" and the Deaf Mutes

A very unexpected and distressing and, on account of the helplessness of those involved, an almost tragic consequence of the "Encyclopædia Britannica's" unfriendliness to the Catholic Church has just been brought to our notice by a letter which we publish in this issue and which we commend to the thoughtful perusal of our readers. It refers to our silent brethren, the Deaf Mutes, who are told by the "Britannica," in the article entitled "The Deaf and Dumb," that, according to the greatest theologian of the Catholic Church, St. Augustine, they are all doomed to eternal damnation for the simple reason that they cannot hear. This doctrine of St. Augustine, according to the "Britannica," is based on the text of St. Paul that "faith cometh by hearing only!" The Talmud, however, they are reminded, "recognized that they could be taught, and were therefore not idiotic."

No wonder that the writers and editors of the Deaf Mute papers, the Directors of their Institutions, some of their distinguished men, and especially the ministers who teach them their religion, have inveighed against this terrible doctrine in the most violent language they could command. Catholics are as much shocked as they, and join them in their denunciation.

In the first place St. Augustine could never have given utterance to such a sentiment for the reason that the whole practice of the Church is against it. To adduce no other proof, the eagerness with which she pours the waters of Baptism on the head of the speechless infant, whose ears may never distinguish an articulate sound, makes it sufficiently clear that she does not believe that those who cannot hear are therefore damned. Indeed, the very same article in which the "Britannica" formulates this blasphemous accusation against the greatest of all the teachers of Catholic theology tells us that those who were primarily and chiefly interested in the Deaf Mutes were Catholics, beginning with St. John of Beverly and the Venerable Bede as far back as the seventh century. In the long list which is given of those who were devoted to these afflicted brethren Catholic names are continually appearing, such as those of the Spanish monks Pierre Ponce de Leon and Bonet, and, above all, that of the famous French priest, the Abbé de l'Épée, whose sign language is the one chiefly employed in the United States to-day, while not a word is said of the Jews, whose sacred book, we are told, speaks so kindly of the deaf.

Again, it is absolutely impossible that St. Augustine could have based his doctrine on that of St. Paul, for St. Paul never said that "faith cometh by hearing only." That word "only" is a most reprehensible interpolation. It is not in the Latin nor the Greek, nor is it in the Protestant Bible which we have before us; nor is it, indeed, quoted in the Ninth Edition of the "Encyclopædia Britannica." So that the famous and much-advertised Eleventh Edition must claim the distinction of sacrilegiously tampering with the Sacred Text to maintain a false statement.

Finally, when the author of the article on "The Deaf and Dumb," who, by the way, is a respectable minister of the Church of England, was appealed to or challenged to produce the offensive quotation from St. Augustine, he frankly admitted, after a month of search and inquiry, that he was unable to find it, and, honest man that he is, acknowledged that he had copied it from a previous edition of the "Britannica," and from foolish commentaries.

This is very valuable information, coming, as it does, from one of the chosen contributors of the "Encyclopædia Britannica." Surely the work is fearfully and wonderfully made, and there is no wonder that people refuse to trust it.

The Holy War

No sensible man ever imagined for a moment that when the Italian fleet crossed the Mediterranean for its more or less successful raid on Tripoli that the expedition was undertaken in the interests of Christianity. For some reason or another, probably to fire the national heart, and make the drafted men fancy they were doing something holy and heroic and unusual, pretence was made to convince them that they were new crusaders in a war of the Cross against the Crescent. Some imaginative reporters even told the world of the white figure at the windows of the Vatican lifting his hand to bless the passing troops; utterances were made, or said to have been made by distinguished prelates of episcopal and even cardinalial dignity about the glory that was to accrue to Italy for sacrificing herself on the altar of Catholicity; a friar all shaven and shorn was patriotically indiscreet enough to predict the possible expulsion of the Turks from Constantinople, and so on. It was great fun for the paper men at least. Their copy was picturesque and paid. But the cold blooded fact remains that His Majesty the King at the outset had knocked the underpinning from the whole fantastic structure by his proclamation to the devotees of Islam. They were to be his loyal and loving sons; and he assured them that they could be just as fervent followers of Mohammed under the rule of modern Rome as they had been when they belonged to Constantinople.

It is quite possible that some perfervid ecclesiastics did lose their heads and loosen their tongues too much, and persuaded themselves that the days of Godfrey de Bouillon and the Crusaders had come back again, but there were very few of the 260 bishops of Italy who nourished such a delusion. They know as all the world knows that the war is a plain business speculation for the extension of commerce and the expansion of Italian territory; that it is what modern nations are doing all the time, and what we Americans did a few years ago when we seized the Philippines, and what we did more than half a century ago when we laid our hands on Texas and California. Religion is not a factor in modern political enterprises, except perhaps as an obstacle to be overcome.

Of course not to favor the war argues a lack of patriotism in the ecclesiastical world of Italy, but it will not be the first time that churchmen have had to suffer for the truth. Even the Sovereign Pontiff himself is reproached with being out of sympathy with the national aspirations; as if the Father of all the faithful could ever or should ever restrict his solicitude to one nationality. All nations must be dear to him who is the Supreme Pastor of the Universal Church, and so in this sudden ebullition of Italian military and political fury he has said not one word for, nor one word against the war that has been so gaily entered upon and whose issue no man can foretell. At least if the Turks slaughter all the missionaries they meet with in their wide possessions, as they are said to be already killing the hospital nurses who wear the red cross, it will not be because the Sovereign Pontiff has given his sanction to this war, or ever dreamed that the nation which holds him in bondage in Christian Europe would sacrifice its blood and bankrupt its treasury to advance his sway in pagan and infidel Africa.

A Missouri Method

Father John S. Kuhlman, S.J., whom the St. Louis Federation of Catholic Societies had made chairman of their Committee on Education, chanced to read in the catalogue of a Paris publishing house that a large consignment of bad books written in French or English was about to be shipped to America for sale. The Federation acted promptly and communicated with Mr. Anthony Comstock of New York, who at once took effective measures to prevent them from being received into the country in any way. Mr. Comstock, moreover, requested the Secretary of State to have our Ambassador at Paris protest against the French government's allowing such books to be published and exported. This is an instance of what can be done by vigilance, organization and prompt action to check the spread of immoral literature! The evil that has been prevented by keeping that ship load of foul novels from being left on our shores is simply incalculable.

A New Epoch in the Church

It is not for an empty show or a passing pageant that the departure of the Cardinal-elect from his See of New York to his place in the Senate of the Church assumes the appearance almost of a triumphal procession. Six or seven thousand children in the cathedral, the happy representatives of the other sixty or seventy thousand little ones who regard the new Cardinal as their friend, their father, and who tell him so in the jubilant anthems that ring through the lofty vaults of the splendid basilica; the twenty or thirty thousand loving and enthusiastic Catholics forming a living lane through which the carriage of the Archbishop passes from the cathedral to the pier; the glorious carillon that sings its joyous songs high up in the resonant sky; the fluttering banners; the shouts of the multitude, and also the wide and generous sympathy of the country at large that shares in this jubilation means more than a mere manifestation of enthusiasm for a great churchman who has won the esteem and respect of his fellow-man. It connotes a stupendous advance in the religious life of this country. Catholics had grown weary of hearing the incessant and unchanging prophecies wailed out on every note of the gamut that once Catholicity was brought into the light and freedom of the Democracy it would wilt and wither, for it would no longer have at its side the aristocracy and royalty with which it was supposed to be intimately and essentially identified. But lo! at the very moment that Catholicity is at its lowest ebb in countries whose kingly and imperial traditions go back into the mist of ages, it suddenly reveals itself in free and republican America as the great religious power in the nation. Just when the ever multiplying sects are crumbling to pieces and their leaders are resorting to all sorts of devices, even to the abandonment of their distinctive dogmas, so as to attract worshipers to the deserted churches, Catholic America is seen, not only instinct with life and vigor, but so powerful and so respected that three of its citizens are clothed at the same time with the scarlet robes of the senators, counsellors and guides of the world-wide Church, and the whole nation acclaims with joy the honor that is reflected on itself by the selection. It is a long cry from the disdain and contempt, and even hatred with which Catholicism was regarded in this country not sixty years ago, when Archbishop Bedini, a distinguished representative of the Holy See had to remain in disguise in New York, and later in concealment until he was forced finally to flee for his life, so intense was the hatred of the Sovereign Pontiff, whose message he brought. The world has grown wiser since then and America recognizes that Catholicity, far from being a menace to the public weal, is the great bulwark of law and order, the fearless defender of the rights of its citizens, and at the same time the undaunted champion and upholder of the country's institutions.

Our Indian Wards

Catholics usually have short memories or imperfect powers of apperception. Thus for instance they have only a faint recollection or perhaps a dim realization of the very pregnant fact that not a very long time ago at the express invitation of the Government, the Catholics of this country spent $1,500,000 in building schools to educate the Catholic Indian children, the Indian Office agreeing to do its share in supporting the schools. The subsidies were paid for a time, and the most satisfactory results were achieved.

Then arose the cry of "no money for sectarian education," and Congress forthwith passed a law forbidding the continuance of the appropriations. This time it was the memory or the apperceptions, not of the Catholics, but of the legislators that were at fault. For at the very moment they were so solicitous about keeping religion out of the schools, they had no scruple about supplying Hampton Institution, a distinctly Protestant establishment, with all the money it wanted, or thought it wanted for its Indian pupils.

In consequence of the law the Catholic schools had the choice of sending their boys and girls back to the tepees or of going begging through the country for help. They adopted the latter course, when President Roosevelt, whose kindness should never be forgotten, ruled that the schools could draw on the tribal funds for support; that is, the Indians could use their own money to maintain their schools. Even that arrangement met with bitter opposition, but it was upheld by a decision of the Supreme Court. Mr. Sherman, now Vice-President, who was chairman of the Indian Committee of the House, was a staunch supporter of the President's policy, as was Mr. Burke, of South Dakota, but Mr. Stephens, of Texas, fought it fiercely. Unfortunately, when Mr. Sherman entered upon his new office, Mr. Stephens was made chairman of the committee.

At first a new policy was attempted. Instead of the old contract system, a large number of the schools, many of which were Protestant, were purchased and conducted as Government institutions. That, of course, did not embarrass the Protestant schools in the least. They can teach what doctrines they choose. Not so for Catholic schools. Once under Government control everything that savors of Catholicism must be eliminated remorselessly. Hence, a compromise was suggested by President Taft, who like his predecessor, has been most just in this matter. Instead of purchasing he took over four Catholic schools by lease. That arrangement, however, does not at all suit the idiosyncrasies of the member from Texas, and he now wants to know if there are any religious garbs, or emblems, or symbols worn, or used, or exhibited or employed in such schools. His purpose, of course, is evident. The schools must be closed. If they were Methodist, or Presbyterian or Unitarian, it wouldn't matter to him, but anything Catholic is objectionable. In brief, the sects are not sectarian, but Catholicism is. One naturally asks why this temporary servant of the people cannot be taught that there are other people in this country besides himself, who have just as much claim to consideration. Two Presidents and a Vice-President can declare the justice and the necessity of supporting these schools without bothering about what religious training they give, provided they form good citizens, but is this representative of a remote district of the country going to force the Indian children to accept his personal religious views, or have no religious teaching at all? Again, one is prompted to ask why should Catholics be robbed of the million and a half which they have invested in these schools? For it is clear that these buildings will all go to rack and ruin or be sold under the hammer unless the Government keeps its part of the contract. Or has this legislator power to dispense the Government from its plain obligation? And does he propose to introduce into this country the methods of the French politicians, who confiscated every school in France for daring to prefer Catholicism to infidelity?

Views of this kind were presented to the Knights of Columbus, assembled at Washington the other day. It is very clear that they were not meant merely for the purpose of meditation.

In Carnegie Hall, November 10, the Cardinal-elect presiding, Mr. Shane Leslie, Delegate of the Gaelic League, addressed his initial meeting in New York in support of the Gaelic Revival. Hon. Bourke Cockran introduced him as the latest example of Ireland's power to conquer her conquerors by impressing her national and religious faith upon their children and thus making them "more Irish than the Irish." In a speech of high literary power and convincing sincerity, Mr. Leslie impressed on his audience, that Ireland having regained her land and legislature, must also regain the rich and beautiful language that held her best traditions and expressed her mind when her heart was truest and her faith was purest and her ideals noblest, if she is to retain the distinctive and characteristic nationality that is worthy of her past. He appealed to the love of her American children to help in restoring to their motherland the true speech of her lips and the only adequate expression of her heart.

LITERATURE

Present Day "Realistic" Novels

"I don't think the Anglo-Saxon people can expect to have absolutely first-class fiction unless they give their authors a free hand, which they never have done since Fielding's day."

This is the solemn pronouncement of Arnold Bennett, an English novelist who graciously consented to be interviewed shortly after reaching our shores. By "first-class fiction," readers are given to understand, is meant that produced by Zola and the French school of animalism or naturalism, and by their English and American imitators, while "a free hand," as the interview indicates, is leave to disregard propriety and decency in the construction and composition of novels intended for the general public.

This is clear from Mr. Bennett's own statements. For, in the first place, he is proud to call George Moore his master. "I got my ideas for the kind of work I am doing from Moore," he freely acknowledges. Now the works of Moore, an Irish disciple of Zola, are so immoral that they have been excluded from the circulating libraries of England. Then, too, from the books Arnold Bennett praises, it is plain what he considers "a free hand," for he lauds to the skies novels reeking with foulness and suggestion.

Finally we may infer what Mr. Bennett considers first-class fiction from the scornful language he uses about authors whom their uncritical admirers have hitherto thought great novelists. Scott, for instance, in his opinion, is "a rank sentimentalist"; neither Dickens nor Thackeray is "a quite first rate artist"; George Eliot is "clever in dialogue, but that's about all," while Stevenson is merely a stylist, and not a remarkable one either. The reading public should certainly be grateful for being at last set right regarding the true worth of their sometime literary idols.

The unpardonable crime of all these novelists, be it noted, is their "romanticism," Mr. Bennett himself being in theory and practice such a passionate lover of "realism" that he seems to have little patience with authors who write books that a pure-minded person would care to read. For a "realist," in Mr. Bennett's vocabulary, appears to mean a writer who generally makes the "sex-problem" so called the pivot on which his story turns. Then bidding an abrupt farewell to the ancient virtues of propriety and decency, a present-day "realist" proceeds to depict scenes and characters and situations which most readers will find direct incentives to grave sin.

Such novelists unfortunately seem just now to be gaining a greater vogue than ever. Interviews, moreover, like that with Arnold Bennett have been appearing so often of late in the metropolitan press that one has reason to suspect that authors and publishers have laid a dark plot to dull in this way the public conscience and induce respectable people to be at least patient with books which a dozen years ago would have been not only excluded from the home but pitched into the fire.

For when an author "everybody is reading" delivers himself with an air of deep conviction of views about what novels the public should buy, thoughtless admirers, dazzled by his fame or success, and deceived by his sophistries, are prone to conclude that old-fashioned ideas about dangerous books are too straight-laced now, and salve their conscience by saying: "If 'everybody is reading' this story, it can't be so very bad."

Effective measures should be taken to protect the country against the ruin with which it is threatened by this inundation of unclean literature. In Pennsylvania, not long ago, a badly constructed dam gave way, setting free a huge mass of water that engulfed two towns and destroyed many lives. The indignant public demanded that an investigation be made at once to place the responsibility for the disaster, and that all the dams in the United States should be carefully inspected that there might not be a repetition of the catastrophe.

Would that similar action were taken against the flood of erotic novels that is now pouring through our land! The havoc wrought by that broken dam at Austin, after all, can be in a measure repaired, but the moral ruin that is worked by the free circulation of bad books is often irreparable and may last forever. Suppose this case: A boy or girl, with a pure heart and a clean mind, sits down to the chance perusal of one of these "problem" stories, now so abundant. Curiosity prevailing over prudence, that child by the end of an hour finds its mind and heart irretrievably stained and its innocence gone, and who will venture to say where the harm that that bad book has done will end?

But how can this crying evil be remedied? To stop the sale of unclean novels after they are on the market is too late. Such stories should not be allowed to leave the printer at all. Just as the films of moving pictures before being released are now censured by a select committee, why could not publishers be forced, under heavy penalties, to submit to a like board all books that might be a menace to the morals of the community? After a few objectionable stories were banned in this way publishers would be more cautious about what they take from authors.

Is this scheme unfeasible? No. For why should not our legislatures be as zealous in framing "pure book" laws as they are to draw up pure food or pure drug laws? As for Catholics, their duty in this matter is plain. Far from buying or reading such stories themselves, they must do their utmost, by personal influence and public remonstrance, to prevent or lessen the sale and diffusion of unclean literature.

WALTER DWIGHT, S.J.

Further Notes on St. Paul. The Epistles of the Captivity, Ephesians, Philippians, Colossians, Philemon. By JOSEPH RICKABY, S.J. London: Burns & Oates. Price, 3s. 6d.

All who have perused Father Rickaby's "Notes on St. Paul, Corinthians, Galatians, Romans" (1898), will be pleased that, after a lapse of thirteen years, he has completed that scholarly work.

A great improvement in "Further Notes" is its freedom in the matter of an English text. In "Notes on St. Paul" the author hampered himself to little purpose by tying his exegesis down to the text of Challoner's 1752 edition. He now goes to the Greek text, and gives thereof a scholarly, yet not over-studied interpretation. Each section is headed by a paraphrase of the inspired Greek text and not by a translation. Of course, one may follow the comments readily enough with any of the Rheims editions; yet a popular commentary that neither gives nor follows any single English translation of St. Paul will prove tantalizing to those that are not familiar with his Greek.

The pages of "Further Notes" are pretty evenly divided between the letters herein interpreted. The six chapters of Ephesians get sixty-one pages. There are no introductory studies of authenticity, canonicity, time and place of writing, purpose or occasion of the letter. Such apparatus of a learned commentary on Ephesians is apart from the purpose of Father Rickaby. He purposes to jot down a few exegetical notes. They are chiefly a brief exposition of the inspired Greek text, with an occasional reference to one or other of the Fathers and a few citations of current English versions. The astounding array of footnotes, first-hand or other hand citations from commentators, bewildering rows of manuscript authorities—all these things are not to be found in either "Notes" or "Further Notes"; what is to be found is a straightforward and clear attempt to get at the meaning of St. Paul's own Greek words.

Generally the notes are brief and pithy. If the text be important dogmatically, the treatment is lengthier or more thorough.

To the four chapters of Philippians sixty-two pages are devoted. Here, as elsewhere, Father Rickaby's favorite Plato, together with other classic Greek authors, are called upon to help out in interpreting a word's meaning. Were his work more ambitious in title and scope, we should take him to task for failure to use the new lexicographical materials supplied by papyri, listed by Moulton and Milligan in the Expositor and employed by Lowell, Sr., in his new lexicon of New Testament Greek. The bits of verse—for instance, the Jacobite ballad (p. 101)—may be a help to preachers and general readers.

The four chapters of Colossians are interpreted in sixty-four pages. Some very clever essays are made in interpreting difficult passages. What though it depends upon Lightfoot, the study of i, 17 and 18, is an admirable piece of compact reasoning about a text. The famous and most difficult passage, ii, 16-23, is bravely and sincerely wrestled with. "Nemo vos seducat" (Vulg.), "Let no man seduce you" (Rheims), is another of not a few instances in which the Vulgate and, consequently, the Rheims miss St. Paul's athletic figures utterly. He wrote, "Let no one umpire you down"—i. e., "rob you of your prize" (R. V.), give a wrong decision as umpire and so deprive you of the prize to which your baptism gives you a right. As for the rest of the verse, "Willing in humility and religion of angels, walking in the things which he hath not seen, vain puffed up by the sense of the flesh," it is not at all luminous; the text and versions vary, and Father Rickaby suggests Lightfoot's conjecture of text-emendation.

There are a few typographical errors in the book—v. g., p. 164, "would not understood." It is to be regretted that "Further Notes" is not uniform with "Notes" in binding and printing. The interpretations are safe and sane and scholarly, such as one would look for from Father Rickaby.

WALTER DRUM, S.J.

Stuore. By MICHAEL EARLS, S.J. New York: Benziger Bros. Price, $1.00.

In "Stuore" Mr. Earls has favored us with a book which, we hope, is but a forerunner of many others of its kind. A series of short stories, set mainly in little country towns of New England, with one or two in the South, introduce us to characters of the most charming type. While the author draws a striking picture of boy-life at Georgetown, he is at his best in the portrayal of Irish character. Mat McGrath, with his simple story of Purgatory, eloquently told; the Irish dames over their teacups, lauding the mother who has sacrificed the companionship of her priestly son for the missions of Carolina; the old Captain, a model of patient resignation to God's chastisement—all possess that charm of strong faith which makes the Irish character so lovable.

The book has its purpose, and that purpose is fulfilled in a manner so entertaining that interest never flags. The readers of "Stuore" would doubtless welcome a novel from the author's pen written in the same vein.

J. F. D.

Songs of Oriel. By SHANE LESLIE. Dublin: Maunsel & Co. Those who followed closely in the last few years the literary and social movements known as "The Irish Revival" know that Shane Leslie is an enthusiast for the Irish language and the Catholic ideals of the old Gaelic life; and also that he is an orator of magnetic personality, whether pleading for the social betterment of the poor, the dissemination of Gaelic and Catholic literature or for political freedom. Subscribers to the Irish Catholic Truth Society publications will have learned from his "Isle of Columcille" and "Island of Lough Derg" that he commands a poetic prose of rare force and grace, throbbing with distinctively Irish Catholic feeling; but even these will be surprised to learn that he has to his name a book of poems, the sweetest and truest, most Catholic and indigenously Irish that the Gaelic awakening has called into being.

Catholics, it must be confessed, are, as a rule, poor advertisers. Men of exceptional powers and high ideals seem to concentrate their minds chiefly on the perfection of their works and little on the manner of diffusing them. Lionel Johnson was a poet who in purity of thought, loftiness of conception and beauty of expression has few peers among lyric writers in the English language, but because he knew not, or ignored, the pushing ways of the press agent, his name is unknown to the average purchaser of books. Johnson died young, and probably thought, as Leslie thinks of his own works in prose and verse, that his books were merely juvenile attempts preparatory to the more finished and critically satisfying achievements of riper years. Fortunately the judicious critic does not share his judgment. Leslie has health as well as youth, and may be expected to have loftier accomplishment in front of him, but what he has done is sufficient to give him place among the poets.

He is Catholic and Irish, and both are united in him as the leaves in the shamrock. In his verse are blended the moor and mist and the tender softness of Gaelic speech; the Irish birds are singing to the chapel bells and the pathos of his note is as simple and apparently as effortless as theirs. We should like to cite "Ireland To-day," "Donegal," "Kathleen Ni-Houlihan," "Ireland, Mother of Priests," "Need of Men" and "Requiem," but to cull all we fancied would almost reproduce the book. We read some of them to a Gaelic-speaking Irishman who is unversed in English poetry, and his eyes filled as he said: "Thanaman-dhee! but he's good. An' I thinking all my life a simple man couldn't understand poetry at all!" Gentle and simple will find Leslie and his poems "good."

M. K.

The Home of Evangeline. By A. L. PRINGLE. London: The Angelus Company.

This little book should be read by all who would be thoroughly acquainted with Longfellow's "Evangeline." A ramble in Acadia with the author gives one an insight into the manners and customs of the people, as well as a deeper realization of the sorrows and hardships that were theirs on being banished from their "thatch-roofed villages." The author describes at length the development of "The Home of Evangeline" under the untiring labors of its apostle, the Abbé Sigogne. It is not hard to perceive in him a second Father Felician. The life, labors and death of the zealous priest form chapters which are inseparably interwoven with the history of Acadia.

The latter part of the work portrays in an interesting manner the progress made by the "Acadian Farmers" in bettering their social condition, while their fidelity to their religion and tender devotion to the Blessed Virgin justify their reputation as men whose lives "reflect an image of heaven." The entire work is instructive and interesting and forms an appropriate background for the beautiful pictures the poet has left us of the "Home of Evangeline."

S. J. R.

Katechesen für die vier oberen Klassen der Volksschule von P. CÖLESTIN MUFF, O.S.B. Dritter Band: Gebote und Gebet. New York: Benziger Bros. 75 cents net.

We have here a book of catechetical instructions following the Munich method and based upon the Thurer Catechism. Each theme is developed in an introduction, exposition, summary and application. The story or parable at the head of each lesson is very briefly told, and the development which follows is equally short and pithy. The summary suggests questions that may be asked by the catechist, while the practical lessons of life are inculcated in the concluding part. The systematic little work is the result of thirty years of experience. The motto the author must evidently have hung over his desk while writing these volumes has been "Non multa, sed multum."

"The Inseparables," by Rev. John J. Kennedy (Melbourne: W. P. Linehan), are four graduates of Kew College, Melbourne, who weather the temptations of Australian life and remain true to faith and country, the teachings of their college and their Irish blood. The literary touch is lacking, and the proof-reader must have been on vacation when the book was being issued; but the interest inherent to the narrative, the variety and novelty of the topics treated, and the simple earnestness of the writer will hold the reader's attention better, and add more to his profit, than many a more artistically woven tale. Australian life in city and country, hunting in the Bush and in the mountains, business, politics, education, perversions and conversions, spiritualism, vocation, society and home, the old and new style of Australian priest, and many other subjects, fall naturally into the story; and if they are not always adorned, they are invariably presented in a clear and healthy fashion.

"Where the Shamrock Grows," by G. H. Jessop (New York: Baker & Taylor Co.), is better described by its subtitle, "An Irish Boy's Home-Coming." It is a story of "the quality" in distressed circumstances, which are quickly dispelled by two Irish-Americans, who marry the most eligible of the ladies, and pay the bills. The villain is killed by the horse which he made the instrument of his villainy, and justice is dealt out vigorously to all parties—except the brogue, which is bruised and maimed occasionally, but not to such an extent as to prevent the story from being readable.

The Rev. John F. Noll has added to his valuable list of compilations a pamphlet called "When Informed Protestants Speak Their Convictions." From sermons, lectures, magazines and papers he has gathered eighty pages of Protestant tributes to the beauty, power and holiness of the Catholic Church. Those who deal with converts have found that no one can study with an open mind and a clean heart the Church's claims on the love and allegiance of men without submitting to her gentle rule. Father Noll's book is issued from the press of the Parish Monthly, Huntington, Indiana, and sells for ten cents.

The Rev. Dr. N. M. Waters, a Congregationalist minister of Brooklyn, recently delivered a discourse on "Bernard of Clairvaux," in which he paid this warm tribute to the monks of the "dark ages":

"Out of the monasteries came the printing press; out of the monasteries came the universities; out of the monasteries came the libraries; out of the monasteries came modern science; out of the monasteries came the prayer-book, the Litany, the Te Deum. It was in the monasteries the foundations of English literature were laid. It was in a monastery that the first New Testament was written. It was in a monastery that the Bible was first translated into English. The monk, with the life of the recluse, was the great figure in the Dark Ages. Under God he was the great architect of civilization. . . .

" . . . These monks were scholars. These monks had the time and the learning and the devotion in an age when there were no books to seek out for all the sources of the Bible, and to copy and illumine old letters and old manuscripts. Take all the manuscripts from which our modern Bible is derived, which have had such a strange story of preservation; not one of them would exist to-day had it not been for the fidelity and the scholarship of the monks of the Middle Ages. They kept learning alive. They wrote the only books in that time. Some of them are alive still. Many of our hymns come down from those distant ages. Our 'Jerusalem the Golden' came from the pen of the Abbot of Cluny. It was Bernard of Clairvaux who wrote 'O Sacred Head Now Wounded.'"

Copies of "The Lights of Literature," a pamphlet favorably reviewed in our issue of October 14, can be obtained from the author, E. G. Houston, of Hampton Institute, Va.

BOOKS RECEIVED

- The Religious Question in Public Education. By Athelstan Riley, Michael E. Balder and Cyril Jackson. New York: Longmans, Green & Co. Net $1.50.
- Private Ownership, Its Basis and Equitable Conditions. By Rev. J. Kelleher. New York: Benziger Brothers. Net $1.25.
- Our Priesthood. By the Rev. Joseph Bruneau, S.S.D.D. St. Louis: B. Herder. Net 90 cents.
- Saint John Capistran. By Father Vincent Fitzgerald, O.F.M. New York: Longmans, Green & Co.
- St. Pius, Pope of Holy Rosary. By C. M. Anthony. Preface by Very Rev. Mgr. R. H. Benson. New York: Longmans, Green & Co.
- The Raccolta, or Collection of Indulgent Prayers and Good Works. By Ambrose St. John. Sixth Edition. New York: Benziger Bros. Net $1.10.
- For Lovers and Others. A Book of Roses. By James Terry White. New York: Frederick A. Stokes. Net $1.25.
- Mary Mother. Sacred Song. Words and Music by Annie D. Scott. New York: Boosey & Co. Net 60 cents.
- How Saint Francis Kept Christmas. By Ruth Egerton. 2d Edition. New York: Benziger Brothers.
- The Golden Spears. By Edmund Leamy. New York: Desmond Fitzgerald. Net $1.00.

EDUCATION

The "anti-frat" agitation that started in the West has reached New York. The faculty of Horace Mann, a secondary school affiliated with Columbia University, have unanimously decreed the suppression of the fraternities and sororities that have long been flourishing among the boys and girls of that institution. The teachers are rejoicing over the move, because they hope it will do away with the petty rivalry and contemptible snobbishness "frat" life engenders. But worse evils than these, it should be noted, follow the introduction of Greek letter societies into high schools.

The Annual Report of the Parish Schools of Philadelphia for 1911, compiled by the Superintendent of Parochial Schools, Right Rev. Mgr. P. R. McDevitt, shows that the number of pupils at the beginning of the year was 63,425, and at the end of the year 65,312; the average attendance 59,592; enrollment 70,318. The total increase in attendance over 1909-1910 was 2,478. The corner stone of the Catholic Girls' High School was laid on April 29, 1911. It will probably be opened in September, 1912. This new scholastic enterprise was made possible by a gift of $100,000 by a benefactor whose name is not mentioned in the report, and by the grant of a piece of property by the late Archbishop Ryan. The new school is already surfeited of its pupils, because since the year 1900 there have been three High School Centres which began with 146 pupils eleven years ago and have now 442. Nor does this represent the whole number of prospective pupils, for the reason that the restricted quarters of the three centres compelled the teachers to place the admission average at a very high figure. There are many girls now in the highest grades of the parochial schools who can undoubtedly qualify for a High School education.

The Report also deals with the question of the Carnegie Foundation, of which Mgr. McDevitt says:

"The founder of the benefaction might be considered entirely within his rights in putting down and enforcing conditions which he deemed necessary for the right distribution of his pensions and appropriations, but in view of the evils arising from the actual operation of this reputed philanthropy—evils which are becoming every day more conspicuously evident—the adverse comments already made may be amplified and emphasized in this year's report.

"It is only too apparent that the administrators of the foundation have no intention of restricting its influences to the particular colleges and universities that are the recipients of Mr. Carnegie's charity. They have taken up the self-imposed duty of standardizing education in America. Not only have they assumed the delicate function of classifying the higher institutions of learning in the United States and Canada, according to an arbitrary standard determined by themselves, but they have deemed it within the province of their educational mission to discredit all education that draws its principles and inspiration from a fixed, definite, Christian creed.

"This hostile attitude toward denominational education, which is perhaps the most sinister danger of the Carnegie Foundation, has become more aggressive and threatening during the last few years, because the administrators of the fund and the heads of the institutions which are enjoying its favor have resented the charge that the foundation discriminates unjustly against denominational schools.

"In defense and justification of the restrictions which Mr. Carnegie has placed upon them, the administrators have been for some time insidiously insinuating and industriously propagating the opinion that sound scholarship, intellectual honesty and a right progress in education are impossible in those institutions where the teachers are restricted by the limitations of fixed and definite Christian belief. Hence for just reasons the Carnegie Foundation, with its high ideals, its fervent devotion to true education, and its deep loyalty to truth, can offer its subsidies only to those colleges and universities which allow unqualified liberty of teaching and encourage teachers to follow truth wherever it leads.

"No believer in Christianity can view with indifference the principles and the policy of such a body in carrying out a supposedly high purpose of a multi-millionaire.

"The complacent self-importance of the members of the foundation, the confident manner in which they take up the arduous task of determining the educational efficiency of colleges and universities, the apodictic tone that brooks no contradiction, the calm assurance with which they present credentials endorsed by themselves as proof of their impartiality, fitness and justice, show the lengths to which men supported by unlimited means may go in their arrogance. The indulgent toleration of their loudly advertised purpose illustrates, too, the corrupting and corroding power of money, for we can well imagine the withering scorn that would greet any other body of educators, who, without the gold of a millionaire to support their pretensions, should presume to determine and to control the higher education of a great nation."

The New York Chamber of Commerce has adopted a resolution for the appointment of a permanent committee on commercial education, to be composed of fifteen members, with authority to invite from members of the Chamber and from other sources subscriptions to a commercial scholarship fund, and also with authority to carry out other recommendations of the special committee.

In May last a special committee on commercial education was appointed. In its report to the Chamber this committee says that commercial education in New York, and generally in the United States, is far inferior to that offered in European countries, and far inferior to what it should be. Then it proceeds:

"We have no natural advantages that will enable us to compete successfully in commercial enterprise in foreign fields unless our clerks and salesmen are as well trained as those of other nations. They must understand the language, and the social, religious and political customs of the people with whom they seek to do business. In order that our representatives shall have such training, we must give more serious attention to the mastery of foreign languages than we have done in the past. The study of the great facts of the commercial and economic world must be carefully pursued by those who would become leaders in commercial affairs—commercial statesmen, so to speak. Further, both the economic needs of the lower classes of commercial laborers and the business needs of the commercial world require that better and more extensive opportunities be given for accountants, clerks and stenographers.

"As approximately 90 per cent. of the pupils in elementary schools do not enter secondary schools, and only about 10 per cent. of the remainder enter college, the study of foreign languages and commercial methods must be made a part of the public school course. These students should have an opportunity for training which would render them more independent economically and at the same time more efficient in commercial work.

"Hence opportunity should be given boys and girls to begin their commercial training at the age of 12, after six years of school life, instead of 14, after eight years of school life. In other words, the first six years in school life should be given to the mastery of the elements, the tools of education; the next six years, or such part of them as pupils may have, to the study of subjects that will help them to earn a living. For some the work of this second period would still be a preparation for high school and college, as it is now perforce for the majority, but for many others it would be such a training in commercial work as would render them more efficient and more independent.

"For the class of workers who must perforce begin work early and also for matured men and women of the same class, there should also be efficient evening schools in which they could receive training for the commercial work in which they are to be engaged."

SOCIOLOGY

SPREADING THE LIGHT ON SOCIAL QUESTIONS.

The Laymen's League for Retreats, which is now established in the spacious and well-equipped buildings it recently acquired at Mount Manresa, Staten Island, has undertaken an important development of its work. Some thirty to forty men, from various localities, have been making the week-end retreats which have been now going on almost every successive week for over a year, and the consequent increase in numbers, support and interest, has encouraged the directors to deal in a more organized way, and in other centres, with the social problems to which the retreats have directed attention. For this purpose they have organized a School of Social Studies, which will hold sessions at the Fordham University Law School, 140 Nassau Street, New York City, on Monday and Thursday nights of each week. A complete course will be given by competent men, with the object of training a corps of Catholic lecturers who will be able to spread among Catholic men, especially workingmen, a sound knowledge of social questions and the principles of their solution. The first course, opening November 6, consists of twenty-four lectures on the various aspects of Socialism, its irreligious principles, its dangers to the workman, and its impracticability, by Rev. T. J. Shealy, S.J., Prof. J. A. Ryan and T. F. Woodlock. They will also show how the application of Christian principles, the only remedy for present-day social evils, should be adapted to modern conditions.

There are some thirty young men of education and ability now following the course. When they have graduated they will be at the disposal of parish societies, clubs and other Catholic organizations. They will give their services free of charge and no admission fee will be permitted, as it is deemed desirable that it should be made as easy as possible for all Catholics, and especially the wage-earners, to acquire correct information about the pressing dangers of the hour. The booklet issued by the Laymen's League (140 Nassau street, New York) gives further details of the nature of the work, and appends a useful and very complete list of books and pamphlets on Socialism by Catholic, non-Catholic and Socialist writers. It also announces a course of popular lectures on religious and social subjects to be given every other week at Cathedral Hall, under the patronage of Cardinal-elect Archbishop Farley of New York, by Rev. J. Corbett, S.J., Dr. Condé B. Pallen, Dr. J. J. Walsh and A. J. Shipman.

The work is opportune and well directed. The steady growth of Socialism has brought it beyond the stage of merely academic consideration. It has to be grappled with in practical fashion. The School of Social Studies is eminently practical, and deserves the earnest support, moral and financial, of all who are concerned in the conservation of Christian principles in the conduct of public and private life.

Among the many excellent results of the First National Conference of Catholic Charities, held in the Catholic University, Washington, D. C., in September, 1910, is the project of publishing a complete Directory of Catholic Charities in the United States. The need of such a book is evident. Hitherto local organizations have been working along their own lines, in absolute ignorance of the assistance they might have easily obtained, if they had been aware that efforts like their own were being made elsewhere. To complete such a Directory of course supposes the cooperation of all the local agencies of the various charities, and an appeal is made from the University for the requisite information.

Armour & Co. have started a pension fund for the benefit of 55,000 employees. The company has set aside $1,000,000 to begin with. The 55,000 employees will pay three per cent. of their salaries annually into the fund. Employees who have served the company for twenty years will receive an annual income of 40 per cent. of their salary at the time of retirement, the minimum age for which is fifty-seven.

ECONOMICS

The Alaskan gold fields are so well known to-day that they are often supposed to be the source of most of the gold extracted within the territory of the United States. On the other hand, California is no longer, in the popular imagination, the land of gold. The reason is that a poor man can no longer set up his rocker beside a stream and wash out a small fortune in a few weeks. Mining there involves capital now, and is carried on usually by companies. Nevertheless, California still gives more gold than any other State, more even than Alaska. The mines operated to-day number 1,049, of which 564 are placer mines, that is, mines in which gold is washed from the gravel, and 485 are deep mines, or mines in which gold is extracted from the quartz. Placer mining differs from the methods used in days of the Argonauts only in this, that it is now practised on a large scale by means of machinery, with every possible precaution against waste. Of the placer mines 168 are hydraulic, in which huge jets of water wash the earth and gravel from the hillsides into sluices; and 139 are drift mines, penetrating the old river gravels by means of tunnels called technically "drifts." There is still some old-style mining, and there is considerable profit in working over the richer claims of fifty and sixty years ago, when methods were so rude that much gold escaped.

The most interesting kind of placer mining is dredging, which was introduced a little more than twenty years ago. Such a machine as we see used to deepen our rivers and harbors digs up the river bed, turning the gravel into sluices, where it is washed from one reservoir to another, so that the lighter matter is carried away gradually, while the heavier gold is collected. But besides the existing river beds, the older beds, in which the river ran centuries ago, are also dredged, and from them the richest harvest is reaped. In 1889 dredging yielded only $206,000; last year it gave over $7,500,000, and its total yield from the beginning amounted to more than $40,000,000.

The deep quartz mines are of various richness. In Grass Valley the parent, so to speak, of such mining in California, where work has been going on continuously for more than half a century, some extraordinarily rich deposits were found two or three years ago. But improved appliances make possible now the working of lodes which formerly could not have been touched.

The value of the gold extracted in California averages, year by year, some 20 million dollars, and there is no reason to think that the supply is near exhaustion. H. W.

The value of manufactures passing out of the United States in the calendar year 1911 may exceed one billion dollars. This estimate is based upon figures of the Bureau of Statistics, Department of Commerce and Labor, covering the exports of manufactures in the 9 months ending with September, 1911, which amount to 478½ million dollars for finished manufactures and 240½ million for manufactures for further use in manufacturing, making the total exports of manufactures in the period named 719 million dollars, against 612 million in the like period of 1910. The increase in the 9 months of 1911 over the like period of 1910 is 17.48 per cent., and in case the increase during the remainder of the year continues at the same rate, the total value of manufactures passing to foreign countries during 1911 will be about 970 million dollars. When to this is added the value of manufactures going to Alaska, Porto Rico and Hawaii, not included in the exports to foreign countries, the total outward movement of manufactures from continental United States in 1911 will pass the billion dollar line. This will bring the total value of manufactures exported in 1911 to more than twice that of ten years ago, and more than five times that of 20 years ago, the exports of manufactures in 1901 having been 447½ million, and in 1891 about 185 million dollars.

Practically all the leading articles of domestic manufacture show increased exports when compared with the preceding year, many of them making new high records in the year now approaching its close. The gains in the four great classes of manufactures are typical of those made in other important classes of less magnitude in the export trade. A study of our exports as to countries of destination indicates a world-wide distribution of domestic manufactures, such industrial centres as the United Kingdom, Germany and Belgium sharing with agricultural and comparatively undeveloped sections, such as Canada, Argentina, Mexico and China, in their increasing purchases of American manufactures.

ECCLESIASTICAL NEWS

Father Louis Billot, the newly designated Jesuit Cardinal, though of parents native to the west of France, was by the accident of their temporary residence born at Mulhausen, in Alsace. He made his undergraduate studies at the Jesuit College at Bordeaux and his ecclesiastical studies in the diocesan seminary at Blois, where he was ordained. His first professorship was at the Catholic University of Angers, where he held the Chair of Ecclesiastical History. He shortly entered the novitiate of the Society of Jesus at Angers, and after reviewing his theology at Laval, began to teach theology in the Jesuit scholasticate of the Province of France in the Island of Jersey. Since 1885 he has held the chair of scholastic theology at the Gregorian University in Rome. During this time he published his lectures "De Verbo Incarnato," "De Deo Uno et Trino," "De Ecclesia" (three volumes), "De Sacramentis" (two volumes), "De Novissimis," "De Gratia," "De Virtutibus Infusis," "De Inspiratione Sacre Scripturæ" and "De Immutabilitate Traditionis," as well as a little work, "De Natura et Ratione Peccati Personalis." He has been an indefatigable student of St. Thomas and an ardent champion of the teachings of the Angelical Doctor. For some years back he has been one of the Consultors of the Holy Office. He is a tall, spare man, with a slight stoop from long bending over his desk at study; his hair is gray, his eyes bright and twinkling, his face most kindly in expression, and his conversation bright and vivacious. His pupils have always been enthusiastic over him as a lecturer of remarkable clearness, depth, interest and force. Scattered as they are over the four quarters of the earth, they will hail with joy the honors coming to their old professor at the close of his days of teaching. For himself, devoted all his days to study and the quiet of his room, it will come with something of a wrench to him to lend himself to the public work of service and social form requisite for his new dignity and station.

The Cardinals-elect are now on their way to Rome to attend the Consistories to be held on November 27 and 30. Archbishop O'Connell sailed from Boston, on November 11, for Naples, accompanied by Mgr. J. E. Millerick, Mgr. E. J. Moriarty, Mgr. M. J. Splaine, Rev. Dr. P. J. Supple and Rev. J. F. Coppinger. Archbishop Farley and Archbishop Falconio left this city on November 14. With Archbishop Farley were Mgr. John Edwards, V.G., Mgr. W. G. Murphy, Mgr. James V. Lewis, and the Archbishop's nephew, the Rev. John H. Farley, S.J., of Fordham University. Archbishop Falconio was accompanied by Mgr. Shahan, Rector of the Catholic University, Washington, D. C. It is notable that they will receive their red hats and the final insignia of their new rank on the great American civic holiday, November 30, Thanksgiving Day. Mgr. F. H. Wall, D.D., Rev. Luke J. Evers, Rev. Charles A. Cassidy, Rev. W. H. Stewart, Rev. John J. McNamee, Rev. James P. O'Brien and Rev. Francis P. Burke are also among those who accompany Archbishop Farley to Rome.

Georgetown University bade adieu to the Cardinal-elect, Mgr. Diomedes Falconio, Papal Delegate to the United States, at a reception and banquet on November 5. The diplomatic corps, judiciary and clergy were well represented. In the dining room of Ryan Hall, where the entire assemblage gathered, Mgr. Falconio was greeted with an address by George E. Hamilton, president of the Alumni Association, who paid a high tribute to the work accomplished by the newly elected Cardinal. This was followed by another address of welcome delivered by the Rev. John Conway, S.J., Dean of the Arts Department of Georgetown University. The guest list included Chief Justice White, United States Supreme Court; Associate Justice McKenna, Chief Justice Shepherd, District of Columbia Court of Appeals; Chief Justice Clabaugh, District of Columbia Supreme Court; District Commissioners Judson and Rudolph; Rt. Rev. T. J. Shahan, Rector of the Catholic University; Mgr. Bonaventure Cerretti, Chargé d'Affaires of the Apostolic Delegation, and many other prominent members of the local clergy.

The diplomatic corps was represented by Ambassador James Bryce, of Great Britain; Jonkherr J. Loudon, Minister of the Netherlands; Señor Don Ignacio Calderon, Bolivian Minister; Señor Don Joaquín Bernardo Calvo, the Costa Rican Minister; H. H. Bryn, Minister of Norway; Luang Sanpakitch, Chargé d'Affaires of the Siam Legation; Dr. Alberto Membreno, Minister of Honduras; Mirza Ali Kuli Khan, Chargé d'Affaires of the Persian Legation, and Yung Kwai, of the Chinese Legation.

Père Dandurand, O.M.I., the oldest priest in Canada, celebrated the seventieth anniversary of his ordination on September 12. The venerable priest, now in his ninety-third year, is still able to perform his duties as chaplain at the Hospice Taché of St. Boniface, Manitoba. Père Dandurand was born at Laprairie, near Montreal, March 23, 1819, and ordained by dispensation on September 12, 1841.

Circulars were distributed in all the Catholic churches in Washington, on Sunday, November 12, by the Aloysius Truth Society, denouncing the productions of the "Irish Plays," which were to be presented in that city during the week, as "a malignant travesty of Irish life and religion," and requesting that patronage be withheld from these vulgar, blasphemous and revolting misrepresentations of the Catholic peasantry of Ireland. Father McDonnell, S.J., President of Gonzaga College, denounced the plays from the altar, and many of the other clergy exposed their slanderous character and warned their people against giving them support. Rt. Rev. Mgr. Shahan, Rector of the Catholic University, condemned the plays and branded as a forgery an alleged telegram from him inviting the Players to appear before the University. A similar telegram purporting to come from Georgetown University was also declared a forgery by Professor Walsh, S.J., who, after careful reading, condemned the plays from the moral, religious and dramatic viewpoints, and exposed the persistent mendacity of their advertisers. The Ancient Order of Hibernians, and the United Irish Societies, in special meetings on Sunday, unanimously condemned the productions.

SCIENCE

Official figures place the world's production of quicksilver for the year 1910 at 3,747 short tons, of which the United States produced 773 tons. The usual quotation is in flasks representing 75 pounds each. The American yield, accordingly, represents 20,601 flasks. Of this amount California furnished 17,211 flasks. Italy and Spain led in this mineral production with 882 and 1,102 tons respectively.

The increase in the consumption of coal for the year 1910 establishes for the first time an output exceeding half a billion short tons, which includes the combined production of anthracite, bituminous and lignite. The value at the mines was $629,529,745. The above figures represent an increase over the year 1909 of nearly 9 per cent.

Professor Northrup, of Princeton University, has perfected a method which permits not only of a qualitative but also of a quantitative study of vortex rings. Colored rings of liquid are projected from an opening in the front of a metallic box by a blow from an electro-magnet and travel through a transparent liquid, which gradually decolorizes the projected liquid. With the box slightly tilted upwards, the emerging vortex rings are reflected on meeting the liquid surface, the angle of reflection being apparently equal to that of incidence. Refraction may be had by using liquids of different densities.

In a brochure entitled "Wind Velocity and Direction," compiled by Professor A. H. Palmer, of the Blue Hill Observatory, the following general principles are established: First, the general increase in velocity with height; Secondly, the rare occurrence of gusts of wind above low heights; Thirdly, the frequent clockwise and occasional counter-clockwise change of direction with height; Fourthly, the relative frequency of ascending currents as compared with those descending. These items have a very special significance in aeronautical matters.

Industrial chemists have been insistently advocating carbon tetrachloride, a thin, transparent, colorless, oily fluid, with a pungent, aromatic odor, as a substitute for carbon bisulphid for insect fumigation. They claim, by way of special recommendation, that its odor is far less disagreeable than that of carbon bisulphid. The United States Department of Agriculture, having investigated the matter thoroughly, renders the following report: The claims regarding the odor are sustained. As an insecticide, however, it is far less effective than carbon bisulphid, the amount required to destroy equal numbers of insects in a fixed time being far in excess. Besides, the market prices of tetrachloride and bisulphid vary as four to one.

Remarkable differences regarding the topography of the planet Mars are instanced by astronomers of the Pulkowo Observatory on photographs taken with red and green filters. The "continents" on the "red" photographs are very bright, much brighter indeed than the south polar cap, whereas the latter is the most intense feature on the "green" photos. The "seas" appear very dark on the "red" plates, but of a decided grayish tint on the "green." The "red" plates bring out the canals best, their color being quite close to that of the seas. From a theoretical consideration of these plates it is argued that the south polar cap of the planet exhibited during the month of August last the optical properties of ice, rather than of snow.

FRANCIS TONDORF, S.J.

OBITUARY

Mr. Martin I. J. Griffin, one of the most indefatigable writers among American Catholics, died peacefully, comforted by all the rites of the Church, at his home in Philadelphia, on November 10. He was born in Philadelphia, October 23, 1842, and educated at private, parochial and public schools. Beginning life as a book-keeper, he soon after turned his attention to journalism and became correspondent for the Catholic Mirror, of Baltimore; the Spectator, of Washington, and the New York Tablet. He also contributed articles to the Catholic Universe and the Catholic Herald, of Philadelphia. When the Catholic Standard was started he was chosen by its editor, the Rev. Dr. Keogh, as the city reporter. In 1867 he secured a part ownership in the Guardian Angel, a Sunday-school paper, and from 1870 until 1873 he was assistant editor of the Catholic Standard. In 1872 he was appointed Secretary of the Irish Catholic Benevolent Union, becoming the founder and editor of that Society's journal, which first appeared as the I. C. B. Journal, but was later known as Griffin's Journal. He organized a Youth's Catholic Total Abstinence Society, the first to be established in Philadelphia, which he represented at the formation of the Catholic Total Abstinence Union of America in Baltimore, February 22-23, 1872. Immediately after the formation of the national union he founded the Diocesan Union of Philadelphia. In 1882 he began the publication of a series of articles in his Journal on "Catholicity in Philadelphia." These articles led to the formation of the Catholic Historical Society of Philadelphia in 1884. In 1887 he undertook the publication of the "American Catholic Historical Researches," which he continued to edit until his death.

In addition to his multiplicity of labors as an organizer and a journalist Mr. Griffin published the following works: "History of Old St. Joseph's Church" (1881); "History of St. John's Church" (1882); "Thomas Fitz-Simons, Pennsylvania's Catholic Signer of the Constitution" (1887); "The Life of the Rt. Rev. Michael Egan, O.S.F., the first Bishop of Philadelphia" (1885); "The Trial of John Ury" (1899), and "Documents Relating to the History of the Catholic Church in the United States" (1888). Some other publications of Mr. Griffin are "Catholics and the American Revolution" (2 Vols., 1907), and "History of Commodore John Barry" (1903). The funeral services of Mr. Griffin took place on Tuesday, at the Church of Our Lady of Mercy. His son, the Rev. Martin I. Griffin, was the celebrant of the solemn high Mass of requiem.

Professor William C. Robinson, dean of the Law School of the Catholic University of America, was stricken with apoplexy on November 6, at his home in Washington, D. C., and died, almost immediately. Dr. Robinson, who was seventy-seven, was formerly dean of the Law Department of Yale University, and was lecturer and professor of law there for many years before organizing the Law School of the Catholic University in 1896. He was the only man to whom Yale ever unveiled a tablet while he was living. He held the degrees of A.B. and LL.D. from Dartmouth, and A.M. from Yale. Professor Robinson was Judge of the City Court of New Haven from 1869 to 1873, and Judge of the Court of Common Pleas for New Haven County from 1874 to 1876. He was also a noted writer of books on law. He was born in Norwich, Conn., July 26, 1834, and was graduated from Dartmouth in 1854, and studied for the Episcopalian ministry, in which denomination he was given a charge in Norwich. While preaching there he was attracted to investigate the claims of the Church, and soon became a Catholic.

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

PERVERTING ST. AUGUSTINE.

To the Editor of AMERICA:

You have given so many evidences of good will towards the deaf mutes, in the brilliant columns of AMERICA, that I feel encouraged to ask you to heed their protest against the outrage done them, and through them the Church and Christianity, in the new "Encyclopædia Britannica."

In the article entitled "The Deaf and Dumb" the statement appears that "St. Augustine erred amazingly when he declared that the deaf could have no faith, since 'faith comes by hearing only.'"

This is an appalling assertion, and I could not believe that the sage, the light of whose intellect has not failed in fifteen hundred years, could ever have been guilty of a blunder so egregious. I therefore took down the eleven ponderous tomes of the saint, and after a reasonable search found but one reference to the deaf and dumb, which indeed, so far from regarding them as desperately deficient, refers to their method of communication with praise. But to make assurance doubly sure, I wrote the author of the article, the Reverend Arnold Paine, M.A., of Oxford, asking for the passage.

After a month's delay given to search and enquiry, he answered in a frank and manly letter that he was unable to give the reference and, further, regretted that he had simply followed a similar statement given in a previous edition of the "Britannica" and the foolish comments of subsequent writers.

In order to appreciate the poison of this misinformation, and the widespread infection coming from a source professedly so pure and wholesome, it is well to note the baleful effects upon the "Encyclopædia's" gullible patrons. To take a few examples from many, Douglas Tilden, of California, a deaf mute sculptor of national fame, turns the calumny into this form in a daily newspaper:

"An ecclesiastical supreme court that is infallible in the sense that it is the last court of appeal in matters of faith, decided that deaf mutes were beyond the pale of salvation. . . . St. Augustine wrote that faith could come only through the ear."

F. T. Loyd, a writer in the New York Register, a deaf mute paper published at one of our State schools, presents the scandal in this dress:

"If Aristotle thought the deaf could not acquire knowledge, it was left for a Christian theologian, the great Augustine, the father of our Western theology, to declare that faith was impossible to those born deaf. Thus were they doubly doomed, being doomed to a life of darkness and ignorance here and denied the hope of happiness hereafter."

J. Schuyler Long, the deaf Principal of the Iowa State School, in a recent lecture before the teachers and pupils of the Mississippi State School, introduces the hoary libel in this guise:

"For a long time the Church denied that they could go to heaven because, being deaf, they could not be taught about God and understand the means of salvation."

The Rev. L. J. Addison, in his book on "Deaf Mutism," depicts the malignant error in these colors:

"Banned by the great Apostle of Catholicism, Augustine, on the ground that 'faith comes by hearing,' the deaf man . . . according to Pauline theology, must be eternally damned."

It would appear, then, that the origin of this scandalous assertion lies in a shallow interpretation, falsely attributed to St. Augustine, of a text from St. Paul. Now here is what St. Paul said:

"Faith then cometh by hearing; and hearing by the word of God. But I say: have they not heard? Yes, verily, their sound has gone forth into all the earth and their words unto the ends of the whole world." Rom., x, 17, 18.

And this is what St. Paul meant, according to the unquestioned interpretation of the commentators:

"Faith comes by hearing, and the hearing, from which springs faith, comes from the preaching of the word of God. But, I ask, is it from the want of hearing of the word of God that men have not embraced it? Certainly not. For as the heavens by their mute eloquence proclaim the perfections of God throughout the entire extent of creation, so has the voice of the Apostles and heralds of divine truth been heard all over the globe."

It is inconceivable that St. Augustine could have perverted this text in flat contradiction of the Apostle himself, as appears from the articles in the "Encyclopædia"—the comprehensive embodiment of accurate scholarship."

MICHAEL R. MCCARTHY, S.J.,

Pastor of the Deaf.

Xavier Ephpheta Society, 30 W. 16th St.,
New York, November 2.

Outfitters to Schools, Institutions and Hospitals for everything in CHINA, GLASSWARE, Cutlery, Cooking Utensils and Sundries used in the dining room and kitchen. A reminder of a few necessities carried in stock:

Pails
China
Trays
Scales
Brooms
Dusters
Baskets
Brushes
Sponges
Chamois

Matches
Crockery
Hampers
Fruit Jars
Glassware
Dust Pans
Stock Pots
Toilet Sets
Jardinieres
Stone Ware

Coffee Urns
Coffee Mills
Toilet Paper
Jelly Moulds
Earthenware
Woodenware
Meat Presses
Flower Vases
Meat Choppers
Carpet Sweepers

Umbrella Stands
Ice Cream Freezers
Mops and Wringers
Glass Candle Sticks
Ash and Garbage Cans
Silver and Plated Ware
Agate Cooking Utensils
Aluminum " "
Steel " "
Fire Proof Earthenware

Your inspection is invited, or our representative will call upon request

O'BEIRNE BROTHERS

317-319 WEST 42d STREET, NEW YORK CITY

Telephone 1177 Bryant One Block West from Broadway and Times Square Subway

CORRECT FORMS OF ILLUMINATED ADDRESSES of congratulation, etc., prepared for presentation to the newly elevated Cardinals, or other ecclesiastical occasions

Diplomas, Resolutions, Gift and Memorial Albums, Coats of Arms, Book Plates, Book Covers, Art Posters, Catalogues, etc.

A National Reputation for more than a third of a Century

Stained Glass Windows

Mayer & Co.

...of...

Munich, London and

47 Barclay Street New York

Memorial and other Windows

Statues and Stations of the Cross

Designs and Estimates Submitted

Specimens of our work may be seen in almost every City in the United States

Please write to Advertisers and mention AMERICA.

Byrne & McDonnell

Members of New York Stock Exchange

Stocks, Bonds and Investment Securities

60 BROADWAY, NEW YORK

Telephone 594 Rector

BYRNE BUILDING, NEWARK, N. J.

Telephone 1890 Market

Correspondence Invited

The Coward Shoe

"REG. U. S. PAT. OFF"

Lift the Weight
—ease the Strain

There is no known help for a weakened arch, except mechanical support, properly applied.

The COWARD ARCH SUPPORT SHOE gives a friendly lift to a sagging, or broken arch, relieving the strained ligaments, and gradually restoring the foot-structure to its normal strength and position.

Coward Arch Support Shoe and Coward Extension Heel have been made by James S. Coward, in his Custom Dept. for over 30 years.

SOLD NOWHERE ELSE

JAMES S. COWARD

264-274 Greenwich St., N. Y.

(NEAR WARREN STREET)

Mail Orders Filled | Send for Catalogue

INSTITUTION LINEN

of all kinds, also Sheets and Pillow Cases, Blankets, Bed Spreads, etc., etc.

WRITE for SAMPLES and PRICES

H. W. BAKER LINEN CO. Dept "K"
41 WORTH ST.
Importers and Manufacturers NEW YORK CITY

Sacred Heart Sanitarium

FOR REST, QUIET, RECUPERATION AND HEALTH

Unsurpassed results obtained in Nervousness, Rheumatism, Heart and Stomach troubles. No surgical, hospital nor insanity cases taken. A delightful, homelike, restful place—ideal for all run down conditions. Hydrotherapy, Electricity, Massage, Zander Gymnasium, Sun parlor; swimming pools, billiards, bowling, etc. Gaited saddle horses, large indoor riding pavilion; suspended running track connected by tunnel with bath department. 17-acre park. A staff of five physicians give their exclusive services to the patients.

WRITE SISTER SUPERIOR FOR BOOKLET X. MILWAUKEE, WIS.

PETER THEIS' SONS

636-644 First Avenue . . . New York City

ALL BRANCHES OF

ECCLESIASTICAL

Marble, Onyx, Stone Work and Statuary

TYPEWRITER RIBBONS AND CARBON PAPERS

Especially adapted for use in Colleges and Schools

Send for our Circular as to how we will save you 50 per cent. on supplies

SNELLING & SON 225 34th Street, South Brooklyn, N. Y.
Purveyors to U. S. Gov't

ENTERTAINMENT SUPPLIES

For Schools and Churches
PLAYS, DRILLS and SUPPLIES
suited for all occasions

Send for free Catalogue
ENTERTAINMENT SUPPLY CO.
3 West 29th Street, New York, N. Y.

ONLY 75 CENTS EACH, POSTPAID

Keep every number of AMERICA in a handsome ADJUSTABLE BINDER

THE AMERICA PRESS, 59 East 83rd Street, New York

For Entrances, Corridors or Floor-Spaces
Exposed to Hard Service, Dirt or Wet

Cary's Everlasting Flexible Steel Mats

None so Clean, Durable and Sanitary for Churches, Hotels, Apartment Houses, Banks, Stores, Restaurants and Public Buildings

Made of the Best Cold Rolled Steel. Rust Proof. Reversible, Self-Cleaning.

Made in rolls and eight regular sizes. Special sizes to order.

The United States Government uses and specifies for this mat in all their Buildings.

PATENTED IN THE UNITED STATES AND FOREIGN COUNTRIES.

Among the Churches which we have equipped with our mat are the CHURCH OF OUR LADY OF MERCY, FORDHAM, N. Y., with 270 square feet; ST. CECILIA'S CHURCH, NEW YORK, with nearly 400 square feet, and we have put over 900 square feet in ST. AUGUSTINE'S CHURCH and SCHOOL, BRIDGEPORT, CONN.

Circular upon request. CAN YOU AFFORD TO BE WITHOUT THESE? (Telephone Worth 1445)

CARY MANUFACTURING CO. - 19 to 23 Roosevelt St., New York

A SHOPPING GUIDE

TO

ABRAHAM & STRAUS

This store has a department organized for the purpose of supplying the convent, academy orphan asylum or school, hospital, etc., with serges, merinos, draps d'été, linens, etc., and clothing worn by children. The contract department, as it is called, also advises and estimates on carpets, furniture, shades, etc. A representative familiar with the requirements of religious communities will call, as soon as request is sent to Contract Department.

ABRAHAM & STRAUS

420 Fulton Street, Brooklyn, New York

FOR

TEACHERS AND PUPILS

One Hundred Best Catholic Books

CATHOLIC MIND No. 8

A useful little pamphlet for classes in English literature.

5 cts. each. $4.00 per hundred.

THE AMERICA PRESS 59 East 83d St. NEW YORK

Pioneer Priests OF North America

By Rev. T. J. CAMPBELL, S.J.

VOLUME I

Among the Iroquois

AN INTERESTING STORY OF THE MISSIONARIES AMONG THE IROQUOIS

183 Pages

27 Illustrations

Price $1.60 By Mail 20c extra

VOLUME II.

Among the Hurons

TELLS THE HEROIC STORY OF DE BRÉBEUF AND HIS ASSOCIATES.

480 Pages

24 Illustrations

Price $2.00 By Mail 20c extra

THE AMERICA PRESS 59 East 83d Street NEW YORK

WE OWN AND OFFER

$70,000 First Mortgage $500 Real Estate Serial Gold Notes

EXECUTED BY

The Sisters of the Humility of Mary. "Mother House."

(A Corporation of Ottumwa, Iowa)

Total Issue, $70,000

Our Appraisement of Properties, $202,500

Rate of Interest  $5\frac{1}{2}\%$  payable semi-annually

Interest Coupons payable April 1st and October 1st of each year at office of Mercantile Trust Company, Saint Louis, Mo., Trustee in Deed of Trust securing this issue of notes.

Principal Notes of $500 each, payable serially as follows:

Numbers	1 to	8, both inclusive, on	October 1, 1914.....	$ 4,000
"	9 to	18, " " " "	October 1, 1915.....	5,000
"	19 to	30, " " " "	October 1, 1916.....	6,000
"	31 to	50, " " " "	October 1, 1917.....	10,000
"	51 to	70, " " " "	October 1, 1918.....	10,000
"	71 to	90, " " " "	October 1, 1919.....	10,000
"	91 to	110, " " " "	October 1, 1920.....	10,000
"	111 to	140, " " " "	October 1, 1921.....	15,000

Total Loan (closed mortgage)..... $70,000

Security Appraised at $202,500

First: A first Deed of Trust on St. Joseph's Academy at Ottumwa, Iowa, comprising a lot of ground having a frontage of 214 feet on East Fourth Street by a depth of 198 feet to an alley, together with the improvements, consisting of a three-story stone and brick building occupied as the Mother House and Academy. An excellent piece of property in the business center of Ottumwa, just opposite the County Courthouse of Wapello County, a very creditable building. A conservative valuation of this property is $50,000.

Second: A first Deed of Trust on a beautiful tract of land containing 125 acres lying on the outskirts of the City of Ottumwa, conservatively valued at $20,000.

There is just being completed on this tract a modern fire-proof three-story and high-basement brick and stone Academy building, contract price for erection of which is $132,500, without any furnishings, making the total value of the security $202,500, or approximately three times the total loan.

In addition the notes are the obligation of the Mother House of the Order who conduct establishments in the Archdiocese of Dubuque and in the Diocese of Davenport and Great Falls.

Title to properties above described examined and certified to by J. J. Smith, attorney at Ottumwa, and also by our counsel, Judge R. L. Goode.

Notes may be redeemed by makers on October 1, 1913, or any interest date thereafter, by giving 30 days' advance notice and paying a premium of 2 per cent. in addition to principal and accrued interest.

Insurance required by Deed of Trust for protection of note holders, $72,000 fire and $36,000 tornado insurance.

Notes are payable to bearer, but may be registered free of charge in name of purchaser.

A safe and convenient investment of \$500 or multiples, netting purchasers  $5\frac{1}{2}\%$  per cent. for periods of from three to ten years.

Purchases by non-residents filled with the same dispatch as locally. Price, par and accrued interest.

REAL ESTATE
LOAN DEPARTMENT

Mercantile Trust Company

Eighth and Locust Streets
ST. LOUIS, MISSOURI

FESTUS J. WADE, President.

J. B. MOBERLY, Real Estate Loan Officer.

Capital and surplus Nine and One-half Million Dollars.

The Catholic Mind

Fortnightly (24 Numbers) $1.00 per year

LIST OF ARTICLES NOT OUT OF PRINT

—1903—

- No. 9. THE ATTITUDE OF MODERN PROTESTANTS TOWARDS THE VIRGINITY OF OUR BLESSED LADY. A. J. MAAS, S.J.
 Nos. 10, 11. GALILEO GALILEI LINCEO.
 No. 22. THE END JUSTIFIES THE MEANS. Rt. Rev. BISHOP LUDDEN, JOHN GERARD, S.J., S. M. BRANDI, S.J.

—1904—

- Nos. 2, 4. STATISTICS OF THE LEADING RELIGIOUS DENOMINATIONS. H. A. KROSE, S.J.
 No. 9. THE RELIGIOUS CRISIS IN FRANCE. A. DE MUN.
 No. 14. THE CONCORDAT OF 1901. D. M. O'CONNOR.
 No. 15. SUAREZ AND REGICIDE.
 Nos. 17, 18. THE VATICAN WHITE BOOK.
 No. 24. THE CATHOLIC PROTECTORATE OF FRANCE IN THE EAST AND IN THE FAR EAST.

—1905—

- No. 8. WHO STARTED THE SPY SYSTEM IN FRANCE?
 No. 19. PUBLIC CONTROVERSIES ON RELIGIOUS MATTERS. Etudes.

—1906—

- No. 1. THE FRENCH SEPARATION BILL. TEXT. J. G.
 No. 15. I. OBJECT OF FEDERATION. Rt. Rev. J. F. REGIS CANEVIN, D.D.
 II. DIVORCE. Hon. DANIEL I. KENEFICK.
 No. 17. HOLY COMMUNION IN THE EARLY CHURCH. EDWARD KING, in the Month.
 No. 18. THE FRENCH ASSOCIATIONS OF WORSHIP AND THEIR SUBSTITUTES.
 No. 24. THE DELUSION OF CHRISTIAN SCIENCE. T. J. CAMPBELL, S.J.

—1907—

- No. 1. LEGAL OPINIONS ON THE FRENCH SPOILIATION.
 No. 4. FERDINAND BRUNETIERE. PIERRE SUAG, S.J.
 No. 19. RECENT PAPAL DOCUMENTS.

—1908—

- No. 4. A PRIMARY CIVIC DUTY.
 No. 7. SCIENCE AND HER COUNTERFEIT. J. GERARD, S.J.
 No. 8. UNIVERSITY EDUCATION IN IRELAND.
 No. 9. PLAIN WORDS ON SOCIALISM. I. C. S. DEVAS, M.A.
 No. 11. CATHOLICS AND THE SOCIAL MOVEMENT. Rt. Rev. MGR. PARKINSON, D.D.
 No. 12. THE MAKING OF A SAINT.
 No. 13. MR. BIRRELL'S UNIVERSITY BILL.
 No. 14. STATUS AND PROPERTY RIGHTS OF THE ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH.
 No. 15. APOSTOLIC CONSTITUTION ON THE ROMAN CURIA.
 No. 16. THE ROMAN COURTS.
 No. 17. THE CHURCH THE STRONG SAFEGUARD OF THE REPUBLIC. Most Rev. Wm. H. O'CONNELL, D.D.

- No. 19. THE GENIUS OF CARDINAL WISEMAN. WILFRID WARD.
 No. 20. THE MASS AND THE REFORMATION. J. CANON MOYES.
 No. 22. REVISING THE VULGATE. F. A. GASQUET, Abbot, O.S.B.

—1909—

- No. 1. LORD KELVIN AND THE EXISTENCE OF GOD. H. V. GILL, S.J.
 No. 2. PRIMARY EDUCATION IN FRANCE. J. E. N.
 No. 3. PSYCHOTHERAPY. JAMES J. WALSH, M.D., LL.D.
 No. 8. DARWINISM FIFTY YEARS AFTER. G. BONETTI, S.J.
 No. 9. CATHOLIC FEDERATION OF LONDON. Hon. CHARLES RUSSELL.
 No. 10. THE SALFORD DIOCESAN CATHOLIC FEDERATION. The Month, May, '09.
 Nos. 11, 12, 13, 14. CALVIN'S CONVERSION. I, II, III, IV. PAUL BERNARD, in Etudes.
 Nos. 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20. 'CATHOLIC UNIVERSITIES. I, II, III, IV, V, VI. ALFRED BAUBRILLART.
 No. 21. SOCIALISTS AND CATHOLICS. ETIENNE LAMY.
 No. 24. SERMON ON CARDINAL NEWMAN. JOSEPH RICKABY, S.J.

—1910—

- No. 1. THE FRENCH BISHOPS AND THE EDUCATION PROBLEM. CHAMBRUN.
 No. 2. ETERNAL PUNISHMENT. GEORGE R. ROCHE, S.J.
 No. 3. THE SONS OF ST. FRANCIS. HERBERT THURSTON, S.J.
 Nos. 4, 5, 6, 7, 8. CATHOLIC MISSIONS. I, II, III, IV, V. HILARIÓN GIL.
 Nos. 11, 12, 13. CALLISTUS III AND HALLEY'S COMET. I, II, III.
 Nos. 14, 15. ST. CHARLES BORROMEO ENCYCLICAL.
 No. 16. THE PASTOR AND EDUCATION.
 No. 17. HOLY COMMUNION FOR CHILDREN.
 No. 18. THE XXI EUCHARISTIC CONGRESS. E. SPILLANE, S.J.
 No. 19. THE HOLY EUCHARIST IN EARLY CANADA. T. J. CAMPBELL, S.J.
 Nos. 20, 21. PIUS X ON RECENT MANIFESTATIONS OF MODERNISM.
 No. 22. REMOVAL OF PARISH PRIESTS.
 No. 24. MAYOR NATHAN'S INSULT TO THE POPE.

—1911—

- No. 2. THE PORTUGUESE REVOLUTION.
 No. 3. SOME CAUSES OF THE PORTUGUESE REVOLUTION.
 Nos. 4, 5. SPAIN AS SHE IS. Catholic Herald of India.
 No. 6. SOCIALISM IN THE SCHOOLS. Hon. BIRD S. COLER.
 No. 7. CONDEMNATION OF MODERNISM. Rt. Rev. B. J. KEILEY.
 No. 8. ONE HUNDRED BEST CATHOLIC BOOKS.
 Nos. 9, 10. THE CHILD IN THE HOME AND THE SCHOOL. Rt. Rev. Dr. CLEARY.
 Nos. 11, 12. CARDINAL GIBBONS' JUBILEE.
 Nos. 13, 14. PROTESTS OF PIUS X AND BISHOPS OF PORTUGAL.
 No. 15. THE TRUTH ABOUT THE "ENCYCLOPÆDIA BRITANNICA." T. J. CAMPBELL, S.J.
 No. 16. THE CATHOLIC PRESS. E. SPILLANE, S.J.
 No. 17. ENGLISH ECONOMISTS AND CATHOLIC ETHICS. Rev. MICHAEL MAHER, S.J.
 No. 18. CATHOLICISM AT HOME AND ABROAD.
 No. 19. THE EARLY CHURCH AND COMMUNION. JOHN RICKABY, S.J.
 Nos. 20, 21. SCOTLAND IN PENAL DAYS. Rt. Rev. ABBOT GASQUET, O.S.B.

Single numbers 5 cents each, $4.00 per hundred
 Double numbers 10 " " 7.00 " "

Copies of THE CATHOLIC MIND not included in this list will be accepted in exchange for any of the above

THE AMERICA PRESS, 59 East 83d Street, New York City

TOUR OF EUROPE

For the Summer of 1912
A PRIVATE PARTY VISITING
IRELAND, ENGLAND, FRANCE, BELGIUM, HOLLAND,
GERMANY, SWITZERLAND AND ITALY
Arrangements have been made for
an Audience with the Holy Father
Itinerary sent on application . . . Address all communications to
MISS AGNES J. KELLY
3828 Spring Garden Street, West Philadelphia, Pa.

Sarony
Photographer
256 Fifth Ave., New York
Favorably known to the Clergy and Laity for many years

SURBRUG'S ARCADIA MIXTURE

In each pound there are three to four hundred pipe fulls—it costs $2.00 per pound—three-quarters of a cent a pipe.

If you smoke five pipes a day it's less than four cents—five hours of pleasure for four cents—certainly ARCADIA is cheap enough for you to smoke.

THE SURBRUG COMPANY
New York

DENTISTRY

Loose teeth tightened by a new process; teeth without plates. Extracting avoided. High-class and up-to-date dentistry in all branches at reasonable prices.

DRS. BURKE & BURKE
DENTISTS

1947 BROADWAY AND 65TH ST
66th St. Subway, L station and all surface cars.

TRY IT YOURSELF FOR 10 DAYS WITHOUT DEPOSIT

If not satisfactory, return it and no questions asked. DAUS IMPROVED TIP TOP DUPLICATOR with "Dausco" Oiled Linen Back negative roll, is the result of 25 years' experience and is used and endorsed by thousands of business houses and individuals. 100 copies from pen-written and 50 copies from type-written original—Clear, Clean, Perfect. Complete Duplicator, Cap size (prints 3-3 1/2 inches), price $5.00
Felix G. Daus Duplicator Co., Daus Building, 111 John St., New York

ALTAR WINES

From the Jesuit Fathers
Novitiate Vineyards at
LOS GATOS, CAL.

"MALVOISIE," a light dry wine
perfectly matured.

$1.00 per Gal. $4.00 per Doz.

"NOVITIATE," a generous wine,
somewhat sweet—will keep in wood.
$1.50 per Gal. $5.25 per Doz.

P. A. MAHONY Depot and Sole Agency
BARNSTON TEA CO.
Treas. 6 Barclay St., New York

BOUND VOLUMES OF AMERICA

A CATHOLIC REVIEW
OF THE WEEK
SIX MONTHS TO A VOLUME
$3.50

The AMERICA Press, 59 East 83d Street, New York

Among the Algonquins

Vol. III of PIONEER PRIESTS of NORTH AMERICA

By REV. THOMAS J. CAMPBELL, S.J.

The ethnic group that figured more extensively in our history than any other Indian family

336 Pages

Price, $2.00 By Mail
20c extra

32 Illustrations

The AMERICA PRESS, 59 East 83d Street, New York, N. Y.

The CATHEDRAL LIBRARY ASSOCIATION

Publishers and Booksellers

24-26 East 21st Street, New York

THE LIFE OF CHRIST. By MGR. E. LE CAMUS. Translated from the sixth French edition by REV. WM. A. HICKEY. 3 Vols. for $5.25; express or post, $5.65. "A book altogether superior. . . . Satisfies the thoughtful student as no kindred work can do."—American Ecclesiastical Review. "In harmony with the most recent results of critical scholarship."—Catholic Book Notes (London).

THE HOUSE OF GOD, and other Addresses and Studies. By RIGHT REV. THOMAS J. SHAHAN, D.D., Rector of the Catholic University of America. 428pp. Postpaid, $1.50. "A pleasing variety of subject matter treated with freshness and insight, and conveying a good deal of solid information."—The Month (London).

INTROIBO (second edition). By REV. CORNELIUS CLIFFORD. pp. xviii-304. Postpaid, $1.50. "It is long since we have read a devotional book so admirable for content and temper. In form and style it leaves little to be desired."—Catholic University Bulletin.

THE BURDEN OF THE TIME. By REV. CORNELIUS CLIFFORD. 430pp. Postpaid, $1.50. "Written with much ability and literary skill. The discussions entered on are all brought to bear upon the burning and actual questions of our time."—The Tablet (London).

JUVENILE

GIRLHOOD OF OUR LADY. By Miss MARION J. BRUNOWE. Illustrated. 92pp. Postpaid, $1.00. "Topological description and Oriental customs give a tinge of reality to the devout imaginings of the traditions."—Catholic University Bulletin.

THE STORY OF OUR LORD'S LIFE TOLD FOR CHILDREN. By a CAR-MELITE NUN. Illustrated. pp. xii-173. Price, $1.00; post, $1.09. "No book that has been brought to our attention can compare with this Life of Our Lord for children."—America. "One cannot overpraise the wording of these sweet stories."—Ave Maria.

A GIFT TO

Your Friend or For the Home

Get a copy of the new

AMERICAN MADONNA

Beautiful Sepia 11x13 inches on best paper

Endorsed by Archbishop, now Cardinal O'Connell and many others

PREPAID FOR $1.00

Address E. PRATT SHAW
Room 5, 56 Westland Ave., Boston, Mass.

MENEELY BELL CO

TROY, N.Y. AND
177 BROADWAY, N.Y. CITY

BELLS

PRINTING OF EVERY DESCRIPTION FOR Churches and Schools

Periodical Publications
Catalogues Programs
Stationery Etc., etc.

THE MEANY PRINTING CO.

6th Avenue, Cor. 11th St., NEW YORK

DIRECTORY OF COLLEGES AND ACADEMIES

Georgetown University WASHINGTON, D. C.

Directory for Catalogues or Information

The College (Graduates and Undergraduates)
Schools
The Registrar, 37th & O Sts., N. W.

The School of Medicine
The Dean, 920 H St., N. W.

The Training School for Nurses
Georgetown University Hospital

The School of Dentistry
The Dean, 920 H St., N. W.

The School of Law
The Dean, 506 E. St., N. W.

The Astronomical Observatory
The Director, Georgetown University

Rev. Joseph Himmel, S.J., President

College of St. Catherine, St. Paul, Minn.
A Catholic College for Girls.
Accredited by the Minnesota State Board of Public Instruction and by several prominent Universities.

Seventy Acre Campus. Fireproof Buildings.
COMPLETE COURSES IN THESE DEPARTMENTS.
THE COLLEGIATE, leading to the degree of Bachelor of Arts. THE ACADEMIC or COLLEGE PREPARATORY. MUSIC and PAINTING in their various branches. DOMESTIC ART, HOUSEHOLD SCIENCE and COOKING. Year Book Forwarded on Application.
Address: THE SECRETARY.

MT. ST. JOSEPH ON THE WISSAHICKON

For illustrated catalogue address MOTHER

Academy of St. Joseph In-the-Pines

BRENTWOOD, N. Y.
A Boarding School for Young Ladies,
Affiliated with the State University
PROSPECTUS EXPLAINS THE TERMS, ETC.

HOLY CROSS COLLEGE WORCESTER MASS.

Conducted by the Jesuit Fathers.
Largest Catholic College in America

Extensive grounds and exceedingly healthy location. New buildings, large gymnasium, indoor running track, hot and cold baths, modern conveniences. Easily reached on main line from Albany or New York to Boston via Springfield. Board, tuition, washing and mending, use of gymnasium, library and reading room, physical instruction and medical attendance, $260 a year. Furnished room and attendance extra. Send for catalogue to
PREFECT OF STUDIES.

CATHOLIC COLLEGE FOR WOMEN
situated in the romantic Valley of the Wissahickon. Degrees conferred. Also Academic, Commercial, Intermediate and Elementary Departments. Very special advantages in Music and Art. The piano student possesses superior opportunities in the use of the Virgil Clavier Method pursued throughout the course. The Art Studio is admirably equipped, and every attention is given to the study of Art, both in theory and practice. Gymnasium perfectly equipped. Outdoor exercise, tennis, basket ball, fencing, etc.
SUPERIOR, Chestnut Hill, Philadelphia, Pa.

St. Joseph College Bardstown, Ky.

CONDUCTED BY XAVIERIAN BROTHERS
Preparatory, Academic, Commercial and Collegiate Courses.
A Catholic home-like institution for boys and young men. Send for prospectus.

Seton Hall College

FOUNDED 1856
South Orange, New Jersey

COLLEGE AND HIGH SCHOOL

Bayley Hall for Students
of Grammar Course

FOR CATALOGUE ADDRESS
Very Rev. James F. Mooney, D.D., Pres.

The Catholic Mind

The Truth About "The Encyclopaedia Britannica"

BY REV. T. J. CAMPBELL, S.J.

Single numbers 5 cents each, $4.00 per hundred

THE AMERICA PRESS, 59 East 83d Street, New York City

DIRECTORY OF COLLEGES AND ACADEMIES

Georgetown Visitation Convent

A boarding and day School for
Young Ladies and Little Girls
Delightfully Situated on Georgetown Heights
WASHINGTON, D. C.

Founded in 1799 Address Sister Directress

Convent of the Holy Child

SHARON HILL, DELAWARE COUNTY PA.
15 Minutes from Philadelphia

ACADEMY FOR YOUNG LADIES
Highest English Course. French, Drawing, Music by Certified Teachers. Preparation for foreign travel. As the numbers are limited, special care can be given to the formation of character and training of each child.
Address Mother Superior

HELEN AUGUSTA HAYES

VOCAL INSTRUCTOR

64 East 34th Street
NEW YORK CITY

CARLTON ACADEMY

Summit, New Jersey

A Select Catholic School that has adopted Harvard's new plan of presenting each boy's record in four years' study to better judge of his fitness for college work.

Charles H. Schultz, A.M., Headmaster.

Founded 1830

Chartered 1836

SPRING HILL COLLEGE

Spring Hill, Mobile Co., Ala.

Climate—Most Agreeable.

Conveniences—Most Modern.

Curriculum—Most Thorough

Write for Catalogue to

F. X. Twellmeyer, S. J., President.

College & Academy of the Incarnate Word

ALAMO HEIGHTS, SAN ANTONIO TEXAS

For the Higher Education of Young Ladies

Conducted by the Sisters of Charity of the Incarnate Word

COLLEGE—Four years' course, degrees B.A. & B.L.
ACADEMY—Three years' High School course.
COMMERCIAL—Three years' course.
PREPARATORY DEPT.—Eight years, equivalent to primary schools.

Studios of Music and other Fine Arts

Ideal location for students whose health demands climatic advantages. Building new and thoroughly equipped. Steam heating. Electric light.

For illustrated catalog address, SUPERIORESS.

St. Mary's College

St. Marys, Kansas

BOARDING COLLEGE
Under the Jesuit Fathers

Two Courses of Study:
Classical and Commercial

For Catalogue, send to
REV. ALOYSIUS A. BREEN, S.J., President

For advertising rates, address "MANAGER"
AMERICA, a Catholic Review of the Week
59 East 83d Street, New York City

Boarding & Day School HOLY ANGELS FORT LEE New Jersey

Conducted by School Sisters of Notre Dame

Location beautiful, healthy and convenient.
New Buildings, large gymnasium.

DEPARTMENTS: Academic, course of four years; Commercial, course of two years. Grammar and Primary Departments separate. Special advantages in Music and Art.

FOR YEAR BOOK ADDRESS SECRETARY

St. Mary's College & Academy

MONROE, MICHIGAN

FOR YOUNG WOMEN AND GIRLS

CONDUCTED by the Sisters of the Immaculate Heart. Beautifully located between Detroit and Toledo. A high standard maintained for sixty-five years in Culture, Education and Disciplines. Courses include Collegiate, Academic and Preparatory. Special attention given to Music, Art, Expression and Domestic Science University affiliation. Separate department for little girls.

For illustrated prospectus apply to Mother Superior

The Only True American School System

Rev. THOMAS J. CAMPBELL, S.J.

PAMPHLET 24 PAGES

5 Cents per Copy. $2.50 Per Hundred

THE AMERICA PRESS 59 East 83d Street
NEW YORK

IMMACULATA SEMINARY

Mount Marian, Washington, D. C.

Select School for Girls. Situated in the Suburbs

Classical, Literary and Special Courses.

Two-Year Course for High School Graduates.

Music and Art. Abundant outdoor exercise.

Sightseeing with experienced Chaperons.

For Year Book address, Sister Secretary

ST. MARY-OF-THE-WOODS COLLEGE

For Young Women. 71st Year
4 Years. Degrees, B.A., B.S., Ph.B.

Academic—College Preparatory—and Grammar Departments. Elective Courses. Conservatory of Music, Vocal and Instrumental. Art Studios. Natatorium, Gymnasium, Bowling, etc. Out-of-Door Sports, Horse-back Riding, Boating, Archery, Tennis. For Bulletins, Address, Sister Secretary, Box 70, St. Mary-of-the-Woods, Vigo County, Indiana.

MARY ALOYSIA HARDEY

RELIGIOUS OF THE SACRED HEART

1809-1886

WITH AN INTRODUCTION BY THE REV. THOMAS J. CAMPBELL, S.J.

440 Pages 16 Illustrations With Index

THE LIFE STORY OF A REMARKABLE WOMAN

A book sure to do good and sure to give pleasure.—The Ave Maria.

It is worthy tribute to a great soul.—The Irish Monthly.

We congratulate its author and the AMERICA PRESS in giving us such a valuable work dealing with the life and labors of this eminent and noble religious.—New World, Chicago.

To miss reading this book is to miss a great blessing.—The Pilot, Boston.

Teachers especially will find the life abounding in valuable suggestions.—The Republic, Boston.

A book of special religious interest.—New York World.

An edifying and intensely interesting life.—Catholic Times, Liverpool.

PRICE TWO DOLLARS

By Mail 20 cents extra

THE AMERICA PRESS 59 EAST 83d STREET
NEW YORK CITY

Sanctuary Lamp

IN

Statuary Bronze

FOR

CHURCH OF THE HOLY TRINITY

West 82d Street, New York

JOSEPH H. McGUIRE, Architect

Made for the

REV. MICHAEL J. CONSIDINE

By

The Gorham Company

Fifth Avenue & Thirty-sixth Street

NEW YORK

Presentation of the Scapular of Mt. Carmel to St. Simon Stock. Panel for tympanum of Mt. Carmel Church, Springfield, Mass., size, 6 ft. 6 in. by 3 ft. 3 in.

JOSEPH SIBBEL STUDIO

Ecclesiastical Sculpture : : : 214 East 26th Street, New York

STATUES, STATIONS OF THE CROSS AND FRAMES, GROUPS, ALTO-RELIEVOS, ALTARS, SHRINES, BAPTISMAL FONTS, MEMORIAL TABLETS, ETC.

CABLE ADDRESS: "SIBBEL"

CORRESPONDENCE INVITED

ESTABLISHED 1881

AMERICA

A CATHOLIC REVIEW OF THE WEEK

Vol. VI, No. 7

(Price 10 Cents)

NOVEMBER 25, 1911

($3.00 a year)

Whole No. 137

CHRONICLE

The Government and the Trusts—What Mr. Roosevelt Proposes—Comments on the Article—Packers Gain a Delay—Maryland Boundary Dispute—Mexico—China—Canada—Great Britain—Ireland—France—Tripoli—Portugal—Persia—Germany—Earthquake in Germany—Austria.....145-148

QUESTIONS OF THE DAY

What is the Aim of Socialism—Lady Herbert of Lea—Theosophy in India—"Magnalia Naturæ"—"The Common Cause".....149-154

CORRESPONDENCE

The Y. M. C. A. in the Philippines—The Holy See and the Turkish War—Portuguese Monarchists and Republicans—Confiscation of Convents in Brazil—Religion and Business..154-157

EDITORIAL

President's Thanksgiving Day Proclamation—Thanksgiving Day—Bon Voyage—Plays That

May Not be Patronized—Porto Rico's New Institute—Heresy Hunting—Notes.....159-161

THE HIGHER LIFE.....161-162

LITERATURE

France and the French—De Actibus Humanis. De Formanda Conscientia—St. John Capistran—St. Pius V—The Monkeyfolk of South Africa—The Reason of Life—Everyman's Religion—Narratives of Early Maryland—The Life of James Cardinal Gibbons—The Lives and Times of the Popes—Notes—Books Received....162-164

EDUCATION

Success of the Courses at St. Joseph's College, Trichinopoly, India.....165

SOCIOLOGY

Sentimentalism in Opposition to the Proper Punishment of Criminals.....165-166

PERSONAL

David I. Walsh.....166

ECCLESIASTICAL NEWS

The Coming Consistory—Changes in the Membership of the Sacred College—Personal Notes of Some of the New Cardinals—New Ecclesiastical Provinces in England—Generous Gift to the Catholic University.....166-167

MUSIC

A Fruitful year for the Cause of Sacred Music—Plea for a Congress of Church Music in the United States.....167-168

SCIENCE

Effects of Creosote on Wood—Alloys for Hardening Platinum—The Continuity of Matter—Action of the Air on Coal.....168

OBITUARY

Right Rev. Mgr. Charles J. Kelly—Rev. John Connolly, S.J.....168

CHRONICLE

The Government and the Trusts.—The week in politics has been considerably enlivened by a long editorial from Colonel Roosevelt, "contributing editor" of the Outlook. The former President declares that the present administration at Washington in its dealings with and treatment of business has brought about a chaotic condition of affairs, both as regards the business world and the policy of the government. Mr. Roosevelt writes at length in defense of the Steel trust and his dealings with it, and he denounces as false that part of the government's petition in its suit against the corporation in which it is set forth that he was misled by Messrs. Frick and Gary in that memorable conference which brought about the absorption of the Tennessee Coal and Iron Company by the giant concern. The editorial is a demand for a government policy diametrically opposed to that which has been enunciated by President Taft and his Attorney-General, George W. Wickersham. The attitude of the Department at Washington is assailed, and the assertion of President Taft that the Sherman law needs no revision is contradicted. The result of the government suit against the Tobacco trust is denounced as a miscarriage of justice. The Colonel asserts that in the case of this corporation and also in the case of the Standard Oil, there is need for far more drastic action.

an appropriate government body, exercise control over all industrial organizations engaged in interstate commerce. This control should be exercised, not by the courts, but by an administrative bureau, such as the Bureau of Corporations or the Interstate Commerce Commission; for the courts cannot with advantage permanently perform executive and administrative functions."

Comments on the Article.—By the friends of the former President the Outlook editorial is hailed as the announcement of his candidacy for the Republican Presidential nomination. It is viewed by some as a declaration of war against President Taft. By everybody in politics and Wall street, says the New York World, it is regarded as unmistakable evidence that the Colonel has emerged from retirement and is ready to take a hand in the national political game soon to open. The New York Herald remarks: "We strongly incline to the opinion that this deliverance is not politics, nor humor, nor heroics, but really flapdoodle." The Tribune, as if loath to find in Mr. Roosevelt an enemy of the administration, declares that Mr. Roosevelt's discussion of this complex subject should prove helpful to President Taft in his efforts to induce Congress no longer to delay the legislation providing for some form of Federal incorporation which he urged a year ago, and which has been ably advocated by various members of his administration. "In business circles," says the Evening Post "the editorial has brought about, for a time at least, a wonderful change of atmosphere with regard to the Colonel. At Atlantic City, on November 18, the American Manufacturers Association, representing two and a half billion of capital, warmly endorsed his policy."

Packers Gain a Delay.—Counsel to the nine Chicago packers indicted under the Sherman anti-trust act succeeded on Saturday, November 18, in getting a delay until Wednesday of this week in the criminal trial, which was scheduled to begin on Monday in the United States District Court. This will postpone the trial long enough to permit the indicted men to appeal to the United States Supreme Court. James Sheean, of special counsel to the government, objected sharply to this delay. "It has taken eight years to get a plea of 'not guilty' from these defendants," said Mr. Sheean to the court, "and now six months after the 'not guilty' plea has been entered, the trial has not been begun, and these defendants have not faced a jury." From Washington it is reported that the Department of Justice will oppose the effort of the Chicago meat packers to obtain a stay of proceedings in their trial through an appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States.

Maryland Boundary Dispute.—The commission appointed by the Supreme Court of the United States at Washington, in 1910, to settle the long-drawn-out controversy over the boundary between Maryland and West Virginia has completed its work and submitted its report to that tribunal for final action. The report of the commission is said to favor West Virginia on nearly every point, and should the Supreme Court approve of it, many who have been voting and paying taxes in Maryland will become citizens of West Virginia. The controversy has been waged for over 200 years, and involves about 36 square miles of land and the citizenship of several thousand persons. The question, "What are the headwaters of the Potomac river?" is at the bottom of the trouble.

Mexico.—Deputy Moheno, of Tabasco, delivered in the Federal Congress a very heated speech in favor of his proposed law to withhold from political parties all official recognition unless they are absolutely non-religious. This is an attempt to strangle the National Catholic party.—A widespread plot in favor of Reyes has been unearthed and orders for the arrest of upwards of a hundred persons have been issued. Some of them, it is known, are already safe on the American side of the Rio Grande.—Three men, said to be manufacturing dynamite bombs for criminal purposes, were seized in the capital and conveyed to the penitentiary for safe keeping. Two have admitted that their intention was to blow up the private residences of three members of the Government.—British residents in and near Torreon have obtained through the representatives of their Government permission to arm themselves for self-protection. A general strike has been declared there, and it is feared that the lawless element may take occasion to commit serious depredations.—General Reyes was arrested in Texas for alleged violation of the neutrality laws.

China.—Yuan Shi Kai, "the strong man" of the country, whom the dynasty was forced to make prime minister, seemed loath for some time to go to Peking, until assured that the premier would have a fixed term of office, rather than be removable at the will of the National Assembly. But dispatches dated November 15 brought the satisfactory news that Yuan had at last entered the capital and assumed control of the government. If Yuan Shi Kai becomes president of a Chinese republic Gen. Li Yuen Heng, the rebel chief, is said to be ready to obey his orders, but will not recognize him as the Manchus' premier. The new minister is to have a free hand as long as he is in office. The cabinet he has formed has in it several Manchus, but is without nobles. How well its members will work together remains to be seen. Yuan Shi Kai hopes to win back to the throne, it is said, the fourteen revolted provinces, as but four have remained true to the dynasty. There has been some fighting at Nanking, where the Manchus are still in control, though they are surrounded by a growing army of revolutionists, and a big battle seems to be imminent. Thousands of Chinese were driven from the city and many were massacred. At Amoy the rebels quietly took possession of the city, on the flight of the imperial governor. A regiment of American troops is in readiness to sail from Manila to protect American interests in China.

Canada.—The language question seems likely to play a considerable part in the Ontario Provincial elections. The Liberal leader, Mr. Rowell, appears to be waiting for the Provincial Government to commit itself definitely to the maintenance of the present bi-lingual schools in order to attack them. The Provincial Government is avoiding the issue; but the Federal Government is determined to support the French in their rights, for the Montreal Star speaks very emphatically on the subject. It says that in Canada there are two official languages, and that one who is to succeed in business or in professions, or anything else, should have them both. The French are anxious to learn English, and it is a pity that the English are not as anxious to learn French. It warns the Ontario politicians that no party ever yet obtained success by attacking the altars and the language of the French, not even in the Province of Ontario.—Mr. Cahan, a leading Conservative, said in a speech that contributions to the imperial navy could be given only if Canada should be allowed a proportionate voice in the government of the empire. The Devoir finds this satisfactory from an academic point of view, but insists on the plebiscite on the question, maintaining that on so important a matter the people must be consulted formally. As a point of fact, Mr. Cahan's position is that of every Imperialist, even of Lord Grey, though it has not always been stated so definitely.—Parliament was opened on the 16th inst. The speech from the throne did not mention the naval question.—The Winnipeg clearing house is admitting contracts for grain of a lower grade than it has ever recognized.—Sabbatarians are much troubled over Sunday threshing of wheat. The police have very wisely contented themselves with noting those who violate the law which they have not attempted to enforce. Winter has come down, as we anticipated, on a large amount of unthreshed grain lying in the fields.—The chief office of the Union Bank of Canada is to be transferred from Quebec to Winnipeg. The bank has 224 branches, of which 148 are in Manitoba and the West.

Great Britain.—The King and Queen are on their way to India. It is hoped that the appearance of the King-Emperor among his subjects and feudatories may stir up loyalty and banish discontent. How likely it is that the hope will be fulfilled appears from a communication of Dadabhai Naoroji, and Indian leader, to the Times. He reminds the British public of the pledges of Queen Victoria, King Edward and the present sovereign to procure the welfare of India, and he calls upon the King-Emperor to signalize his visit to India by giving free compulsory education and responsible parliamentary government.—The Unionists have gained the Liberal seat of Oldham in a by-election. The reason was the presence of a labor candidate, who got 7,448 votes. The Liberal vote was 10,023 and the Unionist 12,255. In the municipal elections the Unionist gains were 37, the Liberal gains 51 and the Labor and Socialist 56.—Another case of pneumonic plague has been found in the infected district of Suffolk, where cases have occurred during the past five years. It is supposed to have been contracted from a dead rabbit which the patient handled. The authorities complain that the giving of a bounty on rats is more likely to spread the disease than to extirpate it, as the people cannot be induced to abandon the practice of carrying the dead animals in their pockets to the inspectors.—The Thames Iron, Shipbuilding and Engineering Company of London has gone into bankruptcy. Increase of wages is assigned as the cause. It is an old-established concern, and has just finished the battleship Thunderer.—The coal miners have voted to postpone the ballot for a universal strike in order to give their employers a chance to practise conciliation.—The London and Northwestern Railway has granted increases of pay that will amount to £80,000 a year. The men are not satisfied.

Ireland.—The amendments proposed by the Government to the Insurance Bill in relation to Ireland have been published. There will be a separate Irish Insurance Fund and separate Irish Commissioners, but these will be appointed by and subject to the British Treasury. Migratory laborers and certain classes of homeworkers are exempted. The membership limit of 5,000 in approved societies and the medical benefit provisions have been deleted. Employers and employed pay about 20 per cent. less than the English rates. Below a certain wage the employed rate of contribution gradually diminishes, and when the wage is less than forty cents per day the employer and the State assume the burden. It is presumed that provision will be made in the Home Rule Bill to have the Commissioners subject to Irish authority.—Mr. Redmond, who has been making a series of effective speeches in England, said the questions to be immediately handled by the Irish Parliament were, first, the railways, which for 3,000 miles had now 261 directors. Their prohibitive freight schedules and other crudities must be revolutionized in order to create a genuine industrial revival. Primary and secondary education, the poor laws, and arterial drainage were also among the matters that demanded immediate attention. There was no religious question. Those who raised it had been enjoying special privileges, and their fear was not of persecution but of equality. He had repeatedly challenged his opponents to produce one case where Irish Catholics had boycotted a Protestant because of his religion. The challenge had not been accepted. Mr. T. W. Russell, M.P., said there were two dominant and conservative forces in Ireland, the Catholic Church and the agricultural freeholders, which would control the Irish Parliament, conserve order and insure prosperity and peace when Socialism shall have its grip on English industries.—A vigilance committee after the Limerick model has been formed in Dublin by the Catholic Societies to suppress or exclude the British Sunday papers and other corrupt literature that have been deluging the city. Newsdealers and newsboys are being organized, and plans were devised to enroll the priests and laity of all the cities and towns of Ireland in the crusade against immoral literature of every form.

France.—According to latest accounts there is a widespread dissatisfaction in the country over the result of the conferences with Germany on the Morocco question. Premier Caillaux, however, is satisfied, and the resignation of the German Colonial Secretary apparently gives color to the claim that France has benefited by the arrangements which have been at last signed, if not concluded. France is said to be willing to let Germany purchase Spanish Guinea, and on the other hand Germany will not interfere in any arrangements that Spain and France may make with regard to Morocco.

Tripoli.—Two more fights, one at Derna, another at Tobruk, in which the aggressors were the Turks, are just reported as having occurred, on November 1. The Turks were driven back in both instances. The Italians complain that bullets forbidden by the rules of war were employed by the Turks. On November 15, a protest was cabled to the United States Senate by Prince Omar Toussoun, President of the Egyptian High Committee for Aid to Tripoli, protesting against the atrocities which it declares were committed by the Italian troops.—On Sunday, November 12, five thousand Italians assembled in New York to protest against the newspaper accounts of happenings in Tripoli. After two hours of impassioned speeches, martial music and wild bursts of cheers from the audience, a formal set of resolutions was drawn up and sent to President Taft, King Victor Emmanuel, the Italian Ambassador at Washington and General Caneva, in command of the troops in Tripoli—Operations in Tripoli are practically suspended by a prodigious downpour of rain, filling the trenches and converting the roads into quagmires. A northerly gale has compelled the warships to put to sea for safety.

Portugal.—Many European newspapers have reproduced what purports to be a letter of the ex-king, in which he expresses the opinion that commercial interests will prevent Great Britain from assisting him, and that his only dependence is on the German Emperor, who is "an ideal sovereign."—The reported shooting of a missionary bishop of the Church of England by a Government official in Portuguese Africa threatens trouble for the republic, for Great Britain protects its subjects and vindicates their rights in foreign lands.

Persia.—W. Morgan Shuster, the American Treasurer-General, whom the Persian Government employs, has been finding his post a difficult one. He complains that his work of reorganizing the country's financial system is obstructed by Russia, whose "sphere of influence" lies in Northern Persia, and by Great Britain, who enjoys like privileges in the South. But Mr. Shuster and the National Assembly are proclaiming Persia's complete independence of both countries, and Moslems are regarding with great concern the "pacific penetration" of the land by these two European powers.

Germany.—One of the most momentous developments of the Morocco embroglio is the acceptance by a Budget Commission of a resolution which had been submitted by the Center. The latter party demanded that henceforth the consent of the Reichstag should be obtained before any territorial changes can lawfully be made. The Center, however, in conjunction with the Conservatives, successfully opposed a motion of the Liberals and Socialists to make this amendment to the law retroactive, so as to require the ratification of the Reichstag for the agreement with France which has already been definitely concluded. Thus was avoided all collision with the Government, which was willing to make the first concession, but could hardly yield the second point. The ready acceptance of the amendment of the territorial law indicates that a new era has begun for Germany, when her colonial politics have become too vast and important to be left to the decision of the Government.—Another indication pointing this same way is the announcement made by von Kiderlen Waechter that France has ceded to Germany the right of first purchase to the Spanish Guinea islands, including Elobey and Corisco. Germany, however, he added, is not to be a party in the Franco-Spanish agreements concerning Morocco, which must now come under consideration.—At Schwartzburg-Rudolstadt the Socialists have won the majority of seats, capturing nine out of sixteen places.—To instill a love of the army into the hearts of the German youth a new organization, under the title "Jung Deutschland," has been formed, and General Field Marshal v. d. Goltz has accepted the presidency. The turner, sport and athletic associations have enthusiastically incorporated themselves in great numbers into the new organization. War maneuvers, games and patriotic journeys, marching and camping and field study are to be undertaken for the promotion of a military spirit. The Emperor has heartily given his approval, and the army is to interest itself in the work.

Earthquake in Germany.—The earthquake reported from Germany, November 16, is said to have been the severest experienced in that country for ten years. The tremors were felt in Germany, Austria and Switzerland. In Munich people were thrown out of their beds. At Stuttgart many houses tottered and fell. At Ebingen hundreds of inhabitants spent the night in the open air. At Werra-Thal the towers of the churches rocked and the bells were tolling through the darkness. In many cities walls caved in and buildings were destroyed, while the players ran from the theatres in their motley garments and mingled with the panic-stricken throngs in the streets. The statue of Germania at Constance was shattered on the pavement, and stones dropped out of the walls of the famous minster. The towers of the old castle of the Hohenzollern, begun in the ninth century, destroyed and built up anew in the fifteenth, and finally magnificently reconstructed in 1850, were rent open with large fissures, and the beautiful statues ornamenting the historic structure were cast to the earth.

Austria.—The Austrian Emperor, Franz Josef, has accepted the protectorate of the International Eucharistic Congress which is to take place at Vienna during the month of September, 1912.—Alfred Ebenhoch has resigned the leadership of the Catholic Volkspartei and entirely withdrawn from public life. Reasons of health have induced him to take this step. He had been one of the most noted figures in Austrian parliamentary life.—Tumultuous scenes were again witnessed in the Reichstag when the new Premier, Count Stürgkh, admitted the right of Hungary to prevent the importation of Argentine meat into Austria. The privileges demanded by Hungary are said by Austrian statesmen to have no parity with the concessions she is asked to make. Another storm was raised when Representative Malik arose to express regret for his action at a preceding meeting, when he had publicly horsewhipped one of the members during a session of the house.

QUESTIONS OF THE DAY

What is the Aim of Socialism?

Many people believe that Socialism aims at an equal division of property, so as to make each man own just as much as his neighbor. This, however, is not true. Socialism means anything but the division of property. It contemplates the absolute concentration of the ownership of the means of production into the collective control and ownership of the people themselves. It demands "the conversion of labor materials into the common property of society"; but consumable goods, or such as are immediately destined for use shall, as a remuneration of labor performed, be divided and become private property. Under Socialism property shall be based on labor. Each member of the community will have to work, and everyone who has wrought shall retain the product of his labor. Nobody shall be without employment, and accordingly, as the indispensable prerequisite of the scheme, the land of the country and all other instruments of production shall be made the joint property of the community, and all industrial operations be placed under the direct administration of the State.

All this is contended for, as a simple matter of right and justice to the laboring classes, on the ground that labor is the only source of wealth, and that the wealth of a nation belongs to the hands that made it. It is contended for as an obligation of the State, because the State is held to be merely the organized will of the people, and the people is the laboring class. "Socialism," as Professor R. Ely says, "means coercive cooperation, not merely for undertakings of a monopolistic nature, but for all productive enterprises. Socialists seek the establishment of industrial democracy through the instrumentality of the State, which they hold to be the only way whereby it can be attained. Socialism contemplates an expansion of the business functions of government until all business is absorbed. All business is then to be regulated by the people in their organic capacity, each man and each woman having the same rights which any other man, or any other woman, has. Our political organization is to become an industrial organization. Private property in profit-producing capital and rent-producing land is to be abolished, and private property in income is to be retained, but with this restriction, that it shall not be employed in productive enterprises. What is desired, then, is not, as is supposed by the uninformed, a division of property, but a concentration of property. (Outlines of Economics, p. 308).

Accordingly, as has been said in a former issue of AMERICA, no one can be strictly considered a Socialist who does not hold the central doctrines of collective ownership and control. There are measures advocated by Socialists, and by them pronounced socialistic, which are not so, unless they are regarded as steps towards the socialistic ideal or forming part of a national scheme of reorganization. We are not Socialists because we are in favor of necessary legislative restrictions of individual liberty, in order that we may thereby protect the general and permanent physical and moral interests of the community. Again, State regulation of industry, taxation of incomes, municipal or national ownership and administration of business, such as railroads, the post-office, gas, electric cars, are not really socialistic, nor evidences of society drifting as is often said, towards Socialism. No doubt they may be fitted into a socialistic scheme. But as the facts show, they are quite compatible with the existing social order and, as long as the right of private capital stands unchallenged and intact, they cannot be called socialistic.

But here somebody will step in and tell us that Socialism does not attack the right of private property. He will say: "Socialism, it is true, would abolish private property in capital, but the latter institution is not an end in itself. Nor is it necessary as an immediate means to the welfare or development of the person possessing it. Personal liberty is necessary for the welfare of the individual. Not so with property in productive goods; the individual, any and every individual, can properly develop his personality without exercising those activities that are involved in the ownership of capital. So far as the individual is concerned, this kind of property is necessary only as a means to the possession and ownership of goods of consumption. Consequently, if the latter end could be obtained under Socialism, that is to say, if the collectivity provided every person with the power of owning those material goods that are immediately requisite for the self-development and for the family life, the individual need for private property in the instruments of production would cease to exist. The individual would still possess and own all the material goods essential to right living."

We grant that this argumentation shows that man can get along without the ownership of means of production; but it does not prove that Socialism can rightfully take away from the individual the right of possessing such goods. For every individual has a right to acquire property in land and in capital, and he is supposed to exercise this right when he engages in remunerative labor. For as Pope Leo says: "It is surely undeniable that when a man engages in remunerative labor, the impelling reason and motive of his work is to obtain property, and thereafter to hold it as his very own. If one man hires out to another his strength or skill, he does so for the purpose of receiving in return what is necessary for sustenance and education; he therefore expressly intends to acquire a right full and real, not only to the remuneration, but also to the disposal of such remuneration, just as he pleases. . . . It is precisely in such power of disposal that ownership obtains, whether the property consists of land or chattels.

Socialists, therefore, by endeavoring to transfer the possessions of individuals to the community at large, strike at the interests of every wage-earner, since they would deprive him of the liberty of disposing of his wages.

What is of far greater moment, however, is the fact that the remedy they propose is manifestly against justice."

If the Socialists succeed in convincing the capitalists that they ought to take the vow of poverty, renounce their right to private property in the goods of production and be satisfied with the goods of consumption, nobody will wrangle with them about the justice of their demands.

H. J. MACKELL, S.J.

Lady Herbert of Lea

The death of de Charette the other day turned our thoughts back to the splendid period of which the Vatican Council was the climax. Pius IX was surrounded with enemies: so too is Pius X. What the latter's enemies will do, we cannot say. They plot secretly; but at present their hostility refrains from physical violence. Not so the enemies of Pius IX. We all know the Cadornas, the Fantis, the Cialdinis, the Bixios, the Garibaldis, and the statesmen and sovereigns behind them. But if then there was a violence we do not experience now, there was also the correlative of violent injustice, enthusiasm and self-sacrifice, and a devotion to the Church and its visible Head which one would gladly see renewed to-day. The petty clique of Döllinger and Friedrich in Munich, the few last survivors of Gallicanism, sunning themselves in the French Emperor's favor, supported a feeble Liberalism. On the other hand was a universal love, proving itself in deeds, for Jesus Christ and His Vicar on earth. In England that love was strong in the hearts of the illustrious converts headed by the Mannings, the Fabers, the Wards, who came to the Church, not only as children to their mother, but also as victims of three centuries of error to an infallible teacher, the organ of the Holy Ghost for the leading of mankind into all truth.

Such converts were not men only; there were women equally great of soul. It may seem invidious to pick out of that heroic band some for special praise. Yet those whose memories go back to that great time, if asked to name women notable for their devotion to the Catholic Faith and the Roman Pontiff, would mention, probably without exception, these three: the Marchioness of Lothian, Lady Georgiana Fullerton and Lady Herbert of Lea. Lady Lothian was the first to pass away, dying in her beloved Rome. Lady Georgiana Fullerton survived her a few years. Lady Herbert of Lea was left behind to outlive her generation, and to die on the thirtieth of last month, nearly ninety years of age.

Elizabeth à Court Repington, daughter of Lieutenant-General à Court Repington and niece of Lord Heytesbury, was born in 1822, during the reign of George IV, and in the old England before the first Reform Bill, railways and free trade. She grew up to be one of the beauties of early Victorian society, and in 1846, married Sidney Herbert, half brother and heir of the twelfth Earl of Pembroke. Her husband was a close friend of Gladstone, Hope-Scott and Roundell Palmer, a protégé of Palmerston and Aberdeen; and so Mrs. Sidney Herbert became one of the great ladies of the Liberal party.

In 1853 Sidney Herbert became Secretary at War in the ministry of Lord Aberdeen. In 1854 came the Crimean War. The functions of the Secretary at War, an office now merged into that of the Secretary of State for War, was to administer the finances of the army and to provide for its material wants. When, therefore, bad news began to come in from the hospitals at Scutari and elsewhere, Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Herbert felt that, though on account of the extraordinary division of functions in the administration of the army, the Secretary at War was not directly responsible for the medical department, the obligation of providing for the amelioration of the soldiers' unhappy condition rested, nevertheless on him, to a certain degree. We all know the history of Florence Nightingale; and we saw on the occasion of her death how, without any fault on her part, without fault perhaps anywhere, her great merits came to outshine those of the Religious women, Irish and English, who served the Crimean hospitals. But the nuns were not the only ones to suffer. Mr. Gladstone, writing to a friend, said: "I wish some one of the thousands who justly celebrate Miss Nightingale, would say a word for the man who devised and projected her going—Sidney Herbert." To this we may add, as Sidney Herbert would have added—and for the woman who, with a woman's instinct, perceived the only means to cure the evil and the one agent who, under the circumstances, could be called on to use means—Elizabeth Herbert.

During these trying times Sidney Herbert, by his excessive labors, sowed the seed of the disease which was to carry him off in the prime of life. He had been raised to the peerage as Lord Herbert of Lea, in the hope that the quieter atmosphere of the Upper House might conduce to the prolongation of his life. The hope was vain. In 1861 he passed away, and Lady Herbert of Lea began her widowhood of fifty years.

She had always been a pious woman. Her duties in London society as the hostess of one of the great Liberal houses did not make her forget her higher duties as mother of the seven children she bore during fifteen years of her married life and as a Christian. Before Manning's conversion she had been under his direction—indeed this was the cause of one of the few differences that clouded for a moment her relations with her husband. Manning had now been a Catholic for ten years; and she heard, too, the call of grace and entered the Church in 1863.

Her good deeds were now redoubled; and, until her health broke down a few years ago under the burden of years, she was always before the public in her zeal for souls. She rose early that she might be undisturbed in her converse with God for the care of her own salvation and perfection, and the day was filled with her work for others. She founded and maintained the orphanage of the Sisters of Charity in Salisbury. The missionary college of Mill Hill, Cardinal Vaughan's work of predilection, was very dear to her, and if it looks upon the Cardinal as its founder, it regards her as its nursing mother. Her pen was never idle. Her books and her translations are familiar to us all. "Cradle Lands" and "Impressions of Spain" have done incalculable good in fostering love for our Lord and His Holy Mother. The income from her writings, which was considerable, was devoted to her works of charity, to which also went a large part of her private resources. But her charity was not confined within the limits of her own means. When these were exhausted she became a beggar. She had no human respect; and perhaps there was in England no more persistent writer of begging letters than Lady Herbert of Lea.

Lady Herbert had her full share of domestic griefs. Her eldest son, the thirteenth Earl of Pembroke, and her youngest, Sir Michael Herbert, long in the Embassy at Washington, and finally Ambassador there, passed away before her. Her third son perished in the loss of the Captain, in 1870. One of her daughters is the present Marchioness of Ripon; but the Marquis did not follow his great father into the Church, as she did not follow her mother. Indeed, of her seven children, only one, the Baroness Friedrich von Hügel, entered the Church; and, if one may be permitted to guess, the attitude she has taken with regard to some matters ecclesiastical, cannot but have saddened a mother so devoted to the Holy See.

Lady Herbert of Lea was a shining example of those women whom God raises up from time to time to be the glory, the joy and the honor of her people. May He in His infinite good not leave her place unfilled.

HENRY WOODS, S.J.

Theosophy in India

Although Theosophy made rapid progress in India, it would be difficult to conceive that, within a few months after its apparent triumph utter confusion would prevail among its adepts; that Mrs. Besant's fame and glory would be but a thing of the past; that many of her most ardent admirers would turn against her; that the columns of papers once devoted to the cause of Theosophy would be flooded with most damaging correspondence, and that finally Mrs. Besant would have to quit her beloved Adyar like a fugitive, "amidst a pelting hailstorm of adverse criticisms." Yet all these things have come to pass; the glamor which surrounded the Theosophical Society is wearing off, distrust is everywhere in the air and warning cries, which cannot be stified, rise on every side crying "Beware, Beware!" and the din is increasing every moment.

If we now try to explain this revulsion of feeling among such a large section of the Hindu people, we shall find that the fault all lies with Theosophy itself and its leaders, who, blinded by their rapid success, forgot that there is a limit to human credulity and that truth, sooner or later, is bound to prevail.

The first blow struck at the Theosophical Society came from patriotic Hindus who feel ashamed of the present state of their country and wish to see her take her place among the civilized nations of the world. To these men reforms, both social and religious, are a question of life and death for India. They are, therefore, in favor of changes and wish to see old customs discarded for others better suited to modern times. We may imagine with what disfavor they looked upon Theosophy, which they called an "obscurantist, reactionary and immoral movement," and especially upon Mrs. Besant who, in their opinion, had thrown back social reform for at least half a century by "seeking to explain old rotten customs, and by attempting to justify the irrationalities which abound in popular Hinduism."

The second blow came from those Hindus who still cared for the national religion of India, which they saw being gradually supplanted by Theosophy, under the hypocritical professions that by the spread of Theosophy Hinduism would have its youth renewed. Besides the Benares College, which had been turned into a factory of young Theosophists, Mrs. Besant had founded an order called "the Sons of India," the birth of which had been heralded with blare of trumpet and hailed with satisfaction and glee. Before long the disillusioning came, and it was seen that the order had degenerated into an auxiliary of the Theosophical Society, the various branches of the order serving as channels for the dissemination of Theosophical teaching among immature Hindu youths. Of late Mrs. Besant had planned to form a big Hindu University. "In it," she declared, "the Sanatana Dharma, or teaching of Hinduism, would have its rightful place, but the Theosophical school of thought among Hindus must also be recognized as having a claim to courtesy and respect." This made it patent to all that the Theosophical school of thought among Hindus was quite different from the "Sanatana Dharma" of Hindu-India, and that Mrs. Besant's boasted professions that Theosophy was more Hindu than Hinduism itself were a mere deception. Hence a counter movement has been started by orthodox Hindus in favor of a university on Hindu lines and quite independent of Theosophy. Mrs. Besant is trying hard to have both plans amalgamated, but she has let the cat out of the bag and it is doubtful whether those Hindus, who care for their religion, will accept her proposal. "Timeo Danaos" is the lesson they have learned from their past connection with Theosophy and Theosophists.

Several quarrels, far from edifying, have of late arisen among the Theosophists. Mrs. Besant dismissed the vice-president of the society for daring to hold an opinion different from her own, and many general secretaries of the society were ousted from their positions for the same reason. Some months ago a general outcry, even among Theosophists themselves, went forth against a certain Mr. Léadbeater, one of Mrs. Besant's high priests, and Theosophy was accused of countenancing in this man the grossest immorality. Mrs. Besant was asked to have the gentleman removed from the Adyar; this she stoutly refused to do, and by this act she lost the confidence of those Theosophists who still preserved a bit of self-respect. These quarrels and many others, which it would be too long to enumerate here, have shown to every sensible man that the boasted claims of Theosophy to establish on earth the brotherhood of man have been weighed and found wanting.

It would take too much space to mention all the vagaries into which Mrs. Besant has fallen of late. One, however, deserves mention. Judging, as she says, from certain signs of the times, she has turned prophet and loudly proclaims the near advent of a great teacher, another Christ, who is to reform the world and teach the truth. She has actually made choice of a young brahmin lad, named Krishnamurthi, whom she has dubbed "Alcyone," and who is to give his body to the future Christ. Some time ago a small book went forth from the Adyar sanctuary and Mrs. Besant vouched for the statement that its contents had been taken down by her young disciple from teaching given by his "Master." She has actually founded a new order called the "Star in the East," the members of which, on being received, make the following profession: "We believe a great Teacher will soon appear in the world. We wish so to live now that we may be worthy to know him when he comes."

This last appeal to the credulity of the people and her constant mention of the "Master" gave rise to the last and most fatal attack on Mrs. Besant's teaching. People began now to question the very existence of those "Mahatmas" whom no one had ever seen, and to ask for proofs of their existence. Some of the most famous native Theosophists, who were supposed to have been favored with special communications from the "Brothers," were questioned on the subject. Most of them answered that they did not know whether the "Brothers" did or did not exist, some few, while confessing that there were difficulties either way, said they thought the balance of evidence was in favor of their existence. At last Mrs. Besant herself, during her recent stay at the Adyar, was appealed to for her evidences. At first she refused to be drawn into the controversy, but finally, as the Hindu says, "she stood at bay with a lecture which was a very poor performance. Logic was thrown to the wind, a passionate appeal to the religious fanaticism of the audience taking its place," and so the question of the existence of the Mahatmas is still sub judice.

The latest news given by the papers concerning Mrs. Besant's whereabouts is to the effect that she has taken to London her young 'Alcyone,' "the wonderful boy, who has at his fingers' ends the series of his births and re-births for the past 30,000 years." We shall leave her there with the sad reflection that her existence as a Theosophist, after raising her to the pinnacle of glory, has at last brought her to the pass to which all are brought who abandon true wisdom for the aberrations of their minds or the deceptions of the enemy of mankind. Whether this failure of Theosophy is likely to make wiser people of the heathen Hindus is very doubtful, if one is to judge of the future from the past. Some bold adventurer may still hope to make himself, for a time, the idol of the people, if like Mrs. Besant he can pocket his self-respect and flatter the Hindus right and left; for, as Max Müller says, "with some people the power of believing seems to grow with the absurdity of what is to be believed," and it cannot be denied that a large number of Hindus, swayed by hatred of Christianity and of everything European, belong to this not very enviable part of the human race.

F. BILLARD, S.J.

"Magnalia Naturæ"*

A surprising title, this, for a scientific essay in this our day. And yet it is the title of no less important a paper than the presidential address of Professor D'Arcy Wentworth Thompson before the Zoological Section of the British Association for the Advancement of Science, at Portsmouth, in the beginning of last September. With its literary form and its fine scriptural flavor it reminds us of the days when the scientific investigator was a man not devoid of literary power nor imaginative insight.

And more surprising still, the address fulfills the promise of its title. Seldom, in the last few years, have we read a scientific essay with greater pleasure. Its scholarly references to the past, its literary style, its clear-cut reasoning, the evidence it affords of a thorough understanding of the biological problems treated, and, above all, the soundness of its philosophic position, all this gives proof of a synthetic power that is all too rare to-day among men who have given their lives to the pursuit of science.

In its thought "Magnalia Naturæ" is a defense of vitalism in biology. It shows, on the basis of experimental fact, that the living organism, the plant, the animal and man, must be more than a mere resultant of chemical and physical forces, as the opponents of vitalism, the materialists, would have us believe. Besides these forces there must be another, a force or a reality, not pervious, it is true, to the analysis of the scalpel or **Nature*, 87: 325, Sept. 7, 1911.

Science, XXXIV: 417, Oct. 6, 1911.

the galvanometer, of the microscope or the chemical reagent, but, nevertheless, clearly recognizable by the reasoning intellect. When all the best material aids to scientific research have done their work, when we have measured the forces manifested in the living organism, a summation of all these results does not equal "vital activity."

Vital activity results only, when to all these chemical and physical forces, that unseen and mysterious reality which we generally call a soul, is added. It has been called by other names, "form" and "entelechy" and "vis plastica," and "vis vitæ formatrix" and "Bildungstrieb" and "Lebenskraft" and perhaps by others; but all these names imply that the organism is something more than the mere sum total of inorganic forces. The wisdom of the ancients taught us all this on the basis of crude, though correct observation; but sceptical science required other tests. And so modern biologists taking their stand on the basis of more accurate experimental facts, have for the most part insisted on a merely materialistic interpretation of life. Professor Thompson, however, taking his stand on these same experimental facts, has shown the inadequacy of a purely materialistic theory to account for the varied manifestations of that which it seeks to explain. And yet, despite his modern views, he is by no means unfair to the past. It must have been an unusual experience for the members of the Zoological Section to see marshalled before their mental eyes the shades of Aristotle and St. Thomas and Suarez, of Galen and Blumenbach and Paracelsus, and to see these representatives of antiquated and a priori theories associate with the living, with Driesch and Bergson and a host of unnamed, silent, but none the less enthusiastic sympathisers. And the banner under which they were all gathered was that of vitalism.

Wiser words were never addressed to biologists on the controverted question of materialism versus vitalism than those of Professor Thompson: "While we keep an open mind on this question of vitalism, or while we lean, as so many of us now do, or even cling with a great yearning, to the belief that something other than the physical forces animates and sustains the dust of which we are made, it is rather the business of the philosopher than of the biologist, or of the biologist only when he has served his humble and severe apprenticeship to philosophy, to deal with the ultimate problems."

Professor Thompson is convinced of the truth of vitalism. The fact is unmistakable. Yet he is by no means so short-sighted as to minimize the efforts of those who are resolving the complex phenomena of life into chemical and physical factors. "It is of the essence of physiological science," he tells us, "to investigate the manifestations of energy in the body, and to refer them, for instance, to the domain of heat, electricity or chemical activity." Far from fearing the results of such investigations, he is in hearty sympathy with the labors of those who see the explanation of many a life phenomenon in surface tension, osmosis, chemical affinity, ionisation and the many other forces that come into play in the complex functions of the living cell. The work of men like Verworn and Bütschli, of Jacques Loeb and Roux, of Herman Meyer, J. Wolff, and a host of others, makes a strong appeal to him. "I believe," he says, "that the phenomena of surface tension, elasticity and pressure are adequate to account for a great multitude of the simpler phenomena, and the combinations and permutations thereof, that are illustrated in organic form. . . . I believe all these phenomena to have been unduly neglected, and to call for more attention than they have received."

Yet with all this sympathy, he is guarded and logical. He has not allowed the brilliancy of such experiments to blind him to their inadequacy. "The physiologists, or certain of them, tell us that we begin again to desecrate the limitations of physical inquiry, and the region where a very different hypothesis insists on thrusting itself in." He knows well "that though we push such explanations (chemical and physical) to the uttermost, and learn much in the so doing, they will not touch the heart of the great problems that lie deeper than the physical plane." "That which above all things we would explain, baffles explanation, and that the living organism is a living organism tends to reassert itself as the biologists' fundamental conception and fact."

Usually the addresses of the sectional presidents of the British Association for the Advancement of Science are regarded by the educated public as indicating the state of thought prevailing in the respective sections. Are we to regard the present address as such a pronouncement? If we are, it is but another manifestation of a growing tendency in biological circles towards the sane views of vitalism. More and more it is being understood that biology is revealing to its student the unseen but not unrealized presence of a force, a soul, that cannot be measured in dynes, nor expressed in terms of chemical affinity. And so we are again coming back to the wisdom of the ancients. The paths of the old philosopher and of the modern seeker for truth, devious as they must be, are again converging. As Professor Thompson says, "Ever and anon, in the presence of the magnalia naturæ we feel inclined to say with the poets: 'These things are not of to-day nor yesterday, but evermore, and no man knoweth whence they came.'"

Yes, there is cause for wonderment in all this and for a great sense of satisfaction. The times are changing and with them much that has produced the evils of our day. Let men grant, and be convinced of the existence of a force unseen, of a soul, vegetative in plants, sentient in animals, and rational in man, and materialism with all its popular but disgraceful progeny of thought and tendency must become an item of history; a fact to be recorded, but only to the eternal shame of the human race. Life, too, will then reveal to all of us the hidden mysteries that are but the proofs of the Infinity of Him who created it. Or, as Professor Thompson says, in closing his address, "I will not quote the noblest words of all that come to my mind; but only the lesser language of another, of the noblest of the Greeks: 'The ways of His thoughts are as paths in a wood thick with leaves, and one seeth through them but a little way.'"

A. M. SCHWITALLA, S.J.

"The Common Cause"

We have received notice of a very important work which has been undertaken for the general promotion of a true and enlightened social reform. There is over all the world a spirit of social unrest and the doctrine of a universal revolution against all established authority in Church and State is openly preached. "We make war against all prevailing ideas of religion, of the State, of country, of patriotism," wrote Marx in "The Secret Societies of Switzerland." "The idea of God is the keystone of a perverted civilization. It must be destroyed. The true root of liberty, of equality, of culture, is Atheism." Countless workers are daily swelling the ranks of the Socialist army without any real knowledge of what they are doing, or whither they are tending. Socialism is represented as the only remedy of the evils from which they suffer, the only friend of the worker and the poor, while in fact whatever is good in Socialism and whatever we praise in its achievements is not Socialism at all, but only social reform. Here, therefore, is the mission of the new magazine that is now being launched under the title of The Common Cause. Its purpose is "to tell the men and women of America what Socialism really is—what its principles are—what their adoption would mean to the individual, as well as to the nation." Constructively, moreover, it is to advocate the necessary means of reform to meet the present social crisis.

The new enterprise is not to be distinctively Catholic or denominational in any sense. "The great social problems of the day do not affect one faith or one class more than another," says its prospectus. "Socialism is not a peril to one body of citizens, but to all." The board of editors consists of men whose names are familiar to us: James J. Walsh, Dean of Fordham University; Condé D. Pallen, Managing Editor of "The Catholic Encyclopedia"; Bird S. Coler, former Comptroller of Greater New York; Charles H. McDermott, author of "The Gospel of Greed"; Thomas F. Woodlock, President of the Laymen's League for Retreats and Social Studies; Peter W. Collins, International Secretary of the Brotherhood of Electrical Workers; George E. Rines, Managing Editor of the "Encyclopedia Americana"; John R. Meader, Managing Editor of the new magazine itself.

Besides this publication several other enterprises are to be connected with the Social Reform Press, whence it is to be issued. First, there is to be established a Publicity Bureau, whose object it is to supply, free of charge, for the daily and weekly press of our country, such popular articles as shall cover all the various phases of social work and present a truthful picture of Socialism to the American public. Secondly, an Information Bureau is to be maintained, with a full supply of literature, both for and against Socialism. The service here is likewise to be entirely free. A list, moreover, of lecturers is to be kept on file, and no agent's commission is to be exacted for the engagements made through this medium.

"There is no need, no excuse for Socialism. But there is sore need of social reform," is the motto chosen for the new magazine.

CORRESPONDENCE

The Y. M. C. A. in the Philippines

MANILA, October 13, 1911.

I am mailing you to-day papers giving an account of the very vigorous fight Archbishop Harty is waging against the establishment of a Y. M. C. A. for Filipinos in this city.

In my opinion, it is the most courageous effort made by any prelate against this most dangerous organization—it has opened the eyes of our American non-Catholic population to the real purpose of the Y. M. C. A., and has caused the General Secretary of the Y. M. C. A. for the Philippines to declare openly that the Y. M. C. A. is a religious organization. On Oct. 10, this General Secretary, Mr. W. A. Tener, returned to Manila from the United States, and the same afternoon the Archbishop had in the papers—English and Spanish—his open letter on a "sectarian Y. M. C. A."—protesting against the house for Filipinos. This was an unexpected bombshell in the enemy's camp, as Tener came back with $120,000 for the Filipino house, and was only asking $30,000 from local residents.

Tener published an answer in the morning paper of Oct 11, in which he admitted the truth of what the Archbishop said about the restriction against Catholics as "full members," but stated that Catholics could become directors of the Filipino Y. M. C. A. Thereby he put himself in the very ridiculous position of asserting that the existing Y. M. C. A. (for white people) drew the line against Catholics, while the new Y. M. C. A. (for the brown race)—only a stone's throw from the first named building—would graciously admit Catholics into the fold. The Archbishop had his "open letter" reprinted in a neat eight-page folder and mailed a copy to all the leading officials and business men of the city. The Governor-General, Cameron Forbes, however, fell into the Y. M. C. A. trap, and called a meeting of prominent Filipinos in his own house to further the raising of the local fund.

While no one expects that the Y. M. C. A. will be deterred from their purpose by the Archbishop's letter—at least he has gone on record against it. The Y. M. C. A. is calculated to do more harm here than in the United States, as it will cater chiefly to the Catholic students of government schools. Furthermore, they purpose to establish additional buildings later on in all the large cities of the Islands. The more one thinks of it, the more serious appears the action of the Governor. In eastern countries there is an unusually large amount of divinity hedging the king.

PHILIP M. FINEGAN, S.J.

The Holy See and the Turkish War

ROME, November 5, 1911.

Rome is at present particularly quiet and uneventful, though the universities have opened, bringing back to the city in increased numbers ecclesiastical students from all quarters of the world, including the annual new complement from the United States. The only excitement visible is on the face of the favorite clerical tailor of the town, whose passing you on the street, beaming like a basket of chips, serves to remind you that cardinals wear clothes.

Apropos of the war the Osservatore Romano has published the following note, which has an official ring to it:

"The Ottoman Lloyd, a newspaper of Constantinople, as well as several European journals, in spite of the official declaration of the Vatican of its attitude towards the war, persist in a desire to believe that the Holy See is in some fashion or other involved in the conflict between Italy and Turkey, and go the length of insinuating a financial interest. We warn, not only our readers, but also our contemporaries of the press at home and abroad against this false and biased information, which has not the slightest foundation in fact."

As for the war itself it is hard to say anything accurately. The American newspaper correspondents in Rome have been advised from their respective home offices to save the cable tolls by sending no war news from Rome, because as news such information is a joke. Of course, we can see the two or three hundred soldiers who daily leave Rome for Naples en route to reinforce the troops at Tripoli, and have reason to know that the same fact is noticeable at other centres. During the week a second call for reserves was issued, this time summoning the list of the year 1889. The first call was for the 1888 class, and the 1887 class expect their turn soon.

The expedition started out with thirty thousand troops; with the steady reinforcements sailing it is expected that by the time the 1887 class is mustered in the force will number ninety thousand men of all arms. There is official concession of losses in action of six hundred in killed and four hundred in wounded, showing either close conflict or good marksmanship on the part of the Arabs. Yesterday's paper declares that the cholera is playing havoc with the Arabs; if true, it is hard to see how the Italian troops will escape the infection. Among the fallen at the landing at Homs was the naval lieutenant Ricardo Grazioli-Lante, the only son and heir of the Duke Giulio Grazioli-Lante della Rovere here at Rome. He was a handsome and clever young officer of only twenty-two years of age, and was killed in an endeavor to rescue a brother officer fallen in the first clash at landing. His body was brought to Rome and buried on Friday last at Campo Verano with full military honors.

Parliament was supposed to be due for its call to session on the ninth instant, but it is well understood that its meeting has been postponed for a time by the ministry. Giolitti does not desire in addition to his other troubles to have the legislature on his hands at the present moment, and over here the cabinet is in a position to stave off its sessions.

The banks of the country are making generous contributions to the funds of the Red Cross Association and to a government fund to provide maintenance for suffering families of absent soldiers. This will go to counteract popular feeling against the financial interests which are charged by the Socialists with being at the bottom of the war. At the same time, however, this action will doubtless confirm the Socialists in their view and furnish them with an additional argument.

On Saturday a bust of Gabriel Rossetti was unveiled on the Pincio in the presence of the municipal officials and some of the literati of the city. It was presented to Rome by a Municipal Deputation from Chieti and stands on one of the little four-foot pedestals which line the walks on the Pincio. It will find itself in a heterogeneous company ranging from the Jesuit Fathers Secchi and Segneri to Garibaldi and Mazzini.

The daily press announces that the Holy Father has called from Venice, Father Matteucci, S.J., to take the chair of theology at the Gregorian University, made vacant by the promotion of Father Billot to the college of cardinals.

On Monday the new minister from the Argentine Republic to the Holy See, Don Angel Estrada, presented his credentials in audience to the Holy Father, made his official call on the Cardinal Secretary of State and paid his visit of devotion to the tomb of the Apostles in St. Peter's.

The Benedictine Monks of Mount Olivet have just closed the session of their general chapter or diet, which is held at Rome every six years. It brought together all the abbots and active priors of the Order, under the presidency of the Abbot General, Dom Hildebrand Polliuti. The chapter elected as General Visitors, the abbots Dom Maurus Parodi of Milan, and Dom Boniface Ecker, of Carinthia in Austria. They also elected Father Bernard Rosatelli, Chancellor General; Father John Capra, General Prefect of Studies; Father Patrick Papucci, Secretary General, and Father Placidus Lugano, coadjutor to the Abbot General.

On All Hallows, at St. John Lateran, among the numerous Levites to receive ordination to the priesthood were seven candidates from the American College.

The new rector of the Canadian College, the Abbe Perin, is due to arrive in Rome from Montreal tomorrow.

C. M.

Portuguese Monarchists and Republicans

MADRID, October 30, 1911.

The first attempt to restore the monarchy in Portugal has proved a fiasco. Although we Spanish Catholics feel a lively interest in and a keen sympathy for those Portuguese Catholic monarchists who, cast out of their country by the cruel Carbonari, labor and strive to free their fatherland from the horrid tyranny of the Masonic lodges, and to inaugurate a new era of order, peace, law and justice by restoring the monarchical régime, truth obliges us to confess that Paiva Couceiro and those who share with him the bitterness of exile and the hope of a happier future for the Portuguese people have this time failed to effect what they desired.

The failure, as we understand the question, is to be attributed to three causes. First, we may put down the marked hostility and the activity shown by the Spanish Government against the Portuguese monarchists who had sought refuge in Spain. It did not leave them a moment's rest, but employed and continues to employ every means to upset their plans and to bring all their efforts to naught. Secondly, the inexplicable spiritlessness, irresolution and cowardice of the Portuguese themselves should be mentioned. They had promised in great numbers to rally to the support of Paiva Couceiro as soon as he should enter Portugal and raise the standard of the counter revolution; but they broke their promise and failed in the obligation which they had taken upon themselves. The result was that he was left with a handful of self-sacrificing, though brave men, to cope with the forces marshaled against him. In the third place must be put the want of understanding, or rather the dissensions and divisions, which from the outset could be seen between the partisans of Dom Manoel, the dethroned king, and those of Dom Miguel of Bragança, who aspires to the throne.

It is a matter of common knowledge that between Dom Manoel and Dom Miguel there was a solemn and formal agreement to the effect that, waiving for the time their claims or pretensions or rights, they would combine their forces and resources with no other aim than that of overthrowing the present demagogic, sectarian and atheistic republic. This having been accomplished, Paiva Couceiro should be temporary dictator and should summon the people to decide at the polls whether they would have a republic or a monarchy, and if a monarchy, whether Dom Manoel or Dom Miguel should rule.

Has the agreement been discarded? As far as it is on paper, we think that it still exists; but practically speaking, it has been destroyed. The Miguelists are dissatisfied with the Manoelists and charge them with treachery or little less; for while these had funds and time to arrange the counter revolution, they have suffered the Republicans to capture the arms shipped into Portugal, and thus are to blame for the failure of the movement.

That the next attempt against the republic is to have a markedly Miguelist bias is clear from several facts. In the first place, the dethroned king Manoel remains far away from the scene of plotting and fighting, while Dom Miguel and Dom Francisco, in company with the Dukes of Parma and other personages more or less allied with Portuguese Legitimists, have made haste to place themselves at the head of their supporters, thus occupying the post of honor which belonged to them in the patriotic enterprise. Next, it is understood that Don Jaime (the Carlist pretender to the throne of Spain) has promised and granted to the Miguelists the unconditional support of the Spanish Carlists in their work of restoring the monarchy. Finally, it is no secret to anybody that the chief contributors to the fund to effect the counter revolution are Portuguese Legitimists.

All these reasons prove that it is not rash to suppose and to foretell that in the event of the success of the movement, Dom Miguel the Younger will ascend the throne, and that on the following day civil war will break out between the two parties of monarchists.

Just at present, Paiva Couceiro and his friends are simply marking time. The monarchists have cached their weapons and have scattered in groups of a dozen or so among the Galician towns and hamlets bordering on Portugal. Paiva Couceiro himself is now in hiding on the estate of a rich Spaniard who lives near the town of Mondoñedo; Camacho, chief of staff of the monarchist army, is living at Verin; and the two princes, Miguel and Francisco, are at Cabreira. The Duke of Oporto, Manoel's unmarried uncle, is near Zamora, and the other monarchists are wandering through Galicia and waiting for a better chance to enter Portugal. The failure of the movement has grieved but not disheartened them. They are now preparing for another effort and hope to profit by the mistakes made in the first.

Meanwhile, the Republicans are torn by divisions and the spirit of discord is enthroned. Affonso Costa, the most popular, as he is the most radical Republican to-day, hopes to use these divisions as steps to raise him to power. He has made two proposals to this end. The first is to drive all monarchist conspirators out of the country, no easy job, for, though most numerous in the North, they are strong in the centre and in the South as well. His second proposal is to bolster up the public credit, by bringing the budget more into harmony with the revenue. This very prudent course is hard to reduce to practice, for the administration expenses are greater and the income is less than under the monarchy. His radicalism has found expression in the assertion that a republic nowadays must be more radical than even the Portuguese parliamentary block demands. In other words, if placed at the head, he will push the Separation Law to its last consequences. Whichever way we look, we see calamities and disasters ahead for Portugal. The utter ruin of the country seems inevitable.

NORBERTO TORCAL.

Confiscation of Convents in Brazil

PORTO ALEGRE, BRAZIL, September 20, 1911.

Many years ago the then Imperial Government condemned certain convents of the old religious orders in Brazil to gradual extinction, forbidding them to receive novices. At the death of the last surviving monk the whole property was to devolve to the State. The Republic came and broke the unworthy fetters with which the Empire had chained the Church. The Constitution of 1889, establishing entire separation of Church and State, abolished also the above law. Such, at least, is the opinion of many prominent and competent men. The last religious of the Franciscan Order, Frei Joao Costa, received two young members of the same order into his province; one of them, a native of Brazil, was made Guardian, the other, a German by birth but a Brazilian citizen by naturalization, became Master of Novices. During the following years a number of other young candidates, born Brazilians, applied for admission. Two years ago the old Provincial died, and Frei Diago became his successor. Everything was going on quietly, without any interference being attempted by the Government of the Republic, when on a sudden the enemies of the Church took up the old obsolete law as a welcome weapon against her. Of late there have been rumors about an intended blow against the Catholics, and on the afternoon of September 4 several officials of Dr. Rivadavia, the Minister of the Interior, appeared at the gate of the Franciscan Convent of Sao Antonio, in Rio de Janeiro, accompanied by a force of the police, and in the name of the Government, seized the Monastery and its property. There were only, besides Frei Diago, the Provincial, the few religious who formed the Community. He made a vigorous and dignified protest against such an unconstitutional act of violence, but as the officials threatened to imprison him and his brothers, Frei Diago was forced to deliver all the money in his possession, a sum amounting to $4,310. The officials then made a careful inventory of everything in the house, searching the library and showing great lack of respect in handling sacred utensils. A guard of the Federal Treasury was left in the Convent.

This action of the Government raised a storm of indignation on all sides. The following day a procession of prominent citizens and friends of the Fathers, clergy and laymen, walked up the low hill on which Sao Antonio stands, to show their sympathy with the Fathers. The Catholic Congress in session at Bello Horizonte, capital of Minas Geraes, sent a despatch with their protest; similar action was taken by seventy Catholic Associations from S. Paulo, the Catholic Confederation from Ouro Preto and the clergy of the Archdiocese of Rio, at an extraordinary session.

The reader will see that it is a question of fundamental and far-reaching importance. The Federal Judge has directed his subordinates in S. Paulo and Espirito Santo to seize other convents, four in the State of S. Paulo, two in that of Rio de Janeiro, and two in Espirito Santo. The Government, it seems, does not mean to take actual possession of the convents just now, but it wants to make sure of them for the future, when the old friars, who signed the contract under the Empire, have died. Our Catholic newspaper, O Universo, laid the question before four of the most distinguished lawyers and jurists, and they agreed that the law da mao morta does not exist under the Republic; that the right of possession, passed from the old religious, who were natives of Brazil, on to the younger members of the Order who have been lawfully received, though they be only naturalized Brazilians.

This view is upheld even by the leaders of Positivism. Dr. Teixeira Mendes urged the President of the State of Rio Grande do Sol, Dr. Barbosa, and Dr. Berges Medeiros, head of the leading party, to assert their influence in Rio in favor of the religious, unjustly attacked in the rights guaranteed by the Constitution. So they did, and on the 15th of September they sent a telegram in these terms to Minister Rivadavia in Rio. The Procurator General of the Republic, Dr. Barreto, of course, defends the odious step taken by Government, but this does not mean much, since he is an ardent Freemason, whose aim has long been to seize all religious possessions and declare them national property. Whether the President, Dr. Hermes Fonseca, will allow himself to be misled by his Masonic counsellors, the near future will show. The question has already been discussed in the Senate, and the decision of the courts is generally awaited with great interest. A. H.

Religion and Business

LONDON, October 28, 1911.

London is placarded with a very effective poster showing a black silhouette map of South America, on which stands out boldly in white letters the inscription, "FROM PANAMA TO THE HORN." In further letterpress outside the map it is announced that the "Lord Bishop of the Falkland Islands," is delivering a series of lectures on missionary work in South America, illustrated with lantern and cinematograph views.

The Bishop is an Anglican colonial prelate, who has his See at Stanley, the capital of the group of islands down by Cape Horn, from which he takes his title. The total population of this British outpost on the verge of the Antarctic is about two thousand. Some hundreds of these are Catholics, under the jurisdiction of a Vicar-

Apostolic. Some hundreds more are Dissenters. The Bishop has at the very outside a thousand subjects. It is a little flock, but he is a man of very large ideas. He licenses chaplains who look after the Anglicans and Protestants, generally in the small groups of British men of business in some of the ports of South America, and the sailors who come and go at these places. This has apparently given him the idea that he is, for all practical purposes, not only bishop of a couple of foggy islands off the coast of Patagonia, but also Anglican missionary bishop of the whole continent of South America, "from Panama to the Horn."

In lectures from the platform and sermons from the pulpit he puts forward proposals for a great missionary campaign among the South American peoples, with its headquarters in the Falkland Islands. He asks for funds to finance the undertaking, and unlike the first Apostles and their Catholic successors, he promises more tangible results than purely spiritual gains. He suggests that his mission will bring good business to British manufacturers and traders. A friendly writer in one of the great London daily papers says that: "The bishop's idea is that we shall go with the Bible in one hand and the ledger in the other. He is quite frank about this." And we are told that what his proposals amount to is—"that this vast district of two million square miles shall be brought under British influence. He thinks he can do it for £100,000."

The bishop may get the money, but so far the appeal has met with a mixed reception. There are many good Protestants who are not edified by the bishop's frank suggestion of combining the Evangelist with the commercial traveler. And notwithstanding all the nonsense that has been written about South America, people are beginning to realize that its people are civilized Christians, who have their own bishops and pastors, and are not likely to be very eager for new light from the foggy Falkland Islands.

To Catholics the proposed mission looks like a colossal piece of impertinence. How little need there can be for "evangelizing" South America is strikingly shown in a book published within the last few days in London—"South America of To-day," by Georges Clemenceau. M. Clemenceau is a pronounced anti-clerical, but strong as are his feelings against all things Catholic, he bears outspoken testimony to the high character of South Americans of all classes in the countries he has visited. He nowhere says that this is the result of their religion—that would be too much to expect from him. But while the advocates of Protestant missions tell the traditional stories about the "degradation" of South America under the "yoke of Rome," this veteran of anti-clericalism gives unstinted praise to the purity of life, the public spirit, honesty, industry and enterprise of these South American Catholics.

In one remarkable passage he contrasts Paris with Buenos Ayres, to the disadvantage of the former, and he declares that in the wealthy South American capital the class euphemistically described as the demi-monde does not exist. People who have been taught the truths of the Gospel with such practical effect cannot want a new kind of teachers from England, via the Falkland Islands, nor is it likely that British commercial interests will be served by combining their advocacy with an organized attack on the religion of South America. If the Bishop of the Falklands gets his £100,000 it will be sadly wasted.

A. H. A.

A M E R I C A

A · CATHOLIC · REVIEW · OF · THE · WEEK

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 25, 1911.

Entered as second-class matter, April 15th, 1909, at the Post Office at New York, N. Y., under the Act of March 3d, 1879.

Copyright, 1911, and published weekly by the America Press, New York.
President, THOMAS J. CAMPBELL; Secretary, H. J. SWIFT;
Treasurer, MICHAEL J. O'CONNOR.

SUBSCRIPTIONS, POSTPAID:

United States, 10 cents a copy; yearly, $3.00
Canada, $3.50 Europe, $4.00 (16s.)

Address:

THE AMERICA PRESS, 59 East 83d Street, New York City, N. Y., U. S. A.

CABLE ADDRESS: CATHREVIEW.

BY THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES

A Proclamation

The people of this land having by long sanction and practice set apart toward the close of each passing year a day on which to cease from their labors and assemble for the purpose of giving praise to Him who is the author of the blessings they have enjoyed, it is my duty as Chief Executive to designate at this time the day for the fulfilment of this devout purpose.

Our country has been signally favored in many ways. The round of the seasons has brought rich harvests. Our industries have thrived far beyond our domestic needs, the productions of our labor are daily finding enlarged markets abroad. We have been free from the curses of pestilence, of famine and of war. Our national councils have furthered the cause of peace in other lands, and the spirit of benevolence has brought us into closer touch with other peoples, to the strengthening of the bonds of fellowship and good will that link us to our comrades in the universal brotherhood of nations. Strong in the sense of our own rights and inspired by as strong a sense of the rights of others, we live in peace and harmony with the world. Rich in the priceless possessions and abundant resources wherewith the unstinted bounty of God has endowed us, we are unselfishly glad when other peoples pass onward to prosperity and peace. That the great privileges we enjoy may continue and that each coming year may see our country more firmly established in the regard and esteem of our fellow nations is the prayer that should arise in every thankful heart.

Wherefore, I, William Howard Taft, President of the United States of America, designate Thursday, the 30th of November next, as a day of thanksgiving and prayer, and I earnestly call upon my countrymen and upon all that dwell under the flag of our beloved country then to meet in their accustomed places of worship to join in offering prayer to Almighty God and devout thanks for the loving mercies He has given to us.

In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done at the city of Chicago, this 30th day of October, in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and eleven and of the independence of the United States of America the one hundred and thirty-sixth.

BY THE PRESIDENT.

Thanksgiving Day

We publish, as usual, the President's annual proclamation, which this year designates Thursday, November 30th, as Thanksgiving Day. We do so, not to chronicle a fact, but to express our gratification as Americans at the permanency and growth of a custom which began at the birth of the Republic, and which we trust will never fall into disuse, of observing a day every year for a universal act of homage to God. All the people are called upon, not only "to cease from their labors" on that day, but "to meet in their accustomed places of worship to join in offering prayer to Almighty God for the loving mercies He has given us."

The Governors of the several States issue similar proclamations in their respective commonwealths, and the same religious tone characterizes their official utterances as that adopted by the President. Indeed, the people of the Empire State are this year advised of their duty in words that almost seem to be borrowed from the Catholic liturgy. "It is meet and right," says the Governor, "that we render to Almighty God our grateful acknowledgment for the abundance which has been vouchsafed us," and he bids us "lift up our hearts and voices in our homes and the churches of our faith." This is nothing else than the dignum et justum est, and the sursum corda, which the Catholic priest sings at every altar where the Eucharistic or thanksgiving sacrifice is offered.

Beyond the border, in Canada, on the last Monday in October, a similar day of thanksgiving was observed, and the same sentiments of reverence for the Creator, and dependence on His bounty, marked the official utterances there as in the United States.

We note this merely to mark the striking contrast it displays with the methods adopted by certain Governments of Continental Europe, where not only the name of God never appears in the State documents, but is expunged from every school book of the land. Though once Catholic, the officials in those countries, not only never dream of summoning the people to prayer, but expel them from the churches, confiscate the sacred edifices, and condemn the feeblest manifestations of religion as treason against the State.

It is also somewhat remarkable that the very day of our National Thanksgiving is the one on which three American citizens will kneel before the Holy Father to be invested with the insignia of the cardinalial office. The coincidence is, of course only fortuitous, but nevertheless the fact that the solemn and significant function is to take place on that day will add a new note of jubilation to this year's Te Deum. Hitherto the United States ranked only as a missionary country; now, four of its illustrious representatives are seated in the Senate of the Church, and are the recipients of an honor which not only announces to the world that religion is held in veneration in the land which is essentially the home of freedom, but proclaims to all nations, kingdoms, empires and republics alike that devotion to the Vicar of Christ is not an abdication, but a guarantee of individual and political liberty, and a pledge of an ardent and undying love and loyalty to one's native or adopted country. In brief, this year's celebration of the American Thanksgiving Day in Rome will give new heart to the valiant champions who in the various countries of the world are arrayed in battle against the enemies of Christianity and civilization.

Bon Voyage

We think it would be hard to find a parallel in American Church history for the magnificence of the public demonstration that was evoked by the departure for Rome, on November 14, of the eminent prelates who are to receive from the Holy Father the red hat, and with it the Cardinalial dignity on November 30. The universality, as well as the cordiality of the Godspeed tendered the illustrious churchmen by the citizens of a great centre of civilization, which with its five million inhabitants ranks as second in size and commercial importance in the world, might almost persuade a Catholic that he was living again in the Ages of Faith, when the arrival or the departure of a Roman Envoy was an event of national and historic importance. If the newspapers of the day reflect the sentiments of a people, the unanimity with which the metropolitan press recorded every incident attending the departure of the Cardinals Designate, Archbishop John M. Farley and Archbishop Diomedeo Falconio, bears witness, not only to the popularity of these representatives of the hierarchy, but furthermore to the recognition by the American people that Rome in bestowing her highest honors on these men has likewise honored America. It is not easy to single out for special mention any particular daily where all seemed to vie with one another in spreading before their readers the smallest details of the unusual event. Striking features incidental to the drive of the two Archbishops through the streets, the thousands of children waving national and Papal flags, the throngs along the highways leading to the Hudson River, the mounted escort of New York's finest, the multitude on the pier, waiting there patiently in the frosty morning air, to wish the great men bon voyage, all these and other accompanying scenes were made the subject of numerous illustrations which all but rendered the reading of the text superfluous. The Globe showed its enterprise by sending to Rome Mr. George H. Gordon, of its staff, to describe by letter and cable the ceremony of bestowing the title and the insignia of the high office on the coming Cardinals. As Mr. Gordon is attached to the suite of the Archbishops he will enjoy every facility for reporting fully the most important event in a generation to the Catholics of America. Day after day the incidents of the trip across the Atlantic were sent by wireless to countless readers, enabling them to accompany the party through every hour of the momentous voyage. If such has been the Godspeed for the departure, what shall be the welcome at the home-coming?

Plays That May Not be Patronized

After many postponements the Irish Players have plucked up courage and ventured to New York. No little courage, or assurance, was required. They have had a chequered career on both sides of the ocean. Wherever they appeared decent opinion has branded their productions as slanderous and immoral. Everywhere they have aroused passion and just antagonism, and in Boston as in Dublin they were compelled to rely on the protection of the police. They were denounced in every Catholic Church and by every Catholic Society in Washington, and both the Georgetown and the Catholic Universities have branded as forgeries invitations alleged by their managers to have been extended to them by those institutions. In their efforts to deceive the public they have stopped at no subterfuge. To counteract Catholic condemnation in Washington they claimed "the sanction of the Catholic Church in Boston"—because a Catholic mayor found no legal grounds to interfere with them.

The Mayor of New Haven, where the Yale students seemed to promise patronage, had no such scruples. One of their plays was allowed to be presented only after careful excision of obscene and immoral passages. "The play," said Chief Cowles, "was absolutely vicious. The lines addressed to one of the women were obscene and filthy, such as should be addressed to no woman on or off the stage." Another of their plays, "The Showing Up of Blanco Posnet," by the notorious Bernard Shaw, escaped his notice. "This play," he said, "which is forbidden on the stage in England, abounded in profanity, sacrilege and grossly offending lines. Had I known of it at the time, I would have ordered it off the stage." Many men and women, and a large number of Yale students, left the theatre in protest.

A correspondent writes that the acting is good and not all the plays are objectionable. We would go further and say that one of them, the only one he picks out as praiseworthy, is admirable. But this only intensifies our objection. "Cathleen Ni Houlihan," a patriotic Irish drama of a century ago, is used as a decoy to a series of productions that vilify the Irish priesthood and exhibit the Irish Catholic peasantry of to-day as devoid of decency, chastity and reverence, and of respect for any law, human or divine. We have had the stage Irishman. The Irish Players have invented the stage Irishwoman, of even a more degraded type. The better the acting of such plays, the more vicious the effect.

The judgment of a prominent New England daily, the New Haven Union, on the acted plays is in accord with our reading of them. Referring to Lady Gregory's claim that they "typify the idealism of the Irish race."

it protests that they attain no such an end: "The very poorest types were presented and the best characteristics were not portrayed. The Irish people are proverbial for their wit, humor, sympathy and ideality. The people of Synge's 'The Shadow of the Glen' did not possess one of these characteristics. . . . The Irish are proverbial for their happy, whole-souled nature. The Irish plays left their leading characters without the semblance of the milk of human kindness in their hearts. We protest that such pictures are not typical of Irish hearts or homes, even among the most poverty-stricken and lowliest of the Irish people."

The character of "The Well of the Saints," one of the first to be presented in New York, has been already outlined in AMERICA. No decent pen could describe it in detail. It is more immoral and far more blasphemous than "The Playboy," that has not yet been presented, an omission, however, which J. B. Yeats supplied by well advertised public reading. A vulgar-spoken priest is represented as working miracles "by the power of the water I'm after bringing," and the miracle is sought and obtained by Catholic peasants for the gratification of lust. Most of the other plays are in similar vein. Thus do Protestant playwrights "typify the idealism" of Irish Catholics. It is obvious that all who respect decency must refuse them patronage.

Porto Rico's New Institute

It is currently reported that Sugar Trust men of the United States are contributing funds to an industrial institute that has just been founded in Porto Rico. The new institute is to be established at San German, in the extreme western end of the island, and has at its head the Rev. J. Henry Wills, supported at present by the Presbyterian Board of Home Missions. A considerable offer of sugar plantation land has been made, and it is planned to have students of the institute work the sugar lands, and so learn how to work them well. The institute is starting with a budget of $25,000 a year, and efforts are to be made to establish a foundation of $300,000. That the Presbyterians should go into the sugar industry is quite in keeping with the business movement about to start in Protestant missions generally. It is the natural outcome of religious conditions among Protestants themselves. The future life appeals only to men who have a firm hold of the supernatural, and when this is lost sugar raising or coffee planting, or any means that will better one's social position will naturally present itself as an object worthy of ambition.

Heresy Hunting

Some time ago the directors of the Montreal Wesleyan Theological College dismissed the Rev. Dr. Workman from his professorship at the college, on the ground that his teachings were unorthodox. The trial was interesting. Incidentally it disclosed how little of revealed truth may be accepted by the twentieth century Methodist, and how complete the wreckage since the hurricane of higher criticism began to disport itself with the Wesleyan freighter.

The Virgin birth, the Bible story of the Fall of Man, the reality of Christ's and our own Resurrection, and even the divinity of the God-man, all were tossed overboard. The wonder is, how the shattered hulk still floats, sans cargo, sans ballast, sans chart, sans everything except wrangling and insubordinate sailors, who are steadily engaged in pitching one another overboard. The issue of the trial did not turn on the principal allegations against Dr. Workman. Judge Weir ordered that the directors of the Montreal Wesleyan Theological College pay the discharged professor $3,500 damage, holding that they had acted illegally, because if Doctor Workman had to be dismissed it should have been done by the Methodist General Conference. Heresy hunting is not always profitable to the hunter.

A New York newspaper, which seldom misses an opportunity of asserting a claim to be a moulder of the popular mind, published lately this item of news:

Professor Thomas Chamberlin declares that, "the true era of humanity will have begun when moral purpose and research come to be the preeminent characteristics of our race by voluntary action and by the selective action of the survival of the fittest, and when these attributes join in an unflagging endeavor to compass the highest development and the greatest perpetuity of the race."

Many, who resent the moulding operation, on reading this and other such pieces of inflated verbiage, begin to feel that the time has come to throw off the tyranny of the editor and of the professor. Even the Chinese are weary of doctrinaire rule.

Upholders of co-education maintain on a weak basis of fact that, "It refines youths to attend class with young ladies." That it often coarsens girls, however, has again been shown by a disgraceful occurrence that took place recently at MacAlester College, St. Paul. For when the "freshwomen" appeared in chapel one morning with new class caps their sisters of sophomore, after the service was over, fiercely attacked the offenders with fists and hat-pins, until the faculty parted the combatants. Could the roughest boys behave worse? Imagine such a scene taking place in a convent school!

The London Tablet publishes a full page advertisement of the "Encyclopædia Britannica." The casuistry back of this proceeding runs parallel with that of the New York Independent, which along with notices of new editions of the Bible, "Tissot's Life of Christ," "Catholic Manual of Prayers," and "Sermons" by a number of ministers, puts in a conspicuous place an advertisement of a novelette by Emile Zola, and informs its readers that it is "an unexpurgated version unfamiliar to the American public, and characterized by the bald realism that marks the work of the great French master. Cloth, deckled edge, $1.00." Thus a Catholic weekly flaunts an advertisement of an anti-Catholic work; a secular paper that would resent any reflection on its moral tone gives a prominent place in its columns to extol the merits of Emile Zola.

Apropos of Cardinal-Designate Farley's sending a wireless message from his steamer, the New York Times remarks: "The spectacle of a Cardinal of the Church which holds fast to the rulings of the Council of Trent using the wireless is both significant and interesting enough to suggest a new theme for Kipling."

To the ordinary intelligence, however, just what bearing the decrees of that great synod have on the use of the Marconigraph does not at once appear. As the Fathers of Trent confined their deliberations wholly to matters of faith and morals, the rulings of the Council are singularly free from any legislation against the Cardinals of the future sending wireless messages.

THE HIGHER LIFE

Superiors of religious orders and congregations in the United States are complaining of the difficulty they experience in securing suitable subjects as novices. It is feared that the life of the Gospel counsels may be losing its attractiveness to the youths and maidens of our land. Are the world's allurements exerting over the young Catholics of America such a witchery that scant heed is paid to God's call? Where selfishness and love of ease are strong, no doubt faith grows weak, and none but souls full of faith and generosity can find happiness in the cloister. Yet our academies and high schools surely are rich in boys and girls whom God has intended from all eternity should become religious, and who have all the qualifications too for such a career. Yet through lack of prayer, instruction, guidance or opportunity they never find the place in the Divine plan that is theirs, and in consequence attain neither on earth nor in heaven that measure of happiness they would have had, if they had only taken the vows of religion.

Any falling off just now in vocations cannot but cause deep concern to all who have at heart the Church's welfare in this country. For owing to the rapidity of her growth through immigration and conversions, there has likewise grown the need of a multitude of zealous and efficient men and women who will devote themselves to establishing or maintaining the numerous educational or charitable institutions that are required for safeguarding the faith and morals of thousands of Catholic children. But it is plain that zeal and efficiency for such work can nowhere be found in greater abundance than among those who are religious.

It is much to be desired then that the advantages of the religious state should be made to appeal forcibly to Catholic youths and maidens who are choosing their work in life. Ever since Our Divine Lord said to the rich young man "If thou wilt be perfect, go, sell what thou hast, and give to the poor, and thou shalt have treasure in heaven: and come, follow me"; and to His disciples, with regard to continency, "He that can take it, let him take it," there has been established in the Church the theory of the religious life. This means in practice the observance by vow of poverty, chastity and obedience with a view to imitating the life and character of Our Saviour, thus winning the reward of a hundred fold here and of life everlasting in heaven. He promises those who leave for His name's sake, home, brethren, parents or lands.

Let the poet Wordsworth tell of what this hundred-fold consists. Paraphrasing St. Bernard, he finds these words written over a monastery gate:

"Here Man more purely lives, less oft doth fall,
More promptly rises, walks with stricter heed,
More safely rests, dies happier, is freed
Earlier from cleansing fires, and gains withal
A brighter crown."

Lines as true as beautiful! For who would not wish to pass his days wholly free from grave sin? Yet, by exercising only ordinary care, so well shielded is he from temptation and so abundantly provided with aids to holy living, the religious can not only easily avoid all serious offenses against God's law, but numerous minor lapses as well. The good religious, moreover, is practising from morning till night fair virtues which in a convent or monastery are commonplaces, but would be the marvel of beholders if observed even in the most pious Catholics who are not religious.

Friars and nuns "more safely rest," too, because they know that those received into an order or congregation approved by the Church are always doing the Divine will, for it is conveyed to them by their rule and by the behests of their superiors. Free from care and concern for the morrow, exempt from the vicissitudes of secular and family life, religious can devote themselves wholly to the transaction of their Father's business, either by prayer and expiation, or by the exercise of teaching, of the care of souls, or of the corporal works of mercy. For according to the promise, as Father Meschler puts it:

"Poverty maintains, feeds and clothes religious, just as she gives them birth in the orders. Having nothing, they yet possess all things; they are needy and yet enrich many; are sorrowful, yet always rejoicing. Like the flowers, they labor not and spin not, and yet are arrayed in glory; like the birds, they sow not, or reap not, and yet their heavenly Father feedeth them. The 'dead hand' has become the most powerful and beneficent of all."

The promise made is indeed kept. For in return for the father or mother religious leave, they find several in the cloister; to compensate them for the sisters or brothers they have lost, they gain in religion hundreds, and in place of the one home they renounced, there will be a score in their order to welcome them.

The religious "dies happier," too, "and gains withal a brighter crown." For long before their last summons, they have given up all that makes death hard. They leave this world with joy and confidence because they believe that Christ who has promised to reward even the cup of water given in His name, will be particularly gracious to those who by their vows have given Him both fruit and tree. Fervent religious will go without fear to meet their Judge, for they have confessed Christ by the patient beauty of their lives, not merely for an hour or two as did the Good Thief, but for years and years. Devout religious finally will always be ready to go with gladness to meet the Bridegroom, and "hear the unexpressive nuptial song," because they are sure that God will never let Himself be surpassed in generosity, and in return for the holocaust they have freely offered Him by their vows, they will receive a "treasure in heaven" that in value and duration has no bounds.

WALTER DWIGHT, S.J.

LITERATURE

France and the French. By CHARLES DEWBARN. New York: The Macmillan Company. $2.50.

In this book the author sums up the impressions received during a ten years' residence, and he gives us from time to time things worth dwelling on. He does not admire the French method of arranging marriages, namely, an agreement of parents after a comparison of fortunes. Nevertheless, he tells us that "marriage without love is fairly common in England, and less common than one would suppose in France. By a merciful disposition of Providence the love seems to come after marriage." As a matter of fact, the French method considers, besides suitability of fortunes, social position, education, disposition, judged by those best able to do so, and, in its fulness, religion. As marriage is presumably a rational act, it seems that love should be the natural consequence of marriage so made, rather than "a merciful disposition of Providence." We Catholics, who know that marriage is a sacrament with its own special grace, must hold that the French method in its fulness is eminently Christian, and must look for the happiest results from it, both natural and supernatural. Those who prefer the arrangements common amongst English speaking peoples to-day might read with profit the history of the marriage of the younger Tobias.

Again, Mr. Dewbarn reminds us that in seeing France one does not necessarily see the French. Take Paris for instance. There is a Paris provided for tourists, which the Parisian, as such, rarely enters; and so the Moulin Rouge closed its doors when, during the Boer War, there were few of those English visitors, whose idea of seeing Paris is wider than that of the subject of Hood's lines:

"Mrs. Bill is very ill and nothing will improve her.
Unless she see the Tooleree and gallop through the Looover."

The great religious Paris is open to all, but few tourists care about it: as for social Paris, they can not penetrate it.

Talking of politics, Mr. Dewbarn notices the passing of the old short-lived cabinets with the perpetual turmoil of which they were the effect. He sees in this a sign of the consolidation of the Republic. Whether he judges rightly is open to question. Cabinets last to-day because the long war between the last survivals of Christian France and the Revolution is over for the moment. The Waldeck-Rousseau cabinet saw its closing: the violation of the concordat was its definite end; and Masonic France enjoys now the false peace that follows the triumph of injustice. How long this peace will last depends on many things, of which some that will have, perhaps, the greatest influence in the future, are hidden in God's Providence. Of the others, we may note two: the religious revival, of which there are signs already; and the fact noted by Mr. Dewbarn, that the leaders of the party in power come no longer from the traditional Liberals, but from the lower Radical Socialism. Whether they imitate Briand in abandoning former principles, or whether they use their office to apply these principles, their rise foretells new wars.

There is much in Mr. Dewbarn's book that no Catholic may admit. Thus, in blaming the horrors of the French Revolution, he maintains that its principles found in the Declaration of the Rights of Man, are unassailable. But these rest on the sovereignty of the people, which contradicts the idea of civil society contained in the Scriptures, taught by the Church and drawn by the wisdom of ages from nature itself, the necessary subjection of the multitude to legitimate authority. There are senses in which the sovereignty of the people must be admitted; as, for instance, that a people organized under authority is supreme in its own order, and that in a democracy the will of the people legitimately expressed must prevail. But these truisms are far from the theory of the Revolution; an error which the introduction of Evolutionism into every order has made more dangerous than ever. The Evolutionist assumes that human society is urged on necessarily to higher and higher perfection by intrinsic forces, before which no existing order, no established authority can have any rights. These may be profitable in their time and place; but when in the evolutionary process the inevitable moment comes, they must yield and even disappear before what is called indifferently the onward march of the race, or the expression of the sovereign popular will. Hence revolutionary upheavals condemned by reason and revelation as rebellion against lawful authority and, therefore, against God, its author, are the necessary struggling of society toward its higher perfection. In themselves they are good. Those attending circumstances of suffering for individuals are to be mitigated as far as possible; otherwise to be endured as the pangs inevitable of a new bringing forth.

From this false root came with logical necessity the personal equality of man, the preference to be given to the ideas of the lower classes who are more closely connected with the people working out its perfection, the abnormal freedom of speech and of the press as the organs the people must use in arousing itself to a forward movement, and indifference regarding religion. Between the Revolution and the only true religion, that of the Catholic Church, there must be irreconcilable antagonism. The function of the Church is to bind with authority the intellects and wills of men in order to direct them to their supernatural end. It is therefore on earth the supreme teacher of truth, the supreme judge of the morality of human actions. The theory of the Revolution can admit no such claim. Its forces are necessary in their working, they are ordained by God, nay even God Himself working in man; they are therefore necessarily good, and have their own morality, and therefore cannot be subject to any dogmatic or moral judgment of the Church limited as this is by circumstances of time, place, defect of knowledge in the judge, etc. In one word, the Revolutionary social philosophy is, in civil matters, what Modernism is in religious.

Mr. Dewbarn does not hesitate to pass judgment on the religious question, and it goes without saying that he does so in the sense of the proposition condemned in the syllabus of Pius IX: "The Roman Pontiff can and ought to reconcile himself with progress, Liberalism and modern civilization and to adapt himself thereto." How little reason there is to take him seriously and how scanty is his knowledge of Catholic matters, is shown by his view of the "lamentable mistake of the definition of Papal Infallibility." He says: "That the Pope can do no wrong is a hard doctrine." We thought that blunder was dead and buried. Another example of his ineptitude is, that all his religious women are "sisters of mercy." He takes a sneering tone when speaking of Catholic matters which, in one case, seems to bring its just punishment. Speaking of the coronation of Henry IV at Chartres, he says it could not take place at Rheims because that city "was in the hands of the English." Apparently, he was so taken up with preparing a sneer at the sacred ampulla that he fell unconsciously into this absurd blunder.

Mr. Dewbarn has a real capacity for observing and communicating his observations. Within his limits he is so entertaining and generally so sane, that one must regret his disfiguring of his works by going beyond them. H. W.

De Actibus Humanis. De Formanda Conscientia. Auctore, VICTORE FRINS, S.J. St. Louis, Mo.: B. Herder.

The present volume is the third in a series of excellent manuals on moral topics, by the venerable Father Frins, S.J. And although the author in his modest little preface laments that the book does not measure up to his desires and expectations, yet there can be no doubt either of its intrinsic worth, or of its value to those interested in moral theology. The volume is divided conveniently into three sections. The first contains a clear and sufficiently exhaustive treatment of ignorance, vincible and invincible, in its relations to morality. The second deals exclusively with conscience and the principles involved in the "formation" thereof. This part of the book is of especial importance to professors and directors of souls. No point of interest is left untouched, and though the treatment is at times necessarily brief, yet it is always clear and convincing. Moreover the author very wisely gives numerous references to the great authorities on the topics under discussion, so that teacher and scholar may pursue their study as far as they desire.

The third section of the volume though perhaps not as important as the foregoing, has an interest all its own. It deals with the vexed question of Probabilism. Here more than any place else, the author shows himself a perfect master of his subject. He brings all the powers of great learning to bear upon the different phases of the question, with an effect that will be most gratifying to advocates of the doctrine. His arguments are forceful and well marshalled, while his citations are of unquestionable value and always timely. He runs down the line of the great authors who have held different views on Probabilism, citing, explaining and answering difficulties honestly, and withal, skilfully. The volume is brought to a close by a short dissertation on the authority of St. Alphonsus, which will commend itself to all students of the doctor-saint by its clearness and moderation.

The book will be of great service to those who are engaged in the work of teaching moral theology in our seminaries, or in hearing confessions. For although the subject matter is by no means new, yet it receives here a fuller treatment than can possibly be afforded to it in the ordinary manuals of theology. This together with the fact that the author has the gift of lucid exposition, which is never hampered by the cumbersome Latin style nowadays so prevalent in our text books, gives the volume a unique value. R. H. T.

St. John Capistran. By FATHER VINCENT FITZGERALD, O.F.M.
St. Pius V. Pope of the Holy Rosary. By C. M. ANTONY. New York: Longmans, Green & Co.

These are two more of the "Friar Saints Series," those attractive little biographies the Dominicans and Franciscans are writing, and Longmans, Green & Co. are bringing out for the moderate price of fifty cents each. There are many points of contact between Pius V and John Capistran. Italians both, friars both, ascetics both and who also were, the one in the fifteenth and the other in the sixteenth century, above all reformers of the Church and defenders of Christendom from the Turk.

For St. John preached zealously against the heresy of the Hussites and Fraticelli and against wickedness in high places, while St. Pius was a relentless inquisitor, told a pope plainly that boys of twelve should not be made cardinals, and tried to check the spread of heresy by declaring a powerful queen deposed. It was this humble Franciscan friar who really saved Europe from a Moslem invasion, by lifting the siege of Belgrade, and this Dominican Pontiff was the soul of the naval expedition that again broke at Lepanto the power of the Crescent. W. D.

The Monkeyfolk of South Africa. By F. W. FITZSIMONS, F.Z.S. With 60 Illustrations. New York: Longmans, Green & Co.

"I wish it distinctly understood that this volume is a book of fact, the style adopted being solely with the object of trying to 'sugar-coat' the facts, and thus make them more presentable to young readers." Though some of our heirs expectant and other friends may surmise that we are becoming "young" again, we must say that we have relished hugely the feast that the author has spread for those youngsters whose years are still few. "I think," he says, "that if our boys and girls can be taught to take a real live interest in the Creator's handiwork, they will grow up truly and genuinely reverent."

The monkeyfolk do their own talking and tell their own stories in their own way; but, fortunately for us, Mr. Fitzsimons has translated them into plain English. How those odd quadrumanes live and labor and love their young and strive to help one another, how "knowing" they are and yet how shortsighted, what they eat, how they get it, who their enemies are and why there is endless war between them and the farmer are some of the things that they tell us. Incidentally, those monkeyfolk show a wonderful knowledge of boys and girls, and of what those same boys and girls ought to be, but they say it in a very gentle and kindly way. Happy the boy or the girl who can own, or even borrow, this book. * * *

The Reason of Life. By WILLIAM PORCHER DU BOSE, M.A., S.T.D. New York: Longmans, Green & Co.

Everyman's Religion. By GEORGE HODGES. New York: The Macmillan Company. $1.50 net.

Dr. Porcher is, we believe, a person of some consideration among Episcopalians. He seems to have a theological mind, to be endowed with considerable natural talent and to have read extensively, if not entirely profitably. What he needs is a course of dogmatic theology such as is given in our seminaries; and that without it he has attempted to discuss the questions implied in the title of his book, only proves the more clearly his need of it.

The modern world was introduced a few years ago to Everyman; who, as we all know, is a type with which all men are supposed to correspond. We know only one authority in this world capable of expounding the religion of Everyman, and it is not found in the precincts of Harvard University. It seems therefore rather presumptuous of Mr. Hodges to have undertaken the task. Having glanced over his book we have only this to say. Not only every Catholic, but also every Oriental schismatic and very many Protestants, would repudiate what he would pass off as the religion of Everyman. * * *

Narratives of Early Maryland. Edited by CLAYTON COLMAN HALL, LL.B., A.M. New York: Charles Scribner's Sons.

These narratives are reprints of a number of original documents to each of which the editor has prefixed an Introduction, which is a summary of the chapter. Such papers are naturally of great interest for the student of history. Thus, for instance, we have "Instructions for The Colonists by Lord Baltimore" (1633); "A Briefe Relation of the Voyage unto Maryland, by Father Andrew White" (1634); "Extracts from the Annual Letters of the English Province of the Society of Jesus 1634 et seq."; "Babylon's Fall, by Leonard Strong 1655." All these may be read in connection with Father Hughes' great work: "The History of the Society of Jesus in North America."

The Life of James Cardinal Gibbons. By ALLEN S. WILL, A.M. Litt. D. Baltimore: John Murphy Company.

The occasion of this biography as is well known was the twenty-fifth anniversary of the Archbishop of Baltimore's elevation to the Cardinalate, and the fiftieth of his priesthood. "I resolved," observed the author in his preface, "that if any compromise with the standards that should govern an impartial biography were encountered I would not proceed with the work and I have fully satisfied myself, at least, that this obstacle did not arise."

Mr. Will, who is the city editor on the Baltimore Sun, has brought to his work ability and enthusiasm, and his book will closely hold the interest of the many who will enjoy reading how a grocer's boy became a prince of the Church, and the best-known and most influential prelate in America. The author paints sympathetically the charm of the venerable Cardinal's character, and gives a good history of the wonderful progress of the Church in the United States during the past seventy-five years. * * *

The Lives and Times of the Popes. By THE CHEVALIER ARTAUD DE MONTOR. 10 vols. New York: The Catholic Publication Society of America.

It is quite an unusual thing for a Catholic publication society in America, or elsewhere, to give the public such an elaborate and beautiful series of books as these ten volumes on the "Lives and Times of the Popes." Indeed such a business venture could not have been made had the sets not been subscribed for. "Les Vies des Papes" by de Montor is, as every one knows, an old work, but the editors of this "Lateran Edition," as it is called, inform us that the present publication is a revision, a retranslation, and has been "written up to date." The scope of the writer was not to give us a great historical work which would enter into the details of the lives of the Popes, or furnish us with exhaustive studies of the times in which they were usually the most conspicuous figures. Indeed the restricted number of pages allotted to even the most illustrious occupants of the Throne of the Fisherman is sufficient evidence that such was not the intention. It is merely a brief chronicle of the rulers of the Church from Peter to Pius. The book is crowded with portraits of the Pontiffs, most of them of unusual excellence, and the choice of binding as well as the letter press, displays a very exquisite taste.

A writer in the New York Evening Post, discussing the line in "The Merchant of Venice": "The floor of heaven is inlaid with patines of bright gold," derives the word "patine" from the Spanish pateña or spangle. It is quite wrong, he assures us, to imagine that it refers to "the plate on which is placed," as he expresses it, "the consecrated wafer." Such patens would be, according to him, "too large, and besides they are of silver and not 'bright gold.'" Without animadverting on the offensive use of the word "wafer," or worrying about the patens being "too large," the theory is somewhat upset by the fact that the patens used on the altar are not of silver, as he fancies, but either of solid gold or gold plated.

In London, on November 16, a manuscript of the Apocalypse was sold at auction for $17,750. It dates from the fifteenth century and consists of 124 leaves. It is a paraphrastic translation with a copious commentary and glossary. It is thought to have been written in England for Margaret of York, sister of Edward IV. Against this claim, however, of its being executed in England is the fact that the miniatures are certainly not English, and were probably painted in French Flanders. Another Apocalypse, a block book of the same century, went for $6,000. It is bound in velvet and is very rare. A manuscript Antiphonarium brought $1,800. An "Ars Moriendi," a block book of the fifteenth century, of 25 leaves, sold for $7,500, and another of the same title for $1,050. A manuscript of St. Augustine's "Confessions" was knocked down at $750, and the "De Civitate Dei" at $810.

Placing as a motto on the title page:

"If thou of fortune be bereft,
And in thy store there be but left
Two loaves,—sell one, and with the dole
Buy Hyacinths to feed thy soul,"

James Terry White has prepared as soul-food "For Lovers and Others, a Book of Roses," namely some 150 sets of prettily printed verses, all of which are gracefully written and many full of deep religious feeling. The pages' backgrounds of changing skies may assist in producing "atmosphere" for the reader, but most of the illustrations hardly illustrate. Frederick A. Stokes Company are the publishers.

In the North American Review for November, Mr. Arthur Benington, Vice-President of the New York Branch of the Dante Alighieri Society, has an interesting paper which examines the great Florentine's alleged indebtedness to St. Peter Damian's "Opusculum XXXII." Professor Amaducci, the eminent Italian student of Dante, is of the opinion that the "Divina Commedia" has passages in it that correspond with the mystical interpretation St. Peter Damian gave the forty-two "mansions" or stopping places of Israel's journey in the desert. Mr. Benington holds, however, that Dante, "the voice of twelve centuries" does not derive his wonderful poem "in scheme and allegory from this one treatise of Damian's" wholly, but "that the latter influenced him and supplied him with many ideas there can be no doubt."

"Ecclesiastical unity was the curse of Western Europe," avers the Rev. Arthur C. McGiffert, summing up in the November Century the life and work of Luther. This is a novel view indeed. For most Protestants have the grace at least to deplore what they consider the unavoidable splitting up of Western Christendom into sects. To instance but one result of the rebellious friar's preaching, who can read of the cruel religious wars, with all their dreadful consequences, that ravaged Europe through the ensuing century, without being brought to the conviction that it was not the unity of the Church but rather Luther's severing of that unity that was "the curse of Western Europe."

BOOKS RECEIVED

The Lives and Times of the Popes. Including the Complete Gallery of the Pontiffs, reproduced from "Effigies Pontificum Romanorum Dominici Basse." Being a Series of Volumes giving the History of the World during the Christian Era. Retranslated, Revised and Written up to Date from Les Vies Des Papes, by the Chevalier Artaud de Montor. In ten volumes. New York: The Catholic Publication Society of America.
Short Readings for Religious. By the Rev. Father Charles Cox. New York: Benziger Brothers. Net $1.10.
Elevations to the Sacred Heart. From the French of Abbé Felix Anizan by a Priest. New York: Benziger Brothers.
The Story of Cecilia. By Katharine Tynan Hinkson. New York: Benziger Brothers. Net $1.25.
The Monkeyfolk of South Africa. By F. W. Fitzsimons. New York: Longmans, Green & Co. Net $1.25.
An Eirenic Itinerary. By Silas McBee. Impressions of Our Tour with Address and Papers on the Unity of Christian Churches. New York: Longmans, Green & Co. Net $1.00.
The All Sorts of Stories Book. By Andrew Lang. New York: Longmans, Green & Co. Net $1.50.
My Heaven in Devon. A Volume of Eucharistic Verse. By Olive Katharine Parr. New York: Benziger Brothers. Net 45 cents.

EDUCATION

There has been considerable discussion in British journals of late regarding the real value to the East Indian of the European education he is receiving. For many who begin their course at the government university, as dreamy Buddhists, are said to leave it restless materialists. But some idea of what is being done at the five Jesuit colleges in India to impart to the natives all that is best in Western culture may be gathered from AMERICA's correspondent in Trichinopoly.

St. Joseph's College has, during recent years, made phenomenal progress in the extent and efficiency of teaching, and the numerical strength of the scholars. Last year the college undertook to prepare candidates for B. A. honors (a course of two years after B. A. pass) in science and history. To meet the exigencies of recent evolution in science teaching a magnificent laboratory has been built. It is 167 feet long and 90 feet wide, with two stories, and consists of a double row of spacious rooms, divided by a corridor. About the laboratory equipment it is enough to say that it is scarcely surpassed by that of any other college in India. The study of the properties of matter, sound, heat and electricity, is carried on with the help of the best and most up-to-date scientific apparatus. Some of these are home-made, being either new inventions or improved adjustments. The practical chemistry room affords accommodation for 70 students to work at a time. Here under the direction of the professor, the students carry on private experiments in quantitative, both volumetric and gravimetric, analysis.

* * *

A part of the second story of St. Joseph's College is occupied by an excellent museum, with zoological, geological and historical collections. The lower groups of the animal kingdom are well represented by specimens from various parts of the world. The brilliant types from South America are conspicuous. Seven hundred large specimens of rocks, with numerous others awaiting analysis and classification, form the geological section. The historical department is in its initial stage, and exhibits some pre-historic stones and other antique curiosities.

* * *

The college staff consists of 100 teachers and professors, of whom 30 are Jesuit Fathers (23 French, 4 English and 3 Indians). Three of the Fathers are Fellows of the Madras University, and four chief examiners. The number of students at present (October, 1911) is 2,050, an increase of 300 since 1909. The percentage of Catholic students is about 35, a very creditable proportion, if we consider the missionary condition of India. About 500 of the Catholic students are boarders and 200 semi-boarders, who return home in the evening. The chief languages taught are English (compulsory in all classes), Latin, Sanskrit, French, Tamil, Malayalam and Telugu.

During the sixty-five years of its existence, the college has sent out into the world more than a thousand educated Catholics, and supplied about 150 candidates for the sacred ministry. The total number of graduates since 1880 is 750, of whom about 100 are Catholics. Some of the latter have climbed the higher rungs of professional success. One of the Catholic former pupils, Dewan Bahadur L. D. Swamikannu Pillay, M.A., LL.B. (Lond.), and Fellow of the Madras University, has been recently promoted to the Registrarship of the Co-operative Credit Societies—one of the most responsible offices under the Madras Government. Mr. Swamikannu is a good scholar in Greek, Latin and French, a very rare accomplishment for an Indian official. He is also the author of some valuable books: "The Bearing of Indian Astronomy on Indian History," "Phonal Series" (including a new system of shorthand), etc., published by Messrs. Higginbotham & Co., Madras. His system of phonography is singularly free from the intricacies and mysticism of the school of Pitman.

* * *

What is still more important for Indian Catholics, Mr. Swamikannu is a very active social worker, employing his influence and power in raising the social status of his fellow-Catholics. The Church in India, and St. Joseph's in particular, may justly be proud of Mr. Pillay, who combines in himself high intellectual and literary talents with a living, warm-hearted Catholicity. With Mr. Swamikannu as their leader, the majority of educated Catholics in South India are proud to look up to St. Joseph's as their great Alma Mater, and a most potent agent in the diffusion of Western and English education in India, with all the noblest and purest ideals, which in the hands of Christian masters it invariably tends to foster.

SOCIOLOGY

In Canada lately two clerks, one twenty-two years old, the other, twenty, contrived a system by which they robbed the bank employing them of eight thousand dollars, which they spent in riotous living. When they found detection imminent, they set the bank's office on fire, in order that, with the account books, the record of their crime might be destroyed. They were sentenced to the penitentiary, the elder, who was the chief agent in the crime, for three years, the younger, for two. Immediately sentimentalism was aroused. Their lawyer had told the judge that they were only victims of youthful folly, and that, if sent to the penitentiary, they would come out real criminals; and the Rev. C. W. Gordon, better known as "Ralph Connor," the author, pleaded their cause in his pulpit with sentimental eloquence. We are all criminals, he said, and between those outside the jail and those inside the difference is only of degree. "The boy, new to crime, fresh from his mother's home, his heart pierced with the shame of sin and with agonied penitence, is sent to comradeship with men old in crime, dead in vice, shameless and brutalized. Why punish at all? Three answers are given. First, to satisfy justice—words without meaning. Second, to deter from crime—a wise and necessary reason. Third, to reclaim the criminal—a main and God-like reason."

The judge who sentenced the young men, in giving their very deliberate crimes an apparently light sentence, recognized the fact that the disgrace the criminal suffers which is proportionate to his social position, is in itself a punishment to be reckoned with. Nevertheless, regarding the sentimental cry for discrimination, he said very appositely: "If this means that men of good bringing up and better education are to be treated more leniently than the men who are so unfortunate as to have been reared in a less favorable environment, then I don't believe in it at all." He added, what all who have experience must agree with: "The reformatory is more dangerous as regards contamination than the penitentiary. The worst boy cannot be kept apart there from the better ones. If a boy of seventeen has committed a crime to be punished by imprisonment, I think it is on the whole better that he should be sent to the penitentiary than to the reformatory. The discipline of the former is a great benefit to a young man going wrong." These words of one who has been administering the law for thirty years deserve serious attention.

Mr. Gordon mentions the three ends to be attained by punishment. Much remains, it is true, to be done for the reformation of criminals, but it is certain that the other two ends of punishment, which, if rightly understood, would be called "God-like," no less than the third, may not be sacrificed to it. Religious influence is the best agent of reform. By it we do not mean the sentimental influence some well-meaning people provide for prisoners, hymns such as "Where is my wandering boy to-night?" and sermons about the mother at home—why does Mr. Gordon suppose his young criminal to have just left his mother's house, not his father's? Is the young criminal always a widow's son?—may move momentary tears, but they rarely produce reform. This must be, ordinarily speaking, a supernatural work. It is founded in the divine order and forbids the ignoring of the obligation of satisfying justice and of performing exemplary penance. Humiliation, Christianity teaches us, must go before the moral resurrection, and the criminal must learn to accept his humiliation, even the striped prison suit, willingly and lovingly for the sake of Him who became for us the scorn of men, the outcast of the people, who humbled Himself for our sins to the death of the Cross. One must be rehabilitated before God and the angels before he may ask to be rehabilitated before men. But when the former is accomplished, Christian men and women are ready to forget the fact and to receive him as a brother.

Had Mr. Gordon understood this, he would not have uttered his foolish gibe at the first, the most universal and the most necessary of all punishment. He preaches, no doubt, that man is the image of God, that the whole universe, down to the least creature, shows forth the divine attributes. Hence not only the necessary physical order, but, still more, the moral order subjected to man's free will are expressions of the infinite wisdom of God and of His most just and holy will. If an individual, forgetting that he is God's image, deliberately violates God's moral order, public authority, God's representative, must exact from him the penalty. As heat is removed by cold and the sour by the sweet, so is the effect of self-will removed by constraint, and pleasure unlawfully sought is atoned for by pain. This the wisdom of all ages testifies to: it is denied only by the sentimentalists of to-day.

H. W.

PERSONAL

Next to Governor Foss, perhaps the most interesting personality in the recent election campaign in Massachusetts was that of David I. Walsh, the Democratic candidate for Lieutenant-Governor. About 3,000 votes transferred from the Republican candidate would have given him the election. The Springfield Republican of November 12 has the following notice of Mr. Walsh:

"David I. Walsh, the Democratic candidate for lieutenant-governor, early came to the front in the recent political contest as a star campaigner and lent grace and dignity to the oratory of his side. He got a bit impatient over Governor Foss's early delay and serene optimism and pushed out for himself. Later the governor waked up to the need of making a strong fight, and joined Mr. Walsh and the rest of the speakers on the Democratic ticket. But always Walsh was the one folks cared most to hear. Mr. Walsh is a successful lawyer, now of Fitchburg, but formerly of Clinton. He was born in Leominster, November 11, 1872, one of ten children. The late John W. Corcoran was a cousin. The father died in 1884, and the mother had a hard time of it. Two of the girls are teaching in the Clinton schools and three of the boys became lawyers, one of them having died. David I. Walsh took the course at Holy Cross College in three years. He had to work for a year before going to the Boston University Law School, where he was graduated in 1897. These facts cover a career of the kind calculated to hearten all youth who enter into the race of life under what might seem to be a handicap, but which in this case and so many others has helped to form character and to promote success. The Democratic party should keep Mr. Walsh in mind when it may have public honors to distribute, as is quite likely to be the fact as the result of the next presidential campaign, as things now look."

ECCLESIASTICAL NEWS

Advices from Rome confirm the report that the Archbishop of Seville, Spain, Mgr. Enrique Almaraz y Santos, will also be created a Cardinal at the Consistory of November 27, making eighteen in all who will receive the dignity on that date.

The creation of so many Cardinals at a Consistory though unusual is not unprecedented. Leo X in the sixteenth century created thirty-one.

The coming Consistory will also be notable for the preconisation of some three hundred archbishops and bishops in various parts of the world, an unprecedented number.

Of the 64 Cardinals who will form the Sacred College at the close of the Consistory 33 are Italians, and 31 non-Italians, divided into 7 French; 6 Spaniards; 6 from Austria-Hungary; 4 from the United States; 2 Germans, and one each for Ireland, England, Holland, Belgium, Portugal and Brazil. The religious orders will have this representation: three Friars Minor, one each for the Capuchins, Benedictines, Oratorians, Carmelites, Jesuits, Redemptorists, and Augustinians. The Redemptorist Father Van Rossum is the second member of that Congregation to become a Cardinal since its foundation by St. Alphonsus Ligouri, Cardinal Deschamps, Archbishop of Malines, being the other.

Cardinals Bisleti and Pompili are well known in England, where they have officiated as representatives of the Pope at important court functions. Cardinal Pompili is forty-seven years old and the youngest of the new dignitaries. He has for the past four years been Secretary of the Congregation of the Council. Cardinal Lugari, who was Assessor of the Holy Office, is sixty-five years old and practised as a consistorial advocate (canonical lawyer) until he was fifty, when he took holy orders and was ordained priest. He has been Assessor of the Holy Office for the past five years.

Archbishop Francis Bourne, the new English Cardinal, had an Irish mother, Ellen, daughter of John Byrne, a Dublin merchant. Mgr. Bourne was born at Clapham, March 23, 1861, educated at Ushaw and ordained priest in 1884. He founded the diocesan seminary at Womersley in 1889, of which he became rector, and in 1895 was consecrated Titular Bishop of Epiphania and Coadjutor for Southwark, to which See he succeeded in 1897. He was translated to the Archbishopric of Westminster in 1903.

The Redemptorist Cardinal-Designate, William Van Rossum, was born September 3, 1854. At the age of nineteen he became a Redemptorist, was professed in 1874, and ordained a priest in 1879. He was first appointed professor of the humanities at the Juniorate of Rermond, then professor of dogmatic theology, and finally Rector of the Scholasticate at Wittem, near Maestricht. Summoned to Rome in 1895, to take charge, in union with Father Fabre, of a higher institution of learning which the Redemptorists were planning and which was eventually established only in 1909, Father Van Rossum was kept in the Eternal City as Consulor of the Holy Office. Since April 15, 1904, he has been an active member of the commission which has charge of the codification of Canon Law. That Father Van Rossum is highly esteemed by his religious brethren for his prudence and austerity of life was shown at the time of the election of the Very Rev. Father Murray, C.S.S.R., as General of the Redemptorists, when he was the second choice of the electors. Father Van Rossum was elected Consultor-General, which is the same as assistant to the Superior-General.

Father Van Rossum has published a controversial work, "De Judicio Sacramentali"; a Latin version with critical theological notes of the dissertation of St. Alphonsus on Predestination; and a work on St. Alphonsus and the Immaculate Conception for the fiftieth anniversary of the promulgation of the dogma. However, his chief employment has been the editing of the reports of the Holy Office; the sound theology and good judgment he has displayed therein have for a long time been highly appreciated by the Holy Father. To him are due the recent classification and rearrangement according to scientific methods of the archives of the Holy Office at Rome. The new Cardinal is master of several languages, speaking Dutch, German, French and Italian with elegance, and understanding English and Spanish.

Of the Cardinals who were in the Sacred College when Cardinal Gibbons entered it only three besides himself—Oreglia, Neto and Capecehatro—survive, and in the whole Church there are only four bishops who have worn their mitres longer than his Eminence.

In addition to the elevation of Archbishop Bourne of Westminster to the cardinalate, the following has been officially announced in England:

"The Archbishop of Westminster has received communication of the Apostolic Letters whereby new ecclesiastical provinces are created at Birmingham and Liverpool, and the present Bishops of Birmingham and Liverpool are raised to the Archiepiscopal dignity. The Archbishop of Birmingham will have as Suffragans the Bishops of Clifton, Menevia, Newport, Plymouth and Shrewsbury. The Suffragans of the Archbishop of Liverpool will be the Bishops of Hexham and Newcastle, Middlesbrough, Leeds and Salford. The Archbishop of Westminster remains the Metropolitan of the Sees of Northampton, Nottingham, Portsmouth and Southwark, and is granted precedence over all the other Archbishops and Bishops, with the right to convoke and preside at all meetings of the Hierarchy, to act as representative of the Episcopate in all official negotiations with the Government, and to the use of the Throne, Pallium and Archiepiscopal Cross throughout the whole of England and Wales."

The statistics of the new provinces, as given in the current English "Catholic Directory," show these figures:

Province.	Priests.		Churches, Chapels, etc.
	Secular.	Regular.
Westminster .....	868	739	618
Birmingham .....	468	361	455
Liverpool .....	951	345	640

The numbers of churches and chapels do not include the private chapels of communities.

It is also stated in England that it is expected that there will be a further division of the dioceses, and that an Apostolic Delegate will be appointed for Great Britain and Ireland.

His Eminence, Cardinal Gibbons, was the surprised and delighted recipient, Friday, November 17, of $50,000 for the Catholic University at Washington. The method of making the presentation was as remarkable as the size of the gift. Coming unheralded, a gentleman, whose name the Cardinal withheld in the absence of permission to reveal it, but who he said was from Philadelphia, and a Catholic, called upon his Eminence and placed in his hands $50,000 in first-class securities for the establishment of a chair in Scripture in the new Gibbons Memorial Hall at the Washington University.

MUSIC

The past year has been a fruitful one for the cause of Sacred Music. In Rome an event of deepest significance has been the foundation of an "Advanced School of Sacred Music" by the famous Jesuit, Father de Santi. There all the seminarians and young clerics who are studying in Rome can receive a thorough training in liturgical music, ancient and modern. The courses take in the traditional chant of the Church, Classic Polyphony, and Modern Music in as much as it bears upon liturgical requirements.

Catholic art, and especially Catholic music, has not escaped the taint of heretical doctrine, and the Church is facing the necessity of reasserting herself as Teacher in her own domain. That Sacred Music is strictly within her domain is unquestionable in view of the fact that she has made of music an integral part of her ritual. It is therefore the wish of the Holy Father that the Church should train her own musicians, and the plan is being carried out by Father de Santi in the very centre of Christendom.

At Saragossa, Spain, an effort is being made in the same direction, though on a smaller scale. For the present the work has centred in the two Cathedrals (that of Seo and that of Pilar). An able Benedictine has been put in charge of the restoration of Gregorian Chant. In the mornings he undertakes the training of the clergy attached to the Cathedral, rendering the music allotted to the Celebrant. In the evenings he devotes his time to the singers, the choirmasters, and the organists, who come from all the churches of Saragossa to the number of forty or fifty each night. From this small centre the work is spreading rapidly.

In Paris the most important event has been the "Congress of Liturgical Chant and Sacred Music," held during the early summer in honor of the fiftieth anniversary of the first Congress of Church Music, held at Paris in 1860. It is noticeable that French musicians arrived at an appreciation of liturgical music, through a certain delicate and unerring perception in matters artistic, many years before our Holy Father drew the attention of the world at large to the religious necessities of the case. To the Jubilee Congress this summer were invited all those who took a serious interest in religious art, all loyal supporters of the Church's rulings in matters of liturgical music. It was a notable gathering. The highest authorities, ecclesiastical and artistic, cooperated; a number of the best choirs in the city lent their services, among others the famous "Chanteurs de Saint Gervais" and the choruses from the Schola Cantorum of Vincent d'Indy. Each day opened with a solemn high Mass, which was followed by lectures on the theory and practice of liturgical music, with practical demonstrations, and, discussion of the individual experiences and difficulties of those who attended.

Were such a congress possible in this country, it would fill a real need. Though discussion would doubtless have to be confined to the more elementary aspects of the subject, it would be none the less useful, but would serve to reveal wherein lies the special difficulties that confront our own parishes, and it would encourage cooperation and mutual help among those who are striving to bring about better conditions throughout the country. For whether a musician has been holding firmly to high artistic ideals in spite of local misunderstanding and even opposition, or whether he has allowed himself to drift with the tide, succumbing to the allurements of a cheap personal triumph, it will brace him to come in contact, for a while at least, with a set of people among whom serious artistic standards prevail. The stimulus of contact with trained minds, the opportunity to discuss ways and means, to compare methods of achievement, and for some, to learn in concrete form what they have dimly perceived but were unable to carry out,—all this would be of incalculable value in the beginning of so great a movement.

We sincerely hope that such a Congress can be organized in this country during the course of the next few years. Meanwhile we propose to give a brief summary, from time to time, of the activities of the various dioceses and parishes throughout the United States, and of the steps which they have taken to conform to the regulations of the Holy See in the matter of Sacred Music during the past eight years. We shall be glad to receive information as to the form in which the regulations of the Holy See have been put in force in the various dioceses, the progress made in the churches, and to what extent the systematic teaching of music has been introduced into the schools. We hope in this way to encourage those who are valiantly leading the way, and show the more timid by practical example how the problem can best be dealt with, how it has successfully been dealt with in various parts of the country, and demonstrate that the difficulties of conforming intelligently to the requirements of the Holy See are not so great as would appear at first sight. J. B. W.

SCIENCE

In view of the fact that creosote is the chief commercial preserver of woods, it is of interest to know just what may be the volatilization of its component oils after it has entered the pores of the wood. The United States Forest Products Laboratory has investigated this matter in the case of loblolly pine with the following results: the lighter components of creosote, when separated by distillation and separately injected into the woods, volatilize much more rapidly than when combined in the original creosote. It seems possible that with light treatment, in which the ducts and cells of the wood are not filled with creosote, but the cell walls are simply coated with oil, there would be a lesser tendency to the sealing, more or less, of the outer cells and so to the preventing of the volatilization of the lighter oils in the interior of the wood. In the course of the experiment a loss of weight was noticed in the wood treated, and it was surmised that it might be due to the evaporation of the water in the wood. This was proved not to be the case, as pieces having a low moisture co-efficient treated with an equal quantity of the same component, lost as much, if not more, than pieces with a higher moisture co-efficient.

Pure platinum is quite as soft as untempered iron, and needs, for most commercial processes, hardening. Up to date this has been effected by the addition of iridium. W. C. Heraeus has recently found that osmium is far superior for this purpose. He contends that two per cent. of osmium imparts as much hardness as does five per cent. of iridium, and that besides the elasticity of the metal is greatly increased. There are, however, some difficulties encountered in forming the alloy. The presence of even a trace of copper or of iron in the platinum considerably neutralizes the effect of the osmium. Again, if osmium is added in excess of twenty per cent. the alloy becomes brittle. The alloying must be effected in a deoxidizing atmosphere, as the osmium readily oxidizes and the fumes are highly poisonous.

Dilatations and contractions in the volume of solids, liquids and gases, are usually explained in the physics lecture room by the increasing and the diminishing of the interstices between the molecules of these substances. In a recent lecture before the Chemical Institute of the Royal Society, Professor Theodore W. Richards, of Harvard University, questioned very emphatically the existence of these interstices or empty spaces. He pointed out that the behavior of solids indicates that their atoms are in close touch with one another. Glass, as the experiments of Landolt prove, is impermeable to oxygen, nitrogen and water for long periods. Hydrogen is an extremely attenuated substance, yet palladium expands in occluding it; and platinum, nickel and iron do the same, though to a less degree. Professor Richards answered the objection, which he styled apparent, against this notion of the continuity of matter, namely that with the particles in condensed material touching one another, heat phenomena are impossible of explanation, by saying that if atoms are compressible, and experimental evidence is convincing here, they may contract and expand, or vibrate within themselves, even when their surfaces are prevented from moving by being closely packed together. It is possible, he added, to conceive vibration, even in contiguous atoms, provided these atoms may be looked upon as elastic throughout all their substance. We are glad to note that so distinguished a chemist is beginning to return to the Scholastic doctrine of continuous quantity.

Discussing the action of the air on coal, M. Lecrivain says: All coals suffer characteristic oxidization in air, with the ultimate result of spontaneous combustion if the oxidization continues for a sufficient time. The process of slow alteration he classifies as so many stages. First, the physical state of the coal is altered. The surface oxidization causes minute fissures which rapidly extend clear through the lumps. Secondly, the coal suffers a change of weight. There is a loss consequent to an escape of moisture and occluded methane, as also of hydrocarbons formed by the partial decomposition of the coal. Surface oxidization occasions a gain in weight. Thirdly, there is a loss of calorific power and a deterioration of lighting and coking values. Lastly, the available by-products are diminished and the quality of the coke lessens. The quantity of ammonia salts recoverable may decrease fifty per cent. in three or four months. Storage under water is recommended as the safest procedure to meet these losses.

F. TONDORF, S.J.

OBITUARY

Right Rev. Monsignor Charles J. Kelly, rector of the Church of Our Lady of Grace, Hoboken, N. J., was called to the reward of his faithful labors on November 16. The devoted priest had been afflicted for a year with anæmia, but until October 15 he was able to attend to his duties. On that day he viewed the parade of the Holy Name Society. A day or so afterward he was forced to take to his bed. Monsignor Kelly was born at Plainfield, N. J., on February 2, 1857, educated in the parish school and St. Charles' College, Md., and graduated from Seton Hall in 1877. He then took the theological course at Seton Hall Seminary and was ordained on June 7, 1881. His first assignment was as assistant at St. Aloysius' Church, Newark, from which he was transferred in 1884 to St. Mary's Church, Jersey City. He founded the Holy Name Society in that parish and established the Catholic Club, for which he built a club house that cost $75,000. The death of Father Corrigan, pastor of Our Lady of Grace, Hoboken, left a vacancy that required a man of business ability to fill, as the parish was heavily in debt. During Monsignor Kelly's administration extensive improvements were made, a large school and an orphan asylum were built, and the debt reduced to less than $5,000. The death of this zealous and worthy priest leaves a wide gap which it will not be easy to fill. The memory of his good works, of his eloquent words and priestly life will long remain as an inspiration to the clergy and laity of the Newark diocese.

The Rev. John Connolly, S.J., who died on November 15, at Sault Ste. Marie, Canada, was for several years editor of the Canadian Messenger of the Sacred Heart. He was born March 31, 1848, and as a seminarian entered the Jesuit novitiate near Montreal, September 9, 1870. He taught theology in the Jesuit scholasticate, held the office of Superior in several houses of the Order in Canada, and was widely known as an efficient and zealous priest.

Longmans' New Books

"Does anyone still maintain that we have no Catholic literature in English? Let him read Father Russell and be convinced that we have."—America.

Among the Blessed

Loving Thoughts about Favorite Saints

By the Rev. MATTHEW RUSSELL, S.J., author of "At Home with God," etc. With 8 full-page illustrations. Crown 8vo. $1.25 net.

By CANON SHEEHAN

The Queen's Fillet

$1.35 net; by mail, $1.50

"... A well-connected and fascinating narrative of the French Revolution, one of the best and truest of the numberless romances which have been woven around that wonderful epoch."—America.

"It is a powerful and interesting story and a historically instructive one."—Ave Maria.

The Education of Catholic Girls

By JANET ERSKINE STUART. With Preface by the Archbishop of Westminster. Crown 8vo. $1.25 net.

"In this little volume we have the ripe experience of a life devoted to a religious to the education of our girlhood set forth in an atmosphere of graciousness which is as sweet as it is practical."—Tablet.

THOUGHTS OF A Catholic Anatomist

By THOMAS DWIGHT, M.D., LL.D., late Parkman Professor of Anatomy at Harvard University. Crown 8vo. Pp. x-243. $1.00 net; by mail, $1.10.

"In every chapter will be found an exposition of present-day doubts and difficulties that contains interesting valuable material and statements of fact and logic that will carry conviction."—Dr. James J. Walsh in the Ecclesiastical Review.

LONGMANS, GREEN, & CO.

Fourth Ave. & 30th Street, New York

If Soda Crackers Grew on Trees

Nature would cover them with shells, like nuts, protecting from moisture, mildew, dirt and insects.

Just so are Uneeda Biscuit protected by the moisture-proof, dust-proof package. It keeps them oven-fresh and crisp, retaining all their flavor and goodness till used.

Think it over and you will always buy the protected kind

Uneeda Biscuit

Never Sold in Bulk

5¢

In the moisture-proof package

NATIONAL BISCUIT COMPANY

McCray Refrigerators

"Proven Very Satisfactory"

McCray Refrigerator Co., Kendallville, Ind.

GENTLEMEN—The large cooler placed in St. Joseph's Sanitarium by your Detroit agent has, during the short time we have used it, proven very satisfactory, articles placed in the compartments keeping perfectly dry and sweet. Your icing from the outside is a very desirable feature in the way of cleanliness, which is very much appreciated by all.

Respectfully yours,
SISTERS OF CHARITY,
St. Joseph's Sanitarium Mt. Clemens, Mich.

McCray Refrigerators

are made in all sizes for every purpose that requires perfect refrigeration Books describing the different varieties will be sent free on request:

- No. A. H. Built-in-to-order for Residences
- No. 88 regular models for Residences;
- No. 67 for Grocers;
- No. 59 for Meat Markets;
- No. 48 for Hotels, Clubs and Institutions;
- No. 72 for floral shops.

McCray Refrigerator Co.

254 Lake Street, Kendallville, Ind.

Display Rooms and Agencies in all Principal Cities.

Sacred Heart Sanitarium

FOR REST, QUIET, RECUPERATION AND HEALTH

Unsurpassed results obtained in Nervousness, Rheumatism, Heart and Stomach troubles. No surgical, hospital nor insanity cases taken. A delightful, homelike, restful place—ideal for all run down conditions. Hydrotherapy, Electricity, Massage, Zander Gymnasium, Sun parlor; swimming pools, billiards, bowling, etc. Gaited saddle horses, large indoor riding pavilion; suspended running track connected by tunnel with bath department. 17-acre park.

A staff of five physicians give their exclusive services to the patients.

WRITE SISTER SUPERIOR FOR BOOKLET X. MILWAUKEE, WIS.

The Coward Shoe

"REG. U. S. PAT. OFF"

33 Out of Every 100 School Boys are Flat-footed!

This is the recent statement of a prominent Public School Official, and doubtless an even greater proportion of arch weakness would be discovered among school girls.

Among physiologists, it is generally admitted that "flat-foot" is a frequent cause of spinal trouble, as a broken arch throws the body in strained positions.

Orthopedists agree that proper mechanical support is the only effective remedy for falling arch and "flat-foot." Leading surgeons endorse the COWARD ARCH SUPPORT SHOE as the one which is anatomically correct and helpful.

This shoe, made on the Coward Orthopedic Last, allows the foot to meet the ground in a natural manner. The extension heel and arch support, steady the ankle, raise the sagging muscles, and encourage correct walk and carriage.

Wearing this Coward Shoe, holds the arch structure in its normal position and prevents and corrects "flat-foot."

The Coward is the original Arch Support Shoe. The public is cautioned against imitations. The genuine is sold only at the one Coward Shoe store.

The effect on the ankles of wearing shoes that do not support the arch.

The same feet in a pair of COWARD ARCH SUPPORT SHOES—ankle strain entirely relieved.

Coward Arch Support Shoe and Coward Extension Heel, have been made by James S. Coward, in his Custom Department, for over 30 years.

JAMES S. COWARD 264-274 Greenwich St. NEW YORK
Near Warren St.)

Mail Orders Filled

Sold Nowhere Else

Send for Catalogue

COLLEGES AND ACADEMIES

HELEN AUGUSTA HAYES

VOCAL INSTRUCTOR

64 East 34th Street
NEW YORK CITY

Academy of St. Joseph In-the-Pines

BRENTWOOD, N. Y.

A Boarding School for Young Ladies,

Affiliated with the State University

PROSPECTUS EXPLAINS THE TERMS, ETC.

The Only True American School System

Rev. THOMAS J. CAMPBELL, S.J.

PAMPHLET 24 PAGES

5 Cents per Copy. $2.50 Per Hundred

THE AMERICA PRESS 59 East 83d Street
NEW YORK

Boarding & Day School HOLY ANGELS PORT LEE New Jersey

Conducted by School Sisters of Notre Dame

Location beautiful, healthy and convenient.
New Buildings, large gymnasium.

DEPARTMENTS: Academic, course of four years; Commercial, course of two years. Grammar and Primary Departments separate. Special advantages in Music and Art.

FOR YEAR BOOK ADDRESS SECRETARY

Convent of the Holy Child

SHARON HILL, DELAWARE COUNTY PA.
15 Minutes from Philadelphia

ACADEMY FOR YOUNG LADIES

Highest English Course. French, Drawing, Music by Certified Teachers. Preparation for foreign travel. As the numbers are limited, special care can be given to the formation of character and training of each child.

Address: Mother Superior

IMMACULATA SEMINARY

Mount Marian, Washington, D. C.

Select School for Girls. Situated in the Suburbs

Classical, Literary and Special Courses.

Two-Year Course for High School Graduates.

Music and Art. Abundant outdoor exercise.

Sightseeing with experienced Chaperons.

For Year Book address, Sister Secretary

ST. MARY-OF-THE-WOODS

COLLEGE

For Young Women. 71st Year
4 Years. Degrees, B.A., B.S., Ph.B.

Academic—College Preparatory—and Grammar Departments. Elective Courses. Conservatory of Music, Vocal and Instrumental. Art Studios.

Natatorium, Gymnasium, Bowling, etc. Out-of-Door Sports, Horseback Riding, Boating, Archery, Tennis. For Bulletins, Address, Sister Secretary, Box 70, St. Mary-of-the-Woods, Vigo County, Indiana.

WE OWN AND OFFER

$70,000 First Mortgage $500 Real Estate Serial Gold Notes

EXECUTED BY

The Sisters of the Humility of Mary. "Mother House."

(A Corporation of Ottumwa, Iowa)

Total Issue, $70,000

Our Appraisement of Properties, $202,500

Rate of Interest  $5\frac{1}{2}\%$  payable semi-annually

Interest Coupons payable April 1st and October 1st of each year at office of Mercantile Trust Company, Saint Louis, Mo., Trustee in Deed of Trust securing this issue of notes.

Principal Notes of $500 each, payable serially as follows:

Numbers 1 to 8, both inclusive, on	October 1, 1914.....	$ 4,000
" 9 to 18, " " " "	October 1, 1915.....	5,000
" 19 to 30, " " " "	October 1, 1916.....	6,000
" 31 to 50, " " " "	October 1, 1917.....	10,000
" 51 to 70, " " " "	October 1, 1918.....	10,000
" 71 to 90, " " " "	October 1, 1919.....	10,000
" 91 to 110, " " " "	October 1, 1920.....	10,000
" 111 to 140, " " " "	October 1, 1921.....	15,000

Total Loan (closed mortgage)..... $70,000

Security Appraised at $202,500

First: A first Deed of Trust on St. Joseph's Academy at Ottumwa, Iowa, comprising a lot of ground having a frontage of 214 feet on East Fourth Street by a depth of 198 feet to an alley, together with the improvements, consisting of a three-story stone and brick building occupied as the Mother House and Academy. An excellent piece of property in the business center of Ottumwa, just opposite the County Courthouse of Wapello County, a very creditable building. A conservative valuation of this property is $50,000.

Second: A first Deed of Trust on a beautiful tract of land containing 125 acres lying on the outskirts of the City of Ottumwa, conservatively valued at $20,000.

There is just being completed on this tract a modern fire-proof three-story and high-basement brick and stone Academy building, contract price for erection of which is $132,500, without any furnishings, making the total value of the security $202,500, or approximately three times the total loan.

In addition the notes are the obligation of the Mother House of the Order who conduct establishments in the Archdiocese of Dubuque and in the Diocese of Davenport and Great Falls.

Title to properties above described examined and certified to by J. J. Smith, attorney at Ottumwa, and also by our counsel, Judge R. L. Goode.

Notes may be redeemed by makers on October 1, 1913, or any interest date thereafter, by giving 30 days' advance notice and paying a premium of 2 per cent. in addition to principal and accrued interest.

Insurance required by Deed of Trust for protection of note holders, $72,000 fire and $36,000 tornado insurance.

Notes are payable to bearer, but may be registered free of charge in name of purchaser.

A safe and convenient investment of \$500 or multiples, netting purchasers  $5\frac{1}{2}\%$  per cent. for periods of from three to ten years.

Purchases by non-residents filled with the same dispatch as locally. Price, par and accrued interest.

REAL ESTATE
LOAN DEPARTMENT

Mercantile Trust Company

Eighth and Locust Streets
ST. LOUIS, MISSOURI

FESTUS J. WADE, President.

J. B. MOBERLY, Real Estate Loan Officer.

Capital and surplus Nine and One-half Million Dollars.

THERE ARE TWO REASONS

Why we send our Daus' Improved Typewriter on ten days' trial. FIRST—It proves OUR confidence in the machine. SECOND—By personal use you can positively tell, before buying, whether it meets your requirements. Each machine contains roll of "Dausco" Oiled Linen Back duplicating Surface which can be used over and over again. 100 copies from pen-written and 50 copies from type-written original. Complete Duplicator, cap size, (prints 3 1/2 x 13 inches). Take advantage of our trial offer. Price $5.00
Felix G. Daus Duplicator Co., Daus Building, 111 John St., New York

Sarony

Photographer

256 Fifth Ave., New York

Favorably known to the Clergy and Laity for many years

WITH GLACIER WINDOW DECORATION

YOU CAN GET

Stained Glass Effects
on Ordinary Windows

Suitable for Residence
Churches and Schools

Special Ecclesiastical Designs

Write To-day for Booklet 6

Address WM. B. QUAILE, 752 Broadway, New York

DENTISTRY

Loose teeth tightened by a new process; teeth without plates. Extracting avoided. High-class and up-to-date dentistry in all branches at reasonable prices.

DRS. BURKE & BURKE
DENTISTS

1947 BROADWAY AND 65TH ST
66th St. Subway, L station and all surface cars.

$1.00 WILL BRING POSTPAID

one of our
Fine Gold Filled
5 year guaranteed
ROSARIES

In any color. Order through your jeweler or direct. Also 10 and 20 year and Gold Rosaries Catalogue free.

Dept A Wm. Purnell Co., Mfg. Jeweler, 37 Maiden Lane, N. Y.

MENEELY BELL CO
TROY, N.Y. AND
177 BROADWAY, N.Y. CITY.
BELLS

ISAAC JOGUES

Discoverer of Lake George

BY T. J. CAMPBELL, S.J.

Aside from its historical value it presents a vivid pen picture of a saintly and heroic missionary, with all the stirring setting of early pioneer days.

55 PAGES

9 ILLUSTRATIONS

Leatherette, 25 cents; green silk cloth, gilt top, deckled edge, 50 cents; edition de luxe, full flexible green cowhide, stamped with gold, gilt top, deckled edge, $1.00.

By mail 10 cents extra

THE AMERICA PRESS 59 East 83d St.
NEW YORK

THE

Ideal Christmas Gift

THE most intimate and enduring and satisfactory Christmas Gift, the greatest and also the least costly source of lasting pleasure is

A WELL-CHOSEN BOOK

A choice selection of distinctive books, especially suitable, are

Pioneer Priests of North America

By REV. THOMAS J. CAMPBELL, S.J.

VOLUME I

Among the Iroquois

AN INTERESTING STORY OF THE MISSIONARIES AMONG THE IROQUOIS

"For lovers of history and biography, of the adventurous, the heroic, and the saintly, there is much to attract the attention in this volume of over 300 large, clearly printed pages."—The Sacred Heart Review.

"The adventures of most of the missionaries read like romances."—The New York Herald.

"One of the most interesting Catholic books we have ever read."—The Monitor (San Francisco).

333 Pages

27 Illustrations

Price $1.60

By Mail
20c extra

VOLUME II

Among the Hurons

TELLS THE HEROIC STORY OF DE BRÉBEUF AND HIS ASSOCIATES.

"Father Campbell has done well to continue in a second volume the record set forth in his first, dealing with the heroic labors of the Catholic priests, mainly Jesuits, in North America in the years subsequent to the first settlement. That was a moving and memorable story, already made familiar to thousands of readers through Parkman, but it has been much amplified as to details and circumstances by Father Campbell."—The Literary Digest.

480 Pages

24 Illustrations

Price $2.00

By Mail
20c extra

VOLUME III

Among the Algonquins

THE ETHNIC GROUP THAT FIGURED MORE EXTENSIVELY IN OUR HISTORY THAN ANY OTHER INDIAN FAMILY.

"Even to those of other persuasions, 'Among the Algonquins' offers the opportunity for serious and interesting reading, where solid historical worth is matched by charm of style and vigor of conception."—N. Y. Evening Sun.

"Father Campbell, in the course of his account of Sebastian Rale's missionary career, strenuously combats the view of him that was held by his New England contemporaries and the judgment passed upon him by many American historians."—N. Y. Times.

336 Pages

22 Illustrations

Price $2.00

By Mail
20c extra

Mary Aloysia Hardey

Religious of the Sacred Heart 1809-1886

with an introduction by the

Rev. Thomas J. Campbell, S.J.

The Life-Story of a Remarkable Woman

"It is worthy tribute to a great soul."—The Irish Monthly.

"We congratulate its author and the AMERICA PRESS in giving us such a valuable work dealing with the life and labors of this eminent and noble religious."—New World, Chicago.

"Teachers especially will find the life abounding in valuable suggestions."—The Republic, Boston.

440 Pages 16 Illustrations With Index

Price $2.00

By Mail
20c extra

Pilgrim Walks in Rome

A Guide to the Holy Places
in Rome and its Vicinity

By P. J. Chandlery, S.J.

Third edition enlarged

$1.25 postpaid

Special Combination Offer

Volumes I, II, III, Pioneer Priests, regular prepaid price, $6.20 per set, now can be had prepaid for.....$5.00

Mary Aloysia Hardey and any single volume of Pioneer Priests, prepaid at special price of.....$3.75

Single Bound Volumes of America, regular price $3.50, now prepaid at special price of .....$3.00

Bound Volumes of America, 1, 2, 3, 4 and 5, regular price $17.50, now prepaid at special price of.....$14.00

The America Press, 59 East 83d St., New York City

The Noblest Christmas Present

For the Smallest Cash Outlay

For Your Home
For Your Pastor

For Your Parish School
For Your Public Library

But Especially For Your Home

There is no holiday offering of magnitude that presents the same qualities of immediate worth and permanent value as does

The Catholic Encyclopedia

and there is no present of real value that can be accomplished with so small a cash investment. (See offer below.)

The high character of the text, the superb quality of the illustrations and the beauty and taste of the entire mechanical make-up of the work—all these things have commanded the admiration of critics the world over, so that no other Encyclopedia has been so universally praised.

From the thousands of letters testifying to the greatness and importance of the Encyclopedia, we present extracts from three whose writers are known to all readers of "America":

Three Specimen Letters

FROM THE THREE NEW CARDINALS

From CARDINAL FARLEY

To the Editors:

With the last published volume of The Catholic Encyclopedia open before me, I must write you my warmest congratulation on the rare success that has attended your labors during the past six years. Already over three-fourths of the vast undertaking has been completed without a halt in the excellence of matter and method of treatment promised in the first volume. Rather has the work gone on improving as each volume appeared.

You will be pleased to learn that Right Reverend Bishop Kennedy, Rector of the American College, Rome, through whom the last three volumes were recently presented to the Holy Father, writes: "His Holiness was delighted with the three volumes of the Encyclopedia, calling it a monumental work."

Very faithfully,
Your servant and friend in Christ,
✠ JOHN M. FARLEY.

From CARDINAL FALCONIO

Charles G. Herbermann, Ph.D., LL.D.

My Dear Doctor Herbermann:

I congratulate you and your associate editors upon the rapidity with which the various volumes are following one upon the other.

I am also glad to observe that this important Catholic publication corresponds to the most sanguine expectations of the Catholic clergy and laity, and I heartily endorse the approbations sent you by the highest ecclesiastical authorities of America. Catholic interests owe a great deal to you all.

With best wishes I pray God to bestow upon you his choicest blessings, and beg to remain,

Faithfully yours in Christ,
✠ D. FALCONIO.

From CARDINAL O'CONNELL

Condé B. Pallen, LL.D.

Dear Dr. Pallen:

The Catholic Encyclopedia is undoubtedly one of the greatest projects, from a Catholic literary point of view, thus far attempted in America, and, of course, its usefulness can scarcely be measured in words.

There certainly can be no excuse hereafter for misreprehension or ignorance of Catholic principles with such a succinct and correct resumé of them at hand as The Catholic Encyclopedia furnishes.

The Encyclopedia appeals to the intelligence from every point of view, and it should need no further recommendation. It is simply a necessary book for anyone interested in Catholic matters.

Yours very sincerely,
✠ W. H. O'CONNELL.

We now have twelve volumes ready for delivery, and these will be shipped to any address promptly upon receipt of your order, and the remaining volumes as rapidly as they come from the press.

You can make this splendid present without feeling the outlay during the holiday period. Make one little payment with order, or on delivery, and we will arrange for the payment of the balance in a way that you will not miss the money.

Cut out the coupon in the corner and mail it to-day so that we may submit sample pages and full information for your prompt action.

Robert Appleton Co.

39 West 38th Street, New York City

MAIL THIS COUPON TO-DAY

Street.....

City.....

Name.....

AM.
11-11

ROBERT
APPLETON
COMPANY,
39 West 38th St.,
New York City

Please send me complimentary Prospectus and full information.

DIRECTORY OF COLLEGES AND ACADEMIES

Georgetown University WASHINGTON, D. C.

Directory for Catalogues or Information

The College (Graduates and Undergraduates)
Schools
The Registrar, 37th & O Sts., N. W.

The School of Medicine
The Dean, 920 H St., N. W.

The Training School for Nurses
Georgetown University Hospital

The School of Dentistry
The Dean, 920 H St., N. W.

The School of Law
The Dean, 506 E. St., N. W.

The Astronomical Observatory
The Director, Georgetown University

Rev. Joseph Himmel, S.J., President

College of St. Catherine, St. Paul, Minn.
A Catholic College for Girls.

Accredited by the Minnesota State Board of Public Instruction and by several prominent Universities.

Seventy Acre Campus. Fireproof Buildings.

COMPLETE COURSES IN THESE DEPARTMENTS.
THE COLLEGIATE, leading to the degree of Bachelor of Arts. THE ACADEMIC OR COLLEGE PREPARATORY. MUSIC AND PAINTING in their various branches. DOMESTIC ART, HOUSEHOLD SCIENCE and COOKING. Year Book Forwarded on Application. Address: THE SECRETARY.

St. Mary's College

St. Marys, Kansas

BOARDING COLLEGE
Under the Jesuit Fathers

Two Courses of Study:
Classical and Commercial

For Catalogue, send to
REV. ALOYSIUS A. BREEN, S.J., President

Georgetown Visitation Convent

A boarding and day School for
Young Ladies and Little Girls

Delightfully Situated on Georgetown Heights

WASHINGTON, D. C.

Founded in 1799 Address Sister Directress

St. Mary's College & Academy

MONROE, MICHIGAN
FOR YOUNG WOMEN AND GIRLS

CONDUCTED by the Sisters of the Immaculate Heart. Beautifully located between Detroit and Toledo. A high standard maintained for sixty-five years in Culture, Education and Discipline. Courses include Collegiate, Academic and Preparatory. Special attention given to Music, Art, Expression and Domestic Science University affiliation. Separate department for little girls.

For illustrated prospectus apply to Mother Superior

MT. ST. JOSEPH ON THE WISSAHICKON

For illustrated catalogue address MOTHER SUPERIOR, Chestnut Hill, Philadelphia, Pa.

CATHOLIC COLLEGE FOR WOMEN
situated in the romantic Valley of the Wissahickon. Degrees conferred. Also Academic, Commercial, Intermediate and Elementary Departments. Very special advantages in Music and Art. The piano student possesses superior opportunities in the use of the Virgil Clavier Method pursued throughout the course. The Art Studio is admirably equipped, and every attention is given to the study of Art, both in theory and practice. Gymnasium perfectly equipped. Outdoor exercise, tennis, basket ball, fencing, etc.

The Winona Seminary, Winona, Minnesota

CATHOLIC COLLEGE FOR WOMEN
Faculty of Specialists. Separate college residence. Confers degrees B.A., B.S. and Litt. B. Full college preparatory courses—certificates accepted by all leading universities. Secretarial course. Conservatory of Music confers degree of B. Mus.—visiting director, Emil Liebling. Departments of Art, Household Economics, Dramatic Expression. Private Rooms. Moderate Prices. Splendid Gymnasium. Extensive Campus. Students from thirteen States. Direct lines of railway from Chicago, Milwaukee, St. Paul, St. Louis.

Earnest, capable young women who have a purpose in study are solicited.
WRITE FOR CATALOGUE DEPARTMENT BULLETINS

HOLY CROSS COLLEGE WORCESTER MASS.

Conducted by the Jesuit Fathers.

Largest Catholic College in America

Extensive grounds and exceedingly healthy location. New buildings, large gymnasium, indoor running track, hot and cold baths, modern conveniences. Easily reached on main line from Albany or New York to Boston via Springfield. Board, tuition, washing and mending, use of gymnasium, library and reading room, physical instruction and medical attendance, $260 a year. Furnished room and attendance extra. Send for catalogue to
PREFECT OF STUDIES.

Seton Hall College

FOUNDED 1856

South Orange, New Jersey

COLLEGE AND HIGH SCHOOL

Bayley Hall for Students
of Grammar Course

FOR CATALOGUE ADDRESS
Very Rev. James F. Mooney, D.D., Pres.

A CATHOLIC INSTITUTION FOR THE HIGHER EDUCATION OF WOMEN

College of Mount Saint Vincent On Hudson

CITY OF NEW YORK

DAY PUPILS AND BOARDERS

Location Unsurpassed for Convenience, Healthfulness and Beauty
One-half Hour from Grand Central Station

PROFESSORS OF DISTINCTION . . . . . EQUIPMENT OF THE BEST

COLLEGE—Four years' course leading to the Degrees of B.A. and B.S.

SCHOOL OF PEDAGOGY—Required for entrance two years of college work

FALL TERM BEGINS SEPTEMBER 25, 1911 . . . WRITE FOR PROSPECTUS

PREPARATORY DEPARTMENT

ACADEMY MOUNT SAINT VINCENT ON HUDSON

CITY OF NEW YORK

FOR TEACHERS AND PUPILS

One Hundred Best Catholic Books

CATHOLIC MIND No. 8

A useful little pamphlet for classes in English literature

5 cts. each. $4.00 per hundred

THE AMERICA PRESS 59 EAST 83d STREET
NEW YORK CITY

AMERICA

A CATHOLIC REVIEW OF THE WEEK

Vol. VI, No. 8

(Price 10 Cents)

DECEMBER 2, 1911

($3.00 a year)

Whole No. 138

CHRONICLE

The Cardinal on Peace Treaties—Case of the Packers—Bank President Convicted—Gompers Attacks Socialism—General Reyes Arrested—Mexico—Central America—Canada—Great Britain—Ireland—France—Italy—Germany—Bavarian Center Party—Persia—China.....169-172

QUESTIONS OF THE DAY

The Sacred College of Cardinals—College Rowdyism—Socialism for Youth—With Workers for Boys in their Teens—Religious Intolerance in Russia—Surrendering the Philippines.....173-179

CORRESPONDENCE

Mexico's New National Catholic Party—Spain's Case By a Spaniard.....180-181

EDITORIAL

French Chivalry—Luther and Dr. McGiffert—Peace and Arbitration—National Municipal League and Socialism—Ineffective Censoring—A Merited Reproof—Modern Ithacans—Who Cares for the Kaiser?—Notes.....182-185

THE GAELIC MOVEMENT.....186-187

LITERATURE

Important Papers on Socialism—The Superstition Called Socialism—The Golden Spears—Notes—Books Received.....187-189

EDUCATION

Alfred Moseley Finds our Public Schools Lacking in Thoroughness—Official Statistics and Other Impartial Critics Indorse this Conclusion

—Seismological Work at the Jesuit Colleges of North America .....190

ECONOMICS

Banks and Banking—The Lines on Which Safe Investments Must be Conducted.....191

ECCLESIASTICAL NEWS

The Consistory for the Creation of the New Cardinals—Cordial Reception of Cardinals Falconio, Farley and O'Connell by the Pope—His Holiness Praises the Zeal of American Catholics and Applauds the Progress the Church has Made in the United States.....191-192

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Pedagogic Fads for Catechism Classes—Catholic Art Guild for Men.....192

CHRONICLE

The Cardinal on Peace Treaties.—Cardinal Gibbons in a recent interview makes a masterly presentation of the arguments of the arbitration treaties advocated by President Taft. The Cardinal brushes all technical objections aside and urges the use of every proper device to prevent the carnage and horrors and barbarism of war. "I am in favor of the general arbitration treaty principles," the Cardinal says, "and I indorse the idea of the new treaties with Great Britain and France because I believe that questions that might otherwise result in war should be first taken away from the influence of party politics and considered seriously in the calm, neutral air of some impartial tribunal." The Cardinal calls attention, besides the other horrors of war, to its effects upon the non-combatants—the soldier's family and friends at home, who are living in an agony of fear, and the injury to trade. The countries of the earth have become so closely related by the progress of civilization and its appliances for intercourse as to be a family of nations; no two of them can engage in war without injuriously affecting citizens of other nations. The United States, therefore, is interested in maintaining not only its own peace but the peace of the world.

Case of the Packers.—Chief Justice White on November 23 refused to grant a stay in the trial of the Chicago beef packers, but referred the attorneys making the application to the entire court, with the statement that the matter was of too much importance for him to pass on individually. The ground for the application was gone over in some detail before the Chief Justice announced his decision. On the other hand, Judge George A. Carpenter, in the United States District Court in Chicago, granted the indicted men a delay until December 6, pending proceedings for the defendants before the United States Supreme Court. Counsel for the packers will seek further delay when the Federal Supreme Court reconvenes in Washington on December 4.

Bank President Convicted.—William J. Cummins, former head of the directors of the defunct Carnegie Trust Company of New York, was sentenced to serve not less than four years and eight months and not more than eight years and eight months in State's prison for appropriating for his own use a trust fund of $149,000. This is the maximum sentence for a first offender. Cummins was convicted by a jury in the Criminal Branch of the State Supreme Court. Justice Seabury, on application of the condemned man's counsel, issued an order directing the District Attorney to show cause on Wednesday, November 29, why a certificate of reasonable doubt should not be granted. The order also granted a stay of execution pending the result of argument on the motion.

Gompers Attacks Socialists.—At the recent convention of the American Federation of Labor at Atlanta, Ga., a resolution was offered "respectfully requesting" its officers to resign from the National Civic Federation, in which the labor leaders associated with Andrew Carnegie, August Belmont and other so-called "enemies of organized labor." After a stormy debate, during which the Socialists rallied to the support of the resolution, the convention refused its endorsement by a vote of 11,849 to 4,559. President Gompers bitterly assailed the Socialists in a speech in defence of the Civic Federation. He said in part: "There is nothing we can do to please the Socialist party unless we go over, body, boots and breeches, to that party. Then they will remain quiet as long as we remain subordinate to that party. If they had succeeded in passing this resolution they would offer something else, anything to antagonize the trade movement as a militant force of this country. Their idea is that the whole nation should be brought to a state of poverty and then, by some cataclysm, they would come into their own and take charge of society. If the theory of the Socialists is right then the work of the American Federation of Labor is a waste of time and ought to be abandoned."

General Reyes Arrested.—The United States is determined to stamp out revolutionary activity along the Mexican border. This was reflected in orders issued by the Secretary of War directing General Duncan to take all necessary steps to enforce the neutrality laws without awaiting orders from the department. On a warrant charging him with violation of the neutrality laws, General Bernardo Reyes was arrested in Texas. Indictments were returned against Reyes and five alleged co-conspirators by the federal grand jury at Laredo, on the charge that they were preparing to launch a revolution to overthrow the Madero government of Mexico. The names of Emilio Vasquez Gomez and Emilio Zapata are linked with that of Reyes in the reported effort to overthrow the Madero government. Three pronunciamientos, published over the printed name of General Reyes, were seized in Laredo. They are dated at Soledad, Mexico, and purport to be an offer by General Reyes of his services to the people of Mexico in the character of Provisional President. General Reyes said the manifestos were printed without his authority.

Mexico.—The Italian Minister to Mexico having made some uncomplimentary remarks about the Turks, a Turkish subject challenged him to a duel, which his position prevented him from accepting. A certain "General Magnaggia la Rocca," however, accepted it, for the honor of Italy; but it soon developed that the "general," who ostentatiously wore a large and varied assortment of knightly decorations, was a poor harmless natural, and his decorations were home-made. No duel yet.—The administration has requested the Congress to authorize the withdrawal and use of twelve million pesos of the reserve fund.—U. S. Ambassador Wilson has asked the Government to send Federal troops to Torreon, where the lives and property of American citizens are in danger from striking workmen, whose number reaches about ten thousand. President Madero has informed the strikers that their action is inopportune and that they are playing into the hands of the enemies of the people.

—The attempt at a new revolution, says Emilio Vasquez Gómez, is due to Madero's action in forcing J. M. Pino Suárez on the country as vice-president, thus repeating the fatal blunder of Díaz. The new vice-president made the usual affirmation on November 23, having left his post of Governor of Yucatan in charge of a member of his family.—The State of Oaxaca, the home of Juárez and Díaz, is in revolt against Madero, and is disposed to set up an independent government.—The U. S. Government and the State of Texas have taken energetic measures to prevent filibustering. General Reyes is out on bail.

Central America.—The prospective union of the five republics, with President Estrada Cabrera of Guatemala as President of the confederation, has been coldly received by Salvador and violently opposed by Costa Rica. However, a special envoy from Costa Rica arrived in Guatemala early in November with the object of smoothing away the difficulties by diplomatic maneuvers. The five republics became a part of Mexico in 1822, as the supposed result of a general election. Three years later they broke away and formed the United Provinces of Central America. The confederacy lasted eighteen years. Frequent attempts have been made to revive it.

Canada.—The bilingual school question is becoming important in the Ontario elections. Mr. Foy, the Attorney-General and a Catholic, has declared that they must not exist. Sir James Whitney, the Premier, says that they do not exist; but he promises, notwithstanding, a solution of the difficulty. The fact is that there is no difficulty in the matter. Whatever difficulty there may be arises from the anti-French spirit of a section of the people. One would think it was more important to make French an obligatory study in all schools, when one sees that the Speaker of the House of Commons in Ottawa does not understand it, and has to vacate the chair when a French Canadian member speaks.—Sir Wilfrid Laurier brought up the naval question in the House and Mr. Borden declared his policy. This is the abandonment of the so-called Canadian navy as both expensive and useless, and the submitting to the people of the question whether Canada shall contribute efficaciously to the Imperial navy or not.—The reaction in favor of the Conservatives is showing itself in provincial elections. In Alberta, where the Legislature is almost solidly Liberal, the Conservatives have gained three seats in by-elections. In Nova Scotia they have gained two, and in Prince Edward Island they have defeated the Liberal Government and gained a majority of two in the House.—The Ottawa Telegram, which ought to be well informed, announces that the Duke of Connaught will take part in no Masonic function while in office. He had been invited to lay the corner-stone of a Masonic temple.—The famous Hébert case has been settled for the present. Miss Cloutier prevailed on to appeal from the decree declaring her marriage null. Mr. Hébert's lawyers have allowed the case to go by default, and so Miss Clouatre is legally Mrs. Hébert; but the question of the effect of canon law in Quebec remains untouched. Mr. Lancaster has introduced a private bill into the House of Commons at Ottawa to provide for the validity throughout Canada of every marriage performed by any person authorized to perform any marriage ceremony. It is not likely to pass, but even if it should, its constitutionality would be questioned.

Great Britain.—The Unionists have won South Somerset, the second of the seats opened by the elevation of Liberals to the peerage. It was a straight contest in a constituency that was Liberal even during the Unionist ascendancy.—Some light is being thrown on the exchange of offices between Messrs. McKenna and Churchill. It appears that when England was on the verge of war with Germany lately the fleet was short of supplies and was not fully manned. The Government may find itself in difficulties over the failure of the Fisher naval policy of skeleton crews and the Haldane territorial army, though the former is a legacy from the Unionists.—The Women's Suffragists have resumed their violence on account of Mr. Asquith's refusal to introduce a clause in their favor into the Manhood Suffrage Bill he has promised. The women met at Caxton Hall and set out for Parliament. In Parliament Square they were met by 1,800 police, and over two hundred were arrested. On their route they broke the windows of the National Liberal Club and of many other buildings. They were led by Lady Constance Lytton, Miss Pankhurst, the Hon. Mrs. Haverfield and others of high station. The march on Parliament was itself gravely illegal. Those arrested refuse to pay fines and so have been sent to prison. The Government has to choose between the fiasco of about a year ago and the treating of these women as ordinary prisoners.—Lord Ashton, owner of mills in Lancaster, has withdrawn a promise of increased wages. He told his workmen that he has always sought their good, that he has kept his works going in bad times in order to give them employment, and that he has always paid the best wages possible. In return he finds agitation that makes his position intolerable, and he will close his works forever sooner than submit to it. He added that should the works be closed through railway or coal strikes he will pay no wages. The workmen have responded with an address professing loyalty, but acknowledging the existence of agitators. Lord Ashton is now engaged in weeding them out.—The London and Northwestern Railway has made further concessions to its men, and these are opposing the contemplated general strike. The Great Western is likely to follow its example.—The South African Government has ordered that as the state railways are used by both English and Dutch, it is necessary that the employees who deal with the public must know both languages.

Ireland.—The finance of the coming Home Rule Bill is becoming the main subject of political discussion. The general opinion is that there can be no "full self-government" without fiscal independence, namely, that Ireland shall control and collect the Customs and Excise duties, which the Gladstone Bills reserved to England. Among other evidences that this solution is finding favor with the Government, Hon. Thomas Lough, M.P., an influential Liberal and an authority on finance, writes in the Nation: "Two-thirds of the Irish taxation are derived from Customs and Excise, and the country can enjoy no control over her finances if this vast proportion of her revenue is dealt with at Westminster." Pointing out that indirect duties on necessities yield less than half the taxation in England, but three-fourths in Ireland, that their social and economical differences make it impossible for a single Custom House to work equitably for both, and that there can be no such knowledge of the articles imported or exported as would be required for building up intelligently the fabric of economic prosperity without separate Irish machinery for the purpose, Mr. Lough continues: "A Custom House is the indispensable first step to reestablishing an industrial Ireland. In itself it will make large incidental branches of business possible, such as public warehousing in bond and advances on produce, which have now to be carried on almost exclusively in Great Britain." He also insists, as a corollary to fiscal independence, that the Irish members shall be excluded from Westminster, as in the first Gladstone Bill. Allowing Irishmen to interfere in English affairs while exclusively managing their own would be unprecedented and intolerable. A measure of this kind will not only satisfy Ireland, but become popular in England, for "it will restore a free Parliament to Great Britain." The claim is also made that the control of the Post Office is a necessary part of "full self-government."—The agitation started in Limerick against the importation of the British Sunday newspapers has assumed practical form in Dublin and many provincial towns. Vigilance committees are being formed, whose business is to see that newsagents and newsvendors will not supply or stock such wares. The success of the movement in Limerick has been complete, and the Lord Lieutenant has written to the London Vigilance Association in enthusiastic praise of the Irish committee's resolute action.

France.—The secret treaty made in 1904 between France and England with regard to Morocco was made public on November 24. According to its provisions, England and France agree to give each other a free hand in Morocco and Egypt respectively. To test the sincerity of this pact Germany sent the Panther to Agadir; the speeches of Asquith, Lloyd George and Sir Edward Grey let it be known that the agreement was intended to be kept. Besides matters affecting themselves, the contracting powers concede a certain amount of Moorish territory near the Spanish presidios to Spain in case the Sultan ceases to exercise his authority there. Part of the seacoast also was to be administered by Spain.

Italy.—The Government has authorized an extraordinary expenditure of $65,000,000 to cover the cost of the war for November.—Several repulses of Arabs were reported by Caneva, and news was sent to the Home Government of the burning of a village which was bombarded by a warship.—The bad weather which subjected the Italian troops to so much inconvenience and danger has ceased.—The desirability of a blockade of the Dardenelles is being discussed but nothing definite, as far as the public is aware, has been decided upon.—Two vessels have bombarded villages on the coast of Arabia.—Eight thousand Italians have registered in New York at the recruiting headquarters for two years service in the army. The Consul thought that about 5,000 would be found fit to be sent as soldiers.—From Ottoman sources comes the report that the Turks have reoccupied the greater part of the oasis where the massacre occurred, and by daily attacks are preventing the Italians from extending their front; and also that two weeks ago the Italians made an attack from the sea in front of Fort Hamedieh, but that 200 of them who succeeded in landing were captured and all but 5 were massacred; also that on November 15 the Turks made a descent on the Italian outposts at Rigdaline during a hurricane and captured five quick firing guns and a quantity of ammunition.—The famous picture by Fra Angelico which was known as Madonna della Stella and valued at $500,000, stolen lately from the Museum San Marco, in Florence, has been found and the thief captured.

Germany.—The diplomatic relations which existed between Germany and England during the Moroccan controversy have now been made public by the German Secretary of State. They show that although Germany had on the first of July notified Great Britain, as well as the other powers, of her reasons for dispatching the Panther to Agadir, no reply was received from the English Government until July 21, when the speech of Lloyd George well might precipitated a war. From this date to July 27 the situation remained most critical. The threat of England did not affect the attitude Germany had taken in resolutely forbidding all interference on the part of England in the Morocco treaty. It was only when, on July 27, the English Government formally announced that it would in nowise be involved in this controversy, that the imminent danger of open hostilities and the outbreak of a possible war was definitely avoided. From this time forth the negotiations drew gradually towards a peaceful conclusion.—The leaders of the various parties are unanimous in their approval of the stand taken by the Government. A desire is expressed on many sides that an immediate publicity should have been given to these conditions. This, however, might only have precipitated a war, which was evidently to be avoided if possible.—The German press points to the strained relations still existing between England and Germany. "The acute crisis is past," writes the Kölnische Zeitung, "but the situation still remains most serious. Germany is awaiting with even greater anxiety than England the explanation of the English Government. On this will depend the future relation between the two countries, whether they are to be distrustful and unfriendly, or whether a better understanding can be effected. Germany hesitates to believe that a war between two of the world's great Powers can develop over night without any real question at issue; but recent events have spoken only too plainly."

Bavarian Center Party.—A serious disagreement, which sprang up between the Center Party and the Minister of Commerce, von Frauendorf, who was supported by the entire Ministerial Council, led to a dissolution of the Bavarian House of Representatives. The Center had severely criticised the governmental policy for having displayed weakness in dealing with the South German Railway Union, a purely Socialistic organization. It demanded that the governmental authority should be firmly upheld, and that no elements whose avowed object was the destruction of such authority should be allowed to enter into public office. The debates which followed upon this protest led to a situation which made impossible for the time all cooperation between the Center and the Ministerial Council, and finally brought about the dissolution of the House. The announcement of this act was met with resolute silence by the members of the Center. The latter had ruled the House during the preceding sessions with a majority of ninety-eight representatives, as against sixty-five from all other parties combined. Of the latter twenty-five were Liberals and twenty Socialists. It is expected that a block will be formed of practically all other parties to contest the supremacy of the Center, which is probably facing one of the most severe battles in its history. The elections are to take place on the third of January.

Persia.—Mr. Shuster, the American head of Persia's Treasury Department, fell foul of Russia when he seized the property of the ex-Shah's brother, who was thought to be conspiring against the State. The Czar's ministry at once protested, demanded the restoration of the property and an apology from Persia. So when a regiment was dispatched to enforce Russia's claims, Persia humbly apologized. Mr. Shuster will probably have to resign, as his financial reforms interfere with English and Russian plans for absorbing several Persian provinces.

China.—The situation is not much changed. On November 18 our minister took the precaution of ordering all Americans to leave the interior for the nearest port town.

QUESTIONS OF THE DAY

The Sacred College of Cardinals

I. THE ADVISERS OF THE EARLY POPES.—Although the Bishop of Rome, the Visible Head of the Church, when speaking from the Chair of Peter as the Supreme Teacher of revealed truth, is safeguarded, according to the divine promise, from all error in what concerns faith and morals, this does not hinder him nor, much less, excuse him from availing himself of those natural and ordinary helps which prudence may suggest. From the earliest ages, therefore, we see that the Popes were wont to call together the clergy of Rome for consultation on weighty matters of faith, discipline and Church affairs in general. This assemblage was known as the presbyterium, or presbytery. Prelates who chanced to be in Rome were commonly invited to attend the presbytery and to take part in its deliberations. Thus Pope St. Cornelius, writing in 251 to St. Cyprian, says that he had assembled a presbytery and that five visiting bishops had taken part in it.

II. ROMAN COUNCILS.—Many of the Popes, including St. Damasus, Felix III, and St. Cornelius himself, held councils which, from their nature, were neither provincial nor plenary nor general nor ecumenical, but in a class by themselves and simply Roman; for they were attended by all bishops that could conveniently reach the city. Most of the prelates, therefore, were from Italy and the neighboring countries. Some of these councils were very numerous attended. One held under Pope St. Agatho in 680 brought together one hundred and twenty-five bishops, and another under Pope St. Sylvester in 325 saw 275 prelates gathered around him. These councils, nevertheless, could not be held with great frequency, for the difficulties of communication and travel were too great to be overcome, and hence the Pope's main dependence for advice and help was the presbytery.

III. THE "TITLES."—When the surcease of persecution permitted the free multiplication of churches, a means of distinguishing one edifice from another was found by giving to each the name of some saint, and this name was called the "title" of the church. Parish churches, where holy baptism was administered, were the first to receive this distinguishing mark. By the sixth century there were in Rome twenty-five parish churches, each with its own title. Soon the two terms, parish church and title, became interchangeable; so that if an ecclesiastic was called, for example, the priest of the title of St. Chrysogonus, it signified that he was the parish priest of the Church of St. Chrysogonus. Soon, also, arose the practice of raising men to the priesthood for service in some particular church, which thus came to be called their title (or church) of ordination.

Here is seen the origin of the expression used nowadays to indicate the different reasons for raising a young man to the priesthood. If he simply wishes to be a priest for his own consolation and spiritual good, and intends to live on the income from his own property, he is ordained under the title of patrimony. If, as is often the case in countries long Catholic, a sum has been put out at interest for the maintenance of a priest, a seminarian may secure the appointment, if there is a vacancy, in which case his title of ordination is a benefice. In religious Orders and Congregations the candidate for major orders is ordained under the title of poverty, to which he is bound to vow. Pious associations of secular priests may have a "common table" as their title. In the United States the diocesan clergy are ordained under the title of "service of the Church," that is, for work in the diocese. The bishop undertakes to secure their proper maintenance, of which they will not be deprived except for grave shortcomings. Here, as in all things human, mistakes have been made and unmerited hardships have sometimes been imposed. The object of the "title" is quite manifestly so to provide for the maintenance of the clergy that they may never be compelled by untoward events to seek a livelihood in ways not becoming their state of dedication to God's service.

IV. INCARDINATION AND CARDINALS.—But, back to the early ages. By the bond which attached the priest to a certain church or "title" he was said to be "hinged upon" that church, and to it he looked for decent sustenance. The particular church itself was called his "hinge" (in Latin, cardo), and hence the priest was styled "cardinalis," because of his connection with that church or cardo. Several of these "cardinales" might be attached to one church, as a parish priest may now have one or more assistants. In the fifth century, for example, we find in the same document the signatures of three priests "of the title of St. Clement."

In our time and country some dioceses are well supplied with priests, while others are in great want. It often happens, therefore, that a bishop will permit some of his priests to go to toil for several years in the vineyard of his needy colleague in the episcopate, or he may even allow them to sever their connection with the diocese and join the other. In this case they are "incardinated" in the new diocese. Our English word is of respectable antiquity, for Pope John VIII, writing on October 28, 876, to the bishops of the ecclesiastical province of Bourges, in France, told them that he had "incardinated" Frotarius in the church of Bourges. The Pope's meaning was that he had made Frotarius Archbishop of Bourges by attaching him to the cardo or church of Bourges.

V. CARDINAL DEACONS AND CARDINAL BISHOPS.—It was in 240 that Pope St. Fabian appointed a deacon for each of the seven districts of the city. The duties connected with the office were to look after the needy and the suffering and to take charge of a little oratory or chapel, where the faithful could gather for their devotions. From such humble beginnings sprang the seven deaconries which, after Constantine gave peace to the Church, though they were not parish churches, received distinctive names. As the deacons were also attached to some church, they too were known as "cardinales" of that church, because incardinated in it.

Near enough to Rome to make the journey comparatively easy, there were seven towns, each the seat of a bishop. These seven prelates, consequently, were often summoned to advise with the Pope and his presbytery when matters of moment were to be discussed. This practice having continued after the Pope had his episcopal chair in the basilica of St. John Lateran, the prelates of the seven suburban sees were considered as attached in a special manner to the Pope's cathedral, and were therefore called "cardinales" of the Lateran church. The expression is found in documents of the pontificate of Pope Stephen III (768-772). By a decree of Pope Calixtus II, in 1119, two of these suburban dioceses were permanently united under one bishop. Thus there were first Cardinal Priests, then Cardinal Deacons, and finally Cardinal Bishops. The earliest known use of the word cardinal in a signature is appended to a letter of Pope John XIII to Landulph, Bishop of Benevento, bearing the date May 26, 969; but twenty-four years later a Bull of Pope John XV has attached to it the signatures of nine "Cardinal Priests." From that time on the examples multiply rapidly. The present usage is founded on a Constitution of Pope Sixtus V, who ordained in 1587 that Cardinals in signing apostolic documents shall invariably express their Cardinalitial title or deaconry or diocese.

H. J. SWIFT, S.J.

College Rowdyism

"I want my son to become intellectually well informed and clever, conscientious and morally upright, sanely religious, strong and healthy, energetic and enterprising, cultivated in taste and feelings." Some one has suggested this as a fairly good summary of what a father should have in mind when he undertakes to answer the question: What sort of a man do you want your son to become? And a fairly good summary it may be conceded to be, though it does not directly emphasize that sterling something which lies at the root of the best in human nature and embodies it—character or life dominated by right principles.

It is the essential scope of education to lay before the growing youth the best and noblest possible ideal; to get that ideal stamped into his mind in the concrete form of sound principles; and, finally, so firmly to establish the habit of acting according to these principles that it will last for the rest of his life. Accepting this as fundamental, it should be a comparatively easy matter for the Christian parent to decide who may be entrusted with the all-important task of training the mind and forming the character of his child. Generally speaking, the future man and woman are what the teaching and environment of their youth make them; how grave, then, the responsibility resting upon parents to surround their sons and daughters with influences which will not permit them to develop into mere self-inflated egotists without a scintilla of true character formation being found in either their mental or moral anatomy.

The thought is brought home to one in startling fashion by the perusal of a couple of scandalous news items recently chronicled in the daily press. New Haven, seat of Yale University, was the scene of the first of these. The infamous Gaby Deslys had been secured by the management of the Hyperion Theatre in that city as the attraction for the performance following Yale's football game with Princeton. Censorship of theatrical offerings means something in New Haven, it appears, and the Chief of the City Police warned the Hyperion management that the performance would be stopped if anything improper were to be said or done by those on the stage. The management resented this gratifying action of the authorities, and in a pique, instead of omitting certain objectionable sections and continuing the performance, brought the presentation to an abrupt end. Were they aware of the confession their action implied?

"Angered by the sudden stopping of the performance, a part of the audience, made up chiefly of Yale students, took revenge by ripping up the chairs and other furnishings of the playhouse, breaking the stage footlights and statuettes on each side of the stage, and doing other damage inside and outside of the theatre.

"The disturbance inside the playhouse was finally partially subdued by the stage hands turning a stream of water on the rioters from a large hose which had been run on to the stage. The police were called to the house, and six arrests were made."

Staid and cultured Baltimore comes to the front with the second story of student rowdyism. Hazing in its most virulent form, says the Sun of that city, broke out recently at the College of Physicians and Surgeons.

"The freshmen, it appears attempted to lock the sophomores in the laboratory, but were repulsed. While a professor was lecturing to his class the sophomores advanced with hose, water and lamp-black. They caught the freshmen in the classroom and deluged them with smut and water. A big fight ensued, the freshmen struggling with the sophomores, who attempted to smear lampblack over their faces. In the melee the room was drenched as if there had been a fire. One account says the sophomores 'threw the "freshies" bodily down the stairway.' Glass doors of classrooms were smashed, 'the floors covered with lampblack, water and glass.'

"This disgraceful affair took place in a leading medical college, practically within the walls of a great hospital in which were hundreds of the sick, who must have been alarmed at the savage battle. If the college authorities were unable to quell the riot, they could have called upon the police to end it. A few arrests and fines, a few ringleaders sent to jail, would soon put an end to this outrageous rowdyism."

A writer in the Chicago Tribune, praising the stand taken by Williams, Amherst and Hamilton, three well-known Eastern colleges, in favor of pure scholarly courses as opposed to the growing leanings of American schools toward technical education, with its concomitant decadence into mere utilitarianism in training, told us lately: "They mean to defend this country against the accusation of universal materialism, and to provide some opportunity for the growth of men of letters, for critics and for lovers of life in its richest and most serene aspects." "Lovers of life in its most serene aspects!"—What a comment on his words the items quoted from scholastic experience in two noted schools afford. Unhappily, they might be multiplied ten—nay, a hundred-fold, and, more unhappily still, the spirit they portray is not entirely absent from some of our prominent Catholic schools. A result, it may be, in this latter instance of the unwise imitation of secular school methods and ways that speedily weakens, if it does not totally destroy, Catholic principle in their training.

M. J. O'CONNOR, S.J.

Socialism for Youth

Just now Jugendpflege—systematic care of youth—is all the rage in Germany. You cannot speak with a pastor or a curate, a municipal official or a school-teacher, without being drawn into a debate on the best ways and means of furthering Jugendpflege. Persons who never bestowed a thought on the youngster, transformed overnight from a "whining school-boy" into a factory hand, unless he happened to be their own, have suddenly become enthusiastic for his moral and religious welfare. Judges, burgomasters and policemen, who were wont to look on the boy emerging out of knickerbockers merely as a possible criminal or deserter from the ranks, are busily engaged devising plans for his entertainment during the long winter evenings or preparing illustrated lectures on patriotism for his moral "uplift." Responsible for all this excitement is a Rescript of the Prussian Minister of Public Instruction, Herr von Trott zu Solz, on Jugendpflege. Though the document in question does not expressly say so, it is generally understood that the action of the Government was called forth by the alarmingly successful propaganda of the Socialists among the youth of the land—a propaganda devised and carried out with a zeal and method worthy of a better cause.

Fully alive to the truth of the old adage that the boy is father to the man, the Socialist leaders from the very start turned their attention to the school-room and the workshop of the apprentice, but systematic efforts on a large scale to win over the rising generation were not made until the law closing the doors of the political clubs to boys and girls under eighteen was repealed in 1906.

During the five years that have elapsed since its inauguration the Socialist Young Folks' Movement has made astonishing progress. Its purpose, as its promoters frankly avow, is "the training of youth in accordance with the principles of the proletarian—that is, the Socialistic—conception of life." To attain this end all the approved means of propaganda are resorted to: illustrated lectures on science, literature and art, popular entertainments, gymnastics and field sports. In addition to this, the whole machinery of the Socialist Labor Party and the Socialist Trade Unions has been set in motion. At the present writing 360 Local Agitation Committees, largely made up of boys and girls under eighteen, are working under the direction of a Central Bureau for the spread of Socialistic ideas in the factory, the home and the school.

The Central Bureau publishes the organ of the movement, the Arbeiterjugend, a weekly with a circulation of over 50,000. Here the school-boy and the factory lad are apodictically told that there is no God, that "belief in the preternatural and the supernatural is absurd," that "the whole creation is the product of evolution," that "Christ was nothing but a noble-minded man and his mother merely a carpenter's wife." To drive home these blasphemies more effectually the most drastic illustrations are made use of, the artists seeking inspiration at the Haeckelian spring. Thus a picture-series showing the gradual development of man from the ape periodically makes the rounds of the Socialist comic sheets and finds its way into magic-lantern slides and the pages of the Arbeiterjugend.

In more than a hundred cities and towns Socialist Jugendheime (club-houses for young folks) have been founded. Boys and girls have free access to them, the only condition for admission being a copy of the Arbeiterjugend. Most of the club-houses can boast of a library and a stage.

The official report for 1910 published by the Central Bureau is a witness to the restless activity displayed by the various Agitation Committees. We read, for instance of 1,434 single lectures for young folks, 103 series of lectures, 38 instruction courses, 259 art exhibits, 215 visits to museums, art galleries, zoological gardens, etc., 365 celebrations of one kind or another, and 1,466 outings. Half a million copies of pamphlets addressed to the youth of the laboring world were distributed; 30,000 copies of a "Young Folks' Song-Book" were sold, and a number of brochures dealing with the movement were placed on the market by the Vorwärts Publishing Company of Berlin.

The chief reasons for the rapid deterioration of so large a portion of the laboring youth and the success of the Socialist invasion are indicated in the Ministerial Rescript above referred to. "The alienation of large sections of the population from the church," it says, "is daily adding to the number of boys and girls shut out during the most dangerous period of life from the elevating, refining and invigorating influences of divine worship and religious instruction. Housing conditions, especially in the big cities, are such that vast numbers cannot be said to possess a home, much less the comforts of home. Eager for knowledge and distraction, the working lad in his leisure hours devours the bad literature which is not only his for the asking, but is even thrust upon him in and out of the workshop."

Earnest men and women, seeing the dangers threatening the youth of the country from all sides, repeatedly petitioned the Government to take steps towards remedying evils which none but the wilfully blind could fail to see. The matter was handed over to the Minister of Public Instruction, who showed his good will by immediately creating a million-mark fund for Jugendpflege. This was in the summer of 1910. In the winter of the same year he invited a number of persons interested in education and social work to a conference in Berlin. The conclusions arrived at are embodied in the Rescript under the heading "Principles and Counsels for Jugendpflege."

"The aim of Jugendpflege," we are told, "is to help to train up cheerful, public-spirited, corporally and morally sound young men, imbued with the fear of God and the love of home and fatherland. It wishes to support, supplement and continue the educational work of the home, the school and the Church. Whoever has a heart for the young and is willing and able to promote their proper training is called to cooperate in the work of Jugendpflege, which, on account of its supreme importance for the future of our people, is one of the capital tasks of the age, a national work of the first rank."

The means required to carry on this work, the Government hopes, will be furnished by friends and patrons of youth, by the city and borough councils; direct State subvention can be looked for only in exceptional cases. Generous foundations for this purpose will, no doubt, multiply from year to year.

The organs of government in Province, District and Circuit (Kreis-County) are expected to do all in their power to further Jugendpflege by personal service and by placing public buildings, halls, playgrounds, etc., at the disposal of the young folks' organizations. To insure success State, Church and School must collaborate. "His Majesty's Ministry counts especially on the valuable assistance of the clergy of every denomination."

The Government has no intention to establish State institutions with compulsory attendance for the graduates from the elementary schools. "The sole purpose of its interference," says the Rescript, "is to encourage and increase the efficiency of existing organizations, institutions and arrangements for the rising generation, and to lend a helping hand towards the founding of new ones. The greatest possible freedom of action must be left to those engaged in social work among the young, and every semblance of bureaucracy or pressure from above must be carefully avoided."

In conclusion, the formation of Local Committees for Jugendpflege is strongly recommended. These committees should be composed, as far as possible, of influential private persons: clergymen, teachers, physicians, farmers, business-men, etc. "In the prudence and self-sacrificing spirit of these men and women, in their patience and fidelity to duty, their love of the young folks for whom they labor, and of the fatherland which they hope to benefit lies the secret of success."

Time alone will show whether the vigorous impulse given by the Government to the systematic care of youth will have the desired effect. "One good result is sure to come of it," a prominent social worker of Cologne told the writer; "the moral even more than the promised material support of the public authorities will enable us to develop and perfect our splendid system of young men's organizations and make it still more effective as a barrier against the advancing flood of Socialism."

GEORGE METLAKE.

With Workers for Boys in Their Teens

The writer's opposition to the juvenile club—as a priest's undertaking—places him under the obligation of discussing a very different sort of gathering. Obviously, organized youngsters must by some manner of means be brought regularly together; hence distrust of the club attracts attention to the alternate rendezvous, which, after all, is the central and all-important feature of the boy saving apostolate, the religious meeting.

The first inquiry connected with this assembly, occurring, as is here supposed, at an evening hour, concerns the place in which the assembly may better be convened. The writer's vote is that the meeting be held always in the church or chapel and before the Sanctuary light. This matter should be decided with an eye to the precise spiritual benefits obtainable for boys by means of their union. Now, amongst these blessings is a salutary, respectful familiarity for the House of God. Nobody doubts that adult Catholics worship far more fruitfully before the Altar than in a less sacred place; but what is here found helpful to men and women should be judged helpful a fortiori to their juniors. The latter especially need the stimulus that devotion receives from being exercised within holy surroundings.

And this view gathers force from the fact that our labors are in a great part directed to the sons of careless parents. It will be easily admitted that these thoughtless young fellows are all the more likely to conceive an attachment to their spiritual Mother if unreservedly welcomed within her material temple. How sad, then, that on gaining some little interest in Church affairs such chaps should be led for the exercises that might strengthen their new disposition to a school hall or basement place! Assuredly much is done for juvenile vestibule worshippers, the junior detachment of the "Pope's Standing Army," when they are led to exchange the street doors of the church for its front pews, which they are cordially expected to fill.

Neither, seemingly, does great weight attach to the reasons usually advanced for denying the boys the Sanctuary. Often sentence of exile is pronounced through fear that youngsters would not behave themselves in a way befitting sacred precincts; but this distrust will yield to the consideration that the Sanctuary offers its own telling contribution of restraint on Catholic youth. To be sure, this sacred influence is not constantly felt by all of the worshippers; nevertheless, it is at every moment effective on at least many of their number, and through these it indirectly reaches the rest. In other instances directors who lead their charges past the church doors to some unsanctified place are under the impression that, on certain matters, the boys can be addressed to better advantage if instructed very pointedly and plainly by themselves. In this connection, however, may it not be suggested that anything ill-adapted to a mixed congregation is better withheld from the juvenile throng, and reserved for the Confessional advice to such individuals as are especially concerned?

Indeed, when grown people are thought of, a new reason arises for making the House of God the scene of the meetings. Adults in small numbers at least will follow the boys to the church, but nowhere else; and, fortunately, the presence of adults always has a sobering effect on the mischievousness of the juvenile congregation. Accordingly, to the boys' spiritual guide the temple of religion can become, as of old, something of a secure refuge. Established there, and contemplating a number of men and women seated about his younger friends, he can devote himself to pious proceedings with much of the confidence of an Apostle, enjoying police protection while at work.

It must be noted, however, that the selection of the church for the religious gathering supposes a preliminary gathering elsewhere. Disaster is courted by one who makes the sacred edifice a place of storage for lads arriving ahead of the appointed hour. The fear of being obliged to spend some moments where serious, decorous conduct is exacted inevitably causes nearly all hands to come late. The boys present themselves, in theory, just on time; but in practice after the exercises have begun. Meanwhile the present temptation to late coming can be obviated by recourse to a hall or yard (even the street answers well enough), wherein early arrivals may enjoy a "free and easy time" until the service opens. In fact, the prospect of tumbling about a bit before serious doings begin will be found to serve as an attraction in favor of the meeting.

It must be acknowledged that the waiting crowd thus created is anything but devout in its appearance and activities. Indeed, the observer needs no little faith in the well-concealed religiosity of boy nature to believe that the whistling, shouting, jostling aggregation of sliders, pushers and wrestlers can be metamorphosed offhand into something of a quiet, prayerful body. When tested, however, the rompers unfailingly give the hoped for response. At the appointed signal, "stripping" themselves "of the old man and his deeds and putting on the new," they flock cheerfully into the church.

GEORGE QUIN, S.J.

Religious Intolerance in Russia

When, six years ago, Russia proclaimed freedom of worship to all the subjects within her vast dominions it seemed as if religious oppression had passed away forever from the land of the Czar. The ukase of Nicolas II, dated April 17, 1905, extended to every Russian citizen the full liberty of openly professing whatever Christian creed his conscience might prompt him to embrace. This decree promised to be no less significant for the Catholics of the empire than the edict of Milan had been for the poor remnant of Christians who had survived the persecution of Diocletian. Two thousand Catholics in the Chelm district had for decades of years awaited this act with the most eager longing. The terrible sufferings inflicted upon them for their loyalty to the faith, of their fathers would now, they fondly believed, come to an end. Of the speedy fulfillment of this hope the constitutional manifesto of October 17, 1905, gave them additional assurance.

The reality, however, was to be far different from the promises. It was not long before the victims were given to understand the practical application of the decree. The principles it laid down were, according to its own provisions, to be effectively carried out by the various legislative bodies in the government. Six years have now elapsed, and no relief has been afforded. A few doubtful projects, savoring very little of anything like religious liberty, were accepted by the Duma, but they never passed the Upper House. The decree was in the meanwhile carried into effect by provisional regulations and ministerial circulars until nothing but the mere tatters were left of the original Magna Charta. A bitter persecution has again broken out against the Church.

In permitting members of the orthodox faith to enter other Christian denominations the emperor had indicated no restrictions. Only a few months later, however, the Synod declared that this liberty could not be extended to the army, since apostacy from the orthodox church would reflect disgrace upon the national banner. Again, the ukase demands that converts must have attained to their majority before permission can be granted them to leave the state church. The precise age is not defined. At first this period was interpreted as the age of eighteen years for men and sixteen for women. Soon it was said to mean the legal age of twenty-one years for both sexes. Though considered fit to choose a mate for life, they were not thought fit before this period to adopt the religion which their conscience urged them to enter. Another instance is the case of parents who wish to bring their children to the faith they have embraced. This, according to the decree, may be done if the children are under fourteen years and both the parents have left the orthodox church. Now the interpretation is given that if one of the parents had formerly been a Catholic this privilege cannot be claimed, since both the parents had not fallen away from orthodoxy.

A series of formalities, moreover, has made the transition from the established church to any other exceedingly difficult. First, the permission of the administration, usually of the governor himself or other supreme magistrate in the community, is required. This license must then be submitted to the ecclesiastical authorities of the established church. These, in their turn, notify the police to summon "the delinquent," who must justify himself in their court for the step he wishes to take by explaining the motives of his resolution. Then follow all the possible expedients of official intimidation or persuasion to unsettle the new convert. Nor is this the end. A month must elapse before the formalities can be concluded, when a legal document is to be drawn up licensing the holder to be enrolled in another denomination. In practice, however, it happens only too often that the civil magistrates simply ignore the petition made to them, and Catholic bishops are in such cases utterly helpless. The moral torture, moreover, which the poor convert must undergo in being forced patiently to listen to the exhortations or vituperations of the officials is often most excruciating.

In localities where Catholics are in greater numbers the battle which is waged against them is more embittered. The orthodox clergy use promises and threats, and at times they succeed, by the assistance of the police, in their work of intimidation. If it becomes apparent that a Catholic priest has helped the petitioner, and perhaps has even drawn up the petition himself, there are ways of making him answerable to the law for striving to compass the apostasy of a Russian from the established church. Religious propaganda, it is to be observed, remains the exclusive privilege of the state church. Catholics may not even carry on any apostolate among members of Christian denominations other than the orthodox church. Even the baptism of a Jew cannot legally be performed by a Catholic priest except with the special permission of the Minister of the Interior.

We see, then, how the edict of toleration has been hemmed in by a thousand and one restrictions. It had been promised that the convert to Catholicism was to preserve all his personal and civil rights. In reality, however, all public officials who would enter the Church are deprived of their occupation, and pretexts for bringing this about are easily found. The offspring of mixed marriages must be baptized in the established church, even against the will of both the parents. The marriage itself must likewise take place before the orthodox minister. Under these circumstances the Catholic Church can neither supply a dispensation nor bless the marriage, which, according to the decree "Ne temere," becomes invalid. Such marriages are multiplying every day.

These formalities, regulations and legal chicaneries have naturally invited attempts to circumvent them. But that only offered an occasion for hundreds of lawsuits against the Catholic clergy and for a renewal on the part of the government of its systematic persecution of the Church. Priests were cited to appear before the court and confronted with the accusations of having received into the Church persons who had not attained the legal age, or who had received no permission from the local governor, or perhaps for having presumed to baptize children born of mixed marriages, or even to bless the nuptials. The penalties for such offences mounted as high as three hundred rubles, together with deprivation of office from three to six months. During this time their parishes were left without spiritual ministrations, while the parents, in the case where one was an orthodox Christian and the child had received Catholic baptism, were left to reflect upon their action amid the horrors of a Russian dungeon. E.

Surrendering the Philippines

The twenty-second annual meeting of the Trans-Mississippi Commercial Congress adjourned at Kansas City, Mo., November 18. A feature of the closing day was an address of Martin Egan, proprietor of the Cable News American, Manila, P. I., who said: "The man who proposes to sell or give away the Philippines and their peoples, the majority of whom constitute the only Christian race in the Orient, does not know the temper of the Christian people of the United States. Such a barter or abandonment would be an act of barbarism to the Filipino people that would make the name 'American' a reproach to the world."

Yet there are some, perhaps many, Americans who would have the United States Government part with the Philippine Islands without more ado. The Anti-Imperialistic League of Boston represents the most uncompromising upholders of this view. They keep up the circulation of a class of literature which we think will do more harm than good to their cause. Their latest publication is an article by one Sixto Lopez, which is taken from the Philippines Free Press of Manila, July 8 and 15. Mr. Lopez, with the hope of furthering the cause of Filipino independence, denies absolutely that Spain civilized the natives. "The Filipinos were a civilized people," he says, "when Spain went to the Islands, and they simply exchanged one form of civilization for another. . . . The Filipinos, at the time when Spain came to the Islands, were as high in the scale of civilization as Spain itself—in some things higher. They had a written language; they had schools in every town and village; they had manufactures and an extensive internal and external commerce; they had a Federal government, part of which remains in form and part in name at the present time; their laws relating to slavery were superior to anything ever enacted in the civilized world, being in favor of the slave and not of the master. It was, therefore," says Mr. Lopez, "a simple and natural thing for them to exchange the outward forms of their own civilization for those of the European."

This is rewriting history with a vengeance. But Mr. Lopez misses the point. Whatever may have been the civilization of the Filipinos at the coming of the Spanish missionaries, to the latter is due the credit that they converted the Filipinos to Christianity. Rome and Athens had their civilization long before the apostles preached the Gospel of Christ. But the pagan world did not adopt the new religion by merely changing its dress. The martyrs shed their blood, not for outward forms of worship, but for their belief. The East Indians, the Chinese and the Japanese of to-day all in like manner possess a civilization, and arduous are the labors of the missionaries to win them to Christ.

Their conversion to Christianity should be an easy task if this conversion might be effected by a mere exchange of outward forms. But the civilization they possess, like the cruder one of the primitive Filipinos, is a pagan civilization; and from paganism to Christianity is a far cry. 'Christianity transforms the whole man. It imparts a new life. It teaches man new truths and points out new duties; it unfolds to him a higher destiny than he could ever naturally aspire to, and while filling his heart with aspirations in keeping with this destiny supplies him with the supernatural means by which he may courageously and successfully struggle to attain it.

But as a matter of fact what was the state of civilization in the Philippine Islands before they were brought under the influence of Spain? In the historical introduction to the voluminous and luminous documentary history of the Philippine Islands, Edward Gaylord Bourne describes the inhabitants as "six or seven millions of Malays, whose ancestors were raised from barbarism, taught the forms and manners of civilized life, Christianized and trained to labor by Catholic missionaries three centuries ago. A common religion and a common government have effaced in large measure earlier tribal differences and constituted them a people. . . . They stand unique as the only large mass of Asiatics converted to Christianity in modern times. They have not . . . been brought within the Christian pale by being torn from their natural environment and schooled through slavery; but, in their own home and protected from general contact with Europeans until recent times, they have been moulded through the patient teaching, parental discipline and self-sacrificing devotion of the missionaries into a whole unlike any similar body elsewhere in the world."

The first permanent Spanish settlement in the Philippines was founded by the famous Miguel Lopez de Legaspi, in 1565. He began by winning the hearts of the natives, and before his death, seven years later, he had explored and pacified a large part of the Island territory. Legaspi, after four years residence, writes thus of the natives of Cebú: "They are a crafty and treacherous race. . . . They are a people extremely fickle, untruthful and full of superstitions. No law binds relative to relative, parents to children, or brother to brother. . . . If a man in some time of need shelters a relative or a brother in his house, supports him, and provides him with food for a few days, he will consider that relative as his slave from that time on. . . . At times they sell their own children. . . . I believe that these natives could be easily subdued by good treatment and the display of kindness."

All this hardly bears out Mr. Sixto Lopez in his statement that when Spain came to the Islands the Filipinos possessed a civilization equal and in some respects superior to that of Spain herself. Nor will the exchange of the outward forms of their civilization for those of the European explain what Dean Worcester writes concerning their present condition. His estimate appears in the United States Census Report for 1903. He says: "The traveler cannot fail to be impressed by his (the Filipino's) open-handed and cheerful hospitality. He will go to any amount of trouble, and often to no little expense, in order to accommodate some special stranger. . . . Hardly less noticeable than the almost universal hospitality are the well-regulated homes and the happy family life which one soon finds to be the rule. Children are orderly, respectful and obedient to their parents. The native is self-respecting and self-restrained to a remarkable degree. . . . He is patient under misfortune and forebearing under provocation. He is a kind father and a dutiful son. His aged relatives are never left in want, but are brought to his home and are welcome to share the best that it affords to the end of their days."

As for slavery, it is well for anti-imperialists and others to remember that statutory recognition of slavery occurred in Massachusetts in 1641, in Connecticut in 1650, in Virginia in 1661, and later in the other colonies, whereas by the ship in which Salazar sailed with the Augustinian Fathers, in 1581, a new decree was carried from his majesty, the King of Spain, ordering with much rigor, and in strong terms that the Spaniards should at once liberate the slaves whom they held, under whatever circumstances they might have obtained them.

The cause of the Filipinos will not be advanced by falsifying history and belittling the services to Christian civilization of the devoted missionaries who led the barbarous inhabitants of the Philippine Islands, as the apostles did the Gentiles, from the darkness of paganism to the light of the Gospel, and made them joint heirs with Christians the world over in the inheritance of the Faith.

EDWARD SPILLANE, S.J.

"A Christian theatre!" exclaims a modern Parisian—and he is an authority on such matters—"it is to laugh. You might as well speak of a very virtuous libertine."

Nor is he far from the truth. Even in New York it is almost impossible to be present at a play without violating all the proprieties, intellectual as well as moral. Possibly it is not almost, but altogether, true in Paris. Nevertheless the announcement is made that on the 19th of November "The Christian Theatre" was inaugurated by a matinee representation of Henri de Bornier's masterpiece, "La Fille de Roland," and the stage was occupied not by amateurs, but professionals. The theatre is near the Metropolitan Station of the Quai de Passy, and a genuine attempt is going to be made to see if there are enough of decent theatregoing people in Paris who really desire a change from the present intolerable conditions. Possibly something of the same sort might be done elsewhere.

We have already suggested that Bishop Farthing of Montreal would do well to take counsel with his brethren beyond the limits of Canada with regard to the hot attack he is making on the Ne Temere decree; and we quoted on one occasion wise words on the subject from an English clergyman.

The London Guardian of October 27 gives a word of warning coming from Australia. The Protestant Bishop of Adelaide told his synod that though he does not like the decree as it affects Anglicans, he recognizes that "any branch of the Church has the right to lay down rules as to the celebration of marriage between its members, and hence he cannot consider that the Church of Rome has exceeded her powers."

CORRESPONDENCE

Mexico's New National Catholic Party

MEXICO, November 19, 1911.

It was an unwonted, though stirring, scene when 7,000 Catholics met in the Cathedral of Mexico to hear Mass and invoke the assistance of the Holy Ghost on their work, on the 16th of August of the present year. They were inaugurating their first convention after nearly sixty years of abstention from politics. The Mass was celebrated by the Archbishop of Mexico, and more than 3,000 people received Holy Communion. On the following four days the Catholic Convention held its meetings, morning and evening. On the third day the subject was the proposal of a ticket for the election of President and Vice-President of the Mexican Republic. The discussion as to candidates lasted for more than six hours. Four hundred delegates from all parts of Mexico were in attendance, and from all appearances it seemed that no satisfactory result would be obtained. The popular candidates were Mr. Madero and General Reyes; the latter, however, with only a limited chance.

A great number of the delegates in their speeches advocated total abstention. It was urged by them that the Catholic group could not vote for Mr. Madero, he being a Freemason and a spiritist. On the other hand, there were many delegates who said that Mr. Madero had brought about a Revolution in Mexico which was altogether favorable to Catholics, on account of the principle of liberty which it proclaimed. They proposed as a political ticket for the Catholic party, Madero and de la Barra, Madero being a popular candidate and de la Barra a well-known Catholic, who had given proofs of his ability as a statesman and diplomat.

It was only after many hours of discussion that the question was put to a vote, and, on the suggestion of one of the delegates, the assembly stood up in order to invoke again the assistance of God on the delicate matter in hand. Lic. Manuel de la Hoz, in the midst of a most imposing silence, recited in a clear voice the "Veni Creator Spiritus," and forthwith the votes were taken, and the ticket Madero and de la Barra obtained a majority.

So far the Catholic Convention. But no sooner was the result known through the papers than a storm of public opinion swept through the whole country. The Catholic party was criticized not only by Liberals, but even by many Catholics; the point was, how could a Catholic vote for a non-Catholic? However, after several weeks, the leaders of the Catholic party were able to make clear their position, and when the time for the elections came, in October, they scored nearly 7,000 electors against their opponents' ticket, which was Madero and Pino-Suarez, the latter obtaining a majority of less than 2,000 votes over the Catholic party. Of course, it must be noticed that the Catholics were putting forth Mr. Madero as their candidate for the Presidency, and that the only question between them and their adversaries was that of the Vice-Presidency. Although their ticket was defeated on this point, the whole campaign served as a test of what they could do in politics. There is absolutely no doubt that fraud and a great deal of bribery took place in the opposite camp; there was also a most unfavorable circumstance in the way, and it was that de la Barra on several occasions made public his determination not to be a candidate for either the Presidency or the Vice-Presidency during the coming term.

The foregoing account may suffice to give an idea of the formation of the new Catholic party in Mexico. I have called it the new Catholic party, because, although in matters religious it is the same as the old Conservative party who brought about the French intervention, and offered the Imperial throne to Maximilian, yet, politically speaking, the Catholic party has absolutely no connection with the past. In its program it has admitted the Democratic principle and the Republican Constitution of Mexico. As regards the Reform Laws, which in many of their articles attack Catholic institutions and liberty, the Catholic party reserves itself the right to alter them through the Chamber of Deputies.

I will add only one word respecting the Catholic party, and it refers to its attitude and relations toward the United States. The old Conservative party were considered, and were in reality, the natural enemies of the Americans. The reason is not far to seek. The Americans had helped out Benito Juarez and the Mexican Liberals against the Catholics, and in those days there was not yet in the United States the wonderful impartiality and even protection to Catholics that we witness nowadays. On the other hand, the Mexican Catholics used to think that the Americans intended some day to invade and finally annex their country. At the present time all such ideas may be said to have vanished. The Catholics, as a group, look up to the United States as a country of real freedom, and they long to see themselves treated in the same way as their co-religionists in their neighbor's country. Of course, it is only because they have been pushed aside and ignored for half a century in their own land that they are still in a mood of fear and apprehension as regards their situation; but it does not require any set of statistics to prove that if they only will they can form a crushing majority within the next term in Mexico. The Catholic party has made a noble start, and within a very short time it has secured the sympathy of many people, who, though they be liberals or free thinkers, have nevertheless given public testimony to its achievements and prospects. Certainly, the Catholic party represents the principles of peace, order, progress and prosperity, and all those who are in any way interested in Mexico will view with pleasure whatever success it may attain in the future.

EM. AMOR.

Spain's Case, by a Spaniard

MADRID, October 22, 1911.

Hardly had the echoes of the latest revolutionary explosion died away in the province of Valencia, where it was most perceptible, hardly had the courts begun to examine the charges of murder and arson and other crimes, when the Radicals, whose aim was to defeat justice and secure impunity for the criminals, began an infamous campaign of defamation, slander and falsehood by averring repeatedly and publicly that prisoners in the Valencia jail had been subjected to horrible tortures for the sake of wringing from them a confession of complicity in the crimes of Cullera.

Three Radical deputies, Azzati, Barral and Beltran, friends and followers of Lerroux, were selected to make and press the charges before the President of the Council. The first of these positively declared that he had in his possession some garments of one of the prisoners, which had been bloodied as a result of the tortures inflicted on their wearer in the prison. Public opinion, it is true, attached very little importance to the ravings of Azzati, for it was the third or fourth time that revolutionists and anarchists had made similar charges in Spain. Much less did the Government believe that they had a foundation in fact, for it understood that the object was to stir up in foreign countries a campaign such as that at the time of the execution of Ferrer.

Señor Canalejas, however, at once took an attitude which met with general approval. Animated by a patriotic desire to do away with that silly persuasion which makes out Spain to be a barbarous and bloody-minded country, the chosen abode of the spy and the executioner, he ordered an immediate investigation of the charges for the purpose of fixing the responsibility for the outrage, if outrage there had been.

A commission of seven physicians, four civilians and three from the army, all standing high in their profession and in the opinion of their fellow-citizens, subjected to a searching physical examination each and every one of the prisoners who, as rumor had it, had been tortured. The report, which was given under oath and signed by all seven, could not be more explicit. "In the detailed physical examination," they say, "we have not found signs or traces that the accused have suffered torture."

The trickery of the Radicals has been laid bare. They and their newspapers deserve the execrations of all patriots and all honorable men, for they were willing to sacrifice the good name of Spain just to further their ambitious political schemes. It is due to such slanderers and falsifiers that foreigners have formed opinions of Spain which are quite erroneous and absolutely unjust.

Spain is far from being the home of the spy and the hangman. If anything can be thrown up against us, it is that we have too much of the wrong kind of liberty, civil, political and religious. Hardly could one find in Europe or elsewhere a country where there is a greater use or a greater abuse of liberty. The public platform, the professor's chair, the printed book and the newspaper are free with a freedom which goes beyond what is proper and sinks into libertinism and license. If one wishes to secure a professorship in a Government institution, or to obtain a judgeship, or to enter the army or navy, or to hold any office under the Government, no questions are put as to one's political opinions or religious belief. In the Spanish University there are rationalistic and atheistic professors, who, with absolute freedom, teach what is against the Catholic religion. The newspapers recognize and know no curb to their incessant attacks on organizations and persons. The same is to be said of every other manifestation of the social life of the nation.

How is it, then, it may be asked, that in the eyes of other nations Spain as a nation is reactionary, medieval, and tyrannical? The explanation is simple. There was a time, during the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries, when Spain, victorious over Protestantism, was the first power in Europe. The history of that time was written not by Spaniards but by foreigners, by men who favored Protestantism and hated Spain, and who, therefore, took much comfort in heaping upon our country all sorts of evil and injustice. They distorted facts, concealed the truth, and depicted the Spanish nation as best suited their interests, their passions, their political views, or their religious prejudices. Thus was forged the gruesome tale of Spain's national life. This tale, hard as it is to admit the fact, has received a color of truth from some Spaniards, who, carried away by political passion, have given to unsubstantial shadows an appearance of historical reality.

Spain's greatest enemy is the monumental ignorance of her which prevails beyond her borders. We are not known; worse still, people do not wish to know us. One might almost say they purposely close their eyes that they may not know what we truly are. There has yet to arrive on our shores the observer, the traveler, who will study us with absolute impartiality and dispassionately describe us, with our defects, which are great enough in all conscience, and with our good qualities, which are not few nor insignificant. Then might the world have a faithful and exact picture of Spain as she is to-day, a picture that would truly represent a living reality. Then would it be seen more clearly than the sun at midday that the black, reactionary, barbarous Spain, unalterably turned away from the great ideals of justice, civilization and modern progress, is a myth, a fable, a pure invention of the systematic slanderers of our name. We are law-abiding; no criminal code is milder than ours; advanced political thought, call it liberty or democracy, all, in a word, that goes to make up the ideal of modern society, reaches developments here which are perhaps unknown elsewhere, whether it be in the old world or in the new.

If all this were seen and known, and as it were handled by foreigners, the world would not be treated to the sad spectacle of a monument in Brussels with an inscription to the effect that Francisco Ferrer y Guardia, shot at Montjuich, fell a martyr to freedom of thought and a victim of clerical intolerance.

NORBERTO TORCAL.

A M E R I C A

A • CATHOLIC • REVIEW • OF • THE • WEEK

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 2, 1911.

Entered as second-class matter, April 15th, 1909, at the Post Office at New York, N. Y., under the Act of March 3d, 1879.

Copyright, 1911, and published weekly by the America Press, New York.
President, THOMAS J. CAMPBELL; Secretary, H. J. SWIFT;
Treasurer, MICHAEL J. O'CONNOR.

SUBSCRIPTIONS, POSTPAID:

United States, 10 cents a copy; yearly, $3.00
Canada, $3.50 Europe, $4.00 (16s.)

Address:

THE AMERICA PRESS, 59 East 83d Street, New York City, N. Y., U. S. A.

CABLE ADDRESS: CATHREVIEW.

French Chivalry

We are accustomed in this part of the world to see the police suddenly descend on a gambling resort, batter down the doors and carry off the gamblers and their apparatus. They do not attempt anything like that in France. They seek more audacious criminals. Thus the other day 150 gendarmes were seen at an early hour in the morning battering down a door on one of the streets of Lyons. It took twenty-five minutes to gain an entrance, and when the door yielded the uniformed and armed officials bravely marched into the building and seized nine "Little Sisters" of the poor, who were quietly saying their prayers in the chapel. A squad of three policemen was assigned for each nun, and the twenty-seven guardians of the peace heroically made for the door with their prisoners, who were not allowed to take a scrap of clothing with them except what they had on their backs. Once in the street, the prisoners were sent about their business, and were forbidden ever to enter the house again. It became Government property.

Who were these Little Sisters? They were the Little Sisters of the Assumption, and their sole occupation was to go to the garrets and cellars of the poor of the city, to clean up the dirty rooms, wash the children, take care of the sick, and all without a penny of recompense; for the poor have nothing to give them. One hundred and fifty police to seize nine little defenceless and unresisting women! What heroes those French policemen must be! What a government, and what a people! The Lyons outrage is only the first step in a general crusade. The greater establishments of charity have all been abolished, and now the Little Sisters, whose days and nights are spent in the wretched dwellings of the poor are attacked. They are enemies of the Republic. The days of chivalry have indeed departed from France.

Luther and Dr. McGiffert

The Professor of History in the Union Theological Seminary of New York, the well-known Dr. McGiffert, has at last concluded his series of contributions to the Century Magazine on "Martin Luther and His Work."

On the whole, perhaps, Catholics have no great reason to be dissatisfied with the way the case has been presented in the Century. Luther is admitted to have been, at least in the beginning, a very pious and zealous monk, living and laboring in a strict and learned community which had won the esteem and confidence of the university city of which it was an ornament. All the conditions and surroundings are in direct conflict with the still prevalent Protestant superstition about pre-Reformation monasticism.

As the story proceeds we discover that Luther becomes bibulous, blasphemous, unchaste and obscene only when he leaves the Church. We follow him through all the scenes of his tempestuous career, noting the havoc that his now unbridled passions inflict, not only on his own country, but on all Europe and on all the centuries since then, until we finally stand at his bedside where he is breathing his last in a stupor after a stroke of apoplexy. The figure of this terrible religious anarchist is "titanic" indeed, but far from saintly. He became conspicuous in history not so much because of any unusual qualities of intellect, but because he trampled ruthlessly on all the laws of God.

But, though Catholics may read the unpleasant story undisturbed, there is every reason why many a sincere and earnest Protestant should feel outraged, chiefly by the concluding chapters of Dr. McGiffert's latest contribution to history. With an abruptness, a rapidity and a frankness that is almost brutal—we trust he will forgive us for saying so—he frames a most appalling indictment against the whole religious system of which Martin Luther is the father and creator. In a few sharp sentences that gleam like a knife he hacks and mangles Protestantism till it lies a lifeless corpse at his feet. He does not intend to do so. On the contrary, he admires it and proposes to be its champion. He becomes its executioner.

According to him, Protestantism is not a religion at all. It has no connection with God Almighty. It does not make for holiness of life. Its object is not the service of God. It does not concern itself with the salvation of souls. Its aim is simply to do good to one's fellow-man, not spiritual good—that is out of its purview—but whatever will be conducive to his worldly comfort and advancement. A typical instance of this kind of "good" is adduced in Luther's lie about the Landgrave Philip, whom he allowed to live in adultery, or even to save his conscience by a bigamous marriage, provided he kept it secret. This shameful procedure is vehemently defended by Luther as quite in keeping with "the supreme ethical motive" or Protestantism, which is to do good to our fellow-man even by lying. Most shocking of all is that over these gross violations of the commonest decencies lies the thick varnish of religious cant and hypocrisy.

But there is something more insulting still in this extraordinary defense of Protestantism. Christianity before Luther's time, we are told, "with its other-worldliness, its fruit in saintly character and spiritual devotion, lay like a blight on medieval society." This "other-worldliness," we are assured, "interrupted the advance of the classical world"—that is, the pagan world; but "Luther, by denying the identity of asceticism and other-worldliness with religion, removed the greatest barrier in the way of the modern spirit and made its growing prevalence possible;" which means, if it means anything, that the prevalence and growth of modern paganism is due to the Protestant Reformation. In other words, the new religion went up with Luther to the high mountain, and when offered all the kingdoms of the world and the glory thereof, it immediately closed the bargain, and has never ceased boasting since then of being the origin and source and chief promoter of all the wealth and material progress of modern times.

In some respects the claim may be allowed, but it is scarcely a matter of boasting if neither the service of God, nor sanctity of life, nor the salvation of souls is permitted to stand in the way of its achievements. Assuredly, if the Professor's picture of Protestantism is correct, the sooner thinking people leave it the better. How far his views are shared by his coreligionists we are unable to say. We trust that he is not announcing an actual or impending and widespread apostasy from Christ.

Peace and Arbitration

Though literature is pouring on us these days demanding that we urge Senators to vote for treaties of Arbitration, we have not yet seen our way towards proffering advice to the Senatorial body. The Senators who have led the opposition to the pending treaties belong to both parties, hail from every section of the Union, and rank with the best constitutional lawyers of the country. Under these circumstances there could be no ground for our interference unless the Senate's action seemed clearly in contradiction of fundamental ethics; and we are not aware that any one deserving of consideration has preferred such a charge.

The non-Catholic gentlemen who have been flooding us with pro-arbitration pamphlets have suddenly awakened to the cogency of Catholic authority in such matters. They cite a few prominent Catholic names in favor of their contention, and place at the head of the list Pope Pius X. His Holiness, as becomes the representative of the Prince of Peace and the traditions of his predecessors, has blessed and encouraged every concerted action that aims at the establishment and maintenance of peace; but he has not intimated that the treaties before our Congress are in his judgment calculated to attain that object. A paper emanating from Rome, reliable in its news and usually sound in its views, but in no sense official, has rebuked the American Catholic Federation because its recent convention took no action on this question. It might, we think, have been taken for granted that American Catholics, of whose loyalty and public spirit the Holy Father has so recently given notable and substantial acknowledgment, would be as zealous as any others for the peace of nations; but would also be the best judges of whether an American movement was calculated to attain that object, or, where opinions differed and racial feelings were likely to be aroused, whether it would be wise to make definite pronouncement for or against such a movement.

The main treaty now before the Senate concerns the future relations of the United States and Great Britain, and its discussion will synchronize with the celebration of the centenary of peace between these countries. This alone affords ground for the contention that there is no immediate danger of a rupture of the peaceful relations that have subsisted for a century. There was some friction at a time when civil war weakened the defensive power of our Government, but there is now no weakness, nor sign of weakness, in this commonwealth that would invite aggression. Therefore, it is argued, we have no need of such a treaty.

There are not a few, moreover, who see in it the prelude to the entangling alliances of which Washington forewarned us, and who read in the pronouncement of the Secretary of State for England that such an alliance, as against the other European nations, is ultimately intended. Now, as Mr. Roosevelt explained to the Berlin University, we are a composite of all European peoples; and it would be neither politic nor peaceful needlessly to run the risk of antagonizing them, as we should inevitably do by allying ourselves, formally or informally, with a nation that is likely to be in conflict with any of the others. Besides, there are many weighty authorities, altogether uninfluenced by national prejudices, who hold that the Senate's action is strictly constitutional, and that adherence to the Constitution is for us the best safeguard of peace internally and externally.

National Municipal League and Socialism

The Milwaukee Journal of November 19 offers its readers an extended editorial comment on the statements made in the annual report of Clinton Rogers Woodruff, civic expert of the National Municipal League, read at the yearly session of the league recently held in Richmond, Va. The report dealt to a considerable extent with Socialists as factors in city government, and particularly with the Socialistic administration of Milwaukee. The Journal declares that Mr. Woodruff, who is broad minded and tolerant and disposed to commend good and condemn evil, regardless of place or condition, has made a report in the main fair and impartial. Some of the features of its comment will prove interesting to our readers.

Discussing Socialists in connection with city government, Mr. Woodruff quotes the San Francisco platform as typical of the aims of the party: Eight hours a day, public work for the unemployed, improved shop sanitation and better housing, free public employment agencies, free text books and municipal ownership of public utilities. All this, says the Journal, is neither Socialistic nor even a radical platform.

"It causes no fear, as the people of Milwaukee can say from experience. It is a program in fact which will enlist the sympathy of good men everywhere, both inside and outside the Socialist ranks. It is a program being carried out in other cities with far more energy than in Milwaukee and by other parties than Socialists.

"As to achieving these aims in Milwaukee, Mr. Woodruff says the Socialists have given an honest and fairly efficient administration in Milwaukee. Note the words 'fairly efficient.' The Socialists have done a few things in Milwaukee which should be commended, but not a fraction of the things which would entitle them to reelection by fair minded voters. Honesty alone is merely a basis from which good government must start. It must be supplemented by ability to achieve much. Big aims cannot be carried out by bungling minds. And who can assert honestly that the Socialists in the Milwaukee administration have not bungled?

"Good aims must be given life by means of ability—by means of experts. The nominal heads of departments must have at least skilled men to do the real work. This is precisely where the Socialists have fallen down. Never have plums been handed out to party workers with more diligence than by the Socialists. Never has the odious Jacksonian principle of party spoils been more overworked than in the present administration. Great aims cannot be accomplished with minimum intelligence. Good intentions cannot take the place of science and skill in complex modern city administration."

And to offset the "few things done in Milwaukee which should be commended," the Municipal League expert cites numerous instances to show how the Socialists in that city have done many things detrimental to the growth of municipal virtue; they have emphasized class distinctions; they are strangely intolerant in recognizing good in other parties and in other individuals; they have attempted to attach all good to the "workingmen," so called, in the Socialistic ranks and all evil to the cohorts of "special privilege" outside of their own party.

Summing up his review of the report, the Journal writer gives this verdict regarding the achievements of Socialists during the first opportunity given to them in this country to show what the practical working out of their theories implies: "The Socialists in Milwaukee," he says, "have not done one thing exclusively Socialistic. They have not done a fraction of what they promised. They have been disciples of progress only when attached to their own party. Virtue has been located only in their own party councils."

Ineffective Censoring

A recent report of the Motion Picture Committee of the Woman's Municipal League charges with laxity and inefficiency the National Board of Censorship that was instituted to pass judgment on all newly manufactured films. It is asserted that the censor's decisions are mild and lenient, owing to the fact that salaries are paid, for the most part, by the Motion Picture Patents Company, in whose New York rooms the Board meets. These circumstances, the report states, readily explain how a scandalous film called "The Nun" passed the censors last year. The laxity of the Board's supervision is likewise indicated from a letter written by an inland city's chief of police, in which he says: "We have had films come from New York which had been passed upon by some committee in New York that I refused to allow to be exposed here."

All newly made pictures, moreover, are not submitted, it seems, to the Board's inspection, nor is any one hindered from privately importing objectionable films and putting them on exhibition without the censors' approval. It is also asserted that parts of moving pictures that the Board considers offensive are not always removed, and even whole series that are banned by the censors are afterwards exhibited. According to the report, the Board's power to enforce its decrees is very limited. "We cannot play the part of police and prosecutor and still maintain our cordial cooperative relations with the manufacturers," the report explains, and ends by recommending that the censorship of moving pictures be taken out of the hands of an involuntary and informal committee and be given to a municipal board with authority to enforce its decrees.

These are serious charges. There is now scarcely a village in the land without its moving picture hall, and as New York is the centre from which thousands of films are annually sent out, it is imperative that all such pictures, whether manufactured here or imported from abroad, should be submitted in the metropolis to a rigid and effective censorship before being released. The millions of people, women and children in a large measure, who flock to these theatres will be protected in this way from immoral films at least, though it is much to be desired that as severe a censorship were exercised over the vaudeville entertainment commonly intermingled with the moving pictures, which is often much more objectionable than the pictures themselves.

If these assertions of the Woman's Municipal League are true, it is plain that this complaisant Board of Censors, whom the film manufacturers support and provide with quarters, can hardly be trusted to forbid the release of all the pictures they should. It is equally plain that the manufacturers can now evade or disregard censorship with impunity. Why cannot the mayor or governor appoint competent censors, who will be wholly independent of the moving picture makers and free from their influence? Then, while awaiting the legislation of Congress on this important matter, State laws might be passed requiring, under heavy penalties, that every film before its first public exhibition be submitted to the approval of this Board.

A Merited Reproof

The Inter Ocean of Chicago, in its issue of November 19 contains an editorial which is so refreshingly honest and clean that it deserves a word of special commendation. In a lecture before the National Council of Women Dr. William T. Belfield, a distinguished member of the Rush Medical Faculty of that city, declared that for a man with the limited earning capacity of $3 a day to have more than three children was a crime against Society. He advocated State legislation to regulate the number of a man's children by the size of his income.

The writer properly castigates the physician for his scandalous proposals, and reminds him that there are other considerations than a man's income, and extremely important ones, that must be given due weight before passing finally on the question of large families, either for poor men or rich men. He suggests, too, that Dr. Belfield puts himself in strange company by his views. The idea of avoiding a surplusage of children in the family is most ancient. The Fijians, for example, as well as some other primitive peoples, hold somewhat similar opinions regarding the inconvenience of too many children, and they have been in the habit of getting rid of the unnecessary ones—generally the females. They do not go so far as to say the extra ones are a "crime against society," but they generally treat them as a useless burden.

The only difference between the system proposed by Dr. Belfield, says the Inter Ocean editorial, "and the classic Fijian method is that the latter employs infanticide after birth, whereas the Doctor's proposed plan would make necessary a kind of crime which a decent person mentions only when he has to. Dr. Belfield should be ashamed of himself."

Modern Ithacans

Many a patient Catholic who has vainly tried to catch an occasional glimpse of the altar or pulpit from behind the massive headgear that women are wearing nowadays will read with interest that the ladies of a Protestant church at Ithaca, N. Y., voted to remove their large hats during divine service, so that the congregation could see the preacher. "It does not appear, however, that these obliging worshippers substituted veils or mantillas for the fashionable hats, as most Christians would have done. St. Paul's missionary journeys carried him, of course, nearer ancient Ithaca than to its modern rival, but still the Apostle whom Protestantism loves to consider peculiarly its own had reason surely to hope that these politic Ithacans of to-day would show more deference to his well-known prejudice against a woman's being in church bareheaded. For in the Saint's first letter to the Corinthians he speaks rather pointedly on the subject: "Every woman praying or prophesying with her head not covered," says the Apostle, "disgraceth her head; for it is all one as if she were shaven," and in concluding his argument his decision is: "Therefore ought the woman to have a power over her head, because of the angels." But, perhaps that Ithacan church is not much frequented by the angels.

Who Cares for the Kaiser?

Some one has dug up an old letter of Cardinal Laviege, the great churchman who gave Tunis to France. "If you are going to take Morocco," said the Cardinal, twenty-seven years ago, "make sure that you have the consent of Europe. The least thing to be feared in Morocco is Morocco. It is Germany. Bismarck has his eyes on Morocco, and if French diplomacy is going to do anything it must be by a clear and explicit agreement which all Europe will be apprised of."

Years went by and Delcassé was in power. He was a great man in his own esteem, but was silly enough to utter the word which has now become historic, "Je me fiche du kaiser." "What do I care for the Kaiser?" He invited all the powers except Germany to divide up the coveted territory. To the nation he despised he said: "You will have nothing." The result is that after haggling for months at Berlin, France lets go its grip on an immense part of the French Congo just to keep the Kaiser in good humor.

The decision of the American Federation of Labor to remain associated with the Civic Federation will, no doubt, meet with the approval of those who are watching the present conflict between Labor and Capital. President Gompers' spirited attack on the Socialists gives assurance that the Socialists, however much they may try to identify the cause of labor with their own, will not succeed in their endeavor without a struggle. It is to be regretted that the United Mine Workers decreed last spring that John Mitchell must lose his membership in the Civic Federation or retire from the Union. It will now be in order for them to rescind their hasty action at the next convention.

On November 24 some of the Socialist members of the Municipal Council of Rome attempted to make an anti-war demonstration. Mayor Nathan made a patriotic speech, which was applauded, and the session was suspended, not, however, before a fight ensued between the Socialists and their opponents.

THE GAELIC MOVEMENT

A movement may be felt but it cannot be fully estimated until it has sent out the primal wave of its strength, and left the thousand ripples and cross-currents it embodied to break and clash in the track of its original direction. It is for those who have the good fortune to survive among the debris caused by some great upheaval of land or sea, rather than for those who were momentarily exalted to the heavens upon its original crest to properly appreciate the values and tendencies of any subsequent effects.

The first great impetus of the Gaelic movement has surely come, and it has passed over our heads and left us sitting to-day among the ruins of preconceived notions and the tremor of developing hopes. The labors of Zeuss, Eugene O'Curry, Standish O'Grady and Whitley Stokes, whereby they originated the wave of pure scholarship and genuine love for a forgotten literature which made the whole movement possible, are already numbered with the works of giants of olden time, as their thought survives in the category of the Titanic. There had always been a few to interest themselves in Celtic literature as a freak, as a dialect or as a philological foundling, but these were the first men to conceive it as a possible and even as an integral part of world-literature.

To appreciate the Gaelic movement it is convenient to divide the company of Celtic scholars into two groups, the patriots and the philologists. The German and French professors on the one hand who have worked for the sake and love of learning, and on the other the Irishmen who have worked for the sake of learning but for the love of Ireland. Zeuss who had to choose at a critical moment in the history of the movement between marrying a wife and publishing the "Grammatica Celtica," may be taken as the founder and type of the sterner school, while Eugene O'Curry, who toiled for the glory of God and the honor of Erin more than for any scholastic motives, must be forever regarded as the embodiment of the hereditary Irish learning. Zeuss and the continental school which followed in the track of his book set to work to unravel from glosses and manuscripts scattered through the libraries of Europe the grammatical forms of the language in its earliest and most complicated condition. Considering the extraordinary difficulty with which he was faced, and the substantial work which he literally put together out of oblivion and hieroglyph, Zeuss more than deserved the name of "the Celtic Champollion."

In his wake a galaxy of scholars broke out in all the centres of European erudition—Zimmer and Windisch in the German Universities, Pedersen in Denmark, Ascoli in Italy, and De Jubainville in Paris, whose literary faculty equal to his philological enabled him to restore the Irish epic to its rightful place in the writings of mankind, between the Iliad and the Chanson de Roland, while from Oxford Matthew Arnold piped a tentative appeal pleading for the foundation of a Celtic chair among the British people, not only with a view to causing a variation in the charmed circle of classical letters but of eventually softening the relations between the English and Irish races.

In Ireland herself a small but patriotic school initiated by Eugene O'Curry and Archbishop MacHale had begun to struggle towards its unforeseen goal. Both of these true descendants of the great literary tradition of the Milesian race had worked as the Four Masters themselves had worked in the gloom that famine and disaster had spread over the country, and with the despairing thought at heart that they were the last of their line, and that none would come after them to perpetuate the learning of the Gael. O'Curry would not allow himself to specialize on any division of prose or poetry, but took upon himself the infinite task of running his pen through the entire gamut of the national heritage in manuscript, which he sounded and sifted in a rough but affectionate fashion, until he was able to produce sufficient "manuscript materials of Irish history" to bring astonishment to Thomas Moore, the author of a four volume history of Ireland, in which he had betrayed not the least suspicion that annals from such a native source could have ever existed.

MacHale, who might be considered the last of the fighting prelates who firmly believed in English government as the enemy of Faith and Fatherland, had made a heroic effort to perpetuate the living Irish tongue in Connaught, and to show his high opinion of the literary form for religious or secular purpose he had translated six books of Homer as well as the five Books of Moses for the equal pleasure and edification of the archdiocese. In a lighter vein he had also reset Moore's "Melodies" in an even more melodious form—giving rise to yet another of those unique phenomena which puzzle visitors to Ireland, for why the works of a national poet should ever require to be translated into the national tongue is a problem that only history itself could unveil.

But the work of these two men passed unappreciated and almost unnoticed by their own generation. It was not until the close of the century that the movement broke into diverging fragments, into schools and societies of different aims, into poetry or into glamor, into a revival here or a test for local office there, into English drama or into Irish politics, but the main current of the patriotic school found a working apotheosis in the rise of the Gaelic League, a non-political and non-sectarian association, which though willing to inspire and organize issues of subsidiary importance has always kept in view one sole object to be toiled for unsparingly and unreservedly, the preservation of Irish as a live tongue in every one of the five provinces of Ireland.

It is difficult but interesting to endeavor to sum up the practical achievement of the League during the two decades that cover its operations. Briefly it has averted if it has not finally checked the decay of the language, but on the other hand it has engendered an extraordinary amount of patriotic electricity along many other wires than the philological, and it has come nigh to galvanizing whole parts of Ireland into a state of genuine and lasting nationalism.

From the first a number of men and women and children have flung themselves into the linguistic breach that appeared to be opening upon the flanks of the Angliciser. From the highest motives of patriotism they set out to perform what were toilsome and to some even outlandish studies, but they won no small reward in the intellectual suppleness that such a toil necessarily begot, and in a certain streak of endurance which is more than often lacking to the otherwise richly endowed character of the Celt. Perhaps the climax of this unexpected reward to this purely patriotic exercise has been the decision of the Rathmines School of Commerce to introduce Gaelic studies as a philological highway to European languages. From colleges throughout the country as well comes the same story that Greek and Latin and even English itself is benefiting from comparative contact with the vernacular.

But as a social and industrial force the effect of the Gaelic propaganda was even more widespread, for once the existence and primary rights of the Irish language had been conceded there was no limit that the Gaelic Leaguer could set on the resources of home production. Irish ink and Irish paper were required to record the native characters, and there arose a demand for Irish clothes, Irish tobacco and even Irish sermons for the heirs of Irish speech. Charwomen insisted on Irish soap, and even the tramps required guidance at the crossroads in their fathers' tongue. It became soon apparent that the movement had acutely affected every cranny and corner of daily life, it had passed from the realm of a vague idea to the possibility of a working reality. A change in grammars had led to a transference of thought.

The situation in Ireland to-day must often appear chaotic, not only owing to the clash of the two camps of Gael and Gall, but owing to the different ways in which the Gaelic spirit has moved the different Gaels. While the tongue is dying out in some parts of the country, others which had experienced the loss a generation back are actually recovering it. Among individuals some show their adhesion by a change of speech, others by a change of costume, others by a change of name, and as outward signs of the same inward and spiritual upheaval the traveler may now remark an Irish trademark of Celtic design, or such a significant fact that letters addressed in the native tongue can now be delivered with only a day's delay, or that whereas Irish tweeds at one time had to be sold as Scotch, the demand is so great to-day that the Scotch have to be passed off by unscrupulous tradesmen in their stead.

In the realm of music and dancing some very definite progress has been made in restoring Irish airs and reels, while even more welcome is the reintroduction of the Irish war-pipes, after the lapse of centuries, to take the place of the German brass bands that have been hitherto considered indissociable with material and spiritual progress in Ireland.

It is this same desire for native expression of life and death that led Mr. John Redmond at a recent Feis in Wicklow, to appeal to the Gaels present to supplement the modern monument raised to the memory of Parnell by one in more accordance with Celtic tradition, by heaping up a great cairn of stones such as the Irish once loved to set over the fallen heroes of their race. The achievement of the League in affecting some 3,000 schools under the management of the Board has been followed up in most schools under private influence, and has even led to the appearance of St. Edna's, a full-fledged Gaelic school, which has broken through the trammels of the "Intermediate Board" by bringing up some hundred boys with Irish games, Irish dress, and Irish speech, as the natural accompaniments of their lives.

Of the influence of the Gaelic movement on the religious world it is true to say that the Catholic Church of all institutions in Ireland has been least affected inwardly, and for this reason that the intensity of faith and devotion which it enshrined was in itself a Celtic characteristic requiring neither amendment nor revival. Outwardly, of course, there have been many changes. The church-builders have become nation-builders, and have demanded Irish materials for their structures. Prayer-books and stations of the cross are appearing with Irish characters, and the "new curate" as a rule recites the Rosary in Irish, sicut erat in principio.

A motive which besides a natural love of the country has been very influential in winning the enthusiasm of the priests and the encouragement of the bishops has been their unanimous desire to arrest the literary development of Anglicisation of which the "Encyclopædia Britannica" is but the genteel and more respectable expression. The decay of the Gaelic tongue and the forgetfulness of the old Irish sagas has, unfortunately, never been followed by a corresponding love of the great English masters. The only literature that has poured upon Irish shores in unlimited tonnage and garbage has always been of the penny dreadful or shilling-shocker variety, a type which even to the keenest upholder of the British connection must appear a weak substitute for the "Tragical Deaths and Sorrows" of Gaelic story-telling that once purged and delighted the emotions of the Celtic heart.

But even when attempts have been made to combat unsought-for expansion of nameless authors by works bearing Catholic inspiration or Catholic sentiment, the latter have too often been of the weakling type of translation from Italian or French into English, that however orthodox, has generally failed to satisfy the taste and demand of the Irish people. In the opinion of the best judges, the curates who toil among the fisher and mountain men, the Gaelic affords the expression of Celtic devotion that no other vehicle can approach. When one remembers how the seventeenth century exiles toiled to write and print the endless Irish books of devotion they sent home in days of blinding storm to keep alight the little lamp of Celtic Catholicism, the lamp kindled by the wonder-working three, Patrick, Bride and Columcille, one feels that the freedom of atmosphere in which it burns to-day is not the best reason that it should be quenched to be replaced by a chandelier of British thought of however orthodox a design.

Nationally and finally, the scope of the movement has passed from the vague into the inconceivable. There is no end to the wars of the Gael and the Gall, or to the Battle of the Books in which the two races are engaged to-day. With her language and her history re-taught in her schools, Ireland may well rise to that position of strength and assertion that will lead her into the complete possession of her earthly heritage as well as into a deeper knowledge of that eternal mission which has never forsaken her.

SHANE LESLIE.

LITERATURE

Important Papers on Socialism.

Frequent requests are made for various articles on Socialism, which from time to time since 1903 have appeared in The Catholic Mind. As The Catholic Mind is published chiefly for subscribers, the additional copies printed with every issue are soon exhausted. To satisfy these requests, as well as to meet the wishes of many who would be pleased to have these several articles within easy reach, they are now reprinted and bound in one volume. As an introduction to this valuable set of documents on Socialism, the famous Encyclical of Leo XIII is also placed in the compilation. The subject of Socialism is one of growing importance, in the intricacies of which no surer guide can be selected than the great Pontiff, who gave to the Catholic world in this Encyclical the fruit of his long experience and deep wisdom. His office of Chief Pastor would of itself entitle the Encyclical to the place of honor here accorded it. The names of the distinguished writers whose articles are reproduced in the collection are a guarantee of the merit of their contributions to the literature on Socialism. There is no desire to profit by this publication, but only to further a good word. The price has been limited to the cost of publication.

The Superstition Called Socialism. By G. W. DE TUNZELMANN. Philadelphia: J. B. Lippincott Co. $1.50 net.

This book is the result of a series of lectures delivered before select students attending the school of instruction of the Anti-Socialist Union of England. It is offered primarily as an armory for public speakers, but is likewise intended for every serious student of social economics. As a refutation of Socialism it is one of the strongest and most ably written volumes which have come into our hands. Especially keen is the criticism of the Marxian theories of Exchange-Value and of Capital. A recent writer remarks that "Marx may have known exactly what he thought, but neither he nor his disciples nor his critics have ever been able to make the rest of us quite clear on that point." This the author attempts to do, although with considerable difficulty. A haze of words involve the fundamental Marxian fallacies from which the deductions follow clearly and logically enough. In unravelling the tangled skein of Marxian argumentation and showing in their simplicity the essential errors of the system, Dr. Tunzelmann is particularly happy. His forbears, as he tells us, have for centuries past been fighting British battles and, like their true English scion, nothing more delights him than the clash of intellectual arms and the splintering of lances on the field of logic.

The author's style is strong and trenchant. As a popular scientist, moreover, and as a platform orator of wide experience, he has the best qualifications for treating his subject in a telling way. If parliamentary language is not always used and he frequently qualifies his opponents as donkeys, dogs and imbeciles, there is some extenuation to be found in the fact that abusive language of every description is so common on the part of Socialist controversionalists that there is always the temptation for those who must meet them on the open platform to raise their voices to an equal pitch, if for no other reason than to be heard. On the other hand the book is for the leaders rather than for the masses. The chapter especially on "Land, Capital, Labor and Profit" is not easy reading matter for beginners.

To the question which will naturally come to the mind of the reader: "Why is Socialism spoken of as a superstition?" the author thus answers: "Superstition does not seek to test the guesses which it calls facts, and when it is driven to make the comparison and the guesses are disproved, superstition continues to call them facts, and denies and distorts the actual facts. If a scientific hypothesis or theory be retained after being shown to be inconsistent with ascertained facts, it thereby becomes a superstition. It is therefore clear that a statement clothed in scientific terms may quite possibly be, and not infrequently is, a pure superstition. Thus, for example, a discarded scientific theory may be resuscitated as a superstition, and imposed upon the ignorant and uneducated as a science. The purposeless mechanical view of the world upon which Marx founded his mechanical theory of society is usually dressed up in this manner, in the discarded rags of science, for the purpose of imposing it upon the ignorant."

How perfectly this definition applies to Socialism is evident to any thorough student who is qualified to pass judgment upon the question and is at all familiar with the sciolism which ordinarily passes for profound scientific knowledge in Socialist literature. As the author justly remarks, no first-class thinker of any period has been atheistic. Socialism is founded upon materialism and this in turn upon atheism, which is the worst and most debasing of all superstitions. It is only the fool who continues to say in his heart what his reason daily denies. There are many superstitions in Socialism, but that of atheism or agnosticism is by far the most lamentable, and to this all Socialist philosophy must reduce itself, as all its leading exponents claim. However far the newly made Socialist may be from such conclusions he should note how all the footsteps converge towards this one abyss of death, spiritual and intellectual. Let him turn and flee before he shall fall a victim.

If the author had contented himself with expressing his firm belief in the Deity, and had not made the volume at the same time a propaganda book of his own religious views we could unhesitatingly recommend it to Catholic readers. Unfortunately this is not the case. His own theories are forever cropping out between the arguments, and an entire chapter is devoted to a discussion of them.

The Deity is for him the Universal Mind, whence proceed the units of mind whose association with material bodies accounts for the origin of life. The advent of reason and of "the ethical faculties of mind" are attributed to the increasing influx of mind from the Universal Mind. Purposive activity is ascribed even to the lowest organisms, although it is only in man that the stage of reflective self-consciousness is reached. "The highest ideal is the complete conscious identification of the individual human self with the Eternal Self, and through this with all other human selves." The discussion of free will and personality leads to even more abnormal conclusions.

While evidently not a believer in the Divinity of Christ the author means, nevertheless, in his own way, to deal most fairly with Catholicism. He extends to it an equal welcome with Mohammedanism, Buddhism and the teachings of Professor William James, for which he professes a partiality. Though quoting at great length the Encyclical of Pope Leo XIII on the condition of the working classes, and admiring the Catholic activity wherever it is displayed in the social field, the book can evidently not be recommended from its religious point of view. It would be hard for the author to comprehend this, and we can only wish for him the full light of faith. His fundamental principle at all events is correct: that all who believe in a Divinity, whatever their creed may be, have reason to unite against Socialism as against a common enemy.

JOSEPH HUSSLEIN, S.J.

The Golden Spears. By EDMUND LEAMY. New York: Desmond Fitzgerald. $1.00 net.

"The Golden Spears" is the first of seven golden fairy tales of ancient Ireland. They are all of pagan times, founded on incidents in the literature of pre-Christian Ireland, and yet so pure and ennobling in their character that Cardinal Logue can say of them:

"They are delightful tales for children. They will serve not only to interest and amuse them, but to mould their minds and cultivate their taste by furnishing them with a model of a pure, correct and educated style, which is not always found in books intended for the young. They will have another good effect, inasmuch as they will direct the attention of our young people to the wealth of legend and poetry in our old Irish literature and traditions." This, incidentally, is apt comment on the self-styled Irish dramatic school who are perverting such literature to paganizing purposes. It may be remarked, too, that Mr. Leamy had delved in Irish lore and moulded therefrom his magic stories before this blatant school, which claims the Irish Revival as its own, was incubated.

Lawyer, journalist and orator, Leamy was known to his colleagues of the Irish Party as a man of brilliant and varied gifts and of charming personality, but so diffident of his powers that he rarely gave to the public the best that was in him. With children, however, he was at ease, and as they gathered round him he would build them stories from the Gaelic past, which needed but transcription to be literature. These he was persuaded to write down when sickness compelled his retirement from public life, and at the instance of Mr. Redmond, his former leader, they have been now re-issued in the United States. Judged from any standpoint—of art, attractiveness or formative influence—they ring true, and Cardinal Logue does not exaggerate in pronouncing them "real marvels of imaginative writing." In purity of style, sustaining interest, and the subtle literary power that also appeals to readers of larger growth, they recall Hawthorne's Tales and Kingsley's Grecian Heroes, but there is in them an intangible spiritual something, stirring the heart and moving the moral fibres, which these writers lacked in their equipment.

Though nature is vibrant on every page, there is not one description which the eager pursuer of narrative may skip. Moor and hill and forest, animal and flower and singing bird, dancing sun and glancing stream enter into the very heart of the story and form a portion of its characters. The "Golden Spears" were the mountains "from whose shoulders fell a purple robe of heather and whose heads gleamed in the setting sun like spears of gold." How Connla and Nora, who fed the birds and saved the singing thrush from the devouring hawk, followed the music of the pipers nine on the line, "where the shadows, marching from the glen, trooping up the mountain side and dimming the purple of the heather," met the sheen of the sinking sun, and how, treading on clouds of amber and purple and gold, they walked into the sunset, and after seven years in crystal halls returned to "the little mother whom they had rather have than all the world," and how through his kindness to man and beast on a wintry night,

Fergus was enabled to win the daughter of Erin's King, and how honor and sacrifice and courage found always guerdon fair, is set forth in language which, like the voice of Princess Finola, is "as musical as the whisper of a stream in the woods in the hot days of summer." One will not easily find a match in literature for the word picture of the bardic contest in "The Huntsman's Son."

Mr. John Redmond, M. P., in an eloquent preface bears witness to Mr. Leamy's "exquisite gift with children" and appeals to the parents and teachers of America to welcome "this little flower of his genius," believing that thus "a charming and ennobling boon will be conferred on the child-life of these great communities;" and, from personal experience, he endorses the judgment of an educational expert: "For refining influence, for power to stimulate the sense of beauty, the tenderness, the sentiment of nobleness of the child soul, I can imagine no volume more worthy of a place on the book-shelf of the people's schools."

It has also the advantage of being well bound, printed and illustrated. We share in Mr. Redmond's hope that it will find a permanent place in the libraries of those who understand children.

M. K.

Those who have read with pleasure and profit "The Crucible" and "The Alchemist's Secret," story books by Miss Isabel Williams, will feel that in her sudden death last week in Boston, a promising writer of Catholic fiction has been called away. Miss Williams' activities, however, were not confined to the field of literature, but many a Catholic cause in her native city found in this author a zealous promoter.

"The Prayer Book for Children" is another of Mother Mary Loyola's tempting little treats for the lambkins of the flock. The wording of the prayers is so simple and so free from stilted and formal language that young worshippers will find themselves talking with God as they would with their parents, which will doubtless assist devotion wonderfully. There are some 150 pages in the book and a dozen good illustrations. But children will make short work of the paper-covered edition; cloth binding will prove really cheaper. The Kenedys are the publishers.

"My Heaven in Devon" is a little book of poems, inspired by "the restoration of Eucharistic worship in the pre-reformation parish of St. Pancras." Olive Katherine Parr, the author, whose "Red-Handed Saint" will be remembered, joyfully sings of the return of Immanuel to the banks of Devon, and tells in smooth verses of the comfort she found making beautiful God's house.

A large portion of "Ichneutae" or "The Trackers," one of Sophocles' lost dramas, is among some papyri recently discovered at Oxyrynchus, in Egypt. The fragment consists of about four hundred lines, or a good half of the play, as is conjectured. "The Trackers" is one of those satiric dramas, in lighter vein, which used to be presented on the Attic stage after a tragic trilogy. No other play of this kind from Sophocles' hand has come down to us. The theme is the theft of Apollo's cows. Selinus and his satyrs are "the trackers." They trace the missing herd to the cave of the infant Hermes, who is playing ravishing music on a lyre he made from the hide of a stolen cow. Here the fragment ends.

Christmas books have appeared. As Mr. Andrew Lang seems to have used up at last all the colors of the rainbow in naming his volumes of fairy tales, "The All Sorts of Stories," his latest, is dressed in familiar crimson and gold. To keep young readers from skipping his foreword—a well-known proclivity of theirs—the author has prudently written at the top of the first page, "N. B.—There are stories in this Preface." He then whets the children's curiosity by telling them of the wonderful variety of stories they will find in this book. For all the tales, like "Bellerophon's fight with the Chimaera," for instance, are not about fairies. There are some, like "Charles II in an Oak Tree," that really happened, and others like the adventures of the "Three Musketeers," that might have taken place, but didn't. The book is finely illustrated by Henry Ford, and published by Longmans, Green & Co.

Sisters who are looking for a Christmas play suitable for the older children will be glad to know that a member of the Institute of Mercy, St. Mary's Convent, York, has written a little drama called "Nunc Dimittis," with Our Saviour's Presentation as its climax. The play is in blank verse, printed like prose, and the words of Holy Writ are woven into the text well. The cast calls for some twenty-five characters, and full directions are given about scenery, costumes, etc. P. J. Kenedy & Sons are the publishers.

"Our Priesthood" is a book of excellent conferences that Father Joseph Bruneau, S.S., D.D., Professor of Dogmatic Theology at St. Mary's Seminary, Baltimore, gave the "ordinandi" during their retreats. Following the pontifical he comments on the words and ceremonies used by the bishop while conferring minor and major orders, and thence draws sound principles for the future guidance of the young clerics.

"Qui de Virgine natus Per nos saepe renascetur."

"He who was of Maiden born

Through us is often born anew."

is the high motive for practising stainless chastity that is repeatedly held before the levites. Quite fittingly the book is dedicated to Cardinal Gibbons on the fiftieth anniversary of his priesthood. Herder is the publisher.

BOOKS RECEIVED

The Life, Trial and Death of Francisco Ferrer. By William Archer. Illustrated from Photographs. New York: Moffat, Yard & Co. Net $3.00.
Pioneer Catholic History of Oregon. By Edwin V. O'Hara. Portland, Oregon: The Author.
The Ballad of the White Horse. By Gilbert K. Chesterton. New York: The John Lane Co. Net $1.25.
Dictionary of Irish Phrases. By the Rev. L. McKenna, S.J., M.A. Dublin: M. H. Gill & Sons.
Lough Derg in Ulster. By Shane Leslie. Dublin: Maunsell & Co.
God in Evolution. A Pragmatic Study of Theology. By Francis Howe Johnson. New York: Longmans, Green & Co. Net $1.60.
The Obedience of Christ. By Henry T. Schuyler, S.T.L. Philadelphia: Peter T. Reilly.
The Prayer Book for Children. By Mother Mary Loyola. New York: P. J. Kenedy & Sons. Net 15 cents.
Impressions Calendar for 1912. San Francisco: Paul Elder & Co. Net 50 cents.
Nunc Dimittis, or, The Presentation in the Temple. A Mystery Play. New York: P. J. Kenedy & Sons.
The Catholic Diary, for 1912. Edited by a Priest of the Archdiocese of Westminster. The Angelus Series. New York: Benziger Brothers.
The Wargrave Trust. By Christian Reid. New York: Benziger Brothers.

Latin Publications:

Enchiridion Patristicum. Locos SS. Patrum. Doctorum Scriptorum Ecclesiasticorum. In Usum Scholarum Collegit. Auctore M. J. Rouet de Journel, S.T. St. Louis: B. Herder. Net $3.15.
Summula Philosophiae Scholasticae. In Usum Adolescentium a J. S. Hickey, O. Cist., Concinnata. Volumen III. Theologia Naturalis. Editio Altera. Dublin: Brown & Nolan. 2s net.

German Publications:

Leben der Ehrwürdigen Mutter Maria Salesia Chappuis. Aus dem Orden der Heimsuchung Maria, 1793-1875. New York: Frederick Pustet & Co. Net $1.25.
Die Erziehungskunst der Mutter. Ein Leitfaden der Erziehungslehre. Volksverein-Verlag M. Gladbach. Preis 75 pf.
Kirchenmusikalisches Jahrbuch. Begründet von Dr. F. X. Haberl. Herausgegeben von Dr. Karl Weinmann. New York: Frederick Pustet & Co.

EDUCATION

Alfred Moseley, the well-known London publicist and philanthropist, who is using the opportunity which the trip he is just now making in America allows to look into some of our educational methods, is apparently not as enthusiastic regarding our system of public education as some of us would have him be. Asked by a representative of the Brooklyn Eagle what he thought of the American school, he replied: "Oh, in buildings and equipment and, physically, in cultural ways, it is a mile ahead of us. But in thoroughness it is behind us, owing, no doubt, to your haste to get there." His judgment may not find popular acceptance,—if there is one thing Americans profess to be proud of it is the public school system—yet it is but a month or two since Stanley Hall, of Clark University, made bold to affirm the existence of "a growing consensus of opinion among those competent to judge that the system has not kept pace with the progress of the age or country. Relatively it is falling behind, and does not meet our needs as well as did the school system of a hundred years ago." President Hall's "relatively" must connote a judgment similar to that of Mr. Moseley, since he agrees that the system of public education in our country has grown enormously in size and has improved in quality in many respects.

* * *

It certainly has not improved in the all important matter of intelligent thoroughness, a quality which should dominate in every stage of education from the timid beginnings in the primary school to the end of university studies. An editorial writer in the New York Sun, of November 15, comments on what he terms sarcastically the "reactionary views of Mayor Gaynor on education." The Mayor, addressing the boys of one of the city schools the day before, had given a picture of the boys of the district school near Utica which he attended, "where the desks faced the wall, and where besides learning the three R's the pupil really learned to spell." "The three R's!" says the Sun writer, "Why, the wiser youngsters of to-day when, in the beautiful language of the class poem, they 'into the great world must go and stem its raging tide' have no use for such ancient ballast. As a class, if they try to read to themselves (whenever a comic supplement makes a severe call on their trained intellects), they move their lips. If they can be forced to read aloud they stumble, hesitate, mispronounce; their intonation is vulgar; they drawl and drone along without apparent intelligence or appreciation."

It was, we believe, Dean West, of the Graduate School, Princeton University, who, in an admirable paper on "Vocational Training" published some weeks ago, called our attention to the vagaries of "child psychology" and the fads which now beguile childhood with the notion that organized play is study. If it be true, as Dean West says, that we are first in the world in the matter of usable educational machinery, it will not be difficult to realize how, when this machinery is not used with intelligence, the outer devices and routine come to be mistaken for the inner life of education, and a manner of mechanized routine in teaching comes to take the place of the thoroughness in training to be aimed at in dealing with the pupil's high possibilities as a developing human being.

* * *

That this thoroughness is lacking even in the elementary schools appears to be a conviction generally acknowledged to be true. The writer in the Sun, whose article we have quoted above, does not mince words in affirming it. "As a race," he writes, "these youth, the product of the admired public schools system, can't spell, can't write a legible hand, can't compose a civilized letter. Their talk is slangy and ungrammatical. Even if they have come from cultivated homes they have acquired bad habits of language and pronunciation. Not merely in reading and writing, in ambition, detraction, uglification and derision, as the Mock Turtle puts it, but in anything that is useful they are sadly to seek."

* * *

Meantime official announcement is made that greater progress has been achieved in education in the United States during the past ten years than in any previous decade in the country's history. Unhappily a study of this development just completed by the Federal Bureau of Education suggests that the progress has been along the lines in which Mr. Moseley concedes that we are "a mile ahead" of European peoples,—in buildings and equipment and, physically, in cultural ways. When one learns that in the past decade the value of public school property has jumped from $550,000,000 to more than a billion dollars; that during the years 1900 to 1910 the annual income of the public schools has been nearly doubled, having increased from $220,000,000 to $425,000,000; that the number of public high schools advanced from 6,005 to 10,213, and that the total number of public school teachers increased from 423,000 to 512,000, one is inclined, in view of the very general conviction regarding the lack of educational results referred to above, to ask whether the American people are receiving a fair quid pro quo for their unexampled generosity in the cause of education.

The remarkable development of the study of seismography within a decade of years is one of the notable features of the science world. Just ten years ago the first assembly of the International Seismological Association was held at Strassburg, and already there is practically girdling the world a network of observing stations equipped with modern recording apparatus for the study of earthquake phenomena. The Jesuits of North America have been specially active in the work since the new science found its way across the waters to our own land a few years ago, and they have now sixteen stations distributed throughout this continent. The list of American colleges in which Jesuit observers have installed seismic machines of the latest type are: Georgetown, D. C.; Brooklyn, N. Y.; Fordham, N. Y.; Worcester, Mass.; Buffalo, N. Y.; Cleveland, O.; Mobile, Ala.; New Orleans, La.; Chicago, Ill.; Milwaukee, Wis.; St. Mary's, Kan.; Denver, Colo.; Santa Clara, Cal.; Spokane, Wash.; St. Louis, Mo., and St. Boniface, Manitoba.

The December Bulletin of St. Louis University contains a lengthy and learned discussion of the work already accomplished in these stations. Published under the direction of Rev. Jno. B. Goesse, S.J., director of the seismological department of the university, the bulletin making a booklet of 53 pages, generously illustrated with pictures and diagrams descriptive of the instrument and its workings, touches, among other things, on the historical outlines of the science and its development, as connected with St. Louis University; the physics of the seismograph and a description of the apparatus; and the phase analysis of the diagram. The work also gives a table for distances; and a full record of the earthquake registration in the St. Louis University Observatory for the year 1910.

M. J. O'C.

◆◆◆◆◆

We gather from Rome that a reform of the Breviary is now being completed by Mgr. Piacenza, of the Congregation of Rites, and Mgr. Bressan, Private Secretary to the Holy Father, and that the document announcing it will be published very soon. It is said that in the new Breviary the psalms of the present Office will be changed daily in such a way as to ensure the recital of the entire psalter every week, with fixed psalms for every day of the week. The Office will also be shortened by about one-fourth of its present length. Nor will it be necessary to buy new Breviaries at once, as a supplement with the new arrangement will suffice, or even an index showing where the psalms are to be found in the Breviaries now in use. The reform will probably come into force at the beginning of 1913.

ECONOMICS

Banking is borrowing to lend. A banker, using only his own capital, would be no more than a money-lender, and could do business in a back parlor. His capital, however large, in itself, is always small compared with his other liabilities, or borrowings. The statement of a large bank has just appeared, showing capital and reserve amounting to 30 million dollars, and liabilities, exclusive of these, of 200 million dollars. This essential note of banking that it is a trading with the money of others, enables it to perform its functions at a very reasonable cost to the community. Suppose the bank quoted has 150 million dollars constantly engaged, this sum need produce only two per cent. net profits, to pay the shareholders 20 per cent. per annum.

Bankers borrow indirectly. The simplest way is the receiving of deposits. One may be so impressed with the grandeur of the bank as not to realize that in depositing a thousand dollars he becomes the creditor of an institution which has borrowed his money. Again a bank borrows by selling exchange. If one wishes to pay money in London he buys a draft. He pays cash, the bank may not have to provide payment in London for some time. This method of borrowing belongs especially to the larger banks that have branches in many places and good credit everywhere. These draw from it considerable profit, especially from dealings in time exchange, that is, in drafts payable thirty or sixty days after sight.

How does a bank lend? The obvious way is the formal loan. Another way is the allowing of customers to overdraw their accounts, and it differs from the loan only in this, that the customer borrows only what he needs from day to day, so that the accommodation is not for a fixed sum nor for a stated time. A third way is the discounting of commercial promissory notes. The wholesale merchant sells to retailers, who will pay only after having sold the goods. They give their notes which the bank discounts to provide the merchant with funds for future trade. A fourth way is the buying of exchange. A merchant sends goods abroad, draws a bill on the buyer, or on his own agent, for their value, and sells it to the bank. The bank uses this bill to provide for the payment of its own drafts.

As the banker is generally dealing with other people's money he is in a position of trust, and is bound most strictly to manage his business with prudence. The whole problem of successful banking lies in the lending. The banker must lend the funds in his hands so as to provide a decent profit for his shareholders, and, at the same time, he must be always ready to meet any reasonable demand of depositors for the return of their money. The first rule of good banking is that every loan must rest on good security. The ideal security is that which could restore the bank to its original condition automatically, should the borrower fail to pay. Hence a commercial bank is very cautious in accepting as security, mortgages on land, buildings, machinery, etc. These imply long loans, for which there are other financial institutions: commercial banking supposes short operations and frequent. A commercial bank cannot become a factory, or a brewery, or an iron works, or a shipbuilding concern; still less may it be all these at once. Yet if it makes advances to such enterprises on the security of their plants, it may find itself carrying on their works in the hope of recovering what it has lent; and this has brought about the failure of not a few banks. As for speculations, the commercial bank has nothing to do with them. It will not advance money to open a mine, or to start a line of steamers, or to lay out a plantation, unless it has security independent altogether of the prospects of such enterprises. Again, a commercial bank does not meddle with the stock exchange. Indeed, the conservative banker is not much in love with the formal loan, and prefers to avoid the overdraft. The discounting of commercial paper, the providing for the moving and distribution of crops and other raw material and, in the case of larger institutions, for foreign trade, constitutes his peculiar province.

The first of these deserves special notice. Apparently a commercial promissory note has no other security than the name of the drawer, i. e., the retail merchant, and that of the endorser, the wholesale merchant. Actually, it rests on the best possible security, the life of the people. Men must live, and to obtain the means of living they must pay the shopkeeper, and he must pay the wholesale merchant. The constant flow, therefore, of payments from the consumer to the manufacturer and the first distributor, is a necessary condition of social life. But the whole value of this security rests on the supposition that production and distribution are normal, that is to say, regulated by the demand for consumption. The modern system of selling by commercial travelers whose skill consists often in their power of forcing goods upon the retailer, makes for overproduction, overstocking, of which the inevitable result must be to destroy the real security of commercial paper. The banker, then, in justice to his shareholders and, still more, to his depositors, must watch his discounts carefully, so as to check that dangerous tendency. That they have not always done so, has been the cause of many a crisis.

H. W.

ECCLESIASTICAL NEWS

As the present issue of AMERICA was being put to press the public Consistory of November 30 was being held in Rome, at which Cardinals Falconio, Farley and O'Connell and ten of the other newly created members of the Sacred College received the insignia of the exalted office to which the favor of the Sovereign Pontiff has raised them. The secret Consistory was held on November 27, at which the ceremonies may be briefly summarized as follows:

The other business of the Consistory having been transacted, the Pope addressed the Cardinals who were present, and mentioned the names of those whom he had determined to promote to the cardinalate, and asked: "What think you? As a sign of assent the Cardinals uncovered and reverently inclined their heads. Then the decree concerning the promotion of the new Cardinals was drawn up and at once published out of Consistory.

The newly appointed Cardinals then proceeded in their usual dress and without any attendants to the apostolic palace, where one of the old Cardinals presented them to the Holy Father, who gave them the red cap, or zucchetto.

At the public Consistory the Cardinals being assembled in the apostolic palace, the Sovereign Pontiff wearing his precious mitre, ordered the new Cardinals to come forward. They, bowing profoundly, were placed with uncovered heads in the sight of the Pontiff below the last Cardinal-Priest. The Pontiff made a short address on the office and greatness of the cardinalate. Then the new Cardinals approached and kneeling kissed the feet and then the knee, and lastly the hand of the Sovereign Pontiff. After this they went to receive from the other Cardinals the kiss of peace. This being done, the Pontiff conferred the red hat on them, and said: "For the praise of Almighty God and the ornament of the Holy See receive the red hat, emblem of the singular dignity of the cardinalate, by which is signified that even to death and the shedding of blood for the exaltation of our holy faith, for the peace and quiet of Christian people, for the increase and preservation of the Holy Roman Church, you are to show yourself intrepid; in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost. Amen."

Their rings and the titles of the churches in Rome to which they are officially assigned were then given them. After the ceremony the three Cardinals from the United States held their official reception at the American College. Cardinal Falconio has been assigned to the Church of S. Maria in Aracoeli, Cardinal Farley to S. Maria sopra Minerva and Cardinal O'Connell to S. Calixto. In taking possession of his titular church each Cardinal drives to the door and being divested of his cloth cloak and hat, in flowing scarlet silk walks up the nave, bestowing benedictions on all sides.

Seating himself on the throne in the chancel, the vicar of the parish reads to him an address in Latin, to which he replies. He is then saluted by all the clergy of the parish in the order of their precedence, ending with the acolytes.

The Cardinal must present the church with his portrait painted in oils. It will be hung with that of the reigning Pope in the nave. A Cardinal who lives at a distance from Rome has to appoint a vicar to take his place at the title-church.

Five Cardinals-elect had signified their inability to attend the Consistory, so that ablegates were nominated to carry the red cap and zucchetto to their places of residence. These five are the Archbishop of Valladolid; the Papal Nuncio at Madrid; the Archbishop of Olmutz; the Archbishop of Seville, and the Archbishop of Vienna.

The voyage of the three Cardinals across the ocean was finished without unpleasant incident, and they were received with special honors and attention by the civic functionaries and the local ecclesiastical dignitaries en route through France and Italy.

Cardinal Falconio was first received in audience by the Pope, on November 24, and the correspondents of the American daily papers state that his Holiness seemed to take pains to show his regard for the new American Cardinal. He met Cardinal Falconio at the entrance to the library, and as the visitor started to kneel to offer his reverence the Pope prevented him, and then embraced him with considerable show of affection.

Cardinal Falconio at once offered his thanks and his gratitude for the honor conferred on him, but the Pope interrupted, insisting that he had won the honor. He said that it was conferred for signal services to the Church and his loyalty to it during not only his career in the United States, but during his entire life.

Cardinal Farley was received in audience on November 25 with equal cordiality and marks of distinguished favor. After the audience it was learned that when he had thanked the Pope for himself and in the name of the Catholics whom he represents for the honor conferred upon America, his Holiness answered that it had long been his desire to recognize the loyalty of Catholics in America and the worth of his visitor. He said that he knew of the continued manifestations of satisfaction shown in America over the appointment of the Archbishop to membership in the College of Cardinals.

On last Sunday Cardinal O'Connell, Archbishop of Boston, had an audience, at which the Pope said that he watched with solicitude and gratification the growth of Catholicism in Boston, of which he had seen many evidences. American Catholics, unlike many of those of Europe, were not Catholics in name only.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

PEDAGOGIC FADS FOR CATECHISM CLASSES.

To the Editor of AMERICA:

If you will allow me room for a few thoughts that are haunting my mind for some time I will be thankful to you. I have received over a cart load of literature on new Catechisms, children's prayer and hymn books; books for the young in first grades on Church history, Bible history and Christian Doctrine; First Communion Manuals; children's hymnals and Bible stories; simple lessons in Catechism and Christian Doctrine for the child mind; easy lessons in the primary grade suited to the minds of little children; Catechism made easy, and written in words of one syllable needing no glossary or word-meaning, etc., etc.

Now let me ask, when will those children learn things suitable for future men and women? Will they, when grown to manhood, return to school; or will they learn at home what they never heard of at school? What is Catechism for? What do we who are now grown up remember of our Catechism? Have any of us unlearned what we learned as children concerning our Faith?

What hymns do we remember in our mature years that we had not sung in our childhood? In the name of common sense when will the child's mind cease to be the treasury of religious truths and catechetical knowledge for the future man and woman?

Please have patience with me. But tell me why authors of "Easy Catechisms" object to giving religious thoughts in clear and solid language like that of the Baltimore Catechism? If we could bring back to school all who attain their majority in ignorance of Catechisms except such as are made for babes or semi-idiot, then we might bring some excuse (although very little), for this craze in childish pedagogy: but since what is learned in their childhood is all that they have for their maturity and old age, why deprive our Catholic youth of the best we have, even though they may not be able to mentally digest it until they shall have grown up?

What hymns or prayers or catechism does any one who reads this letter remember except such as he learned as a child? And do any of your readers who studied Butler's, or Doyle's, or the Baltimore Catechism, or Deharbe's, or even such big works as Hay's "Sincere Christian," find that their young minds were not masters of the situation? The creature who needs diagrams and pictures and monosyllabic words is in a class by himself, and ought not to be allowed to interfere with the general run of plain or talented children. In catechetical knowledge the child is in a particular and natural position to be the father of the future man. His intellect is suited to receive the seeds of the deepest moral and dogmatic truths, and if surely planted there they will certainly develop and be fully ripened in after years. I may not have mastered either with my child mouth or mind the terms authority, infallibility or indefectibility; but, being fast bound to my memory, I securely found them in my manhood where they had been sown, and I rejoiced in their possession and utility.

We have some "Bread-of-Angels" broken in prayer books for children that the most mature minds can hardly masticate or digest. How charming the simplicity of the Ordinary of the Mass when compared with some of those Bread-of-Angels and infant manuals of prayer!

The doctrines of Christ are the same for all whether learned or ignorant; but idiots are not to have any monopoly. They are deserving of care and pity, but they have no right to set a pace for the strong and the swift. The main thing I want to bring to the front in this letter is that the only catechism, the only hymns and almost the only prayers that nearly everybody will ever learn are those he hears as a child in school or at his parents' knee. Hence, give us the best, in the best language, in the noblest and sublimest thoughts, and trust to the mind for other future use. If once planted securely they will be always securely found.

B. M. O'BOYLAN, P.R.

Newark, O., November 24.

To the Editor of AMERICA:

I am requested to announce the formation of a Catholic Art Guild for men, to be under the patronage of His Eminence the Archbishop of New York. If enough students can be brought together for this object, a place will be selected where lectures, etc., will be given on Roman Art, by Mr. Wm. Laurel Harris and others.

For further particulars those interested will kindly write or call on the undersigned, 228 Madison Avenue, New York.

ROBERT J. M. ERWIN.

Outfitters to Schools, Institutions and Hospitals for everything in CHINA, GLASSWARE, Cutlery, Cooking Utensils and Sundries used in the dining room and kitchen. A reminder of a few necessities carried in stock:

Pails	Matches	Coffee Urns	Umbrella Stands
China	Crockery	Coffee Mills	Ice Cream Freezers
Trays	Hampers	Toilet Paper	Mops and Wringers
Scales	Fruit Jars	Jelly Moulds	Glass Candle Sticks
Brooms	Glassware	Earthenware	Ash and Garbage Cans
Dusters	Dust Pans	Woodenware	Silver and Plated Ware
Baskets	Stock Pots	Meat Presses	Agate Cooking Utensils
Brushes	Toilet Sets	Flower Vases	Aluminum " "
Sponges	Jardinières	Meat Choppers	Steel " "
Chamois	Stone Ware	Carpet Sweepers	Fire Proof Earthenware

Your inspection is invited, or our representative will call upon request

O'BEIRNE BROTHERS

317-319 WEST 42d STREET, NEW YORK CITY

Telephone 1177 Bryant One Block West from Broadway and Times Square Subway

TOUR OF EUROPE

For the Summer of 1912

A PRIVATE PARTY VISITING

IRELAND, ENGLAND, FRANCE, BELGIUM, HOLLAND, GERMANY, SWITZERLAND AND ITALY

Arrangements have been made for an Audience with the Holy Father

Itinerary sent on application. Address all communications to

MISS AGNES J. KELLY

3828 Spring Garden Street, West Philadelphia, Pa

Sarony

Photographer

256 Fifth Ave., New York

Favorably known to the Clergy and Laity for many years

MENEELY BELL CO
TROY, N.Y. AND
177 BROADWAY, N.Y. CITY
BELLS

Byrne & McDonnell

Members of New York Stock Exchange

Stocks, Bonds and Investment Securities

60 BROADWAY, NEW YORK

Telephone 594 Reector

BYRNE BUILDING, NEWARK, N. J.

Telephone 1890 Market

Correspondence Invited

Stained Glass Windows

Mayer & Co.

...of..

Munich, London and

47 Barclay Street New York

Memorial and other Windows

Statues and Stations of the Cross

Designs and Estimates Submitted

Specimens of our work may be seen in almost every City in the United States

New Publications of
LONGMANS, GREEN, & CO.

Primitive Catholicism

By MGR. PIERRE BATIFFOL, Litt.D.
Translated by Henri L. Brianceau,
St. Mary's Seminary, Baltimore,
from the Fifth French edition, Revised by Author. 8vo. $3.50 net.

Among the Blessed

Loving Thoughts about Favorite Saints

By the REV. MATTHEW RUSSELL, S.J., author of "At Home with God," etc. With 8 full-page Illustrations.
$1.25 net.

Seventeen saints are commemorated in prose and poetry in Father Russell's new book, among them St. Christopher, St. Agnes, St. Monica, St. Francis Xavier, St. Dominic, St. Ignatius and St. Matthew.

Essays

By FR. IGNATIUS RYDER. Edited by Francis Bacchus, of the Oratory, Birmingham. With Frontispiece. $2.50 net.

CONTENTS: A Jesuit Reformer and Poet—Revelations of the After-World—Savonarola—M. Emery, Superior of St. Sulpice (1789-1811)—Auricular Confession—The Pope and the Anglican Archbishops—Ritualism, Roman Catholicism, and Converts—On Certain Ecclesiastical Miracles—The Ethics of War—The Passion of the Past—Some Memories of a Prison Chaplain—Purcell's Life of Cardinal Manning—Appendix—Notes on Ryder's Controversy with Ward.

The Job Secretary

By MRS. WILFRID WARD, Author of "One Poor Scruple," "Out of Due Time," etc. $1.20 net; by mail, $1.30.

"The story is told with dainty fancy and sure and elegant touch."—Catholic World.
"A strong interesting story of modern social life of vital consequence and persistent fascination."—Exponent.

Mrs. Bosch's New Book When "Toddles"

Was Seven

By MRS. HERMANN BOSCH. Crown 8vo. $1.00 net; by mail, $1.10.

For children between the ages of 7 and 10 who, like "Toddles," love to ask questions and have them answered. This little book of intimate religious and ethical stories should prove of great help to Christian parents, and be found serviceable also for supplementary reading in day schools and Sunday-Schools.

Mrs. Bosch's earlier volume, "Bible Stories Told to Toddles," 90 cents postpaid, is for younger children, and might well be read to the child first, though each book is complete in itself and sold separately.

List of New Books in General Literature Ready.

LONGMANS, GREEN, & CO.

Fourth Ave. & 30th Street, New York

The Coward Shoe

"REG. U. S. PAT. OFF."

The Curved Arch of the Foot

bridges the two points of contact—the ball and the heel. Once this arch begins to sag, the step loses spring and buoyancy.

The Coward Arch Support Shoe

rests the ligaments, steadies the ankle, and restores elasticity to the foot muscles.

Coward Arch Support Shoe and Coward Extension Heel have been made by James S. Coward, in his Custom Dept. for over 30 years.

SOLD NOWHERE ELSE

JAMES S. COWARD

264-274 Greenwich St., N. Y.
(NEAR WARREN STREET)

Mail Orders Filled | Send for Catalogue

Rolling at Side

Wilson's Rolling Partitions

A marvelous convenience and most effective method for dividing large rooms in Churches and School Buildings into small rooms, and vice versa; made from various kinds of wood; sound proof and air tight; easily operated and lasting. Made also with Blackboard surface. Fitted to new and old buildings. Used in over 25,000 Churches and Public Buildings.

Write for Partition Catalogue A.

JAS. G. WILSON MFG. CO.

3 & 5 W. 29th Street

New York

Rolling Above

Also Venetian Blinds, Wood Block Floors, and Rolling Steel Shutters

DENTISTRY

Loose teeth tightened by a new process; teeth without plates. Extracting avoided. High-class and up-to-date dentistry in all branches at reasonable prices.

DRS. BURKE & BURKE
DENTISTS

1947 BROADWAY AND 65TH ST
10th St. Subway, L station and all surface cars.

HAVE YOU GOT ONE ?

We mean a Daus Improved Tip Top Duplicate, with "Dausco" Oiled Linen Back negative roll, that ideal assistant, always ready to quickly make 100 copies from pen-written and 50 copies from type-written original. Complete Duplicate, cap size (prints 8 3/4 x 13 inches), costs $5 until you are satisfied, so it interested just write us to send it on 10 days' trial without deposit. That's fair enough, isn't it? Then send to-day.

Felix G. Daus Duplicate Co., Daus Building, 111 John St., New York

The Only True American School System

Rev. THOMAS J. CAMPBELL, S.J.

PAMPHLET 24 PAGES

5 Cents per Copy. $2.50 Per Hundred

THE AMERICA PRESS 59 East 83d Street
NEW YORK

Sacred Heart Sanitarium

FOR REST, QUIET, RECUPERATION AND HEALTH

Unsurpassed results obtained in Nervousness, Rheumatism, Heart and Stomach troubles. No surgical, hospital nor insanity cases taken. A delightful, homelike, restful place—ideal for all run down conditions. Hydrotherapy, Electricity, Massage, Zander Gymnasium, Sun parlor; swimming pools, billiards, bowling, etc. Gated saddle horses, large indoor riding pavilion; suspended running track connected by tunnel with bath department. 17-acre park.

A staff of five physicians give their exclusive services to the patients.

WRITE SISTER SUPERIOR FOR BOOKLET X. MILWAUKEE, WIS.

ONLY 75 CENTS EACH, POSTPAID

Keep every number of AMERICA in a handsome ADJUSTABLE BINDER

THE AMERICA PRESS, 59 East 83rd Street, New York

SURBRUG'S ARCADIA MIXTURE

In each pound there are three to four hundred pipe fulls—It costs $2.00 per pound—three-quarters of a cent a pipe.

If you smoke five pipes a day it's less than four cents—five hours of pleasure for four cents—certainly ARCADIA is cheap enough for you to smoke.

THE SURBRUG COMPANY
New York

Please write to Advertisers and mention AMERICA.

Add to your own pleasure this year by presenting a gift that conveys the value of intrinsic merit as well as the thought of personal sentiment.

Globe-Wernicke Sectional Bookcases

in Sheraton and other art styles of real mahogany and beautifully figured oak are always acceptable as holiday gifts, being as decorative as they are useful in the home.

Art catalogue containing many clever suggestions for Individual Christmas Libraries mailed on request. Also copy of Hamilton W. Mabie's new booklet "The Blue Book of Fiction." Such publications will help you solve the holiday problem. Prompt Shipments and Freight Prepaid Everywhere.

Address Dept. AA.

The Globe-Wernicke Co., Cincinnati

$1.00 WILL BRING POSTPAID

one of our
Fine Gold Filled
5 year guaranteed

ROSARIES

In any color. Order through your jeweler or direct. Also 10 and 20 year and Gold Rosaries Catalogue free..

Dept A Wm. Purnell Co., Mfg. Jeweler, 37 Maiden Lane, N.Y.

A Lady of experience offers her services as a guide in the Eternal City or other parts of Italy.

Correspondence Invited.

MISS RATHE

Via Paolo Emilio 28<sup>int</sup> 3. Rome, Italy

WE OWN AND OFFER

$70,000 First Mortgage $500 Real Estate Serial Gold Notes

EXECUTED BY

The Sisters of the Humility of Mary. "Mother House."

(A Corporation of Ottumwa, Iowa)

Total Issue, $70,000

Our Appraisement of Properties, $202,500

Rate of Interest  $5\frac{1}{2}\%$  payable semi-annually

Interest Coupons payable April 1st and October 1st of each year at office of Mercantile Trust Company, Saint Louis, Mo., Trustee in Deed of Trust securing this issue of notes.

Principal Notes of $500 each, payable serially as follows:

Numbers	1 to	8, both inclusive, on	October 1, 1914.....	$	4,000
"	9 to	18, " " " "	October 1, 1915.....		5,000
"	19 to	30, " " " "	October 1, 1916.....		6,000
"	31 to	50, " " " "	October 1, 1917.....		10,000
"	51 to	70, " " " "	October 1, 1918.....		10,000
"	71 to	90, " " " "	October 1, 1919.....		10,000
"	91 to	110, " " " "	October 1, 1920.....		10,000
"	111 to	140, " " " "	October 1, 1921.....		15,000

Total Loan (closed mortgage)..... $70,000

Security Appraised at $202,500

First: A first Deed of Trust on St. Joseph's Academy at Ottumwa, Iowa, comprising a lot of ground having a frontage of 214 feet on East Fourth Street by a depth of 198 feet to an alley, together with the improvements, consisting of a three-story stone and brick building occupied as the Mother House and Academy. An excellent piece of property in the business center of Ottumwa, just opposite the County Courthouse of Wapello County, a very creditable building. A conservative valuation of this property is $50,000.

Second: A first Deed of Trust on a beautiful tract of land containing 125 acres lying on the outskirts of the City of Ottumwa, conservatively valued at $20,000.

There is just being completed on this tract a modern fire-proof three-story and high-basement brick and stone Academy building, contract price for erection of which is $132,500, without any furnishings, making the total value of the security $202,500, or approximately three times the total loan.

In addition the notes are the obligation of the Mother House of the Order who conduct establishments in the Archdiocese of Dubuque and in the Diocese of Davenport and Great Falls.

Title to properties above described examined and certified to by J. J. Smith, attorney at Ottumwa, and also by our counsel, Judge R. L. Goode.

Notes may be redeemed by makers on October 1, 1913, or any interest date thereafter, by giving 30 days' advance notice and paying a premium of 2 per cent. in addition to principal and accrued interest.

Insurance required by Deed of Trust for protection of note holders, $72,000 fire and $36,000 tornado insurance.

Notes are payable to bearer, but may be registered free of charge in name of purchaser.

A safe and convenient investment of \$500 or multiples, netting purchasers  $5\frac{1}{2}\%$  per cent. for periods of from three to ten years.

Purchases by non-residents filled with the same dispatch as locally. Price, par and accrued interest.

REAL ESTATE
LOAN DEPARTMENT

Mercantile Trust Company

Eighth and Locust Streets
ST. LOUIS, MISSOURI

FESTUS J. WADE, President.

J. B. MOBERLY, Real Estate Loan Officer.

Capital and surplus Nine and One-half Million Dollars.

VASELINE

The Purest Petroleum Jelly

Made absolutely pure and safe by a most exacting process of extra filtration. Undistilled, highly concentrated, it possesses the greatest healing power.

To avoid all risks of impurity insist that the trademark "Vaseline" be on the bottle, box or tube. Don't risk ordinary petroleum jellies or petrolatums offered as "just as good."

MANY FORMS—MANY USES

The superior soothing and healing qualities of Vaseline render it an ideal base for carrying standard specifics for every day ills and accidents. A stock of Vaseline tubes is a handy and efficient "first aid" equipment in the home.

Sanitary Tin Tubes

(No danger of lead poisoning)

The tube keeps the Vaseline free from all dust and germs and is recommended by physicians as the modern, convenient, hygienic way of using Vaseline. Besides the Vaseline products described below, you will find the following of much value:

Borated Vaseline      Vaseline Oxide of Zinc
Pomade Vaseline      Camphorated Vaseline
Vaseline Camphorated Cream
Perfumed White Vaseline
Vaseline Cold Cream

Send for our "Home Remedies Book" free. It tells the uses of all these special forms of Vaseline.

White Vaseline

Colds and sore throats respond immediately to White Vaseline treatment—taken internally. Has no taste. Children take it more readily than other medicine.

Carbolated Vaseline

This perfect antiseptic dressing is the safest way of utilizing the cleansing and healing values of Carbolic Acid, with the soothing comfort of Vaseline.

Capsicum Vaseline

Better than a mustard plaster: easier to apply and does not blister the skin. Rub on at night for sore throat or cold in chest.

Mentholated Vaseline

Relieves headache, neuralgia or any nerve pain. The menthol soothes the nerves, while Vaseline conducts it directly to the seat of trouble.

Vaseline Cold Cream

Safest for sensitive skins. Cleanses, heals, beautifies, preserves the complexion. Produces a healthy, clean, creamy skin. Positively will NOT promote the growth of hair. Will not decompose.

CHESEBROUGH MFG. CO.

44 State St.

NEW YORK

Proprietors of every "Vaseline Product."

THE Ideal Christmas Gift

THE most intimate and enduring and satisfactory Christmas Gift, the greatest and also the least costly source of lasting pleasure is

A WELL-CHOSEN BOOK

A choice selection of distinctive books, especially suitable, are

Pioneer Priests of North America

By REV. THOMAS J. CAMPBELL, S.J.

VOLUME I

Among the Iroquois!

AN INTERESTING STORY OF THE MISSIONARIES AMONG THE IROQUOIS

"For lovers of history and biography, of the adventurous, the heroic, and the saintly, there is much to attract the attention in this volume of over 300 large, clearly printed pages."—The Sacred Heart Review.

"The adventures of most of the missionaries read like romances."—The New York Herald.

"One of the most interesting Catholic books we have ever read."—The Monitor (San Francisco).

333 Pages

27 Illustrations

Price $1.60

By Mail
20c extra

VOLUME II

Among the Hurons

TELLS THE HEROIC STORY OF DE BRÉBEUF AND HIS ASSOCIATES.

"Father Campbell has done well to continue in a second volume the record set forth in his first, dealing with the heroic labors of the Catholic priests, mainly Jesuits, in North America in the years subsequent to the first settlement. That was a moving and memorable story, already made familiar to thousands of readers through Parkman, but it has been much amplified as to details and circumstances by Father Campbell."—The Literary Digest.

480 Pages

24 Illustrations

Price $2.00

By Mail
20c extra

VOLUME III

Among the Algonquins

THE ETHNIC GROUP THAT FIGURED MORE EXTENSIVELY IN OUR HISTORY THAN ANY OTHER INDIAN FAMILY.

"Even to those of other persuasions, 'Among the Algonquins' offers the opportunity for serious and interesting reading, where solid historical worth is matched by charm of style and vigor of conception."—N. Y. Evening Sun.

"Father Campbell, in the course of his account of Sebastian Râle's missionary career, strenuously combats the view of him that was held by his New England contemporaries and the judgment passed upon him by many American historians."—N. Y. Times.

336 Pages

22 Illustrations

Price $2.00

By Mail
20c extra

Mary Aloysia Hardey

Religious of the Sacred Heart 1809-1886

with an introduction by the

Rev. Thomas J. Campbell, S.J.

The Life-Story of a Remarkable Woman

"It is worthy tribute to a great soul."—The Irish Monthly.

"We congratulate its author and the AMERICA PRESS in giving us such a valuable work dealing with the life and labors of this eminent and noble religious."—New World, Chicago.

"Teachers especially will find the life abounding in valuable suggestions."—The Republic, Boston.

440 Pages 16 Illustrations With Index

Price $2.00

By Mail
20c extra

Pilgrim Walks in Rome

A Guide to the Holy Places
in Rome and its Vicinity

By P. J. Chandlery, S.J.

Third edition enlarged

$1.25 postpaid

Special Combination Offer

Volumes I, II, III, Pioneer Priests, regular prepaid price, $6.20 per set, now can be had prepaid for...$5.00

Mary Aloysia Hardey and any single volume of Pioneer Priests, prepaid at special price of.....$3.75

Single Bound Volumes of America, regular price $3.50, now prepaid at special price of.....$3.00

Bound Volumes of America, 1, 2, 3, 4 and 5, regular price $17.50, now prepaid at special price of...$14.00

For advertising rates, address "MANAGER" AMERICA, a Catholic Review of the Week
59 East 83d Street, New York City

The America Press, 59 East 83d St., New York City

The Noblest Christmas Present

For the Smallest Cash Outlay

For Your Home
For Your Pastor

For Your Parish School
For Your Public Library

But Especially For Your Home

There is no holiday offering of magnitude that presents the same qualities of immediate worth and permanent value as does

The Catholic Encyclopedia

and there is no present of real value that can be accomplished with so small a cash investment. (See offer below.)

The high character of the text, the superb quality of the illustrations and the beauty and taste of the entire mechanical make-up of the work—all these things have commanded the admiration of critics the world over, so that no other Encyclopedia has been so universally praised.

From the thousands of letters testifying to the greatness and importance of the Encyclopedia, we present extracts from three whose writers are known to all readers of "America":

Three Specimen Letters

FROM THE THREE NEW CARDINALS

From CARDINAL FARLEY

To the Editors:

With the last published volume of The Catholic Encyclopedia open before me, I must write you my warmest congratulation on the rare success that has attended your labors during the past six years. Already over three-fourths of the vast undertaking has been completed without a halt in the excellence of matter and method of treatment promised in the first volume. Rather has the work gone on improving as each volume appeared.

You will be pleased to learn that Right Reverend Bishop Kennedy, Rector of the American College, Rome, through whom the last three volumes were recently presented to the Holy Father, writes: "His Holiness was delighted with the three volumes of the Encyclopedia, calling it a monumental work."

Very faithfully,
Your servant and friend in Christ,
✠ JOHN M. FARLEY.

From CARDINAL FALCONIO

Charles G. Herbermann, Ph.D., LL.D.

My Dear Doctor Herbermann:

I congratulate you and your associate editors upon the rapidity with which the various volumes are following one upon the other.

I am also glad to observe that this important Catholic publication corresponds to the most sanguine expectations of the Catholic clergy and laity, and I heartily endorse the approbations sent you by the highest ecclesiastical authorities of America. Catholic interests owe a great deal to you all.

With best wishes I pray God to bestow upon you his choicest blessings, and beg to remain,

Faithfully yours in Christ,
✠ D. FALCONIO.

From CARDINAL O'CONNELL

Condé B. Pallen, LL.D.

Dear Dr. Pallen:

The Catholic Encyclopedia is undoubtedly one of the greatest projects, from a Catholic literary point of view, thus far attempted in America, and, of course, its usefulness can scarcely be measured in words.

There certainly can be no excuse hereafter for misreprehension or ignorance of Catholic principles with such a succinct and correct resumé of them at hand as The Catholic Encyclopedia furnishes.

The Encyclopedia appeals to the intelligence from every point of view, and it should need no further recommendation. It is simply a necessary book for anyone interested in Catholic matters.

Yours very sincerely,
✠ W. H. O'CONNELL.

We now have twelve volumes ready for delivery, and these will be shipped to any address promptly upon receipt of your order, and the remaining volumes as rapidly as they come from the press.

You can make this splendid present without feeling the outlay during the holiday period. Make one little payment with order, or on delivery, and we will arrange for the payment of the balance in a way that you will not miss the money.

Cut out the coupon in the corner and mail it to-day so that we may submit sample pages and full information for your prompt action.

Robert Appleton Co.

39 West 38th Street, New York City

MAIL THIS COUPON TO-DAY

AM.
11-11

ROBERT
APPLETON
COMPANY,
39 West 38th St.,
New York City

Please send me complimentary Prospectus and full information.

Street.....

City.....

Name.....

DIRECTORY OF COLLEGES AND ACADEMIES

Georgetown University WASHINGTON, D. C.

Directory for Catalogues or Information

The College (Graduates and Undergraduates Schools)
The Registrar, 37th & O Sts., N. W.

The School of Medicine
The Dean, 920 H St., N. W.

The Training School for Nurses
Georgetown University Hospital

The School of Dentistry
The Dean, 920 H St., N. W.

The School of Law
The Dean, 506 E. St., N. W.

The Astronomical Observatory
The Director, Georgetown University

Rev. Joseph Himmel, S.J., President

College of St. Catherine, St. Paul, Minn.

A Catholic College for Girls.
Accredited by the Minnesota State Board of Public Instruction and by several prominent Universities.

Seventy Acre Campus. Fireproof Buildings.
COMPLETE COURSES IN THESE DEPARTMENTS.
THE COLLEGIATE, leading to the degree of Bachelor of Arts. THE ACADEMIC OR COLLEGE PREPARATORY. MUSIC AND PAINTING in their various branches. DOMESTIC ART, HOUSEHOLD SCIENCE AND COOKING. Year Book Forwarded on Application. Address: THE SECRETARY.

Academy of St. Joseph In-the-Pines

BRENTWOOD, N. Y.
A Boarding School for Young Ladies,
Affiliated with the State University
PROSPECTUS EXPLAINS THE TERMS, ETC.

ISAAC JOGUES Discoverer of Lake George

BY T. J. CAMPBELL, S.J.

Aside from its historical value it presents a vivid pen picture of a saintly and heroic missionary, with all the stirring setting of early pioneer days.

55 PAGES 9 ILLUSTRATIONS
Leatherette, 25 cents; green silk cloth, gilt top, deckled edge, 50 cents; edition de luxe, full flexible green cowhide, stamped with gold, gilt top, deckled edge, $1.00.

By mail 10 cents extra

THE AMERICA PRESS 59 East 83d St.
NEW YORK

Convent of the Holy Child SHARON HILL, DELAWARE COUNTY, PA.

15 Minutes from Philadelphia
ACADEMY FOR YOUNG LADIES
Highest English Course. French, Drawing, Music by Certified Teachers. Preparation for foreign travel. As the numbers are limited, special care can be given to the formation of character and training of each child.
Address: Mother Superior

MT. ST. JOSEPH ON THE WISSAHICKON

For illustrated catalogue address MOTHER SUPERIOR, Chestnut Hill, Philadelphia, Pa.

HOLY CROSS COLLEGE WORCESTER MASS.

Conducted by the Jesuit Fathers.
Largest Catholic College in America

Extensive grounds and exceedingly healthy location. New buildings, large gymnasium, indoor running track, hot and cold baths, modern conveniences. Easily reached on main line from Albany or New York to Boston via Springfield. Board, tuition, washing and mending, use of gymnasium, library and reading room, physical instruction and medical attendance, $260 a year. Furnished room and attendance extra. Send for catalogue to
PREFECT OF STUDIES.

Seton Hall College

FOUNDED 1856
South Orange, New Jersey

COLLEGE AND HIGH SCHOOL

Bayley Hall for Students
of Grammar Course

FOR CATALOGUE ADDRESS
Very Rev. James F. Mooney, D.D., Pres.

Georgetown Visitation Convent

A boarding and day School for
Young Ladies and Little Girls
Delightfully Situated on Georgetown Heights
WASHINGTON, D. C.
Founded in 1799 Address Sister Directress

St. Mary's College St. Marys, Kansas

BOARDING COLLEGE
Under the Jesuit Fathers
Two Courses of Study:
Classical and Commercial

For Catalogue, send to
REV. ALOYSIUS A. BREK, S.J., President

For advertising rates, address "MANAGER"
AMERICA, a Catholic Review of the Week
59 East 83d Street, New York City

Boarding & Day School HOLY ANGELS FORT LEE New Jersey

Conducted by School Sisters of Notre Dame
Location beautiful, healthy and convenient.
New Buildings, large gymnasium.

DEPARTMENTS: Academic, course of four years; Commercial, course of two years. Grammar and Primary Departments separate. Special advantages in Music and Art.

FOR YEAR BOOK ADDRESS SECRETARY

CATHOLIC COLLEGE FOR WOMEN
situated in the romantic Valley of the Wissahickon. Degrees conferred. Also Academic, Commercial, Intermediate and Elementary Departments. Very special advantages in Music and Art. The piano student possesses superior opportunities in the use of the Virgil Clavier Method pursued throughout the course. The Art Studio is admirably equipped, and every attention is given to the study of Art, both in theory and practice. Gymnasium perfectly equipped. Outdoor exercise, tennis, basket ball, fencing, etc.

HELEN AUGUSTA HAYES VOCAL INSTRUCTOR

64 East 34th Street
NEW YORK CITY

Carlton Academy SUMMIT, N. J.

A Catholic Private School. Prepares boys for college or for business.

Charles H. Schultz, A.M., Headmaster.

St. Mary's College & Academy

MONROE, MICHIGAN
FOR YOUNG WOMEN AND GIRLS

CONDUCTED by the Sisters of the Immaculate Heart. Beautifully located between Detroit and Toledo. A high standard maintained for sixty-five years in Culture, Education and Discipline. Courses include Collegiate, Academic and Preparatory. Special attention given to Music, Art, Expression and Domestic Science University affiliation. Separate department for little girls.
For illustrated prospectus apply to Mother Superior

IMMACULATA SEMINARY

Mount Marian, Washington, D. C.
Select School for Girls. Situated in the Suburbs
Classical, Literary and Special Courses.
Two-Year Course for High School Graduates.
Music and Art. Abundant outdoor exercise.
Sightseeing with experienced Chaperons.
For Year Book address, Sister Secretary

ST. MARY-OF-WOODS COLLEGE

For Young Women. 71st Year
4 Years. Degrees, B.A., B.S., Ph.B.

Academic — College Preparatory — and Grammar Departments. Elective Courses. Conservatory of Music, Vocal and Instrumental. Art Studios. Natatorium, Gymnasium, Bowling, etc. Out-of-Door Sports, Horse-back Riding, Boating, Archery, Tennis. For Bulletins, Address, Sister Secretary, Box 70, St. Mary-of-the-Woods, Vigo County, Indiana.

AMERICA

A CATHOLIC REVIEW OF THE WEEK

Vol. VI, No. 9

(Price 10 Cents)

DECEMBER 9, 1911

($3.00 a year)

Whole No. 139

CHRONICLE

American Princes of the Church—Cardinal Falconio's Address—McNamara Brothers Confess—View of the Situation—Forty Battleships Needed—Mexico—Panama—Canada—Great Britain—Ireland—Italy—Persia—Spain—China—Portugal—France—Germany—Austria ..193-196

QUESTIONS OF THE DAY

A Socialist Concept of Truth—"The Poet of Her Children"—The Sacred College of Cardinals—Oporto's Deposed Bishop.....197-201

INVESTITURE OF THE NEW CARDINALS.

201-203

CORRESPONDENCE

Clerical Conscripts for Italy's Army—Letters Rogatory and Elections—Disintegration of the Jacobite Church.....203-205

EDITORIAL

The Homicidal Records—Religion in the Schools—"The Fight Against an Evil Press"—The Church's Eugenics—Socialist Toleration—The "Old-Fashioned" Mother—The "Ne Temere" at Ottawa—Universities, Endowments and Students—Socialist Furniture—Notes .....206-209

LITERATURE

An Eirenic Itinerary—The Innocence of Father Brown—Pioneer Catholic History of Oregon—Notes—Books Received.....210-211

EDUCATION

Address by Rev. M. P. Dowling, S.J., on Education the Key of Progress in Every Land, 212-213

SOCIOLOGY

Maudlin and Sensational Interference in the Execution of Criminals.....213-214

SCIENCE

Protest of the Jesuit Professors of Natural History Exiled from Portugal.....214

PULPIT, PRESS AND PLATFORM

Father Bernard Vaughan's Successful Series of Sermons in Boston.....214-215

ECCLESIASTICAL NEWS

President Taft Attends the Pan-American Thanksgiving Day Mass—Rev. F. W. Stearns a Convert—Mgr. O'Donovan's Sacerdotal Jubilee—New Course of Studies at St. Charles' College—Aid Society for Missouri Penal Institutions—Protestant Praise for Catholic Missions in Africa 215-216

OBITUARY

Rev. John P. Frieden, S.J.—Rev. Joseph Knabenbauer, S.J.—Rev. Edward Allen, S.J.....216

CHRONICLE

American Princes of the Church.—Monsignor Niccolò D'Amico, pontifical master of ceremonies, after the formal announcement of the new Cardinals in consistory by His Holiness Pius X, left the Vatican forthwith to carry to each new Cardinal the official notice of his appointment. He was accompanied by Cardinal Merry del Val, the Papal Secretary of State. They drove to the American College, where they were met by Bishop Kennedy, the rector, and accompanied to the hall of the college, which was decorated with the cardinal red. Many prominent ecclesiastics from America witnessed the ceremony that followed, when the master of ceremonies was introduced and handed to the Cardinals Falconio, Farley and O'Connell the formal notices of their elevation. At the same time the Cardinal Secretary of State and the Pontifical master of ceremonies congratulated them heartily.

Cardinal Falconio's Address.—In acknowledging for himself and the other American Cardinals the honor conferred on them, Cardinal Falconio said:

"I rejoice that it falls upon me as dean to offer our sincerest thanks and most profound homage to His Holiness for graciously deigning to raise us, despite our unworthiness, to sublime dignity. While by this solemn act the Pontiff confers the highest honor upon us in our personal capacity, he also honors the noble, young and powerful nation which is proud of its free institutions. He confers, likewise, a very great honor on the faithful Catholics of that nation, who are truly great and worthy of their high reputation, and whose steady progress under the aegis of sane Christian liberty wins the admiration of all. This unique honor withal comes to us less by reason of our personal merits than because of the exalted opinion which the noble mind of the Pontiff entertains of the flourishing condition of the Catholic religion in the United States."

Cardinal Falconio concluded his address with renewed thanks to the Pope, for whom he expressed his love and a wish that His Holiness might have a long and happy reign. Cardinals Farley and O'Connell also expressed their gratitude. The speech of Cardinal Falconio is considered as supplementary to the Papal allocution, as it expresses the sentiments of the Holy See toward America. The substance of the speech, it is said, had been agreed upon by the Vatican, as the nature of the allocution did not allow the Holy Father to refer in such enthusiastic terms to one particular nation while so many are represented among the new Cardinals.

McNamara Brothers Confess.—James B. McNamara pleaded guilty to murder in the first degree in Judge Bordwell's court, Los Angeles, December 1. His brother, John J. McNamara, secretary of the International Association of Bridge and Structural Iron Workers, entered a plea of guilty to dynamiting the Llewellyn Iron Works, in Los Angeles, on Christmas Day, 1910. James B. McNamara's confession clears up the mystery of the explosion and fire which on October 10, 1910, wrecked the Los Angeles Times building, causing the death of twenty-one persons. For nineteen of these deaths the McNamara brothers were indicted. Both men's sentences were set for December 5.

View of the Situation.—When the McNamaras were charged with the Los Angeles Times murders, Samuel Gompers, President of the American Federation of Labor, denounced their arrest as "the first act of a tragedy contemplating the assassination of organized labor." Frank Morrison, Secretary of the Federation, declared it was "an infamous outrage." On hearing of the confession Mr. Gompers said: "I am astounded—I am astounded beyond expression. My credulity has been imposed upon." The press of the country is united in its condemnation of the leaders of the labor unions for their activity in defense of the confessed dynamiters. "Damnably folly," "lack of sense and decency," "fatuous policy" are some of the characterizations of the New York Tribune; "stupidity" and "virtual champions of murder and violence" are the comments of the New York Evening Sun. Some would have it that the cause of labor is damaged irreparably. Others would read labor union leaders the salutary lesson that organized labor must not turn over its machinery to demagogues, crooks and criminals, nor should it either wantonly or stupidly make itself the tool of systematized murder and anarchy. The New York Herald, which abstained from comment while the case was before the court, says: "Fraternalized workmen everywhere who have been contributing from their wages to the defence fund will now realize what they have not realized before. They have been led badly. Leadership that ends in such a situation for some millions of respectable men is not the leadership that will bring permanent improvement to the conditions of wage earners." "Though the exposure of this dastardly crime will for the moment discredit organized labor deeply," says the Evening Mail, "it will do it good in the long run." The statement of William J. Burns, the detective who arrested the McNamaras, is worthy of record. "I have maintained all along that organized labor was not responsible for the Los Angeles outrage," said Burns. "The labor movement is not responsible for the McNamaras or for the long list of crimes they have committed in various parts of the country. It is the radical element of our country, the element allied with the anarchists, that is to blame."

Forty Battleships Needed.—Secretary of the Navy Meyer, in his annual report, made public last week, declares that a total of forty battleships, with a proportional number of other fighting and auxiliary vessels, is the least that will place our country on a safe basis in its relation with other world powers. "While at least two other powers have more ambitious plans for the building of warships," he says, "it is believed that if we maintain an efficient fleet of this size we shall be safe from attack, and that our country will be free to work out its destiny in peace and without hindrance." The Secretary's list of obsolete battleships includes the famous old Oregon and her sister ships the Indiana and the Massachusetts. Nine others should, in his opinion, be replaced before 1920. He regards it as a waste of money to try to repair old vessels and bring them up to date, citing the case of the old New York, now the Saratoga, where 51 per cent. of the original cost, or $1,547,071, was spent on alterations without making her equal to a modern vessel.

Mexico.—The long-standing practice of Mexican citizens living in Texas near the Rio Grande has been to convey their dead across the river for burial. The Mexican authorities recently halted one of those sad processions and rudely ordered the coffin to be opened. It was nicely filled with rifles. The frequency of the funerals and the sameness of the mourners had aroused not wholly unfounded suspicion, as the sequel showed.—Several officers of high rank in the regular army have received handsome offers purporting to come from General Bernardo Reyes for their services against the present administration. One of the recipients has given his letter to the press. What lends color to the statement is that the communications were sent to old friends of Reyes.

—The Congress took no official notice of the first anniversary of the outbreak of the Madero revolution, but the President closed all executive offices and ordered the national flag displayed on public buildings.—The warlike disturbances in Chiapas are blamed upon Guatemala, whose motive is supposed to be so to embroil the administration in domestic outbreaks as to prevent any interference in the work for combining the five Central American republics.—One of the influential newspapers of the capital has intimated in guarded phrases that it would be well for Diaz to return.

Panama.—Several deaths from bubonic plague are reported among people who had recently come from Ecuador.

Canada.—The shipments of wheat and flour from Montreal during the past season were considerably less than those of last year. This is to be accounted for by the smaller amount held over on account of last year's short crop and the lateness of this year's harvest. The Montreal Star has received a letter from the owner of large farm in Saskatchewan. He says that the newspapers have concealed much concerning the damage to the wheat crop in that province. His crop, he says, is almost a total loss, and he fears greatly for the smaller and newer farmers who are in debt.—The Superior Court of Quebec has been petitioned to order the removal from the electoral lists of Rigaud municipality, the professors and teachers of Rigaud College, on the grounds that, having taken vows of poverty, they have no income, and that, even if they had not such vows, the nominal sum each is supposed to earn for the community would not suffice to put him on the lists.—Bishop Farthing and other Protestant ministers continue to befog the facts of the "Ne Temere" question, assuming that the Catholic Church has special privileges in matrimonial matters in the Province of Quebec, and that the Protestant clergy are authorized to officiate at all marriages, both of which are absolutely untrue.—The debate on the address brought out great bitterness between parties in Parliament.

Great Britain.—Sir Edward Grey gave his statement in Parliament on the recent complications with Germany in connection with Morocco, and said what everybody expected him to say. His speech contained three points. First, the occupation of Agadir touched British interests, which the Government must defend. Having failed to obtain assurances from Germany, the Government put Lloyd George up to make his famous speech. Second, England is not jealous of German expansion, provided this does not mean British contraction, and is very anxious to live at peace with Germany. Third, it is also resolved to maintain the understanding with France. Opinions differ as to the effect of this speech on English and French relations. Some hold that they are unchanged; others, viewing the insistence on the fact that the Agadir incident touched British interests as the defence of the warlike stand made by the Government, are inclined to believe that had Germany acted more diplomatically, avoiding every challenge to England, and leaving Agadir to be the prize of victory, either in arms or in diplomacy, England would have left France to its fate and Germany would have had a naval station at Agadir.—There has been a great change at the Board of the Admiralty. All the naval lords except the third have been replaced by others. This seems to be the result of the charges of naval inefficiency in connection with the late crisis.—Lord Robert Cecil, Unionist, has been elected in the Hitchin division of Hertfordshire by a majority of 1,633, in a poll of 9,451. This is an increase of 342 over the majority of the general election.

Ireland.—The Blue Book issued during the last week of November contains some exceedingly gratifying figures regarding the criminal statistics of Ireland for 1910. There was a decrease of 4,426 in the number of persons (4,322) tried for drunkenness in Ireland in 1910 as compared with the preceding year, whilst the offenses against property, with violence, showed a decrease of 181. The offenses against property without violence, which are principally cases of larceny, form about 70 per cent. of all indictable cases reported to the police during the year.—The Scholarship schemes adopted by the County Councils have apparently helped to create a healthy stimulus throughout the schools of the country, and to bring to the front a number of talented youths who otherwise might be unable to secure the advantages of higher education. When the schemes have been in operation for a few years the new universities will have a wide and fruitful area to draw upon. The press of the country notes this with satisfaction, since with the dawn of Home Rule near at hand the country will require the service of well-trained and well-educated men.—The Most Rev. Dr. Healy, Archbishop of Tuam, has received information from Rome that the Very Rev. James Naughton, President of St. Muiredach's College, had been chosen to succeed the late Dr. Conmy in the see of Killala. The news is heard with general satisfaction in Ballina, the native town of the Bishop-elect and throughout the diocese. Dr. Naughton has been a general favorite with his brother priests during his ministerial service in the diocese.

Italy.—It has been formally announced that the session of Parliament is indefinitely postponed, the administration evidently being determined on keeping a free hand for the war.—The nation continues to be agitated over the reports of the killing and mutilation of the soldiers by the Arabs in Tripoli. The churches in Rome and other cities are filled daily at the requiems for members of some of the best families, the war sparing neither high nor low in its list of the dead. The hospitals at Naples are fairly filled with the wounded, who have been brought back from the African coast. One steamer brought no less than seven hundred sick of the cholera, who have been placed in a lazaretto established at Nisida, a short distance out of Naples. And the end is not yet.—Final figures of the census give 34,686,653 inhabitants for all Italy, an increase for the past decade of 2,211,400.—In reply to a deputation advocating "æsthetic education," the Minister of Education said he was thoroughly convinced that "education in the beautiful should replace education in the so-called moral."

Persia.—A letter to the London Times from Mr. Shuster, the American Treasurer-General Persia employed to reform its financial system, protests vigorously against Russian and British aggressions in Persia. Then Mr. Shuster learned from an inspired answer that Persia is not independent, but "stands in the relation to the two powers as a minor to guardians." The Persian Parliament refused to comply with Russia's ultimatum that Mr. Shuster be dismissed, so troops have been sent to Teheran to enforce Russia's demands. As the American Treasurer-General is in Persia merely in a private capacity our government will not interfere, save to protect him from threatened violence.

Spain.—Exporters are profiting by the trouble between Italy and Turkey, and are trying to capture the market for cotton goods, preserved foods, and oil. The famous Compañía Trasatlántica contemplates putting some steamers on the route to Turkish ports, both in Europe and in Asia.—At the recent local elections the Catholic candidates in every important city were successful, even in Barcelona and Cádiz. In the former city the Catholics polled 26,600 votes against 23,700 for the party of Lerroux, which showed a falling off of 7,873 since the preceding election. The Socialists lost about half as many as the Lerrouxists.

China.—The Imperialists seem to be gaining ground. Han-Yang and Wu-Chang, two revolted cities, have been recovered, and a concerted attack on Nanking has resulted in its capture by the revolutionists. Through the intervention of Sir John Jordan, the British Minister, a three days' truce at Wu-Chang has been granted. Li Yan Hung, the leader of the rebellion, has been conferring with representatives from eight disaffected provinces, with a view, it is said, of making peace with Yuan Shi Kai, the dynasty's Prime Minister. The United States has offered China the services of 2,500 troops to assist in keeping open the railroads from Peking to the sea.

Portugal.—The administration has expressed the intention to permit the monarchists to invade the country without resistance, should they make another attempt against the republic. The object is to surround them and destroy them when they are too far from the border to make their escape into Spain.

France.—The grand Rabbi of France has written to the Univers Israélite a strong protest against the expulsion of the Little Sisters of the Assumption. The Municipality of Paris has condemned the action of the Government, and associations of workmen and a committee of prominent citizens are organizing an active campaign in favor of the Sisters.—The Council of State has declared illegal the edict of the Mayor of Montagne-sur-Avignon forbidding all religious ceremonies outside the church.

Germany.—The speech of Sir Edward Grey, to which Germany had looked forward with great expectation for a possible friendly understanding with England, has not very materially altered the situation. Yet it has undoubtedly made a future conciliation far more possible, and has somewhat quieted the irritated feelings of both nations. The speech was in part a direct denial of Kiderlen-Waechter's statement regarding the long silence of England after Germany had offered its explanation for sending the Panther to Agadir. Had Germany clearly expressed her purpose as early as July 4 not to seize upon any part of Morocco the entire difficulty might have been avoided. Such is the statement made by Sir Edward Grey.—In answer, it is said that England could easily have ascertained the intentions of Germany in regard to Morocco by making the necessary diplomatic inquiries. The explanations of Sir Edward are not looked upon as satisfactory by the German press, although considerable regard is shown for him personally, and a somewhat friendlier tone is assumed than before. The Kölnische Zeitung asks its readers to forget the past and trust in the assurances that German interests will hereafter be more fairly treated by England. Other papers are less favorable and fail to find in the speech any rebuke administered to the interpretations placed by the French and English press upon the utterances of Lloyd George. "Sir Edward Grey and Bonar Law," says the Berliner Tageblatt, "were correct in their remark that a German-English war would be so terrible an event that it ought never to be looked upon as unavoidable. All reasonable people are certain that it is avoidable; but peace depends not merely upon the sentiment of Germany, but likewise upon the course of politics pursued in England." The hint is thrown out in official circles that England will soon have an opportunity of proving in a practical manner that she has no intention of preventing the expansion of Germany and of interfering with all her projects. What new enterprise is referred to has not been made public. Deeds and not words are, therefore, to be the test of that mutual good will which is desired by the German people.—The last scene, as we may hope, of Germany's part in the Morocco drama was enacted when on November 27 the German cruiser Berlin, which had replaced the Panther at Agadir, was recalled by the Government. "Since all is quiet at Agadir," reads the message, "and danger of life or property no longer exists for the German residents, the cruiser Berlin is ordered to begin its return voyage on the morrow." The signing of the Franco-German agreement is looked upon as a mere formality.

Austria.—The Austrian House of Representatives, filled with the most varied and discordant national elements, has again become the scene of violent riots on the part of its members. The tumult lasted for an entire hour and serious injuries were only with difficulty prevented. The Minister of Justice, Dr. von Hohenburger, in the course of a debate had defended the Government against attacks from the side of the Czechs, and had allowed himself the expression "German-Bohemia." Instantly an uproar ensued and shouts were heard: "There exists no such land!" "It would mean a division of Bohemia!" With a common impulse all the Czechs arose and rushed forward to storm the Ministerial Bench, where Dr. Hohenburger sat. The German representatives in turn leaped from their seats to defend him. The Minister meanwhile retired from his place and several of the cabinet members quietly disappeared from the hall. Only after an hour of disturbance could peace be sufficiently restored to continue the session.—The trial of Njegus Wawrak, the Dalmatian Socialist, who on October 5 fired several shots at the Minister of Justice, Dr. von Hohenburger, has now begun, and is attracting a vast concourse of people. The accused, who is only twenty-five years old, states that he was filled with uncontrollable fury when he fancied he perceived the Minister of Justice smiling during the speech of the Socialist Representative Adler. It appears that Wawrak has been for years an inmate or an asylum for the insane; but specialists give it as their opinion that although he is mentally weak by heredity, yet he was not insane in the sense of the law at the time of the deed, and is therefore accountable.

QUESTIONS OF THE DAY

A Socialist Concept of Truth

A method of campaign against the Catholic Church in vogue among Socialists of every country is constantly to accuse her speakers and writers, and most especially her priesthood, of an open and unscrupulous conspiracy against the truth. "We charge," writes the editor of the Sunday Call in one of the October issues, "that the Federation [of Catholic Societies] and many prominent papers have deliberately, viciously and with full knowledge of their own dishonesty, entered on a campaign of misrepresenting Socialism and of vilifying Socialists. We charge that the campaign of organized slander in which so many clergymen take part, where it is not founded on absolute criminal viciousness, is founded on criminal ignorance."

Nothing could be more absurd than to imagine that the faith of Christ could be spread by the teaching of falsehoods or His Church erected upon the quicksands of untruth. Whatever errors or undue generalizations Catholic speakers may have unwittingly been guilty of, the Church most certainly can never countenance a want of knowledge or of truth in her defenders. A child would know the folly of the rule so glibly ascribed by Socialists to the Catholic Federation and to zealous priests in general, "that the shortest way to heaven is to lie about the Socialists."

In view, however, of the accusations of untruth which are constantly leveled against the Church, and which often form the last resort of Socialist tactics to discredit her before the world, it may be interesting to study the logical deduction of Marxian Socialism regarding the concept of truth itself. Kautsky thus expresses it in the Neue Zeit, the well-known Socialist organ of which he is the editor: "One of the most important duties is that of truthfulness to comrades; towards enemies this duty was never considered binding" (October 3, 1903).

This statement is luminous. Kautsky is to-day the leading spokesman of German Social Democracy. In the passage quoted he not merely speaks for himself, but for Socialists in general. His observation has been, he tells us, that truth towards enemies was never considered binding upon the adherents of Socialism. Naturally, his statement aroused indignation, since it was not a flattering confession to make in public, but when at a Socialist gathering in Hamburg a motion was placed before the meeting to repudiate his words, the motion was lost. ("Der Social Democrat hat das Wort," Dr. Kaeser, 3rd ed., p. 190. "Morality of Modern Socialism," Ming, p. 136.)

This doctrine is more formally set forth in his "Ethics and the Materialistic Conception of History," the standard book of Socialist morality, which the Call recommends as one of the four most important classics that every teacher should master before undertaking the great responsibility of training the minds of the young in the Socialist Sunday Schools. Charles H. Kerr, the leading Socialist publisher in the United States and editor of the International Socialist Review, says of it: "This is on the whole the most satisfactory work on ethics from the Socialist viewpoint" ("What to Read on Socialism," p. 45). Kautsky, as he intimates, is well qualified to interpret for us the Socialist mind, being the literary executor of Marx and Engels.

After telling us in this book that the human herds have been developed from the herds of social animals, and that the latter have social instincts only for members of their own herds and not for others, Kautsky argues that we must look for the survival of these conditions in the human animals of to-day.

"One of the most important forms of the struggle for existence," he says, "is the struggle of one herd against others of the same kind. Hence a man who is not a member of the same association becomes a direct enemy. The social impulses do not hold good for him, but directly against him. The stronger they are the better does the tribe hold together against the common foe. The social virtues, mutual help, self-sacrifice, love of truth, etc., apply only to fellow tribesmen, not to the members of another organization" (p. 156).

Thus the greatest living exponent of Socialist morality deduces from Marxian materialism, which is the only foundation of what we know as Socialism to-day, the freedom from all obligation in the matter of truth where enemies are concerned, among the first of whom they rank the Catholic Church. Indeed, a falsehood which will help the cause is an act of social virtue, while the utterance of a damaging truth is a flagrant immorality. Such is the explicit teaching of their chosen spokesman, and the logical conclusion of the Socialist theory. "Only the lack of mere social impulses and virtues," he tells us, "which man has inherited from the social animals, is to be regarded as absolute immorality" (p. 193). It is set forth in the book which has received the highest recommendations of Kerr and orthodox Socialists in general as "the most satisfactory work on ethics from the Socialist viewpoint," the ideal guide-book for the Socialist Sunday school teacher. "The moral ideal," Kautsky teaches, "is nothing else than the complex of wishes and endeavors which are called forth by the opposition to the existing state of affairs" (p. 199). Lying, slander, and violence are therefore licit and virtuous if only they are practiced in opposition to the existing order of things.

We have carefully refrained from making any personal accusation. We have merely listened for a brief space to the great teacher whom Socialists have pointed out to us as the one who drew the waters of Marxian wisdom from the fountainhead itself. But we must admit that such principles seem to be almost universally carried out where there is question of the Catholic Church and of her priesthood, except in as far as ignorance of the truth can palliate the statements which are made. We shall confine ourselves to a single illustration from our Socialist mentor, the Call (Oct. 2, 1910):

"And last, stealthiest, most sinister and unscrupulous of all the foes of Socialism, humanity, evolution and civilization comes the so-called Holy Catholic Church of Rome. The priests of this great business corporation and religion are, by training and through self-interest, opposed to any system of political, industrial and social reform and regeneration whose fundamental ideas and ideals are liberty, etc., etc. . . . For Romanism is built upon autocracy, dogma, ignorance, inequality, enslaved thought, blind credulity, dog-like obedience and hostility to all human enlightenment and progress. The papacy has invariably fought truth to the last ditch, and its history is a record of fanatical intolerance, hatred, malice, greed, cruelty, falsehood and blood-lust. Once in a while some big-hearted, big-brained, courageous priest, like the late and great Father Thomas McGrady or Father Hagerty, breaks loose from the soul-destroying faith and bravely takes his stand with suffering humanity."—(Edmund Defreynne).

Similar instances of Socialist honesty or enlightenment may be found in any Socialist paper where the Catholic Church enters into question. They range from professed neutrality, with its cunning innuendoes, to open threats. Where serious arguments are deemed insufficient, ridicule is employed. Papers that are most anxious to make perverts from the ranks of Catholic workingmen are most sparing and covert in their attacks. But their general tone, as well as the literature recommended by them, always makes their attitude clear. How far this Marxian materialism is carried to its logical deduction, as Kautsky claims it is, does not rest with us to determine. Suffice it to say that we gladly admit in excuse, wherever this is possible, a want of knowledge of that Church which alone is founded on the truth and whose sublime mission it is to teach the gospel to the poor.

JOSEPH HUSSLEIN, S.J.

"The Poet of Her Children"

There is little poetry in Protestantism. Though the leaders of the sixteenth century revolt against the Church's authority were largely the "poets," so called, of the False Renaissance, they really had scant love or appreciation of the beautiful. For the most part they were a prosy, vulgar, roystering set, who found far more pleasure in quarrels and wassail than in discerning or expressing the beautiful. The early "Reformers" were vandals. In their desolating march through Northern Europe the heresies of Luther and of Calvin destroyed what was fair in art, venerable in antiquity, and tender in devotion. Where Protestantism triumphed beauty hid her face and fled.

Churches, cloisters, shrines and universities, statues, altars and painted windows, which were the heritage of ages and miracles of art, were pillaged and defaced by mad fanatics. Apostolical doctrines, hallowed traditions and time-honored institutions were fiercely swept away. Pious practices and soothing rites that had brought comfort to the sorrowing hearts of half-a-hundred generations were suddenly declared empty forms or base superstitions and relentlessly abolished.

Then, when Protestantism in formulating her new theology began to choose out of the wreckage she had caused, the tenets and the ceremonies that most pleased her fancy, she seemed to show a perverse genius for rejecting much that was noble, touching or beautiful in the old religion, and with her frantic zeal for "purity and simplicity" in worship and dogma, succeeded only in achieving vulgarity, coldness and ugliness.

So Cardinal Newman in delineating with a master's hand even that Church which of all the Protestant sects was "the least deformed because reformed the least," pictures the Anglican system of his youth with "A ritual dashed upon the ground, trodden on and broken piece-meal;—prayers clipped, pieced, torn, . . . shuffled about at pleasure, until the meaning of the composition perished, and offices which had been good poetry were no longer even good prose; . . . vestments chucked off, lights quenched, jewels stolen, the pomp and circumstances of worship annihilated; a dreariness which could be felt, . . . forcing itself upon the eye, the ear, the nostrils of the worshiper; a smell of dust and damp, not of incense; a sound of ministers preaching Catholic prayers, and parish clerks droning out Catholic canticles; the royal arms for the crucifix; huge, ugly boxes of wood, sacred to preachers, frowning on the congregation in the place of the mysterious altar; and long cathedral aisles unused, railed off like the tombs (as they were) of what had been and was not—and for orthodoxy, a frigid, unelastic, inconsistent, dull, helpless, dogmatic."

If this is a faithful picture of the coldness and emptiness of the Establishment, what would the great Oratorian have said of New England Calvinism in its palmy days, with its ugly meeting houses, long sermons, and extempore prayers, its "dissidence of dissent," and bitter hatred of rites and ceremonies. But the Catholic Church, on the other hand, to quote again the renowned Cardinal, "is the poet of her children; full of music to soothe the sad and control the wayward—wonderful in story for the imagination of the romantic; rich in symbol and imagery, so that gentle and delicate feelings which will not bear words may in silence intimate their presence or commune with themselves. Her very being is poetry, every psalm, every petition, every collect, every versicle, the cross, the mitre, the thurible, is a fulfilment of some dream of childhood, or aspiration of youth."

Suppose a great poet, to whom Catholicism was but a name, were brought beneath the spell of the Church's influence and gave an open mind to the study of her tenets and a discerning eye to the observation of her ritual. Would he not find in all he learned and saw a theme for a deathless poem? He would recognize in Catholic doctrines all that appeals to the heart's longings. Holy Mass, that mystic sacrifice of prayer and praise and expiation, he would behold following the sun around the world. Dwelling forever on the altar would be seen that dream of poets, "a present Deity" "comforting His own," and making His Blessed Flesh their daily food.

The Maiden Mother, whose prayers are her children's protection, and whose example keeps them pure, the heavenly citizens who at God's throne plead for men, the ministering spirits who guard and guide into eternal rest the pilgrims of time, are beautiful conceptions that could not but fire the imagination of our gifted inquirer. When he learned, too, what peace the Church's absolution brings to sin-tossed souls, what comfort fills the hearts of mourners as they pray for their departed loved ones, what confidence the last anointing gives the dying, our poet would be almost moved to tears.

Then the beauty of the Church's ritual and the splendor of her worship would appeal just as strongly to his responsive soul. The deep significance of the rites of baptism and confirmation, or the impressive simplicity with which the tremendous powers of the priesthood are conferred would not be lost on this ideal observer. If he watched a Corpus Christi procession or heard the divine office chanted or saw Mass celebrated solemnly, heavenly harmonies would echo through his heart and make his verse musical.

The form and hue of every vestment with which the Church clothes her ministers, the purpose and symbolism of every instrument she uses, would convey its meaning to our delighted inquirer. Their very names to him would be full of poetry. The stole, the chalice, the censer, the sanctuary lamp, the crozier, the pallium, the cardinal's robe, the Pope's tiara—each would have a language of its own. The changing beauties of the Church's Mass and office and ceremonial from Advent to Pentecost, her observance of the feasts of Our Divine Lord and His incomparable Mother, the commemoration in due order of virgins, confessors and martyrs, who have fought the good fight and won their crowns, "high festival, and gorgeous procession and soothing dirge and passing bell and the familiar evening call to prayer," would so inspire our poet that his fancy would take wings and enrich the world with a masterpiece.

Then, perhaps, his genius would paint in words that glow the unearthly beauty of the cloistered life or would describe those holy nuns who, "whether they remain in seclusion, or are sent over the earth, have calm faces, and sweet, plaintive voices, and spare frames, and gentle manners, and hearts weaned from the world, and wills subdued," while seeking and finding everywhere, "Christ, their all-sufficient, everlasting portion, to make up to them, both here and hereafter, all they suffer, all they dare, for His Name's sake."

These, no doubt, are some of the beauties our ideal poet would discern in the Church, and if the hereditary Catholic does not perceive them it is because he has grown so accustomed to what he sees daily that it no longer impresses him, for "Everything is spoilt by use." But "in the fatness of these pursy times," when vulgarity and pretense are so widespread, the children of our fair Mother should learn to value properly the treasures of beauty they possess in the ordinances, ritual and doctrines of Holy Church. Let them reflect, too, that all this loveliness is not what could belong to a merely human institution, but rather is the heavenly radiance of a being instinct with divine life and the only teacher of morality, the sole guardian of faith, that can counteract with success the drift of our age toward the ugliness of anarchy and unbelief.

WALTER DWIGHT, S. J.

The Sacred College of Cardinals

VI. CARDINALS IN FRANCE, SPAIN AND GERMANY.—The name of cardinal was looked upon as an honorable designation, as we see by the action of Pope St. Leo IX, who, in 1051, granted to the cathedral of Besançon in France the privilege of having in its chapter seven cardinals, who were permitted to wear the mitre in church ceremonies on the great feasts. A similar privilege was granted by Pope Eugene III to the cathedral of Cologne in 1152. Again, Pope Innocent III confirmed in 1209, in favor of the bishop and chapter of Orense, Spain, a custom which they had had "from time immemorial" of naming eight cardinal priests of their cathedral church. The shrine of St. James at Compostela in Galicia also had seven cardinal priests, through a favor granted in perpetuity by Pope Paschal II in 1108. Although Pope St. Pius V ordained in 1568 that the name cardinal should be reserved exclusively to the Cardinals of the churches of the city of Rome, his decree remained in abeyance as far as the two churches in Spain were concerned, for they did not drop the title from their lists of dignitaries until the adoption of the Concordat of 1851.

VII. PAPAL ELECTIONS.—When an election to the see of Rome meant a life of suffering and persecution, very often crowned with martyrdom, there was little likelihood that an unworthy candidate should present himself or find encouragement. The clergy chose him, the neighboring bishops confirmed their choice, and the faithful in general were present to testify to his worthiness. Thus, in the first century, a Syrian, St. Evaristus, in the second an African, St. Victor I, and in the third a Dalmatian, St. Caius, sat in the chair of Peter. But when the Papacy, released from the persecutions of pagan Rome, began to take its proper place in the world, all the resources of worldly power and craft were drawn upon, from time to time, to exalt now this candidate, now that, as politics or family pretensions or brute force might dictate. Some robber baron at Rome forced his candidate upon the people, or some German emperor named the occupant of the see.

Pope Stephen X, a saintly and devoted Benedictine monk, seeing that his end was approaching, used his best endeavors to impress upon clergy and people the vital importance of the election of a proper successor. All promised to heed his advice, but hardly was his death known when, in spite of bishops and cardinals, some Roman nobles, by means of bands of armed ruffians and of money stolen from St. Peter's church, set up John of Velletri as Bishop of Rome. Their triumph, however, was short-lived; for some of the cardinals who had escaped from the city met in Siena and decided that Gerard, a Burgundian, then Bishop of Florence, would be a suitable Pope. Their action was confirmed by the clergy and people of the city, and Gerard, who took the name of Nicholas II, was solemnly enthroned. John of Velletri quietly acquiesced.

Shortly after his exaltation, Pope Nicholas II held a council, in which he signalized his brief pontificate by attempting to do away with the evils which had sprung up in connection with papal elections. With the advice of the bishops and other clergy assembled for the occasion, he issued a decree, dated April 13, 1059, by which he reserved to the cardinal bishops the actual election to the apostolic chair, with the concurrence, however, of the other cardinals and of the rest of the clergy. As a concession to the Emperor, he was to be notified of the election before the consecration of the candidate. Unhappily, the decree was not respected. For fully one hundred and twenty years after the death of Nicholas II it was seldom that a papal election was conducted without more or less interference on the part of violent or arbitrary laymen.

When Alexander III ascended the throne of the Fisherman, in 1159, it was to begin a long and stormy pontificate; but, after a struggle for twenty-two years with clerical mischief-makers and lay meddlers, he saw his labors gloriously crowned in the work of the Eleventh Ecumenical Council, held in the Lateran basilica in 1179. What Pope Nicholas II had attempted to do Pope Alexander III accomplished by a conciliar enactment, which at once and for all time reserved exclusively to all the Roman Cardinals, without distinction of order, all future elections to the see of Rome. The decree also ordained that the votes of two-thirds of the Cardinals actually assembled for the election should be requisite to determine a choice. Such has been the practice since 1179. The choice of Pope Martin V in 1417 by an electoral commission made up of twenty-eight Cardinals and forty other ecclesiastics, it may be remarked in passing, was to meet a highly exceptional state of affairs brought on by a disputed and, at the time, doubtful election, which had precipitated the disastrous Schism of the West.

Besides the conciliar enactment, Pope Alexander III took other prudential steps to protect and dignify the election of those who were to come after him in the Papedom. The abbots of St. Paul and St. Lawrence without the walls were made Cardinals; the archpriests of the Lateran, of St. Peter's and of St. Mary Major were similarly honored; and all the most influential and most respected priests in Rome were admitted to membership in the College of Cardinals. The inferior clergy, consequently, and the people in general, seeing their honored friends and patrons thus singled out for dignities, were quite satisfied to leave to them the choice of a Bishop of Rome.

As pontifical electors, the Cardinals have commonly chosen one of their own number, and the blank ballot which they fill out supposes that they will select a Cardinal, but any man that is a Bishop, or may become a Bishop, is eligible. The history of the Church shows that Pope Eugene III and Pope Urban VI, among others, were not Cardinals when elected, and that Pope John XX was not even in minor orders when called to the Chair of Peter.

The Cardinal Bishops are, of course, Bishops, as are almost always the Cardinal Priests residing outside Rome. Nowadays even the Cardinal Deacons are usually priests, there having been but one exception these many years. But, going back a few centuries (and they are as nothing in the life of the Church), we find that Pope Honorius II and Pope Leo X, though Cardinals, were only in deacon's orders when elected to the pontificate. The election of Pope Gregory XVI in 1831 is the only instance in these latter days of the choice of one who was not already a Bishop.

H. J. SWIFT, S.J.

Oporto's Deposed Bishop

Judging others by their own degradation, the iniquitous authors of the Separation Law seem to have thought that the Portuguese clergy, attracted by the bait of wretched pensions that might deliver them from the pangs of hunger, would not hesitate to sacrifice their honor, their dignity, their conscience and their faith for the sake of their personal interest. But the sectarians who now control the destinies of the country did not know the temper of the clergy when the issue was put squarely before them and they were called upon to choose between duty and worldly advantage.

Afonso Costa, who fathered the now sadly famous law, fancied that there would be an unseemly scramble on the part of the priests in their anxiety to profit by its provisions; but he is now disabused, for ninety-five per cent. of the prospective beneficiaries have formally rejected the specious offer of bread as the price of apostasy. The constancy of the priests has but reflected the constancy of the bishops, who spoke their minds in a collective pastoral letter, which was given out shortly after the nature and spirit of the law became known from its published text.

One of those bishops, who in the eyes of the Government is no longer at the head of his diocese, since he was "removed" by a cabinet decree, is Dom Antonio José de Sousa Barroso, Bishop of Oporto. In this man, strong and vigorous, of grave yet gentle look, with broad, un-wrinkled brow and full, flowing beard, whose striking countenance recalls the great Bishop of Hippo, St. Augustine, there seems to have been recalled into being that race of apostolic men and renowned missionaries who in the days of long ago went forth with no equipment but the cross and the wayfarer's staff, and penetrated mountains, forests and deserts in their quest for souls.

It was in 1880 that the young missionary, Father Barroso, left the College of Sernache de Bomjardim and set out for San Salvador del Congo, the ancient capital of the kingdom and the first seat of the very extensive bishopric of Angola. Of what had once been an important and widespread field of Christian activity there remained only four or five priests and a recently established Protestant mission; there remained the ruins of the Portuguese fort and the ashes of the churches that had once been the temples of prayer of those earlier Christians. Father Barroso resolved to restore those ruins. Little by little he gained the good graces of the so-called King of Congo and, profiting by his friendship, soon had a mission in full working order. He built churches and schools and workshops; he opened asylums; he developed agricultural and industrial pursuits; he even started a meteorological station. At one and the same time he was apostle, teacher, physician, engineer, diplomat, magistrate and naturalist. He established a new mission further south, where he set up a printing-press, its first production being a catechism in the native language.

After eight years in that arduous field, where he had faced so many hardships, Father Barroso's health was so undermined by fevers that he was forced to return to Portugal, but not until he had won back that once important field to the Church and to his country.

His stay was not of long duration. The vicariate apostolic of Mozambique having fallen vacant, Father Barroso was appointed to it and was consecrated titular Bishop of Himeria. The condition of Mozambique, an immense district measuring a million square kilometers, was even more deplorable than what he had found in the Congo. He had nothing. There were no priests, no churches, and one might almost say no Catholics. Mohammedanism had destroyed everything, and amid the ruins Protestantism was beginning to put in an appearance.

Bishop Barroso repeated in Mozambique the apostolic labors which had signalized his stay in Portuguese Congo. If his was a life of labor and suffering, it was also crowned with brilliant success. He built churches and chapels, gave a fresh impulse to missionary work, and made an extensive visitation of his vicariate, which stretched through a distance of nine hundred miles. In the course of these missionary excursions he penetrated districts where no white man had ever before set foot.

The bishop's health was so undermined by the tropical fevers which racked his frame during his journeys that after three years thus spent he was constrained to return to Portugal for rest and medical care. His intention was to go back to his vicariate as soon as his health should be restored, but while recuperating in his native land he was named Bishop of Meliapor in the East Indies, where his jurisdiction extended from the Himalayas to Bengal, and from the Malabar Coast to the delta of the Ganges. He was amid the palms of Madura, where the voice of St. Francis Xavier, the apostle of the Indies, had been raised in the cause of religion, when an official telegram informed him of his promotion to the see of Oporto. This was in February, 1899.

Zealously and successfully engaged in the cares of the pastoral office, Bishop Barroso went happily forward in his labors until the so-called Law of Separation called forth the collective protest of the Portuguese hierarchy. This letter he caused to be read in his presence to the faithful in his cathedral. The provisional Government at once deprived him of his see (at least, it pretended to do so) and ordered the cathedral chapter to proceed to a new election. This the chapter declared that they could not do, since there was no vacancy and their action could not be otherwise than null and void. The vicar general, therefore, undertook the administration of the diocese in virtue of the faculties that he had received from the bishop.

The Government could not ignore the services which Bishop Barroso had performed for his country, and therefore assigned him a modest pension for his support in the College of Sernache de Bomjardim, to which the untiring apostle and distinguished patriot retired to spend his last days in unruffled serenity of soul.

Is it not true that Bishop Barroso's life has been a wonder, a prodigy? Can Portugal name a citizen more distinguished for literary ability, for learning, for energy, for highmindedness, for heroism and abnegation? Can it point out another who has done as much for the moral and material well-being of the country? This is the man whom the provisional Government drove from his episcopal chair because he believed and said and acted up to his belief, "We ought to obey God rather than man."

NORBERTO TORCAL,
Prensa Asociada, Madrid.

INVESTITURE OF THE NEW CARDINALS

There were forceful reminders of the ceremonial splendors of the old days of the Rome of the Popes in the details that accompanied the final scenes of the creation of the new nineteen cardinals on November 29 and 30.

On the afternoon of November 29 the Pope ascended his throne in the Consistorial Hall of the Vatican, and, as the master of ceremonies called their names, the three new American Cardinals, Archbishop Falconio, Archbishop Farley and Archbishop O'Connell and ten of their associates knelt before His Holiness and received from him the red mozetta and biretta, the minor insignia of their new rank in the Church.

After they had been thus invested they took their seats on benches around the throne. Cardinal Falconio, as the dean of the new members, then arose and, in Italian, said he felt honored at being selected to express to the Pope on behalf of himself and his most eminent colleagues their thanks and homage. They were all fully convinced that their merits were not in proportion to the high rank bestowed upon them, but their elevation was a proof of the pontiff's benevolence.

The Cardinals, he said, were deeply grateful and were happy to reciprocate by offering the Pope their work and placing themselves at his entire disposal. They fully realized the responsibility of the Holy Father, especially in the present troubled times, when society was threatened by anti-religious attempts to demolish the Church of Christ. It was owing to the Pope's energetic and constant defence of the Church since his elevation to the chair of Peter that the devastating torrent had stopped.

The Cardinals would fervidly pray the Almighty to continue to aid the Pope in his struggle against the spirit of evil, and they were convinced of his final triumph.

He assured the Pope of the cooperation of himself and his colleagues and offered him homage from the bottom of their hearts.

The Pope replied in a clear, strong voice, thanking the Cardinals for their assurances, and expressed his gratification at the fact that men who were already well known for their piety, zeal and wisdom and who had already served the Church with unlimited devotion, had now been added to the Sacred College. He congratulated them on the honor which had been bestowed on them, which, he said, was fully deserved and which would enable them to aid him in the government of the Church.

In these unhappy times, said the Pontiff, when the Pope was furiously attacked by his enemies, the Cardinalate exacted a sacrifice owing to the unfortunate condition of Christ's Vicar, which he did not mention for the purpose of exciting pity, but to point out that the purple nowadays symbolized sorrow, pain and sacrifice toward the triumph of truth and justice. He recalled the Scriptural warnings in regard to the persecution of the Church, which is inevitable, but he declared the Church will last to the end of the world and, even during its tribulations, consolations were not lacking. Thus the new Cardinals would share the Pope's sorrows and happinesses and would strive with him to serve the Church.

Alluding to England and Holland, the Pope referred to the rejoicings in those countries over the elevation of Cardinals Bourne and Van Rossum, which, he said, filled him with the hope that the non-Catholics in those countries would return to the true faith. Then in a voice which was broken with emotion the Pope said:

"This hope is increased when I think of you who come from distant America, of the enthusiasm there over the news of your elevation to the Cardinalate, of the demonstrations of all classes of citizens, of the acclamations accompanied by blessings and affectionate greetings on your departures from New York and Boston and your triumphal journey across the ocean. Protected by the Papal blessing, I hope that your return will multiply the fruits of your apostolic mission and that they will spread over your hospitable country, which welcomes the peoples of the world. Where well intended freedom contributes to the universal welfare there surely God will reign."

Addressing the French Cardinals, he recalled the persecutions under which the Church was groaning in that country, and said he felt assured that with the piety and sacrifices of the clergy and the prayers of Catholics God's mercy would descend on France, which, he hoped, would again become the eldest daughter of the Church.

The Pope then blessed the Cardinals, the clergy and the people of their dioceses, all those present and their families.

On November 30 the public Consistory brought to the Hall of Beatification a concourse of some 10,000 ecclesiastics and laymen to witness the final ceremony of the bestowal of the red hats, rings and titles on the new Cardinals. In reply to the felicitations of Mgr. Caccia, the master of the wardrobe, who carried the red hats to them, Cardinal Falconio replied on behalf of himself and his colleagues, whose selection, he said, had proved the love of His Holiness for America. In that country he (Cardinal Falconio) had learned to admire the wonderful Constitution, which, besides respecting, he declared, encourages religious sentiments in the people, thereby contributing to the welfare of the country. The freedom of America, said Cardinal Falconio, made possible the wonderful development of Catholicism under the zeal of the bishops, the clergy and the people.

Cardinal Falconio recalled the happy coincidence that the public consistory was being held on Thanksgiving Day, when the people of America thank the Almighty for the benefits they have received during the year, an example of the religious sentiment of that nation, which, he thought, would be well for other countries to follow.

The Pope was carried to the hall in the gestatorial chair, and, after taking his throne, each of the new Cardinals approached and received from him his hat and ring. His Holiness read the formula of the ritual in a loud voice and seemed to go through the long and fatiguing ceremony without much physical discomfort. His vigorous appearance impressed all.

Cardinal Giuseppe Maria Cos y Macho, Archbishop of Valladolid, Spain; Cardinal Bauer, Archbishop of Olmütz, Austria; Cardinal Nagl, Archbishop of Vienna; Cardinal Enriquez Almaraz y Santos, Archbishop of Seville, Spain, and Cardinal Vico, of Madrid, will receive their red birettas from their respective sovereigns.

The abbates left Rome at once to bear the cap and documents authorizing the investiture of these Cardinals, who will go to Rome within a year to receive their red hats from the Pope. The next consistory probably will be at Easter time.

In a talk with the correspondent of The Sun after the consistory, Cardinal Farley said:

"This is doubly Thanksgiving Day when my city is so highly honored. I feel sure that the members of the Church in America will henceforth be more devoted to the cause of truth and righteousness and everything that goes to the making of good citizenship. They will consider themselves what the Pope expects all Catholics to be, exemplars of all the civic virtues. Anybody who fails in this will not be a credit either to the Church, its head or his faith. This wish I have most at heart, that my people be standard bearers of good living, whether as simple citizens or as public officials."

The deputation accompanying Cardinal Farley gave a congratulatory dinner to him at the Hotel Bristol on Thursday evening. Among those present were Mgr. Dennis O'Connell, the auxiliary Bishop of San Francisco; Bishop Kennedy, rector of the American College in Rome; Mgr. Thomas J. Shahan, rector of the Catholic University at Washington; Thomas Hughes Kelly of New York, a private Papal Chamberlain; Prior Fitzgerald and Father MacNicholls of the Dominicans; Father Dolan, rector of St. Sylvester's, Rome; Fathers Chas. Macksey, S.J., and J. H. Farley, S.J.

The grand dining room was decorated with the American and Papal flags and the menus bore the coats of arms of Pius X and Cardinal Farley.

Very Rev. Mgr. Richard L. Burtzell acted as toastmaster. The first toast, to the health of the Pope, was proposed by Cardinal Farley. Then Rev. Dr. Daniel Burke replied to the toast "The United States." He was followed by Mgr. Wall, who answered the toast to the diocese of New York. Mr. Kelly spoke for the laity and Mgr. Shahan responded to a toast to the Catholic University at Washington.

Cardinal Farley cabled his blessings to his old parish of St. Gabriel's and to other institutions in New York.

The name of the nineteenth Cardinal, who was reserved in petto, is now stated to be that of Mgr. Anthony Mendes Bello, the Patriarch of Lisbon since 1907.

The Pope has appointed Cardinal Farley a member of the Consistorial and Propaganda Congregations; Cardinal O'Connell to the Congregations of Rites and Studies, and Cardinal Falconio to the Congregations of Propaganda and Religious.

The Cardinals will not return to the United States until after New Year's.

CORRESPONDENCE

Clerical Conscripts for Italy's Army

ROME, November 18, 1911.

A Sabbath quiet lies on the city here. What the cholera did for the summer visitor the war has done for the winter resident: the hotels are more than half empty and our bonifaces look unhappy. The native, too, has subsided from the cheering enthusiasm of some weeks back, and though almost daily new squads of conscripts set out for the African coast, their friends see them off with sober pride and sympathy, but without the frantic demonstrations of the early days. The price of appropriating a strip of land between the desert and the sea from a barbaric foe, to whose fierce Arab vassal the desert is a familiar hiding place, if not a home, is coming more nearly home to everybody as news of the conflict gradually seeps through the solid walls of censorship.

Of course, we learn only of victories, never of reverses, but we have grasped the fact that the Italian lines were too extended and under attack had to be drawn in more closely to the city. We are allowed to know that cholera is playing havoc with the Arabs, and, of course, may make our own deductions from the fact that the same is no respecter of persons. When we learn from Naples that last Sunday a shipment of 1,400 quintals of phenic acid, corrosive sublimate and lyssiform left for Tripoli we know that it is not to protect the Arabs from cholera.

There are no further official returns of losses in action or from disease, but occasionally in the case of young officers from well-known families in Rome the fact cannot be hidden. The far reach of conscription is noticeable in the youthful faces of many of the latest recruits, and from the fact that in many a religious community in the city the soldier in uniform appears in the community dining room, or at some of the religious exercises of the house, showing that he has been drafted thence and is using some of his hours off duty to keep in touch with his religious life and brethren. A number of young religious and seminarians are actually in the trenches at the front, serving the flag of United Italy.

At the same time some of the anti-clerical journalists are clamoring for the exclusion of the chaplains from the field, on the ground that their presence gives color to the Turkish pretense that this is a religious war. This is waste talk, however, as the soldiers in the trenches are enthusiastic over the service of the chaplains, and, in one instance, the officers have recommended for decoration for distinguished bravery in the service a chaplain who calmly and zealously cared for the wounded and dying under constant heavy fire.

By the time this letter reaches New York the Consistories will be over and your readers will have from the press dispatches all the news concerning the new Cardinals that is only dribbling out to us at present by way of rumor.

As his titular church Archbishop Farley is to have the title of Santa Maria sopra Minerva, the well-known thirteenth century Gothic church in charge of the Dominicans adjacent to the former monastery (by confiscation now one of the public department buildings of United Italy), which was once the headquarters of the General of the Dominicans and the meeting place of the Congregation of the Inquisition. It was here that Galileo was tried, and in the church one may find the portrait of Cardinal Torquemada in the altar-piece of one of the side chapels. This was the titular church of Cardinal McCloskey, the first of the Americans to wear the honor. Cardinal O'Connell is to have the title of St. Calixtus, a little church near Santa Maria in Trastevere, built on the place of the martyrdom of St. Calixtus and surrounding the well into which were thrown the sacred remains of this venerated Pontiff of the fourth century. His name is familiar to Roman visitors because of the Catacombs, which bear his name from the days when as deacon of Pope Zephyrinus he was placed in charge of them. The church now belongs to the Benedictines of St. Paul's. Cardinal Bisleti takes his title from St. Agatha of the Goths, belonging since 1850 to the Irish College. In this church was laid the heart of Daniel O'Connell, bequeathed to Rome by the dying Liberator.

There are signs here and there of preparation for the receptions due after the Consistory. Dropping into the studio of Signor Bottoni, one of Rome's greatest portrait painters, the other day, I found him busy with a lovely painting of the Holy Father. "It is for the apartments of one of the new cardinals," he said. Mgr. Dennis O'Connell, auxiliary Bishop of San Francisco, is in town and will stay over for the Consistory and its subsequent functions.

On Thursday, in St. Agatha of the Goths, a memorial service for the late Cardinal Moran was held by the community of the Irish College. The Mass was sung by Mgr. O'Dea, Bishop of Galway; the absolutions were read by Cardinal Ferrata, while in the sanctuary were Cardinal Vannutelli and the rectors of the English, Irish, Scotch and North American Colleges and the rector of the Beda College and many other notables. On Monday Mgr. Schuler, the newly consecrated Archbishop of Nazianzum, took his departure from Rome for the Franciscan Monastery at Fulda, where he will take up his residence.

In spite of his advanced age (he is now in his eighty-eighth year), Cardinal Capecepatro has recovered from his recent severe illness, and has just dispatched to Boston a letter addressed to Father Vittorio Gregori, in charge of the Italian congregation there, a letter full of the warmest sympathy and encouragement to his exiled fellow Capuans, exhorting them to retain their love of their native Italy and, above all, their loyalty to the Holy Father, and urging them to set an example to their fellow Italians in their practical devotion to the Catholic faith.

Father Dionysius Schuler, former general of the Franciscan Minorites, was consecrated Bishop of Nazianzum by Cardinal Merry del Val on November 5. He is doubtless remembered by many in the United States, where he spent several years as a zealous missionary before he was called to Rome to become General of the Order.

The renewal of the pavement of St. Peter's has just been completed at a total cost of $33,000, towards the payment of which the Holy Father has contributed $27,000 and Cardinal Rampolla $6,000. The Chapter of the Vatican is planning to face with marble the sixty-six pilasters of the Basilica, now covered with stucco, and the Marquis De Pimodan has given $7,000, to help begin the enterprise. Speaking of pavements, the streets of Rome are at present in a deplorable condition, owing to their having been ripped open everywhere for the planting of electric wires, pneumatic postal connections, gas pipes and such, and closed again, where closed (for they are still inconveniently open in many places where traffic is congested), with the usual carelessness. The press is voicing a loud wail from the community, but in vain, for the present.

Rome has just lost the greatest of her architects, Andrea Busiri-Vici, at the advanced age of ninety-four years. He had been chief architect in care of St. Peter's, and for forty years professor of architecture in the Academy of St. Luke, of which in these later years he was president. His restoration of the Church of Saint Agnes outside the city and of the apse of St. John Lateran will long testify to his genius and artistic taste.

In competition with the nuns' academies the government has just opened a national boarding school for girls attending the public schools in Rome. It is to be in charge of women employed by the government, among whom I noticed the name of Signora Chiaraviglio-Giolitti: it is to be hoped that she is not of kin to the Prime Minister.

There is a new edition of the Divine Office going through the official press, and with its publication will be issued a "Motu Proprio" reforming the same. A forecast of the latter indicates that the Office for Saturdays and Sundays will be shortened to a compass of three-quarters of an hour, that a number of Offices of the Saints will be reduced to a ferial office of the day with a commemoration of the Saint, that the psalms for the ferial Offices will be redistributed more evenly and in such fashion as to cover the whole psalmody within a fixed period, say of a week, while at the same time shortening the Office to within the limit of an hour, if that be possible. Perhaps it would be safer, as it usually is, to prophesy after the fact.

C. M.

Letters Rogatory and Elections

MADRID, November 6, 1911.

We have stated in our former correspondence that the spirit of violence, ferocity, barbarity and savagery which the everlasting slanderers of our country depict so frequently is unknown among us and has no existence here. Our assertion was not wholly exact and truthful. We must rectify it; at least, in part. Yes, there is a Spain that is cruel, bloodthirsty, barbarous and savage, but it is not the Spain that people call clerical and reactionary. It is not the Spain of statutes, of authorities, the historic, believing and traditional Spain; it is the Spain of those who dub themselves "progressive and Europeanized," the Spain of radicals and revolutionists, the Spain of those who made the "Bloody Week" in Barcelona, and committed the murders and other crimes of Cullera. The Spanish Republican revolutionary party must remain forever dishonored by such frightful atrocities.

In an attempt to secure impunity for those dastardly villains, the members of the party having seats in the Cortes have characterized the outrages as "a mere accident in the struggle, only a political offense," and they are cracking the skies with their folderol about humanity and compassion in behalf of the soulless "poor creatures" of Cullera, whose brutal crimes cry to heaven. Those who had not a sigh of regret for the innocent victims of anarchist ferocity, those who, far from being horrified, rejoiced at the sight of the mutilated corpses of respected men who had been done to death by the rabble drunk with blood, now ask and demand, with threats, that the murderers be set at liberty, and even honored and glorified. If to effect this slander be necessary, let there be slander. The civil guard, long known as "la benemerita" (the well-deserving), the courts, the army, the administration—in a word, the whole body politic—is to be assailed and befouled, if necessary, all to cheat the hangman.

Canalejas himself, who is wont to be so condescending, so benevolent and so conciliatory towards the radicals, finds himself driven by the violence of their revolutionary passion to try to curb them. Spain has laws against public defamation. But the offenders are deputies, members of the lower House of the Cortes, and as such they are exempt from the jurisdiction of the courts, unless the two Houses specially permit and authorize the judges to take cognizance of the matter. It now falls to the ministry to present "letters rogatory" to the Cortes for the granting to the courts of the requisite jurisdiction over the slanderers.

The Spanish Constitution established and sanctioned parliamentary immunity for the sole and exclusive object of securing to the members during the sessions of the Cortes every opportunity to discuss and criticize the actions of the ministry without running the risk of being called to account before the courts. This most wise provision has saved the representatives of the people from being the victims of the tyranny or caprice of the executive, which might otherwise seal their mouths; but with time it has degenerated into a deplorable abuse. Immunity has become impunity not only for political offenses in the Cortes and in public as well, but even for ordinary offenses against the code.

From time to time the judges, at sight of grave infractions of the law, have presented letters rogatory to the Cortes for jurisdiction over some violation of the criminal code perpetrated by a deputy; but the custom has grown up of refusing the petition or of pigeonholing it, where it enters upon a long and unbroken rest. Maura tried, away back in 1904, to bring back parliamentary immunity to its proper place, but the Liberals raised a great outcry and had recourse to violent opposition. Now that the Liberals are in power, they purpose doing precisely what they prevented Maura from accomplishing. Time has its revenges, and Maura's spirit now has its balm; for Canalejas has given notice of his intention to press the matter on the reassembling of the Cortes.

Another matter which shares public interest with the question of parliamentary immunity is the municipal elections, which are held in November. Although on the face of it the struggle is merely political, it is in reality religious; for the point at issue is the secularization of our social life. The radicals aim at official unbelief in every sphere of public life. They would remove the crucifix and the catechism from the school, and every religious element and symbol from the hospital and the cemetery, and so of all else. Control of the municipalities means all this. Will they succeed? Our people have given so many proofs of their indifference, cowardice and shiftlessness that we do not entertain very bright hopes of our success; but if all lovers of order and believers in religion would do their duty as citizens and go to the polls, the victory would be almost certain.

NORBERTO TORCAL.

Disintegration of the Jacobite Church

It is now more than two years since Mar Gregory Abdulla, the Jacobite Patriarch of Antioch, arrived in Malabar on an official visit to his spiritual children, the Jacobite Syrians. He was at first greeted with enthusiasm, but the report of the inconsistencies of his past life, coupled with the aggressive policy he pursued in Malabar, has brought about a revulsion of feeling. A few details of his strange career and of the religious troubles that followed in the wake of his advent in Malabar will serve to throw some light on the internal state of the Jacobite Church.

Mar Gregory Abdulla was already a bishop when he accompanied Mar Peter Ignatius, the Jacobite Patriarch of Antioch, on a visit to Malabar some thirty-eight years ago. On his return to Antioch, and after the death of the said Patriarch, Mar Abdulla was for some time Administrator of the Patriarchate. But soon after the election of Mar Abdal Miniha as Patriarch in 1896, Mar Gregory left Jacobitism and embraced the Catholic Faith.

In 1906, for some reason or other, the Turkish Government deposed Mar Miniha and, strange to say, chose Mar Gregory Abdulla (a Catholic for ten years) as the Jacobite Patriarch, and without a scruple he jumped back into his former boat.

The Jacobites of Antioch had to look to Malabar for help and support, for the Malabar Jacobites (separated from the Catholics in 1652 owing to their dislike for Portuguese jurisdiction, and since subject to Nestorian and Protestant influences) form a well-knit and self-supporting community, with a population of over two lakhs. They are governed by a metropolitan and two bishops. The Jacobite clergy were formerly celibates, but now, through Protestant influence, they generally marry. The Protestants have also helped them in procuring higher education, and there are many Jacobites holding high positions in the service of the British and Native Governments. The devoted allegiance of such a prosperous community could not fail to be a matter of personal interest to the Patriarch, with his straitened means.

Before going to Malabar, Mar Abdulla visited England and had an audience with Edward VII. He also received letters of introduction from Lord Morley, the late Secretary of State for India. With such recommendations he was received with honor by the Governors of Bombay and Madras and by the Rajahs of Cochin and Travancore (both in Malabar). The Jacobites, of course, followed suit, and enthusiastically welcomed the Patriarch as their Pope. It was a triumph for Mar Abdulla.

The enthusiasm of the reception, however, subsided in a few days. Mar Abdulla soon took up permanent quarters, and slowly proceeded to the execution of his plans. From the very beginning he made no secret of the fact that he was in need of material help. The Jacobite churches and their properties are completely under the control of the native bishops and a certain number of trustees; the Patriarch has no voice in their management, and only receives a nominal tithe every year. He therefore insisted that he should have full power not only in spiritual but also in temporal matters. A few priests and influential laymen were induced to acquiesce in his demands, but, on the other hand, many protested against his encroachments and demanded that he should even give up his reserved right of consecrating bishops. Upon this issue the Metropolitan and many prominent laymen broke off from his allegiance, and claimed complete "Home Rule" and autonomy for their church.

Seeing that his authority was thus publicly impugned, Mar Abdulla sought to strengthen his position by creating two new bishops. These swore allegiance to their spiritual head, and were not wanting in generosity towards their benefactor. This act of the Patriarch, not unnaturally, made him more unpopular; opposition became more keen, and party feeling ran high.

Although the Metropolitan and a large section of the people turned against him, yet they had no wish to separate completely from the spiritual jurisdiction of Antioch. They have always been proud of "the primacy of Antioch recorded in the Bible." In this state of perplexity they resolved to call a special meeting of the Jacobite leaders, in order to restore peace. The meeting was largely attended. Rules were drawn up for determining the relations between their Church and the Patriarch, but the Patriarch's authority was reduced to a minimum, and the Jacobite Church in Malabar was declared to be local and self-governing. The only power conceded to Antioch was that of a general "supervision"—enough to symbolize the unity of their Church. They ruled, moreover, that the Patriarch should not in the future undertake any visit to Malabar without the written sanction of the bishops and the Council of laymen.

Then followed a lawsuit between the Patriarch and the Metropolitan for the control of the Seminary. The Patriarch lost the case, but he still remains in Malabar and continues to denounce the Malabar episcopacy for their lack of submission. So that the link between Malabar and Antioch is at best only nominal, and it is probable that the Malabarites will soon insist on complete independence from Antioch. Thus another stage has been reached in the disintegration of the old schismatical Jacobite Church.

JOHN PALOCAN.

How dear to the heart of the Holy Father is the cause of the Catholic press and how earnest his desire to combat the preversive literature of our day has again been manifested in his recent letter written on the occasion of the Catholic-Day celebration in Lower Austria. After calling attention to the great needs of our time—Catholic organization, Catholic schools, Catholic women's associations, sodalities of our Lady, and the Labor question, together with all the social activities which would be called forth by the latter—he thus refers to the war that must be waged upon a seductive press:

"It is our desire that you take the most favorable opportunity, and assign to your best speakers the task of combating the evil press with all the eloquence at their command, to keep the faithful from the reading of objectionable papers as from poisoned wells. If, with the assistance of Heaven, you shall achieve this much, then you may, for this reason alone, count your convention as one of the most successful hitherto held."

A M E R I C A

A • CATHOLIC • REVIEW • OF • THE • WEEK

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 9, 1911.

Entered as second-class matter, April 15th, 1909, at the Post Office at New York, N. Y., under the Act of March 3d, 1879.

Copyright, 1911, and published weekly by the America Press, New York.
President, THOMAS J. CAMPBELL; Secretary, H. J. SWIFT;
Treasurer, MICHAEL J. O'CONNOR.

SUBSCRIPTIONS, POSTPAID:

United States, 10 cents a copy; yearly, $3.00
Canada, $3.50 Europe, $4.00 (16s.)

Address:

THE AMERICA PRESS, 59 East 83d Street, New York City, N. Y., U. S. A.

CABLE ADDRESS: CATHREVIEW.

The Homicidal Records

"For every hour of the day and night, for every day of the year," says a writer in Collier's, "a murder is done in the United States." All through the twenty-four hours a click of a trigger or a stab of a knife or an explosion of dynamite, or the howl of a mob, or the moan of a strangled victim, or the silent dropping of poison into food or medicine is being recorded by the tick of the clock, until the hideous figure of eight or nine thousand redhanded murders is registered on the dial of each returning year. Last year it reached the terrifying total of 8,975, irrespective of those that are never known, even to the police. The world shudders when it hears of the massacres by Turks or others in faraway lands, but here in America, which lifts its head high and foolishly boasts of being in the vanguard of civilization, there is a red trail over the land from one end to the other. We have the proud title of being the most murderous of nations. Our murder-rate is 70 or 80 per million, whereas that of Italy, which is so often quoted as revelling in assassinations, is only 15 per million; Canada's is less than 13; Great Britain's less than 9; and Germany's less than 5. We may well bow our heads in shame if this awful accusation be true.

What is the explanation of this return to savagery? Is it the aggregation of vast multitudes in great cities? No; "the murder rate is greater among the rural population." Is it the foreign immigrants? No; they are more law-abiding than the natives; but, unfortunately, the reverse is true for their children, who, under the influence of American surroundings, are making a black record for themselves in the criminal courts. They would have been as good as their parents had they been born abroad. All sorts of theories are attempted to explain the frightful condition to which we are reduced. It is ascribed to the chance of escape which the criminal sees before him, helped, as he is sure to be, by the craftiness of lawyers, the corruption of juries, the influence of politicians, the leniency of judges, the appeal to executive clemency, and a thousand other things besides. For the depraved there is even a glamor thrown about the crime by the sensational reports and pictures in every paper of the country, almost making a hero out of the most degenerate monster. Again, the morbid sentimentality of vast numbers of people, who devour all the disgusting details of the most abominable deeds, and throng the courts to see and hear the principal actors, even bestowing pity and sympathy on the murderer, especially if he is young or handsome or rich, has contributed to rob the crime of its horror and repulsiveness. Over and above all this it is so common now that it has ceased to shock us.

The true explanation of it is that we are rapidly ceasing to be a Christian nation. A very large part of our people know nothing at all about religion of any kind. Millions of them never enter a church, have no religious practices in their homes, and never even hear the name of God except in blasphemy. They have no knowledge whatever of their obligations to their Creator; no belief in sin; no fear of punishment in the life to come, which they are taught to scoff at. Many of them have been taught that the satisfaction of their wildest passions is not only allowable, but proper. To keep out of the clutches of the law is the sum and substance of their ethical code. Is it not time that the authorities should see that at least the children should have some religious training?

Religion in the Schools

AMERICA has often referred to the indications that the wonderfully true forecast made by the Catholic hierarchy in this country more than three generations ago is coming to be accepted generally among the people. The diffusion of an education into which religious training is not permitted to enter, they warned us, can never have as product the formation of upright and conscientious citizens. Everywhere now among thinking people it is admitted that we must get moral training back into the schools if the result of the labor and sacrifices in behalf of education is to be what the founders of the popular school system claimed it would be. Needless to say, we welcome every additional evidence of the spread of the new spirit. Morality, however, that is not based on God and religion will possess neither stability nor fruition.

On November 26 the big dining room of the Hotel Astor here in New York was crowded with men, the majority of them gray, and all of them displaying signs of the dignity that comes from success in business. The occasion was the fifteenth annual dinner of the Thomas Hunter Association, Grammar School No. 35, an organization founded fifteen years ago to honor a veteran school teacher in the public schools of New York. The after-dinner speeches were unusually good and the praises of the Public School were sounded by all.

It required courage to give expression on such an occasion to sentiments favoring a sweeping change in the policy of the schools. Judge Thomas C. T. Crain, Judge of the Criminal Court, General Sessions, of Manhattan, one of the speakers, lacked neither courage nor earnestness. When called upon to address the gathering he caused considerable stir, the local press reports, by adding to his meed of praise of his old school and teachers these significant words:

"I think that there is nothing in life so necessary for children as a religious training, and I believe they should be taught religion as well as the subjects which are now taught.

"I have in mind a system that I think could be adopted with advantage. It is a system of registration, so that when a child enters school the faith of his parents may be known. And then I think that at certain hours of certain days set aside each week men competent to teach the religious faith of these parents should be engaged to instruct the children in the same faith."

One who was present tells us that, despite a number of dissenting voices interrupting his strong plea for religion in the school, it was a cheering thing to note the large number who applauded Judge Crain's sentiment. The signs of disapproval here and there did not disturb the speaker; quietly he went on:

"I am glad to see so much interest shown in this matter, for the most dangerous thing of all is indifference. This interest will make certain the discussion of the subject, so that all opinions may be obtained. If America is to remain free, if it is to last, no mere moralism will help it.

"This city to-day is facing the problem of freedom, and that is the problem that goes toward the making of America. What we need is character building, in order that we may measure up to the standard of man, and that character must be symmetrical. I still believe that religious training should be added to the school system, for in that way only can we build up character. It must be done by the worship of God, according to the faith of the children's parents. The mental and physical training must be balanced by a religious training."

Judge Crain, it may be remarked, is not a member of the Catholic Church and his large experience in the Criminal Courts of Manhattan gives him fair right to speak of the underlying defects in our social life to-day.

"The Fight Against an Evil Press"

This is the intention recommended for December by the Holy Father to the League of the Sacred Heart. It is a timely object of our prayers. Interested parties, as AMERICA has pointed out, are attempting to deaden the public conscience with regard to unclean literature. One of our reputable journals, for instance, publishes an interview with a "realistic" novelist, in which he lightly observes: "There is no such thing as sin to me. We grow largely through error." Then to show the world's progress in enlightenment, the author calls attention to the fact that a foul novel he published ten years ago met with universal condemnation, but one much worse he has just written "was received with hardly a word of protest for its plain speaking."

Besides the harm bad books are doing, cheap magazines are carrying moral contagion into numberless homes, and many of our newspaper proprietors, as a British journal truthfully says, have rid themselves effectively "of the old-fashioned notions of a newspaper's responsibility to the public in matters of taste, ethics or useful service." A large proportion of American papers nowadays are characterized by triviality, unscrupulousness and indecency, and their columns are filled for the most part with the wild exploitation of crime.

Now, what can Catholics do to better this state of things? The spiritual power exerted by 25,000,000 Leaguers throughout the world, praying simultaneously "against an evil press," is one very effective way of conducting the campaign. But with prayer must be joined action. Until we have in this country a chain of Catholic daily papers let the Church's children support none but decent journals; let them abstain from reading sensational sheets. "Stop buying them," urges the December Messenger. "Induce others to stop buying them; no argument is more convincing to their conductors than this one. Catholic societies might well consider the possibilities of such a line of action where the occasion calls for it."

Suppose the 15,000,000 Catholics in the United States were now to take this advice and cease buying sensational papers. Frightened by the falling off in their circulation, would not many of these journals reform?

The Church's Eugenics

The services which the Church has long been rendering to promote the progress of the apparently modern science of eugenics are well brought out in a paper by Father T. J. Gerrard in the Dublin Review:

"As a matter of positive eugenics," he writes, "the Church teaches that marriage is a sacrament through which is conveyed a divine strength enabling the married pair to perform all the duties of their state. As a matter of negative eugenics she places impediments against undesirable unions. Some of these are inexorable, as being at variance with the divine or natural law; others can be dispensed from whenever there is a sufficient reason. In imposing or taking away impediments the Church always puts religious considerations first. If the sanction of religion is destroyed, other sanctions are ineffectual.

"The impediments bearing more directly on physical and psychic culture are those of consanguinity and affinity. On all hands the intermarriage of blood relations is admitted to be an evil. It leads toward racial degeneration, to feeble-mindedness, to insanity, to consumption. It hinders the formation of new social relationship and thus weakens the social bond. Not merely, however, because of personal and social health does the Church impose the impediments, but for the higher claims of the spirit. The spirit lives by faith; faith is a habit of the intellect; a sound intellect can only exist in a sound body, therefore does the Church enact laws pertaining to bodily health.

"So, too, in the treatment of racial poisons. Whilst allowing full value to the remedies of segregation for inebriates and diseased, whilst giving all encouragement to legislation on behalf of the workmen, the Church sees in these things but temporary palliatives. With true eugenic instinct she goes to the source of the poisons. The only real preventive of alcohol poisoning is the cardinal virtue of temperance. The only real preventive of venereal disease is the angelic virtue of purity. The only real preventive of lead poisoning is the rightly informed and rightly trained conscience of the employer. Not for one moment would we relax or under-value legislative forces in these matters. But police regulations are only for degenerates. The perfect man, perfect both in his God-given nature and God-given super-nature, needs the higher intellectual light of revelation and the higher volitional energy of grace."

Socialist Toleration

An interesting instance of the toleration that may be expected from the Socialist Commonwealth can be seen in the violent conflicts between the members wherever a difference of opinion exists. Even excommunication itself has already been issued in our own country where comrades had the daring to advance opinions not in favor with those in power. Robert Johnstone Wheeler, writing for the International Socialist Review, refers to an article by Louis Duchez, "The Proletarian View-point," and says:

"This article marked him as a thinker and writer and earned for him the enmity of the self-appointed leaders of the Party; an enmity which pursued him with ever increasing bitterness until his death. The 'orthodox' in New York went so far as to formally try him for tactical 'heresy.' Even the Socialist Party has its 'Bigots' and the 'Inquisition' awaits those who dare disagree with them. . . . Much of his best writing was done . . . before he was censored." (October, 1911.)

If Socialists act thus towards their own comrades what would the attitude of the Socialist Commonwealth be towards that Church which Victor Berger considers more reprehensible than the system of capitalism itself.

The "Old-fashioned" Mother

There has come to us a charming little book, "Die Erziehungskunst der Mutter," recently published by the German Volksverein of Munich-Gladbach. It is one of a series of excellent treatises dealing with the problems of home life in the complex conditions that obtain in the world to-day, brought out in popular style by the Workingmen's Welfare section of that model body of Catholic social workers. This booklet discusses the mother's place in the education of children. The analysis it offers of the sacredness of a mother's influence in the formation and training of the little ones God lends to her is sketched in exquisitely simple terms that cannot fail to touch the heart of one who gives a thought to the ineffable dignity of motherhood.

A writer in one of Germany's leading literary journals congratulates the author upon her admirable effort to renew in the minds of German wives and mothers the sterling Christian notions of the mother's place in the home, and expresses the hope that a wide diffusion of the little book will help to restore the "old-fashioned" mother to Germany. "We have too few 'old-fashioned' mothers among us," is his plaint, as he reviews the author's picture of the mother's place in social life.

Vastly different is the audacious statement quoted by the New York and Philadelphia papers as having been made a few days ago by Charles Zueblin, formerly professor of sociology in the University of Chicago, addressing a gathering of women in Witherspoon Hall in Philadelphia. It is a difficult thing to bring Mr. Zueblin to book. He is a speaker who affects the sensational, and who delights, apparently, in the use of nasty, shocking modes of speech—only whimperingly to affirm that his words have been misunderstood when later called to order for his utterances. On the occasion referred to reputable press reports tell us that he made the bald statement: "The old-fashioned mother is not a good mother these days."

"No woman in America," he said, "can stay at home these days and be a good mother. The days when women should sit at the hearthstone and leave the direction of political and social progress to men is ended. The quicker women realize this the better for themselves and the country.

"The 'old-fashioned mother' not only is out of place, but she is immoral. So long as immorality flaunts itself on every side, vice and disease hold their grip on the social fabric and corruption is rampant in our city halls and legislative chambers, a woman cannot stay true to her womanhood and remain at home."

One might remind the professor that if we had more "old-fashioned" mothers, who "sat by their hearthstones" and lovingly found their happiness in queening it in the home-circle and in fulfilling the duties of the sacred charge of motherly forming the little ones about them, there would, in all probability, be less flaunting of vice and immorality among us. But a sociologist who presumes to utter sentiments such as those quoted should not be discussed by decent people—he should be suppressed.

The "Ne Temere" at Ottawa

The Ne Temere decree has got into the Canadian Parliament. A Mr. Lancaster has introduced a bill on the subject, and a Mr. Burnham made quite a speech on the subject the other day. "The question is," said the orator, "are we married, or are we not?" As Mr. Burnham is a Protestant, and apparently too good a Protestant to take a Catholic wife, it is clear that nothing in the Ne Temere decree will affect the answer to his question. When he had continued his speech in many words, the Hon. William Pugsley, a member of the late government, asked him what the decree had to do with the law? Mr. Burnham attempted an answer, and then Mr. McLean of Halifax asked him categorically whether the decree played an important part with regard to the laws of his own province of Ontario, a question which put an end to Mr. Burnham's eloquence.

As the Devoir says very wittily: "Mr. Burnham and his friends are worthy gentlemen, who talk of the Ne Temere decree as men born blind talk of colors. But it is distressing that ignorance and religious prejudice should be allowed to divide a people. The Protestant ministers who have stirred up the trouble have much to answer for."

Universities, Endowments and Students

McGill University, Montreal, has been spending annually for some years past $800,000, with an income of about $50,000 less. The regularly recurring deficits were annoying, and some gentlemen got together and undertook to raise a million within a week as an endowment to provide against them. Finding people well inclined, they resolved to make the collection a million and a half, and they now have good hopes of adding two millions to the university's funds.

The beneficiaries of this generosity are the students. We have heard a good deal about the McGill students lately; and what we have heard has not been to their credit. Lawlessness is not manliness. When it comes from the persuasion that, whatever suffering they may inflict on others, the lawless run no danger of being dealt severely with by public authority, it betrays the boulder of the coarsest grain. Those students must recognize that inasmuch as they are being educated through the bounty of others, they are recipients of public charity. This should not sadden them. The right receiving of charity is not degrading, and the notion that it is, is one of the worst errors of the day. But that hypocrisy which receives, and swaggers vulgarly, as if it had not received, is one of the most pitiful sights that heaven looks down upon.

The receiving of charity brings about relations of dependence that cannot be ignored, which should result in modesty, humility, self-restraint, obedience, diligence, and other such things which the modern college student is accustomed to despise. Yet, after all, what are they but Christian virtues, the learning of which is more important than that of any science?

By the way, there is another university in Montreal and Quebec—Laval. We do not hear of enthusiastic committees raising funds for it—which is to be deplored. Neither do we hear of any rioting by its students—which is to be commended. As we look over the names of public men in Canada, we find that its graduates compare very favorably with those of the more flourishing McGill—which is to be admired. From all this there are practical conclusions to be drawn, which have their application not only in Canada, but also in the United States.

Socialist Furniture

The Socialist author Breuer, according to the "Pius Verein Correspondence," seriously insists that the class-consciousness of the worker must evince itself in the furniture of his house. He characterizes as National Liberal the outfit of a model workingman's home in a certain exhibit, while he gives his full approval to another which he pronounces to be correctly class-conscious. Comrade Reinke, in the Vorwärts, takes issue with him, and emphatically denies the assumption that the latter articles of furniture in anywise possess the purely Socialistic cast. The matter is evidently of the utmost importance, since it would undoubtedly be treason for a comrade to sit upon any chair whose contour does not possess the proper class-consciousness. The controversy incidentally illustrates the liberality and broadness of view whereof Socialists so proudly boast.

—•••—
A Canadian newspaper, strong against bilingual schools and any language but English, informed its readers a day or two ago that Monsignor Falconio, on his arrival in Rome, was taken charge of by the Prosecutor-General of the Franciscans, and conveyed to the Franciscan convent.

We do not know what the poor Franciscans have done to require a special prosecutor all for themselves. The statement has a strong flavor of the Inquisition. Anyhow, Monsignor Falconio seems to have settled matters with the Prosecutor-General, for he was at liberty when the time came to receive the red hat.

Had the Canadian editor consulted one educated in a despised bilingual school, he might have learned that the person who took charge of Monsignor Falconio was the Procurator-General of the Franciscans.

—•••—
Paul La Fargue, the Socialist, who, with his wife, the daughter of Karl Marx, committed suicide on November 27, left a letter for his fellow Socialists, in which he said: "I die with supreme joy and with a certainty that the cause to which I devoted my life will triumph in the near future. Long live Communism!" Did La Fargue seek by self-inflicted death to confirm by an heroic act the sacredness of the cause to which he had devoted his life? Such heroism, we think, will not be imitated by Communists generally. Thus far they have been willing to take everything tangible, but the theorists are not as yet ready to recommend every Socialist leader to take his own life.

LITERATURE

An Eirenic Itinerary. By SILAS MCBEE. New York: Longmans, Green & Co.

This is a sad book, for it records the illusions of one who, recognizing the importance of unity among Christians, set about procuring it by means of his own devising. Mr. McBee's ideal is a union tolerant of differences of belief, and having for its bond the love of our Lord. He holds existing divisions to be the result of well-meant attempts to define the Catholic faith, and that their cure is to be obtained by the ignoring of definitions and the cultivating of loyalty to the person of Christ as head of God's family. He does not see that love for our Lord must include love for His Incarnation, Birth, Life, Death, Resurrection, Ascension and Revelation; that one who errs about these changes the real Christ into a Christ of his own imagining, than which no worse insult can be offered by a creature to his Creator and Redeemer; and that the great defenders of the Catholic faith dogmatized so earnestly because they loved so well.

Mr. McBee carried his message of peace to Europe, where Protestants received it gladly. The Emperor of Germany reproduced its ideas a few weeks ago, as giving the proper way to preach the Gospel to-day. Those in power in Italy were favorable, for they welcome any ally against the Church. Mr. McBee was pleased with them and accepted the King's assurance that Luzzati, the Premier, is a deeply religious man.

In his dealings with schismatical Orientals, as well as with Catholics, Mr. McBee met two difficulties. One was that very few indeed understood that he was offering to guide them to unity. All they could comprehend was that there seemed to be a movement among Protestants to renounce their errors. Still some sufficiently acquainted with what is going on in the Western world saw the real state of the case. Among these was the Procurator of the Holy Synod in St. Petersburg, whose plain speech should weigh more with Mr. McBee than the polite generalities of others. Unity, he said, means that you become orthodox. The Russian Archbishop told the Episcopalians in Philadelphia the same.

The other difficulty was the difference of language, which must have made the use of interpreters necessary, a thing that does not help to clarity. Moreover, even if Mr. McBee understood the language of some of those he visited, his lack of theological knowledge must have caused him to misunderstand their ideas. Thus he tells us that the Pope "had suggested that Rome would always be ready to yield anything but essential dogma. When it was intimated that the crux of the whole question would be, What is essential dogma? the Pope's reply showed that it would depend upon the attitude of those seeking unity. If the attitude was one of controversy, of conflict, of war, then every defence, every out-post intended to protect dogma must be regarded as essential; but if the attitude was one of friendliness, if the spirit of unity prevailed, then the fundamental mysteries of the Faith would be found to be simple and few." It is a pity that Mr. McBee did not quote the exact words of the Pope. In attempting to give their sense, he has made the Pope an opportunist in matters of faith and has attributed to him the Protestant error of essential and non-essential doctrines. What the Pope really meant is this, which is said every day to those seeking instruction: If you pursue a critical method, setting yourself up as judge and calling before your tribunal every Catholic dogma, since every revealed truth is essential to the Catholic Faith and to be believed because God has revealed it, you will never reach the unity of the Faith. If, on the other hand, you come sincerely desirous of that unity, the process is very simple. Examine prayerfully the question:

Did Christ establish one infallible Church, with St. Peter and his successors as its visible head, to be the guardian and teacher of His revelation? and your course will be easy. Once you believe this, you will believe all the Church teaches and you will rejoice in the unity of the Catholic Church, which is, and must be forever, essentially one. In other words: there is one Church which no defection of heretics and schismatics divides. Enter it and you will have Christian unity. Remain outside and you are irremediably cut off from that unity.

H. W.

The Innocence of Father Brown. By G. K. CHESTERTON. New York: John Lane Co. Price, $1.30.

The reviewers, who have been regarding the twelve tales that make up this volume only in the light of detective stories, have pronounced them remarkably clever; and so they are. One could pick flaws in the inductive methods of Sherlock Holmes, nor is Gaboriau's chain of circumstances always infrangible, but it is difficult to find an alternative for the facts and links that Father Brown's blinking eyes spy out with marvelous acuteness or disprove the inevitableness of his conclusions.

But there is more in these stories, both in and under the surface, than the solving of criminal mysteries. Mr. Chesterton has a didactic or moral purpose in his plots as in his paradoxes, and deeming, probably, the paradox form stale, he essays to wile his readers along criminal paths, not to show them the end of an exciting chase, but to bring them within range of the lessons and preachments he has ready on the way. These are numerous and arresting but all subject to the main thesis: that a Catholic priest acquires in the practice of his calling an exceptionally accurate knowledge of crime and criminals, as well as of many other things and persons, together with a sympathetic forbearance born of acquaintance with human weakness and the laws of retribution; and that, in tracing the relations of cause and effect in criminal problems, the logical training of a priest enables him to apply this knowledge with a sureness and facility that would astonish the professional sleuth.

From the fourth to the last page Father Brown is the central figure. Book News would have him an Anglican, but he is introduced as "a Roman Catholic priest" attending the London Eucharistic Congress, he performs Catholic functions in every chapter, and in "The Hammer of God" the "little Latin priest" is contrasted with an Anglican minister. The opening story lays down the thesis. When Father Brown has turned the tables on Flambeau, the French criminal genius who, disguised as a priest, would rob him of a valuable sapphire cross, and, by drawing him into philosophical discussion, has unveiled the imposture, the "celibate simpleton" explains his achievement by experience acquired on the London mission, adding: "Another part of my trade, too, made me sure you weren't a priest. You attacked reason. It's bad theology." And so throughout, by sacerdotal logic and experience with sinners and the knack of winning confidence, Father Brown unravels every web that has baffled detectives and police. And he acts so unostentatiously that the beneficiaries, unaware of his agency, still deem him as Flambeau did once, "a celibate simpleton," an unsophisticated creature "whose creed requires him to be cloistered from the world."

Father Brown is presented as the clerical average. Friendly, humorous, unobtrusive, he makes no show of dignity; yet when the crisis arrives he looms large beside the dignified Anglican minister. He uses his powers not to avenge but to save. Corrigibles like Flambeau he converts with quiet reasoning, but permits the most satanic criminals to go unpunished in this world. "Let Cain pass by," he says of one murderer, "for he belongs to God," and to another who asks, "Do you believe in doom?" he replies: "No. I believe in Doomsday. We are here on the wrong side of the tapestry. The things that happen here do not seem to mean anything; they mean something somewhere else. Somewhere else retribution will come on the real offender. Here it often seems to fall on the wrong person."

There are interesting sidelights on French anti-clericalism and other questions of the day, and deft touches of humor, and exquisite sketches of characters and scenes that merit comment, but we are somewhat in the position of Father Brown in the last chapter, who, when urged to await the Coroner's inquiry into the final tragedy, replied: "I'm sorry I can't stop. I've got to get back to the Deaf School." Is this a hit at the "Encyclopædia Britannica"? M. K.

Pioneer Catholic History of Oregon. By EDWIN V. O'HARA. Portland, Oregon: Published by Author.

The author of this little work has devoted what leisure time a priest in a far Western diocese can have to the study of the early history of Oregon. He gives us in it the first fruits of his labors.

Four things in that early history are of special interest to Catholics: The myth of the embassy sent by the Indians to the Eastern States in search of the religion of the Book, the two Whitman myths, and the shameful treatment of Dr. John McLaughlin by the Protestant missionaries. Father O'Hara puts them all in their true light. He shows that the Indians sought Catholic missionaries, and never even dreamed of the Book. He proves that Dr. Whitman's famous ride was not for the purpose of saving Oregon for the United States, an absurd story continually cropping up—it was reproduced only the other day in the New York Herald—but to save himself from dismissal at the hands of the American Board of Foreign Missions on account of his failure as a missionary. He demonstrates that Whitman's murder was due to himself alone, and that the Catholic missionaries were so far from having a hand in it that Father Brouillot saved from death the very man who invented the fable; and he tells in burning words how the Methodist missionaries robbed of his lands a noble man who sacrificed his high position as head of the Hudson's Bay Company in the Oregon country to his humanity to them and the American immigrants.

Father O'Hara then goes on to tell the noble deeds of the founders of the Church in Oregon: Archbishop Blanchet, his brother, Bishop Blanchet, and Bishop Demers. He tells of the Jesuits and of the coming of the Sisters of Providence, of Notre Dame, and of the Holy Names. He narrates the check these suffered by the exodus from Oregon consequent on the finding of gold in California, and the difficulties which this exodus brought on the Archbishop.

In these days of Pan-Americanism, it is pleasant to find in Father O'Hara's book the record of what the Catholics of the Northwest owe to their brethren of Mexico and South America. They are not the only English-speaking Catholics with this debt, and we think a very interesting book might be written on what Latin America has done for the Church in English-speaking lands.

This book ought to be in every Catholic library. No school or parochial library can be without it. As Father O'Hara is his own publisher we give his address: The Rev. Edwin V. O'Hara, 62 North 16th Street, Portland, Oregon.

* * *

Katharine Fullerton Gerould, in a paper in the Atlantic on "Dress and the Woman," asks: "Is it not fashion rather than beauty that is subtly discriminated against by all religious orders? The nun, like the Quakeress, must adopt a single color and a single mode, though nun and Quakeress both often find this chosen garb the most becoming they could possibly wear. No dress could be more beautiful than that which I remember from my childhood's convent. It fell in rich and simple folds of violet—violet being neither purple nor crimson, but something indefinitely magnificent midway between—enhanced by white linen guimpe and cream-colored veiling. It gave the daughter of a French duke, I remember, the aspect of a queen regnant. Yet it represented poverty, chastity and obedience. No one is especially concerned with the nun's being unbecomingly clad. A subtle mortification is supposed to lie in her engaging to dress in exactly the same way all her life. The mortification is, of course, heightened by the fact that she shares her style of dress with the rest of the community regardless of type. But in any case the first thing that the postulant renounces is fashionable clothing. They leave her curls to be cut off later."

Any fair-minded person who reads William Archer's far from "impartial account" of the "Life, Trial and Death of Francisco Ferrer" cannot but regret that so much time, labor and good press-work have been wasted on so worthless an object. Mr. Shipman has shown in the pages of AMERICA that Ferrer was a libertine, unbeliever and anarchist, whose execution as the instigator of Barcelona's "Bloody Week" was as justly merited as was that of the Chicago anarchists who caused the Haymarket riots. Since no sensible American has but one opinion about the justice of that sentence, Mr. Archer's tardy attempt to arouse sympathy for his "martyr of free thought" should end in failure. Moffat, Yard & Co. are generously contributing towards this failure by asking a high price for the book.

"Elevations to the Sacred Heart" is a translation from the French of Abbé Felix Anizan, which R. & T. Washbourne are publishing. The English retains much of the original's Gallic verve, the author urges men to "rally round Christ" against those "who have declared war on God," and the book has about it a praiseworthy solidity and freedom from exclamation points.

Till the last trumpet religious, no doubt, will be having new books offered them on the duties and advantages of their state. But it is so difficult to speak on these subjects better than the "old masters" that a work like Father Charles Cox's "Short Readings for Religious," which the Benzigers publish, offers little that is novel or striking in matter or treatment. The readings, however, are short, so busy Sisters will find the volume a convenient one.

Our readers will remember the excitement about the $50,000 "Mazarin Bible" last May. That was on vellum. A printed edition of the same book brought $29,000 at an auction in London on November 20.

BOOKS RECEIVED

Primitive Catholicism. By Mgr. Pierre Batiffol, Litt.D. New York: Longmans, Green & Co. Net $3.50.
Among the Blessed. Loving Thoughts About Favorite Saints. By Matthew Russell, S.J. New York: Longmans, Green & Co. Net $1.25.
Meditations for Every Day. Translated from the "Reflexions Chrétiennes" of Rev. François Nepveu, S.J. By Francis A. Ryan. New York: Benziger Brothers. Net 75 cents.
With God. A Book of Prayers and Reflections. By Rev. F. X. Lasance. New York: Benziger Brothers. Net $1.25.
The Queen's Promise. By Mary T. Waggaman. New York: Benziger Brothers. Net 60 cents.

German Publication:

Die Gesellschaft Jesu. Ihre Satzungen und ihre Gefolge. Von Moritz Meschler, S.J. St. Louis: B. Herder. Net 55 cents.

EDUCATION

In an address, which the local press declares to be the most forcible on two leading topics of the day ever heard in Kansas City, the Rev. M. P. Dowling, S.J., President of the new Rockhurst College of that city, recently discussed certain social problems and education. The occasion was the first annual dinner in celebration of Columbus Day as a State holiday in Missouri, and the audience was made up of more than four hundred men, prominent in every walk of life in that most progressive of Western cities. Father Dowling's right to speak with authority on educational problems is readily granted in the Middle West, where his splendid work in the development of the Creighton University of Omaha is well known; here in the East his singularly accurate and strong analysis of the question will undoubtedly win for him similar respectful hearing. The burden of Father Dowling's address was self-sacrifice. He declared that he felt no hesitation in urging this virtue on the successful business man in behalf of the commonwealth which has protected and fostered his acquisitions. The successful business man owes a return to his fellow man, to the commonwealth and to God, and he cannot absolve himself from doing something to make the world better for his having lived in it. It is not by providing liberally for himself and his family that he will pay his debt—for that much the heathen does; but by helping to establish centres of conservative influence and sound principle.

* * *

"Education," he said, "is the key-note of progress in every land and notably in America. It gives social influence and political power, and a firmer hold on public opinion and secures recognition for its possessor. By means of it a man becomes the peer of the best, takes his proper place in public and private life and impresses his personality upon his times. If he is a true man he helps to form public opinion according to the principles of truth and justice; he raises the standard of moral life in the community; he is listened to eagerly and with respect in the assemblies of his countrymen, because he has a message to the world. He ought not to think that all is finished and all his obligations cancelled when he has made a complete education contribute to his worldly success, when he has provided for his own comfort and the welfare of his family. His duty extends beyond this, for he owes something to his country, to Christian society and to the Church represented by these essential institutions which uplift the truth. He must feel that he is bound to take an interest, and even a prominent part, if his talents allow, in the concerns of his native land; to apply his principles to the social, political, economic, national and international questions which furnish problems to the thinking men of his time. His knowledge is not a mere personal luxury, but a sacred trust, to be used for the welfare of society. So, too, wealth, his commercial standing, his social prestige, his success, are all a trust demanding of him civic service."

* * *

Unlike the well-known Chicago merchant who would have the prospective business man eschew totally a college training, Father Dowling contends that entrance upon a business career does not mean that a man's interests, ambitions, energies and aspirations are to be completely absorbed in his mercantile occupations. Refinement and scholarship are not out of harmony with business; on the contrary they add a zest and charm to life and lend a nobility to success. Higher studies should be pursued not because they are a ready means for money-making, but because they elevate the character, ennoble one's ideas, secure higher enjoyments to those who are successful, and enable men of culture to exercise a stronger influence on their fellow men. "It is important in a country like ours," said Father Dowling, "where everyone has a voice in public affairs, to have in business life educated men who can give tone to public opinion and not be led astray by the siren voices of the hour; men who will stand proof against popular delusions and weaknesses, who will furnish material for positions of trust and influence, direct the ill-advised enthusiasm of the thoughtless, help to form correct judgments for their fellow citizens, raise the standard of honesty and integrity. Such men become the patrons of letters, give a helping hand to struggling talent, lift up the fainting and disheartened, and maintain the highest type of citizenship. The moulding of the thought of our nation and keeping our countrymen in the path of safe traditions does not belong exclusively to the doctor, lawyer or clergyman; and it is not correct to assume that they alone should have a college course and that all others must abdicate. The business man is and ought to be a power; his influence will be strong in proportion to the extent of his education, good in proportion to its correctness."

* * *

Naturally the experimentalism of many modern educationists who complacently cast aside the treasured wisdom gathered from long and costly experience, and consider nothing worth while unless it be new, does not appeal to Rockhurst's president. "Why do we educate?" he asks. "Is it to improve the physical condition of the student? Is it to enable him to fill a good situation? Certainly the aim of education is not to supply the world with better servants or even to enable persons to make a better living. It has a higher aim than merely to make him useful. Is education intended to help on the march of intellect, to fit one to mix with credit in society? All these may play a part. Still it should not be forgotten that the intellect may be cultivated without making a man better; good professional men may be morally bad, clever business men may be dishonest and devoid of integrity. Why, then, do we educate? We educate mainly to form character; to make youth religious and conscientious; to teach the duty of self-control, self-respect and rational independence, the spirit of obedience to legitimate authority, respect for others, regard for order; to inculcate moderation, patience, discretion, earnestness of purpose; to show the beauty of virtue, the nobility of labor, man's mission to battle and struggle and act through principle and duty; and since character is made up of habits and principles, education is the formation of good habits and the formation of sound principles, besides the mere acquisition of knowledge. It is the building of good citizenship on the foundation of moral law. Such education is the safeguard of the individual, the family, the Church and the State; it deals both with the temporal and the eternal; it fits a man for this world with reference to the next."

* * *

All this, to be sure, is little in accord with the spirit of many leaders in the educational world to-day who, in a rush for what they delight to speak of as original research work and discovery, pay little heed to the conservative school methods a long tradition honors. Father Dowling reminds these leaders "that it is better to be right than to be original, better to adopt something safe than startling, better to base a system on a sound philosophy, even if others have done so before, than to leave the beaten track in search of untried and perhaps dangerous novelties. There are established principles and practices that must always have place in education, because they are based on the nature of the human mind and the perennial needs of man, because they respond to aspirations as deep seated as human nature itself. Customs and habits and men may change, but human nature never; and therefore the essential landmarks in mind development must remain immovable."

It is common enough for those who speak on education to-day to condemn methods, systems and institutions, and to sound the tocsin for universal reform. Father Dowling's masterly address was conceived on lines too sanely objective to permit him to join the chorus of mere fault finders. Where he does criticize he boldly and fairly offers the justification of his criticism. "I feel that I am justified," he says, "in condemning the parent who abdicates his authority and allows his half-developed children to determine the character and extent of their education. I am justified in blaming the public for believing that education, which is essentially a personal development, can be acquired only in large institutions; though many master minds which have led the thought of the world, and whose names will never die, had no opportunity to feel the uplifting influence of gigantic universities that scout faith and revelation. And yet these men made good in the world of thought and retained their simple faith. I am justified in cautioning the scientific and professional man against overestimating the value of the laboratory, because all education does not begin and end in the laboratory; in fact, all that is most mind-developing and character-building is not concerned with the laboratory at all. What apparatus is needed for mental and moral philosophy, rhetoric, poetry, art, literature, philology, law, economics, mathematics, composition, music and history?"

* * *

He had a word, too, to say regarding the young man who thinks he has finished his education when he has finished college, and seldom afterwards gets on speaking acquaintance with a book or allows himself to be elevated by an ideal.

"It is a subject of deep regret," said Father Dowling, "that many students go through college without any appreciable development of character. They spend years under painstaking, conscientious, capable and zealous instructors; they learn a certain amount from books; but somehow they fail to strengthen their weak points of character; they may be scholars and students but they are not men. They come forth from their studies without energy, promptness or decision, without any realizing sense of what will be expected of them. They wait for some impossible combination of circumstances which they fondly hope will make everything easy for them. They undertake and accomplish nothing, because the difficulties always seem insurmountable to them. The real trouble is that they are constitutionally lazy, they dislike to bend their backs. Such persons must come to realize that in the teeming life of the twentieth century there is no place for sluggards. Neither is there place for those who have imbibed no sense of responsibility, no established principle of conduct, and who are consequently untrustworthy and unreliable. Neither is there place for those who lack self-respect, self-sacrifice, self-control. All the book learning in the world will not cure such defects or enable their victims to exert any commanding influence."

It is a striking sketch of the student who fails, in the day's phrase, to make good; it is as well a forceful answer to the foolish plaint of many of our own time that a college education fails to fit men for the struggles of the after life.

M. J. O'C.

SOCIOLOGY

In olden times criminals were executed publicly, and men and women flocked to executions as to a spectacle. The mob took possession of the spaces around the gallows the evening before, and spent the night there in drinking and clamoring and fighting. The well-to-do paid for windows commanding a good view, prices worthy of a coronation procession. The question uppermost with everyone was: how will the condemned man suffer? If the criminal, or rather, if the criminals—for, when the death penalty was commoner, men were often hanged in batches—met death bravely, they were objects of admiration. If they could make something of a speech, they were heroes.

The idea of a public execution was to let the world know that order, violated by crime, must be avenged, and to deter, by the horror of the sight, the vicious inclined to commit crimes similar to that which the victim was expiating. At length wiser men began to see that the disorders accompanying it violated the sanctity of order anew, and that instead of deterring from crime, it incited to fresh crimes through the admiration stirred up for one who, after what the spectators would call a short and merry life, met death with fortitude. The public execution, therefore, was abolished. The criminal paid the penalty of his crime within the prison; and the glamor vanished before the sombre hoisting of the black flag to tell the world without that justice had accomplished its work.

In Virginia lately a young man suffered for a horrible murder. So far as the Commonwealth of Virginia was concerned, the whole process from beginning to end was so creditable to the judiciary, the executive and the jury of honest men who tried the case, that in future it will be quite unnecessary for those who plead for a reform in American criminal procedure to quote the example of England and the Crippen case. We have had in our midst a type of what a trial should be, and reformers may point to Virginia and say: remember the Beattie case. From the arrest to the execution the process was serious and grave, justice was swift and efficacious.

But the newspapers, as far as they could, corrupted these virtues. Their detailed reports made the execution virtually public, and this, not for comparatively few, such as would in other days have crowded round the scaffold, but by every one in the nation that cared to read them. They did more. They dragged the condemned man from his cell day after day to exhibit him to whoever wished to see him. They showed him eating and drinking, they retailed his words, they told how he dressed and smoked, they revealed his parting with his father and gave full particulars of every visit he received. They button-holed the ministers who came to speak to him of his soul. They spoke of his fortitude, in a word, they did all that which made the public execution so offensive and immoral, and which brought about its abolition.

Unless we would be inferior to our fathers, as they abolished the public execution, we should abolish the published execution. We have not noted the effect of the public execution on the criminal. It was often this: Human respect, the desire to make a show before the crowd, often impeded the work of grace in his unhappy soul. He would die as he had lived, game. The same effect is produced to-day when the prisoner knows that every word he utters, every gesture he makes, will be communicated to every newspaper reader in the land. He has his part to play before an audience bounded only by the two oceans, and the temptation to play it to the end is not easily overcome.

Another great evil is the interference by outsiders with the cause of justice. Men and women do not seem to understand that they are under authority, which they must obey but not try to control. When sentence has been passed the criminal is in the hands of the Chief Executive of the State. He has a conscience, and he will not let a man go to his death unless he knows that it is his duty to do so. But he has a duty to the law also. He may not interrupt its course for a mere whim or to gratify others, no matter what pressure is brought to bear on him. If he is in doubt he has his constitutional advisers, and he must be left to decide upon his course of action with their assistance. Ministers are grave offenders in this matter. The domination which they exercised over Protestant communities in times past, greater far than Catholic priest or bishop ever thought of, more dictatorial than ever pontiff used, because, being lawless, it knew no bounds, is still a tradition among them, and they are never slow to revive it as far as possible. Women, also, are too ready to interfere.

To summon before an illegitimate tribunal a case that has already been determined by lawful authority seems to include an injury to the judicial power not far removed from contempt. To attempt to dominate the executive authority in the discharge of its functions is not far from usurpation.

H. W.

SCIENCE

The Jesuit professors of natural history, exiled from Portugal, have published the following protest:

"A group of professors of the College of S. Fiel and of the College of Campolide, Lisbon, devoted themselves for some years past to a special study of the flora and fauna of Portugal. They traversed nearly the whole country and collected a large quantity of material for study.

"Though they contributed to many reviews, they published the results of their researches chiefly in La Brotéria, which they founded in 1902 in the College of S. Fiel. As they were thrown entirely on their own resources, they were able to carry on their work only at the cost of immense sacrifices. The nine volumes they have published, the kindly welcome given their modest labors by naturalists at home and abroad, the encouragement they received, prove to them that their efforts were not useless to science. Alas! the Portuguese Republic has formed a different opinion!

"They were Jesuits; and with this as a pretext the Provisional Government closed their houses, confiscated their goods and drove them, without any form of trial, from the country. Assailed as criminals by the populace stirred up and egged on by the Government, some of them were arrested and dragged to prison; the rest were able to escape only by flight and in disguise.

"But we have no wish to dwell on those sad scenes of brutality. Our only desire is to protest before the learned world against the incalculable loss we have suffered as naturalists.

"The office of La Brotéria was in the College of S. Fiel. Beside an excellent library of natural history, a reading room where there were more than a hundred special reviews, and a microscopic laboratory, had been collected by dint of constant efforts considerable material belonging to the fauna and flora of Portugal, Brazil and the Portuguese colonies in Africa. Entomology and cryptogamy, the special field of our researches, were above all richly represented in it, and we mention in particular the collections of orthoptera, of lepidoptera, as well as that of the zoöcecidies of Europe, Brazil and Portuguese Africa, the only one of its kind in the peninsula. It was the fruit of many years of united effort: of it all, nothing is left us.

"The first care of the Provisional Government was to order the arrest of the director and the professors of the college and the seizing of all their goods. Our books, our reviews, our instruments, even our most private personal manuscripts, we have lost them all.

"Nevertheless, the young Republic boasts that it favors the progress of science; let us see whether this be the case. In consequence of many protests two commissions were appointed to examine the scientific material of S. Fiel and the Campolide and to determine what was to be done with it. The one assigned to S. Fiel did not include one naturalist! A veterinary surgeon, a doctor of medicine, a professor, two lawyers, with the fiercest enemy of the college as president, formed the commission. Their decision was worthy of them. They determined that the material in question could by no means be returned to the lawful owners!

"At Campolide the collaborators of La Brotéria had also been doing their utmost. Two years before they had established an Institute of Natural Sciences, modest, no doubt, yet with its library, its numerous reviews, its laboratory, and its museum, it bore witness to the constant efforts of its founders. The collection of fungi, and, in particular, of the myxomycetes of the whole world, was particularly rich. An enormous mass of material in diatoms and bryophytes, as yet unstudied for the most part, had been gathered together to serve as the basis of combined labors which had already been begun.

"The commission named by the Government was certainly more enlightened than that sent to S. Fiel. It held that no one could turn this material to account better than the naturalists who had collected it, and that it ought to be restored to them entire. What regard did the Government show to this decision? It found the matter somewhat ticklish. Three of the naturalists interested were foreigners, who put the protection of their rights into the hands of their national representatives; and the Government gave out that everything would be given back to the naturalists of Campolide. For a long time we were simple enough to believe these fine promises; yet it was only through the persistent demands of the foreign ministers and consuls that we got back the mycological collection, two or three works on mycology, the diatoms and a small part of the bryologic material. But what has become of our geological and mineralogical collections, of our herbarium of phanerogams and of lichens, of the far greater part of the bryophytes, of our books moreover, of our reviews, of our instruments, of our manuscripts? All have been stolen.

"The Minister of Justice had the hardihood to tell one of us: "If your collections are lost to you, they are not lost to science." They should not be lost to us. They are the fruit of our labors, our efforts, our sacrifices. We have the strictest right to them as well as to our books, our instruments, our manuscripts, to all our goods.

"But, unhappily, our collections are indeed, for the most part, lost to science. In fact these materials, in great measure still unstudied, have not been arranged so that they may be handed over to other naturalists. Complete labels are wanting very often. Numbers referring to notes taken on the spot, abbreviations, mere signs, indecipherable and without value so far as others are concerned, contain for their authors ample information. Professional men understand this perfectly.

"Therefore the naturalists of La Brotéria protest loudly before the learned world against the infamous injustice of which they are the victims; they protest in the name of their violated rights, they protest in the name of science."

PULPIT, PRESS AND PLATFORM

Father Bernard Vaughan, S.J., has completed his first course of sermons given in the United States. At Boston his discourses entitled "Why be a Catholic?" were attended each Sunday evening by 3,000 persons, while the press estimated that as many were turned away. Besides preaching in the Church of the Immaculate Conception Father Vaughan gave sermons in other churches, lectured in theatres and halls, convents and schools, homes and clubs. He must have addressed between forty and fifty thousand persons in Massachusetts during the past month. The press has followed him closely, and we give from the last sermon of his course a passage in which he describes Lake Louise. If the style is the man, read what follows:

Speaking of the beauty of the Church he said in part:

"I saw in the Rockies rising up before me the virgin glacier clad as it were in bridal dress, the glistening snows all sparkling with jewels seen through transparencies of fretted gold and frosted silver. Reposing in the arms of Heaven, mantled in the softest blue, this earth-spirit arrested my attention and held my eyes till they ached with the dazzling grandeurs of the sight.

"On either side of this fairy form stood giant mountains accoutred like royal guardsmen in the garb of battle, their feet lost to sight below the lapping waters, their loins girt about with a belt of pinewood dyed in the blended glories of autumn. From the shoulders of those forest giants there seemed to fall mantles of gleaming snow, while their helmeted brows silhouetted against the blue-vaulted heavens described an outline fine and sharp.

"High above this pageant, I lifted my eyes toward the sun, too gorgeous, too seraphic to contemplate without first shading your eyes. His presence seemed to bathe the whole scene in a sea of glory, kindling into flame the rare, rich tints of foliage seen through the snow wreaths hanging from the boughs of the forest. It was a gorgeous picture, painted by the Master's hand and hung in nature's lonesome but most wondrous picture gallery, the Rocky Mountains.

"As the eye traveled from the sun riding in his noonday chariot down below to the lake in seeming worship at his feet, it became almost awe-inspiring to see reflected on the heaving bosom of the water the whole scheme of beauty before which it lay prostrate. There behold mirrored forth on the smooth waters all the glory in the heavens; there see repeated the bridal snow-dress, the burnished armor, the blood-red pines and the blazing glories of the noon-day sun.

"It was what I may term nature's dream of nature's beauty. Turning from this picture to the book of Revelations, we find that this scene is repeated, too, in the life of Christ's Church. The only difference between the two is that in one case our eyes feasted on a vanishing dream and in the other on a lasting reality."

Father Vaughan proceeded to draw out more fully the analogies which he found in the two pictures so poetically described. He told of the beauty and grandeur of the Catholic Church, and how it reflected its splendor down through the ages in which it had lived and still maintained its magnificence.

ECCLESIASTICAL NEWS

The third annual Pan-American Thanksgiving Day Mass was celebrated in St. Patrick's Church, Washington, D. C., on November 30, and was attended by President and Mrs. Taft, several members of the Cabinet, Justices of the Supreme Court and representatives of the twenty Latin-American republics. His Eminence Cardinal Gibbons presided, and Bishop Donohue, of Wheeling, W. Va., preached the sermon. Mgr. Russell, the rector of St. Patrick's, entertained the distinguished guests at luncheon after the ceremony.

Four Carmelite Sisters of the Baltimore Convent have been chosen to establish a new convent at Davenport, Iowa.

On the feast of the Presentation, November 21, a very impressive ceremony took place at the mother house of the Sisters of the Good Shepherd, New York. Five postulants received the white veil, six novices were admitted to the simple vows of religion, and seven already several years in the community made their solemn profession. The Right Rev. Thomas F. Cusack, Auxiliary Bishop of New York, officiated, assisted by the Rev. Thomas F. Myhan, rector of St. Ann's, and the Rev. Thomas F. Lynch, rector of St. Elizabeth's.

The Rev. Foster W. Stearns, for two years rector of Christ Episcopal Church, Sheffield, Mass, was received into the Catholic Church by the Rev. J. Havens Richards, S.J., on November 15. The ceremony took place at the church of St. Ignatius Loyola, New York. Mr. Stearns is a son of R. H. Stearns, of Boston. He was graduated from Amherst College, class of '03, and married a daughter of Professor Genung, of Amherst College.

The Right Rev. Monsignor O'Donovan, of Mudgee, New South Wales, celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of his ordination as a priest on October 10. Monsignor O'Donovan was ordained at All Hallows College, Dublin, in June, 1861, and in September of the same year left Ireland for Australia, where he has lived uninterruptedly ever since. The numerous churches which he built during his half century of missionary life bear witness to his unflagging zeal. Many of Monsignor O'Donovan's curates are now prominent priests in Australia, including the Right Rev. Dr. Drum, the present Bishop of Bathurst.

Among the visitors to Rome for the Consistory was Cardinal Logue, Archbishop of Armagh and Primate of All Ireland, who brought the congratulations of his native diocese to Cardinal Farley. The latter may visit Ireland on his way back to New York. Cardinal O'Connell will probably remain in Rome over the New Year.

A new arrangement of the courses of study at St. Charles' College, Md., is being considered, and when the matter is settled, the site for the new college will be selected. The Very Rev. Edward R. Dyer, S.S., president of St. Mary's Seminary, Baltimore, suggests the combination of the philosophy department of St. Mary's Seminary with the last two years of the classical course of St. Charles' College. Such a measure would make one institution of the collegiate department of St. Mary's University, now divided between the junior and senior years at St. Mary's Seminary, in this city, and the freshman and sophomore years connected with the four years of classical high school work at the old college in Howard county.

The Aid Society for Inmates of State Penal and Reformatory Institutions, recently established in Missouri, is receiving general approval. For many years the Catholic inmates of the various penal and reformatory institutions of Missouri never had the spiritual care and attention to which they were entitled. On March 5th last a branch of the Holy Name Society was established in the State Prison, and since then the necessities of the inmates have been made known. In the Jefferson City prison two hundred men have availed themselves of the privilege of the reception of the Sacraments, the general moral tone of the whole penitentiary has been materially improved, hundreds of non-Catholics and many hitherto indifferent prisoners have flocked to the Sunday courses of instruction, and the Catholic men have taken a particular pleasure in decorating their altar and making both the sanctuary and the priest's quarters exceedingly attractive. All the improvements so far have been made possible by the contributions of the inmates from their meagre earnings, and the Catholic end of the prison resembles a small parish of zealous and interested parishioners who take an observable pride in the moral and religious progress they are making. The prisoners seem deeply appreciative of the outside interest in their welfare and are profuse in their gratitude to the founders of the "Aid Society," the object of which is to create a fund to be used for all the requirements of a Catholic chaplain. It is the intention of the promoters of the Society to also look after the interest of the boys at the Boys' Reform School, Booneville; the girls at the Girls' Reform School, Chillicothe, and the Catholic inmates of the various jails of the State.

A Protestant Missionary, Rev. Peter MacQueen, of Boston, after visiting a great part of Africa, wrote as follows on the Catholic Missions of the dark continent:

"I have everywhere found in Africa Catholic Missionaries and Religious. I have found among them a great spirit of sacrifice, abnegation and an ardent love for God and man. They are faithful in fulfilling their duties, and they succeed marvelously where others have had no success. They teach the sublime truths of religion to those tribes plunged in ignorance and darkness."

Africa, which in 1800 counted only a few thousand Catholics, possesses now 73 missions with 660 stations, 3,294 churches, 850,000 Catholics, 16 Bishops, 35 Vicars Apostolic, 23 Prefectures Apostolic, 1,700 priests, 1,660 schools, 2,270 hospitals. According to the statistics of the Propaganda Fide in Missions alone Catholics have increased from 402,532 to 841,074 within six years (1901-1907). The Mill Hill Fathers began their apostolic labors in the Congo only five years ago. Within this short period, however, they have succeeded in opening four stations embracing the country watered by the Lulonga, Maringa and Lopori rivers. An idea of the extent of the country depending on them may be had from the fact that in one station alone a Missionary may travel for 21 days in a native canoe (a day's journey is equivalent to 40 or 45 miles), and yet be within the limits of the district to which the station belongs.

Fancy, says a Missionary correspondent, "traveling in a boat for twenty-one days, putting aside for the moment its absolute instability. You cannot walk even the few paces at your disposal for fear of upsetting it. You are forced to sit in the same place for twelve hours, and very often you cannot find a spot on which to land and cook your food owing to the dense forests which run down to the very water's edge. You have to prepare and take your meals in a boat three feet in width and make it your dwelling-place for days together under a tropical sun and a still worse tropical rain."

The recent visit to Rome of Dr. Makyl, Vicar Apostolic of Changanachery, and of Dr. Menachery, Vicar Apostolic of Trichur, has resulted in certain changes and improvements in the administration of the Malabar Syrian Church effected by the Holy See in the government of, at least, the Vicariate of Changanachery. This vicariate has, it is announced, been partitioned into two vicariates, Northern and Southern. Dr. Makyl is to be the Vicar Apostolic of the latter, while the Northern Vicariate will be under a separate vicar to be appointed. The Church in Malabar is in a prosperous condition with 350,000 Catholics, 350 churches, 450 Syrian priests, 100 Carmelite friars, and 150 seminarists.

OBITUARY

Death came with startling suddenness to Rev. John P. Frieden, S.J., a distinguished member of the Missouri province of the Society of Jesus and President of St. Louis University, St. Louis, Missouri, the mother-house of the Jesuit body in the Middle West. Father Frieden had been called down town by a business engagement on the afternoon of December 2, and he was just about to return to the University when an acute attack of heart trouble prostrated him. A priest was hurriedly summoned to administer the last rites, and Father Frieden passed away almost in the moment the words of absolution were uttered.

St. Louis University's deceased head was born in Luxemburg, November 18, 1844. His elementary and college training was received in the schools of that grand duchy, where, too, after a brilliant course in the normal school, he taught for some years. Coming to America in 1869 he entered the novitiate of the Jesuits in Florissant, Missouri, on February 24 of that year. He was instructor in the School of Arts of St. Louis University from 1872 to 1874, in which year he began his higher ecclesiastical studies in the Jesuit Seminary of Woodstock, Maryland. There he was ordained priest in the Easter week of 1880, and after another year of advanced theological studies, Father Frieden returned to his home province in 1881.

From the beginning the young priest showed marked executive ability, a gift which his Superiors were not slow in recognizing, to such degree that Father Frieden's entire life since his ordination was spent in the direction of Jesuit houses. From 1881 to 1889 he was President of Detroit College, Detroit; from 1889 to 1894 he was charged with the government of his province as Provincial of Missouri; from 1894 to 1896 he was Superior of the Fathers of the third year of probation in Florissant, and in 1896 he was sent to the Mission of California, whose destinies he guided until 1907, acting at the same time as President of St. Ignatius College in San Francisco. The burdens incident to the restoration of the houses in that mission subsequent to the great earthquake and fire shattered Father Frieden's vigorous strength, and in 1907 he was called back to his home province to rest and recuperate. Shortly after his return, however, he was once more in harness—being called to preside over the new development that had come to St. Louis University of late years, making it one of the largest Catholic educational institutions in the country. There the end has come to a well-spent life in the Master's service, and Father Frieden's worth will be long and gratefully remembered by those who mourn his sudden call home.

Father Joseph Knabenbauer, S.J., who died at Maastricht, on November 12, from cancer, was born March 19, 1839, and entered the Society of Jesus September 27, 1857. After the usual training common to all Jesuits he began his lifework as professor of Scripture, in September, 1872, in the scholasticate of the German Province. Only one year of break occurred, his tertianship, at the end of which Father Knabenbauer made his solemn profession, February 2, 1875. In September, 1910, after thirty-seven years of professorship, when seventy-one years of age, the grand old man yielded his chair, and became Spiritual Father of the theological students of his Order. His dauntless energy and indefatigable toil never ceased till the end. The very day before he was taken to the hospital he said Mass and heard the confessions of the theologians of Valkenburg.

Father Knabenbauer was a most prolific writer during his years of professorship. His reputation will rest chiefly upon his share in the "Cursus Scripturæ Sacræ (Lethielleux, Paris, 1884). Of this colossal undertaking, to him are due the commentaries on Job, Proverbs, Ecclesiasticus, Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, Daniel, the Minor Prophets, Machabees, Matthew, Mark, Luke, John, Acts. He leaves in press Psalms, Ephesians, Philippians, Colossians, and in manuscript, Thessalonians. The method of exegesis of Father Knabenbauer was scholarly, safe and sane, and, above all else, Catholic. He used the original text and the chief versions; showed an accurate knowledge of Hebrew and Greek and a familiarity with Semitic languages in general. He faced difficulties fairly. Witness his explanation of the discrepancies between I and II Machabees. In textual criticism he had no sympathy whatsoever for the arguments of the higher critic; their reasons for divisive criticism of a book never appealed to him at all. He was too much of a Catholic for that. He knew full well the traditional views of theologians and the Fathers of the Church. His sense of the attitude of the Church to a question was keen and sure. To him the Bible was first and foremost the Word of God, given to the Church to have and to hold and to hand down to posterity and to interpret rightly to her children. His interpretation was, therefore, that of the Fathers, when the Fathers agreed on points of faith and morals, otherwise it invariably was a meaning which was in keeping with the analogy of the faith.

The Rev. Edward Allen, S. J., former President of St. Ignatius College, Cal., died at O'Connor Sanitarium, San Jose, on November 23. He was Chaplain at Santa Clara College at the time of his death. Father Allen was born in Dublin, Ireland, in 1849, and at an early age took up his studies at St. Francis Xavier's College, Liverpool. He was received into the Society of Jesus and offered himself for the California mission, where he labored for thirty-three years. He had a talent for music, which he turned to good account in connection with his work in the classroom and in the church. Devotion to the sick and the dying was a characteristic trait, while the sweetness of his disposition endeared him to all.

New Publications of
LONGMANS, GREEN, & CO.

When "Toddles" Was Seven

By MRS. HERMANN BOSCH. With
Frontispiece. $1.00 net; by mail, $1.10.

"There are twenty-two chapters, about evenly divided between explaining some of the parables and dwelling on the tragedy of Holy Week. Very touchingly is the Scripture story set forth; very lovingly are little lessons for little listeners drawn from the story. All are cleverly woven together by means of events in the every-day life of "Toddles." We cordially recommend the book to every mother; and we know of no book that could serve better for that precious half hour which is devoted to reading stories."—America.

Lives of the Friar Saints

TWO NEW VOLUMES

Each volume Illustrated. Fcap 8vo.
Ornamental cloth.
50 cents each.

St. Pius V.
By C. M. Antony.
With a preface by Monignor Benson.

St. John Capis-
tran.
By Fr. Vincent
FitzGerald, O.F.
M.

"We can heartily commend them both as gift-books and as spiritual reading, for they give in brief compass a clear and scholarly account of these wonderful Saints."—The Month.

Humility, The True Talisman

A STUDY OF CATHOLICISM

By DR. ALBERT VON RUVILLE, Professor at the University of Halle.
With a Preface by Mgr. R. H.
Benson, author of "Papers of a Pariah," etc. Crown 8vo. $1.20 net.

A new book by the author of
"Back to Holy Church."

The Queen's Fillet

By CANON P. A. SHEEHAN. $1.35
net; by mail, $1.50.

"I say it advisedly, that Canon Sheehan with 'The Queen's Fillet' has reached a height of achievement he has not previously touched."—Book Monthly.

"A really unusual and admirable romance."—Chicago Record-Herald.

"One of the best and truest of the numberless romances which have been woven around that wonderful epoch."—America.

Primitive Catholicism

By MGR. PIERRE BATIFFOL, Litt.D.
Translated by Henri L. Brianceau,
St. Mary's Seminary, Baltimore,
from the Fifth French edition, Revised by Author. 8vo. $3.50 net.

Write for Illustrated List of New Catholic Books.

LONGMANS, GREEN, & CO.

Fourth Ave. & 30th Street, New York

Uneeda Biscuit

Always Ready

Wise foresight should lead you to keep in the cupboard a half dozen or more handy packages of

Uneeda Biscuit

They won't get broken, musty, soiled or soggy like ordinary soda crackers because their crisp, clean freshness is protected by the moisture-proof and dust-tight package.

5¢

In the moisture-proof package

Never Sold in Bulk

NATIONAL BISCUIT COMPANY

McCray Refrigerators

"Proven Very Satisfactory"

McCray Refrigerator Co., Kendallville, Ind.

GENTLEMEN—The large cooler placed in St. Joseph's Sanitarium by your Detroit agent has, during the short time we have used it, proven very satisfactory, articles placed in the compartments keeping perfectly dry and sweet.

Your icing from the outside is a very desirable feature in the way of cleanliness, which is very much appreciated by all.

Respectfully yours,

SISTERS OF CHARITY,

St. Joseph's Sanitarium

Mt. Clemens, Mich.

McCray Refrigerators

are made in all sizes for every purpose that requires perfect refrigeration

Books describing the different varieties will be sent free on request:

- No. A. H. Built-in-to-order for Residences,
- No. 88 regular models for Residences;
- No. 67 for Grocers;
- No. 69 for Meat Markets;
- No. 48 for Hotels, Clubs and Institutions;
- No. 72 for floral shops.

McCray Refrigerator Co.

254 Lake Street, Kendallville, Ind.

New York Branch, 231 W. 42d Street
Display Rooms and Agencies in all Principal Cities.

The Coward Shoe

"REG. U. S. PAT. OFF."

A Foot Warmer for Cold Days

The sole is double thickness and cork filled—a non-conductor of cold. Upper is leather lined. A heavy shoe, but Blucher model, on Coward last, makes it entirely comfortable.

SOLD NOWHERE ELSE

JAMES S. COWARD

264-274 Greenwich St., N. Y.

(NEAR WARREN STREET)

Mail Orders Filled | Send for Catalogue

Has It Ever Occurred to You
THAT THERE ARE

MANY KINDS OF SODA
WATER AND SOFT STUFF
FOISTED ON THE PUBLIC

New York Bottling Co.

OUR PRODUCTS

COST NO MORE

OVERBARSTHAN THE CHEAP
ONES MADE FROM GLUCOSE,
SACCHARIN AND
ANILINE DYES

Get Your Money's Worth

THE KNOX HAT

Is universally recognized as the Standard by which all others are judged.

452 FIFTH AVE.
(Cor. 40th St.)

FIFTH AVENUE BUILDING
(5th Ave. & 23d St.)

161 BROADWAY.
(Singer Building).

A SHOPPING GUIDE TO ABRAHAM & STRAUS

This store has a department organized for the purpose of supplying the convent, academy orphan asylum or school, hospital, etc., with serges, merinos, draps d'été, linens, etc., and clothing worn by children. The contract department, as it is called, also advises and estimates on carpets, furniture, shades, etc. A representative familiar with the requirements of religious communities will call, as soon as request is sent to Contract Department.

ABRAHAM STRAUS

420 Fulton Street, Brooklyn, New York

BROKAW BROTHERS

ASTOR PLACE AND FOURTH AVENUE

Our Clergymen's
Clothes are made with the most exacting care, because we know down
to the smallest detail
what is correct in cut,
materials and fit.

We are showing Clerical Sack Suits in smooth and rough black, dark oxford mixed and narrow self-stripes.

Clerical, Cassock and Lay Waistcoats in all materials.

Mail Orders Filled.

We send samples upon request.

ESTAB. OVER HALF A CENTURY

The Time To Advertise Is
ALL THE TIME
ADVERTISE HERE

For advertising rates, address "MANAGER"
AMERICA, a Catholic Review of the Week
59 East 83d Street, New York City

PRINTING OF EVERY DESCRIPTION
FOR
Churches and Schools

Periodical Publications
Catalogues Programs
Stationery Etc., etc.

THE MEANY PRINTING CO.
6th Avenue, Cor. 11th St., NEW YORK

I Am Direct Importer of VINUM EX VITE Altar Wine

Mr. Joseph C. Butler, who imported Vinum ex Vite Altar Wine, died on September 23d, 1910, his heirs settling up his estate. I purchased his interest and trademarks in the wine business. This wine was imported in cases containing 20-litre bottles and in barrels containing 21 gallons, bearing the producer's certificate that the wine was made according to the rules of the Holy Congregation of Rites. I am making arrangements with the producer to ship me the wine in the same shape as Mr. Butler received it. All orders for this wine will be promptly filled. Price will be the same as heretofore, i.e., $12.50 per case and $1.80 per gallon, for the present. The certificate from the Vicar-General of Tarragone will be on the file in my office.

Depot for GUILLON 8-DAY TAPERS
and PERFUMED CHARCOAL

L. J. CALLANAN

41 and 43 Vesey Street, New York

Telephone No 8585-8386 Cortlandt

WE OWN AND OFFER

$70,000 First Mortgage $500 Real Estate Serial Gold Notes

EXECUTED BY

The Sisters of the Humility of Mary. "Mother House."

(A Corporation of Ottumwa, Iowa)

Total Issue, $70,000

Our Appraisement of Properties, $202,500

Rate of Interest  $5\frac{1}{2}\%$  payable semi-annually

Interest Coupons payable April 1st and October 1st of each year at office of Mercantile Trust Company, Saint Louis, Mo., Trustee in Deed of Trust securing this issue of notes.

Principal Notes of $500 each, payable serially as follows:

Numbers	1 to 8, both inclusive,	on	October 1, 1914.....	$ 4,000
"	9 to 18, " " " "	October 1, 1915.....	5,000
"	19 to 30, " " " "	October 1, 1916.....	6,000
"	31 to 50, " " " "	October 1, 1917.....	10,000
"	51 to 70, " " " "	October 1, 1918.....	10,000
"	71 to 90, " " " "	October 1, 1919.....	10,000
"	91 to 110, " " " "	October 1, 1920.....	10,000
"	111 to 140, " " " "	October 1, 1921.....	15,000

Total Loan (closed mortgage)..... $70,000

Security Appraised at $202,500

First: A first Deed of Trust on St. Joseph's Academy at Ottumwa, Iowa, comprising a lot of ground having a frontage of 214 feet on East Fourth Street by a depth of 198 feet to an alley, together with the improvements, consisting of a three-story stone and brick building occupied as the Mother House and Academy. An excellent piece of property in the business center of Ottumwa, just opposite the County Courthouse of Wapello County, a very creditable building. A conservative valuation of this property is $50,000.

Second: A first Deed of Trust on a beautiful tract of land containing 125 acres lying on the outskirts of the City of Ottumwa, conservatively valued at $20,000.

There is just being completed on this tract a modern fire-proof three-story and high-basement brick and stone Academy building, contract price for erection of which is $132,500, without any furnishings, making the total value of the security $202,500, or approximately three times the total loan.

In addition the notes are the obligation of the Mother House of the Order who conduct establishments in the Archdiocese of Dubuque and in the Diocese of Davenport and Great Falls.

Title to properties above described examined and certified to by J. J. Smith, attorney at Ottumwa, and also by our counsel, Judge R. L. Goode.

Notes may be redeemed by makers on October 1, 1913, or any interest date thereafter, by giving 30 days' advance notice and paying a premium of 2 per cent. in addition to principal and accrued interest.

Insurance required by Deed of Trust for protection of note holders, $72,000 fire and $36,000 tornado insurance.

Notes are payable to bearer, but may be registered free of charge in name of purchaser.

A safe and convenient investment of \$500 or multiples, netting purchasers  $5\frac{1}{2}\%$  per cent. for periods of from three to ten years.

Purchases by non-residents filled with the same dispatch as locally. Price, par and accrued interest.

REAL ESTATE
LOAN DEPARTMENT

Mercantile Trust Company

Eighth and Locust Streets
ST. LOUIS, MISSOURI

FESTUS J. WADE, President.

J. B. MOBERLY, Real Estate Loan Officer.

Capital and surplus Nine and One-half Million Dollars.

CHRISTMAS

The weeks preceding the Yuletide season are always perplexing ones to the gift-seeker. Let us help you with a timely suggestion: A gift inexpensive yet invaluable; a gift that will last.

"PIONEER PRIESTS OF NORTH AMERICA"

BY THE REV. THOMAS J. CAMPBELL, S.J.

SPECIAL COMBINATION OFFER

VOLUME I

Among the Iroquois

His Eminence, Cardinal Farley, says:

"Will fill a want often felt by so many of the clergy and laity who love to learn everything about the genesis of the Church in our State."

His Eminence, Cardinal Falconio, says:

"From it our people will learn how to appreciate the great work done by those noble and saintly pioneers."

VOLUME II

Among the Hurons

Current Literature says:

"Father Campbell does not confine himself to perfunctory narrative. He tells with vivid pen of reckless risks, hair-breadth escapes, captures, and incredible sufferings, each following another in quick succession. . . . These men, and a host of others, counted it a privilege to die for their faith."

VOLUME III

Among the Algonquins

N. Y. Evening Sun:

"Altogether it is a splendid volume that Father Campbell has produced. To those of the same faith as the pioneer priests whose lives it relates, it should prove no less edifying than absorbing. But even to those of other persuasion, 'Among the Algonquins' offers an opportunity for serious and interesting reading, where solid historical worth is matched by charm of style and vigor of conception."

These Three Volumes, $5.00 prepaid

MARY ALOYSIA HARDEY, Religious of the Sacred Heart, 1809—1886

With an Introduction by the REV. THOMAS J. CAMPBELL, S.J.

440 Pages. 16 Illustrations. Price, $2.00 prepaid.

"A book sure to do good and sure to give pleasure."—The Ave Maria.

"A book of special religious interest."—N. Y. World.

PILGRIM WALKS IN ROME

THIRD EDITION ENLARGED.

A Guide to the Holy Places and Vicinity

By P. J. CHANDLER, S.J.

There are eighty illustrations. The book contains now 504 pages, twenty of which are given to an exhaustive index. A map of the city of Rome and plans of the old St. Peter's and of the present basilica are very valuable to the tourist. Press-work, paper, binding, illustrations, are all that can be desired. The book must become the classical guide-book for Rome, and those who may never have the good fortune to visit the holy city should learn to make pilgrimages to its temples and shrines by the aid of "Pilgrim Walks."

$1.25 Prepaid

ISAAC JOGUES

Discoverer of Lake George

By the Rev. THOMAS J. CAMPBELL, S.J.

Aside from its Historical value it presents a vivid pen picture of a saintly and heroic missionary, with all the stirring setting of early pioneer days.

55 PAGES

9 ILLUSTRATIONS

EDITION DE LUXE

Full flexible green cowhide, stamped with gold, gilt top, deckled edge.

$1.10 Prepaid

BOUND VOLUMES OF AMERICA

In an attractive and durable binding. Complete set: Volumes I, II, III, IV, V—prepaid. . . . . $14.00
Single volumes, prepaid, $3.00.

SPECIAL OFFER

Any volume of "Pioneer Priests of North America" and one copy of "Mary Aloysia Hardey," prepaid . . . . . $3.75

THE AMERICA PRESS, - 59 East 83rd Street, New York City

Sacred Heart Sanitarium

FOR REST, QUIET, RECUPERATION AND HEALTH
Unsurpassed results obtained in Nervousness, Rheumatism, Heart and Stomach troubles. No surgical, hospital nor insanity cases taken. A delightful, homelike, restful place—ideal for all run down conditions. Hydrotherapy, Electricity, Massage, Zander Gymnasium, Sun parlor; swimming pools, billiards, bowling, etc. Gaited saddle horses, large indoor riding pavilion; suspended running track connected by tunnel with bath department. 17-acre park.
A staff of five physicians give their exclusive services to the patients.
WRITE SISTER SUPERIOR FOR BOOKLET X. MILWAUKEE, WIS.

DENTISTRY

Loose teeth tightened by a new process; teeth without plates. Extracting avoided. High-class and up-to-date dentistry in all branches at reasonable prices.

DRS. BURKE & BURKE
DENTISTS
1947 BROADWAY AND 65TH ST
66th St. Subway, L station and all surface cars

EVER NEED DUPLICATES

of form Letters, Price Lists, bills, Invoices, Drawings, Menus, Reports, anything? Then take advantage of our offer of ten days trial, without deposit, and become one of thousands of satisfied customers who will agree that DAUS IMPROVED TIP TOP DUPLICATOR with "DAUSCO" Oiled Liner Back, negative roll, is the simplest, easiest and quickest method of duplicating on the market too copies from Penwritten and 50 copies from Typewritten Original. If you have tried other duplicators without success, you will be more than pleased with ours. Complete Indicator, can size (prints 8 3/4 x 13 inches), $5.00
FELIX G. DAUS DUPLICATOR CO., Dans Bldg., 111 John St., New York

We can supply anything in the line of Kitchen and Bakers' Utensils

Catalogue "M" FREE upon request

French Cooking Ranges and Broilers

Cooking Equipments of Every Description

JAMES Y. WATKINS & SON 16, 18, 20 CATHERINE ST. NEW YORK, N. Y.

WITH GLACIER WINDOW DECORATION

YOU CAN GET
Stained Glass Effects on Ordinary Windows
Suitable for Residence Churches and Schools
Special Ecclesiastical Designs
Write To-day for Booklet 6
Address WM. B. QUAILE, 752 Broadway, New York

$1.00 WILL BRING POSTPAID

one of our
Fine Gold Filled 5 year guaranteed ROSARIES

In any color. Order through your jeweler or direct. Also 10 and 20 year and Gold Rosaries. Catalogue free.

Dept A Wm. Purnell Co., Mfg. Jeweler, 37 Maiden Lane, N. Y.

TYPEWRITER RIBBONS AND CARBON PAPERS

Especially adapted for use in Colleges and Schools

Send for our Circular as to how we will save you 50 per cent. on supplies

SNELLING & SON 225 34th Street, South Brooklyn, N. Y.
Purveyors to U. S. Gov't

Sarony

Photographer

256 Fifth Ave., New York
Favorably known to the Clergy and Laity for many years

ONLY 75 CENTS EACH, POSTPAID

Keep every number of AMERICA in a handsome ADJUSTABLE BINDER

THE AMERICA PRESS, 59 East 83rd Street, New York

MENEELY BELL CO
TROY, N.Y. AND 177 BROADWAY, N.Y. CITY
BELLS

For advertising rates, address "MANAGER" AMERICA, a Catholic Review of the Week
59 East 83d Street, New York City

TOUR OF EUROPE

For the Summer of 1912
A PRIVATE PARTY VISITING IRELAND, ENGLAND, FRANCE, BELGIUM, HOLLAND, GERMANY, SWITZERLAND AND ITALY

Arrangements have been made for an Audience with the Holy Father
Itinerary sent on application. Address all communications to
MISS AGNES J. KELLY
3828 Spring Garden Street, West Philadelphia, Pa.

A Lady of experience offers her services as a guide in the Eternal City or other parts of Italy.

Correspondence Invited.

MISS RATHIE
Via Paolo Emilio 28int 3. Rome, Italy

CHRISTMAS GIFTS

WE CARRY A FULL LINE OF

DOLLS and TOYS

Christmas Tree Ornaments and Novelties for church fairs and parties at wholesale.

NADEL & SHIMMEL, 144 Park Row, N. Y.

HIGGINS'

DRAWING INKS
ETERNAL WRITING INK
ENGROSSING INK
TAURINE MUCILAGE
PHOTO MOUNTER PASTE
DRAWING BOARD PASTE
LIQUID PASTE
OFFICE PASTE
VEGETABLE GLUE, ETC.

Are the Finest and Best Inks and Adhesives
For School, Home and Business Use

Emancipate yourselves from the use of corrosive and ill-smelling inks and adhesives and adopt the Higgins' Inks and Adhesives. They will be a revelation to you, they are so sweet, clean, well put up and withal so efficient.

At Dealers Generally

271 Ninth St., Brooklyn, N. Y.
Branches: Chicago, London
CHAS. M. HIGGINS & CO., Mfrs

A $5.00 Panatela

NOW $2.40 per 100

Morton R. Edwin Panatela

is by all standards of comparison a 10-cent cigar. It will satisfy the most cranky smoker of imported brands. It is fully 5 1/2 inches long, strictly hand-made, of choicest Havana tobacco—genuine Sumatra wrapper. It smokes freely and evenly—never chars down the side, but keeps burning coolly and fragrantly to the last toothhold.

The reason this cigar is sold at $2.40 instead of $5.00 per hundred is because I buy and sell for cash. I ask no credit, neither do I give it. I personally buy my tobacco direct from the grower in Cuba, and pay him at least five weeks before the tobacco reaches the U. S. Custom House. I buy for less and sell for less. The man who buys and sells on credit cannot compete with me.

THIS IS MY OFFER

Send me $2.40 for 100 Morton R. Edwin Panatelas. Add 25 cents for expressage. At this price I cannot afford to pay it—you can. Smoke as many as you like—smoke them all if you want to, and if you then tell me that you didn't receive more than you expected, I'll return your money.

If you want to know who I am and whether or not I conduct my business on the square, if you have any doubts as to my making good if my cigars don't, just inquire from any bank or commercial agency about me. If you don't like the report you get, keep your cash at home.

Illustrated price list FREE on request.

MORTON R. EDWIN
Dept. A. W., 64-66 W. 125th St. NEW YORK
Make checks payable to the Edwin Cigar Co.

Actual Size

DIRECTORY OF COLLEGES AND ACADEMIES

Georgetown University WASHINGTON, D. C.

Directory for Catalogues or Information

The College (Graduates and Undergraduates Schools)
The Registrar, 37th & O Sts., N. W.

The School of Medicine
The Dean, 920 H St., N. W.

The Training School for Nurses
Georgetown University Hospital

The School of Dentistry
The Dean, 920 H St., N. W.

The School of Law
The Dean, 506 E. St., N. W.

The Astronomical Observatory
The Director, Georgetown University

Rev. Joseph Himmel, S.J., President

College of St. Catherine, St. Paul, Minn.

A Catholic College for Girls.
Accredited by the Minnesota State Board of Public Instruction and by several prominent Universities.

Seventy Acre Campus. Fireproof Buildings.

COMPLETE COURSES IN THESE DEPARTMENTS.
THE COLLEGIATE, leading to the degree of Bachelor of Arts. THE ACADEMIC OR COLLEGE PREPARATORY, MUSIC AND PAINTING in their various branches. DOMESTIC ART, HOUSEHOLD SCIENCE AND COOKING. Year Book Forwarded on Application.
Address: THE SECRETARY.

St. Mary's College

St. Marys, Kansas

BOARDING COLLEGE
Under the Jesuit Fathers

Two Courses of Study:
Classical and Commercial

For Catalogue, send to
REV. ALOYSIUS A. BRENN, S.J., President

Georgetown Visitation Convent

A boarding and day School for
Young Ladies and Little Girls

Delightfully Situated on Georgetown Heights

WASHINGTON, D. C.

Founded in 1799 Address Sister Directress

St. Mary's College & Academy

MONROE, MICHIGAN

FOR YOUNG WOMEN AND GIRLS

CONDUCTED by the Sisters of the Immaculate Heart. Beautifully located between Detroit and Toledo. A high standard maintained for sixty-five years in Culture, Education and Discipline. Courses include Collegiate, Academic and Preparatory. Special attention given to Music, Art, Expression and Domestic Science University affiliation. Separate department for little girls.

For illustrated prospectus apply to Mother Superior

MT. ST. JOSEPH ON THE WISSAHICKON

For illustrated catalogue address MOTHER SUPERIOR, Chestnut Hill, Philadelphia, Pa.

CATHOLIC COLLEGE FOR WOMEN
situated in the romantic Valley of the Wissahickon. Degrees conferred. Also Academic, Commercial, Intermediate and Elementary Departments. Very special advantages in Music and Art. The piano student possesses superior opportunities in the use of the Virgil Clavier Method pursued throughout the course. The Art Studio is admirably equipped, and every attention is given to the study of Art, both in theory and practice. Gymnasium perfectly equipped. Outdoor exercise, tennis, basket ball, fencing, etc.

The Winona Seminary, Winona, Minnesota

CATHOLIC COLLEGE FOR WOMEN
Faculty of Specialists. Separate college residence. Confers degrees B.A., B.S. and Litt. B. Full college preparatory courses—certificates accepted by all leading universities. Secretarial course. Conservatory of Music confers degree of B. Mus.—visiting director, Emil Liebling. Departments of Art, Household Economics, Dramatic Expression. Private Rooms. Moderate Prices. Splendid Gymnasium. Extensive Campus. Students from thirteen States. Direct lines of railway from Chicago, Milwaukee, St. Paul, St. Louis.

Earnest, capable young women who have a purpose in study are solicited.
WRITE FOR CATALOGUE . . . . . DEPARTMENT BULLETINS

HOLY CROSS COLLEGE WORCESTER MASS.

Conducted by the Jesuit Fathers.

Largest Catholic College in America

Extensive grounds and exceedingly healthy location. New buildings, large gymnasium, indoor running track, hot and cold baths, modern conveniences. Easily reached on main line from Albany or New York to Boston via Springfield. Board, tuition, washing and mending, use of gymnasium, library and reading room, physical instruction and medical attendance, $260 a year. Furnished room and attendance extra. Send for catalogue to
PREFECT OF STUDIES.

Seton Hall College

FOUNDED 1856

South Orange, New Jersey

COLLEGE AND HIGH SCHOOL

Bayley Hall for Students
of Grammar Course

FOR CATALOGUE ADDRESS
Very Rev. James F. Mooney, D.D., Pres.

A CATHOLIC INSTITUTION FOR THE HIGHER EDUCATION OF WOMEN

College of Mount Saint Vincent On Hudson

CITY OF NEW YORK

DAY PUPILS AND BOARDERS

Location Unsurpassed for Convenience, Healthfulness and Beauty
One-half Hour from Grand Central Station

PROFESSORS OF DISTINCTION . . . . . EQUIPMENT OF THE BEST

COLLEGE—Four years' course leading to the Degrees of B.A. and B.S.

SCHOOL OF PEDAGOGY—Required for entrance two years of college work

FALL TERM BEGINS SEPTEMBER 25, 1911 . . . . . WRITE FOR PROSPECTUS

PREPARATORY DEPARTMENT

ACADEMY MOUNT SAINT VINCENT ON HUDSON

CITY OF NEW YORK

FOR TEACHERS AND PUPILS

One Hundred Best Catholic Books

CATHOLIC MIND No. 8

A useful little pamphlet for classes in English literature

5 cts. each. $4.00 per hundred

THE AMERICA PRESS 59 EAST 83d STREET
NEW YORK CITY

AMERICA

A CATHOLIC REVIEW OF THE WEEK

Vol. VI, No. 10 (Price 10 Cents)

DECEMBER 16, 1911

($3.00 a year)

Vol. No. 140

CHRONICLE

Opening of Congress—President's Second Message—Los Angeles Centre of Interest—Setback for Socialists—Mine Blew Up the Maine—Mexico—Canada—Great Britain—Ireland—France—Portugal—Italy—Germany—Austria—Hungary—Persia—China .....217-220

QUESTIONS OF THE DAY

Archbishop Ireland's Jubilee—Socialist Doctrine of Violence—The Whitman Myths—The Sacred Congregation of Cardinals—The Drift of the Age—Text Books for French School Children—Non-Partisan Organization for Upholding Property Rights .....221-227

CORRESPONDENCE

Close of Rome's Exposition Failure—Local Elections in Spain—Bigotry and Fanaticism in Jamaica .....227-239

EDITORIAL

Can Socialism be Christian?—Some Have Greatness Thrust Upon Them—An Overturn in Spain—What "Liberal" Scholarship Effects—Lincoln Steffens "Near Socialist"—The Unions and the Courts—The Last Word—Notes .....230-233

LITERATURE

Important Papers on Socialism—Pioneer Irish of Onondaga—In Northern Mists—Notes—Books Received .....233-235

EDUCATION

Supreme Court to Define Rights of Parochial Schools in Pennsylvania—Springfield Priests Plan to Build Addition to Holy Cross College—Report of Annual Meeting of Catholic Educational Association .....236

PULPIT, PRESS AND PLATFORM

International Catholic Defence Union .....236-237

ECCLESIASTICAL NEWS

New Cardinals Take Possession of their Titular

Churches—Work of the St. Vincent de Paul Society—Helping the Missions in Asiatic Turkey—Father Désy's Golden Jubilee—Memorials to Fathers Brébeuf and Viel—House of the Good Shepherd at Wheeling, W. Va., to be Rebuilt, .....238-239

ECONOMICS

Growth of a Great Shipbuilding Concern...239

SCIENCE

Incandescent Lamps with Metallic Filaments—New Process for the Purification of Illuminating Gas—Novel Invention for Preserving Furs from Moths .....239

OBITUARY

Funeral of the Late Rev. John P. Frieden, S.J.—W. Max Reed .....239-240

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

The School of Social Science—Patens and Patines—The Discredited "Britannica" .....240

CHRONICLE

Opening of Congress.—The second session of the Sixty-second Congress opened on Monday, December 4. The President's first message was laid before both houses on the following day. It deals exclusively with the trust question. In it the President defends the Sherman Act as interpreted in the decisions of the Supreme Court, recommends a Federal incorporation law, together with a Federal bureau or commission to supervise the activities of corporations having a Federal charter, and suggests supplemental legislation to define more clearly methods of competition that are unfair. Mr. Cleveland was the first President to send to Congress at a regular opening session a message devoted to a single subject. Comments on the message reflect the bias of political affiliation. The Democrats, both in the Senate and the House, will oppose the plan of Federal incorporation. Representative Underwood, majority leader, and Chairman Clayton, of the judiciary committee, both think that Federal incorporation is not needed at this time. "It was a very able message from the President's standpoint," said Mr. Underwood, "although I believe the first message of the session should have dealt with the tariff. Like the President, I oppose any plan to repeal the Sherman law. It ought to stand, but there is no need of supplemental legislation to clarify it. . . . I do not think that the sentiment in the House favors the idea of Federal incorporation."

President's Second Message.—The President's second message to Congress followed two days later, and is devoted to the topics which usually formed the opening part of the old style omnibus message, covering the activities of the State Department. It is practically a review of the relations of the United States with other countries during the past twelve months. The President makes little more than perfunctory mention of the pending arbitration treaties with Great Britain and France, expressing the earnest hope that they will receive prompt and favorable action in the Senate. About one-fourth of the message is devoted to Mexico and the Administration's action in sending an army to the Texan frontier. The President announces that he has hopes of the present diplomatic negotiations with Russia ending in a satisfactory solution of the troublesome passport question, adding, "I expect that immediately after the Christmas recess I shall be able to make a further communication to Congress on this subject." The President recommends the rigorous control by legislation of the manufacture and sale of opium; a modification of the tariff law in order to meet varying degrees of discrimination by foreign Governments; a revival of the American merchant marine and the permanent establishment by statutory enactment of the merit system in the consular and the diplomatic services. This document is likewise the first Presidential message that deals solely with the operations of the State Department.

Los Angeles Centre of Interest.—Following his confession of wrecking the Los Angeles Times building, in which twenty-one persons lost their lives on October 10, 1910, James B. McNamara was sentenced to imprisonment for life; his brother, John J. McNamara, who had entered a plea of guilty to dynamiting the Llewellyn Iron Works in Los Angeles, on Christmas Day, 1910, received the sentence of fifteen years in the penitentiary. A sequel to the disclosures made during the trial is the appointment by Attorney General Wickersham of a special United States attorney to take charge of the Government's investigation of recent dynamiting outrages. A good many labor leaders are said to be involved.—George Alexander, the Good Government candidate for Mayor of Los Angeles, was re-elected by an overwhelming majority over Job Harriman, Socialist. One hundred and eighty-seven thousand persons, including eighty-five thousand women, were entitled to vote. The women voted quite generally, and the result is largely attributed to their ballots. The confessions of the McNamaras played a great part in the defeat of the Socialist candidate and his party.

Setback for Socialists.—The Socialists of Milwaukee when boasting of the "successes" of their administration failed to reckon with the courts. The suit of the city for $187,000 back taxes against a trolley company was decided by the State Supreme Court against the city. The cutting of the salaries of the police and fire chiefs, foes of the administration, whom the administration has tried in vain to remove, was found illegal. The suit against six Circuit Court judges for $1,000 of their salary for seven years back was dismissed. The Socialists claimed that the judges had been overpaid. The State Supreme Court likewise decided that a street paving expert, brought to Milwaukee from New York, was holding his job illegally, with his four division chiefs, and that the Socialistic city attorney is responsible for the salary of the five for the fourteen months of their service.

Mine Blew Up the Maine.—Rear-Admiral Vreeland laid before President Taft the report of the special board of army and navy experts appointed by the President to determine what caused the wreck of the Maine in Havana Harbor in 1898. The finding of the board is that the "injuries to the Maine were caused by the explosion of a charge of a low form of explosive exterior to the ship." The examination of the exposed hull by the Vreeland board confirms the report of the Sampson board which reached the unanimous decision on March 29, 1898, that "in the opinion of the court the Maine was destroyed by the explosion of a submarine mine, which caused the partial explosion of two or more of her forward magazines." The members of the Vreeland board with their own eyes examined the visible portions of the wreck which only divers were able to visit in part during the earlier investigation. One member of the board was of the opinion that the report never would be published in full, but would be kept in the confidential archives of the Navy Department. The declaration that a "low form of explosive" was used in the outside explosion indicates a belief that a mine and not a dirigible torpedo was the instrument of destruction. Secretary Meyer announced that there might be a further statement in the report of the board after it had been considered by the President.

Mexico.—Mr. James A. Flaherty, supreme grand knight of the Knights of Columbus, who is now visiting Mexico, was tendered a banquet at the American Club in the capital.—General Diaz gave out an interview in Paris in which he expressed the wish to die in his native land. Speaking of his former Minister of War and intimate friend, General Bernardo Reyes, Diaz declared him a danger to the country.—The Minister of the Treasury has proposed additional taxes on alcoholic drinks, pulque, beer and tobacco, and export duties on crude rubber and bananas, as a means of tiding over the financial difficulties occasioned by the disturbed state of the country. Complaint is made that certain mining interests, the pearl fisheries and the guano companies are not called upon to contribute.—The Ministers of Government, Justice, and War have been summoned before the Congress to explain how certain petty revolutionary leaders were captured and shot without any civil or military proceedings. The first named cabinet officer must also explain to the Congress why some Mexican journalists were ordered out of the country and threatened with death if they returned.—The Minister of Development has asked Congress to authorize an issue of bonds to the value of one hundred million dollars, gold, to undertake immense irrigation works for the prospective benefit of small farmers.—The Reyes revolution is looked upon as crushed. Several bands of patriots are still in the field, but chiefly as an amusement and a diversion.

Canada.—The Prince Edward Island ministry has resigned, and Mr. Mathiesen has formed a Conservative cabinet. He will have a general election in January.—Mr. Borden proposes to take counsel with the Imperial Government before submitting his proposals with regard to the navy. The Minister of Marine will therefore visit England soon after Christmas.—The bi-lingual school question is still troubling both parties in Ontario. After Mr. Foy, the Conservative Attorney General, had declared against them, Mr. Rowell, the Liberal leader, gave an academic opinion in their favor. Then Dr. Rhéaume, Minister of Public Works, announced that Mr. Foy had spoken as an individual only, and not as representing the Government, and promised in the name of Sir James Whitney, the Premier, that the teaching of French shall not be abolished in the Province.—The Grand Trunk Pacific Railway construction has crossed the boundary of British Columbia from the east. It reached the Fraser River December 15, and then discontinued track laying until next summer.—The reopening of the Crow's Nest Pass coal mines has enabled the Granby smelter to resume operations. All the mines of the Granby Company will soon be working to their full capacity.—The western grain-growers complain bitterly that the railways do not furnish enough cars to carry their wheat. The elevators along the roads are full and there is no place to store the grain.

Great Britain.—Some newspapers and politicians, alarmed at the country's narrow escape from being caught unprepared in a war with Germany, demand the discussion and control of foreign affairs in Parliament, which would mean practically the managing of them by the press. This would be far more likely to plunge the country unprepared into a sudden war than the present, in which difficulties are discussed dispassionately by the cabinet, fully informed of the state of the army and navy. Moreover, it would be a long step towards the replacing of all government by popular sentiment.—The Insurance Bill passed the Commons, the Unionists refraining from voting as a protest against the way it had been forced through. Mr. Asquith announced that he was going to push the Home Rule Bill through in the same way. The Welsh Disestablishment Bill and the Manhood Suffrage Bill will, no doubt, be carried similarly. This is the result of the Parliament Bill. Two years have been cut off the duration of Parliament. Hence, if a Bill is to be passed over the heads of the Lords, it must be rushed through the Commons in order to allow of the required successive presentations to the Upper House. Even Liberals are growing restive under this treatment of the Commons.—The railway men resent the formation of a volunteer police force for service in time of strikes; and some have passed a resolution in favor of arming union men.

Ireland.—In the House of Commons, on December 6, Premier Asquith stated, in reply to a question by William O'Brien, that the Government will use all the constitutional means to pass a Home Rule bill for Ireland in the present Parliament. Mr. O'Brien had expressed concern at a recent report that Mr. Asquith was trying to get the House of Lords to throw out the Home Rule bill when it reaches that House. The announcement means that he intends to force the Home Rule bill through three consecutive sessions if necessary, thus making it become effective in spite of the opposition of the Peers.—Mr. Birrell, speaking recently in Yorkshire, England, to the League of Young Liberals, affirmed that "a just measure of Home Rule for Ireland, on financial and political grounds, would make that country stronger, more contented and more prosperous." He denied that real religious difficulties existed to complicate the question, and apologized for using the word "religion" in connection with the Ulster question. "Those people in this matter," said Mr. Birrell, "have no more religion in them than billiard balls." He contended that it was high time to settle effectively what he called "the great cause of Home Rule for Ireland." Mr. Birrell said he had been living under the shadow of the question all his life. The Liberal Party had paid dearly for its advocacy—it had split them in '86, but opposition to it had destroyed the Tory party.—The Postmaster-General announced in the House of Commons, November 29, that from and after December 1 the parcels post rate between Great Britain and Ireland will be reduced. The reduced rate for the carriage of parcels will not, of course, prove so great a boon to the Irish as did the reduction of letter postage, but the change will surely be of considerable service to the smaller industries of the country.

France.—The first subject discussed at the opening of Parliament was the explosion on the Liberté. The blame was laid on the powder, but the men who were responsible for its purchase and possession had known of its dangerous character for ten years back. M. Chéron, who, as Sub-Secretary of the Army, had made a study of it, was transferred to the Navy. When in that post he did not bother himself at all about what had before engaged his attention, and the consequence was that France lost the best ship of the Navy. In spite of all this, however, a vote of confidence in the Government was passed by an overwhelming majority.—M. Caillaux has been four months in power, and the only thing he has done so far was to expel the Little Sisters of the Assumption.—The whole country is still grumbling about giving the Congo, or such a large part of it, to Germany. Moreover, arrangements have still to be made with Spain about Morocco, and no one can tell what is to be the issue. The Minister of Foreign Affairs, de Selves, was asked if France had ever objected to Spain's action in occupying Morocco. He replied that nothing had ever been said on the subject; whereupon his predecessor, Cruppi, informed Parliament that remonstrances had been repeatedly sent to Madrid. In this matter, as in many others, the French Cabinet is in a condition of hopeless anarchy.—On December 7 it transpired that Prime Minister Caillaux had attempted to bully Spain about its African possessions by notifying King Alfonso that decisive action had to be taken in Morocco by France, and that if Spain interfered it would be a dangerous proceeding. Alfonso properly reminded him that Spain was not Portugal. He then informed the Powers of France's amazing attitude. This new trouble arises from the recent treaty between France and Germany, wherein the Morocco zone over which France is to have control is defined as "the whole of the northwest corner of Africa." But as Spain already occupies a part of that "northwest corner," friction had to be expected. The Humanité, edited by the Socialist Jaurès, declares it is Caillaux's purpose to drive Spain out. The means to be employed, according to report, is to start a revolution in Spain.

Portugal.—A riot in Lisbon was finally put down by repeated cavalry charges. The people opposed an obstinate resistance and hurled whatever came handy at the galloping soldiers. Extra guards were placed around the President's house. The trouble was started by an attempt on the part of the authorities to drive out a couple of female quacks who were treating eye troubles.—A letter smuggled out of a Lisbon prison gives a harrowing account of the sufferings and privations endured by the inmates, among whom are forty priests.

The prisoners, two hundred in number, are in damp underground cells. They are accused of hostility to the republic; but in the case of the priests, it is specifically stated that their hostility was shown by renouncing the pension offered to renegades.

Italy.—On December 7 there was a general submission of the Arab chiefs and a withdrawal of the Turks into the interior of the country, so that military operations have for the moment come to an end in the vicinity of Tripoli. Meantime, however, a despatch from Berlin reports the expulsion of Italians from Smyrna.

Germany.—At the closing session of the Reichstag, December 5, the Imperial Chancellor, Dr. von Bethmann-Hollweg, made his reply to the statements of Sir Edward Grey. The firm and dignified tone of his speech won for him the renewed confidence of the House and met with frequent applause. He was unyielding in the principles which had dictated the entire policy of Germany in its relations with England, but conciliatory in his manner of expressing them. Mutual good will between the two countries was evidently sincerely desired by him, but not at the cost of any sacrifice of national prestige.—He explained that the long secrecy maintained by the French and German governments was not due to any desire of withholding from the people a full knowledge of the transactions. It was necessitated, however, by the stress of popular excitement which would have made any agreement impossible. This was especially true of France, where the strong feeling of the masses would have passed beyond all control of authority. This last was the principal reason for the prolonged secrecy. "Could we have foreseen," he said, "the interpretation which England was to lay upon the military preparations made by us in September, an interpretation which still more aggravated the unrest in Germany, we would have made the present communications at an earlier date."—He acknowledged the conciliatory tone in the speech of Sir Edward Grey, but could not see on what grounds England could justify her suspicion that Germany had the design of gaining a military harbor on the Atlantic coast. "Our plans were fully known in England through our Ambassador at London. There was no reason why the truth of our statements should have been doubted. France and Russia never displayed any distrust towards us." The entire crisis was due solely to the mistrust of England, in spite of the German assurances.—England, he stated further, demanded her equal right as a Power, but was not willing to grant this same right to a fellow Power. England and France wished to dispose of Morocco without consulting Germany. For this reason Algeciras and Agadir were necessary to demonstrate before the world that the German nation could not be set aside at pleasure. His earnest wish was to accord with the desires of the English Minister for peaceful and friendly relations; but it must be understood by all the Powers that they are not to leave out of count in their future policies the continued development of Germany.—A lockout in the Berlin Metal Industry, which had affected seventy thousand men, has now been peacefully settled. A meeting was called at which the delegates of the employers and the workingmen agreed, after a long session, upon the best conditions for a compromise. These were then submitted to the vote of the laborers. Although more than half of the latter were opposed to the terms of the agreement, yet the compromise was effected; since a two-thirds majority was, according to stipulation, required for the rejection of the proposed conditions. The calamity of a prolonged lock-out, with all its terrible consequences, has thus been happily avoided.

Austria.—The relations between Italy and Austria are daily becoming more critical. Considerable comment was aroused by an article in the Bohemia, whose war correspondent stated that he left Tripoli because the conduct of Italian officers made his stay impossible. The question of a war with Austria was the constant subject of discussion. The article concludes with the advice for Austria to separate herself from Italy. The crisis is emphasized by the interpellation made in the Chamber of Deputies of the Reichstag, on the part of the Christian Social Party, asking an explanation regarding the present standing of the Triple Alliance. A similar request was made in the Hungarian House of Representatives by the former Minister of Public Worship, Count Apponyi. A consultation held by the Emperor Franz Josef with the heads of the army and navy departments has heightened the general expectancy.

Hungary.—What no one, seemingly, could have foretold has suddenly come to pass. On December 4 the Czech vote was cast with the government majority and the way has been freely thrown open for all the long-needed government reforms. Ministry after ministry had gone to wreck upon the unyielding opposition of the Czechs. Count Stürgkh, it had seemed, would meet a similar fate, when the unexpected happened. The course of future developments cannot as yet be clearly foreseen.

Persia.—When the army of 2,000 men that has been despatched to Teheran to enforce Russia's demand of Mr. Shuster's withdrawal reaches Persia, our government looks to the Russian commander for adequate protection for the American Treasurer General. The Persian Parliament has asked aid and sympathy from England, Germany and the United States in maintaining her independence.

China.—Prince Chun, regent of China and father of the five-year-old emperor, has abdicated. The vice-president of the privy council and a Manchu noble succeed him as guardians of the throne. Provincial delegates assembled at Wu-Chang to discuss a constitutional monarchy having a descendant of Confucius, or a man like Yuan Shih Kai, as a Chinese king.

QUESTIONS OF THE DAY

Archbishop Ireland's Jubilee

In connection with the celebration some three years ago of the seventy-fifth anniversary of St. Mary's, the first church dedicated by the Catholics of Chicago, a story went the rounds of the Catholic press which will be heard again, one ventures to predict, during the glory of another festivity soon to be with us. William J. Onahan, the well-known Catholic of that city, included the tale in his jubilee address on that occasion—a reminiscent sketch of the pioneer Catholics of the western metropolis. With a Chicagoan's wonted eagerness to claim whatever may redound to the fame of his city, Mr. Onahan affirmed it was in old St. Mary's that the first suggestion and inspiration of his vocation for the priesthood came to a youth later to fill a large place in the marvelous growth of the Church in the western country. One day the priest in charge of the catechism class while examining the boys of St. Mary's school was struck, it seems, by the readiness and the correct answers given by a young Irish lad among them. After school hours, curious to learn more about the lad, the priest took him aside and questioned him: "Where did you learn your catechism?" "In County Kilkenny, Ireland, where I came from," was the quick reply. The ingenuousness of the boy and his precise and accurate knowledge of his faith deeply impressed the priest, and he was moved to put to the lad the query: "Would you not like to be a priest?"

Whatever may have been the reply, the suggestion, at all events, of the zealous priest took hold of that bright young Irish boy, though up to that moment the thought of the sacred priesthood had never entered his mind. He went home, Mr. Onahan's story runs, and told his father and mother what the priest had said. Shortly afterwards the family removed to St. Paul. There the saintly Bishop Cretin, similarly attracted by the promise of the youth, gained the consent of his parents, and sent the lad to France to pursue his studies for the priesthood in an ecclesiastical seminary.

This youth, from the beginning marked out by his exceptional ability, has made history in the great Northwest. Ordained a priest in France in 1861, his first appointment carried him through the most arduous campaigning of the civil war as chaplain to the Fifth Minnesota Regiment. Returning from the field, the idol of his soldiers, promotion came to him rapidly. Still young in years, he was named Rector of the Cathedral of St. Paul, and after a term of duty in that charge he was consecrated Bishop-Coadjutor of the diocese in 1875, becoming its chief ruler in 1884. In 1888 his see was raised to metropolitan rank, and when, on December 21 of this year, he celebrates his golden jubilee as a priest, Archbishop Ireland will look back upon a career in which long service, personal merit, uprightness of priestly conduct and life, and unswerving devotion to high ideals will have proved the wise foresight of the priest in old St. Mary's who asked the ingenuous Irish lad: "Would you not like to be a priest?"

Few there are who are permitted to round out a career as honorable and as enviable in its record of work done to God's great glory as that which Archbishop Ireland's panegyrists will be called upon to describe on his jubilee day. Few there are, even in the wonderland of America, who may tell as their own the story of an area of country greater than an empire passing, practically within the span of one man's active influence, from the condition of a toilsome mission district, cared for by a handful of itinerant priests, to the proud dignity of an ecclesiastical province of Christ's Church, in which an Archbishop and eight suffragan Bishops guide the destinies of as many flourishing dioceses. True, the distinguished ruler of St. Paul had with him in the work this marvelous Church development implied an able and a zealous priesthood, but who may question the influence needed—the large heart dominating a mind of uncommon grasp—to guide the energies of these auxiliaries to the splendid results compassed within a cycle of fifty years. There have never been lacking in our country saintly and able leaders in the Catholic episcopate, but to few has it been given, while enshrining themselves in the hearts of their priests, so to stamp the impress of their own forceful personality upon these priests' lives as has the great Churchman whose fifty years of labor are soon to be commemorated in St. Paul.

This feature of the merited fame of Archbishop Ireland it is, one makes bold to affirm, that will be emphasized in the congratulations sure to pour in upon him on his day of jubilee. Not that St. Paul's prelate is not great in other respects. Here and abroad alike he occupies a unique place in the esteem of men capable of measuring his wisdom; his influence in public life; his philosophic accuracy as a thinker, who traces the weakness of nations and of individuals with frank impartiality; the comprehensiveness of his love for humanity; the sanity of his public utterances; his power as a Christian orator, whose vigorous and luminous thought and clear and flowing periods the years seem only to strengthen and deepen.

But John Ireland is, withal, a Bishop in God's Church, and as such, "being made a pattern of the flock from the heart," there is but one glory he seeks with never flagging purpose—the glory of God through the ministry of his Church. That he has sought God's glory through all his years of priestly labor the record of his life attests; that his zeal in achieving what he sought has won for him distinction as one upon whom the blessing of God descends in a heaped up measure of fruitfulness all men must bear witness—the story of the rapid spread of the Catholic Church throughout the great Northwest is an open book. And we of AMERICA, who have from the first experienced Archbishop Ireland's kindly interest and encouragement in the burden our work entails, are glad to join in that testimony, whilst with filial respect we offer to him the homage of our heartfelt greeting ad multos annos.

M. J. O'CONNOR, S.J.

Socialist Doctrine of Violence

Socialists were confessedly the most enthusiastic supporters of the McNamaras. The improbable fiction that the explosion, with its fearful holocaust of human lives, was a deliberate conspiracy concocted by employers and detectives and abetted by the court and the press to bring organized labor into permanent disgrace, was nowhere so recklessly and persistently circulated as within the Socialistic camp. "The kidnapping scoundrels who hatched this foul plot to destroy organized labor have absolute governmental power. At their command every corporation lackey in public office, from the president at Washington to the trial judge at Los Angeles, performs with the amazing alacrity of a trained spaniel." Such was the proclamation made by Debs and echoed by the Socialist press over all the country.

It was the seedtime of Socialism. It was the opportunity of a century to foment dissension and hatred between employer and employed. For this purpose the enormous power of the Socialist press and the eloquence of Socialist orators were utilized. It was hoped to make impossible hereafter all efforts at conciliation and reform which might bring about an agreement between capital and labor. That men like Gompers and other representative leaders of organized labor should have so readily aided their efforts is one of the darkest pages in the history of labor. It should be a lesson for all time that Socialist methods cannot be applied by the unions without bringing their own cause into discredit and ruin.

Set like a vane to change with every wind of expediency, it was not long before Socialism had adapted itself to the change of popular sentiment. Whatever harm might come to the labor unions, Socialists would see their way to profit by it. The McNamaras, they said, had disgraced the cause of labor by employing the methods of capitalism. Unionism could never become peaceful and self-respecting until it would be identified with Socialism. They now felt safe in freely casting stones at the American Federation of Labor. "Not only does trade unionism stand convicted of appalling violence," Bouck White dared to declare before a Socialist audience, "but violence is a constituent part of its program." (N. Y. Sun, Dec. 5, 1911.)

We have no wish to defend the guilty parties within the unions. In this we are agreed with every honest union laborer. We do not wish to defend Gompers for his rash charges made, in common with the Socialist leaders, against men entirely innocent of the enormous crime which was shouldered upon them. But we certainly have reason to be surprised at the tone which Socialism is assuming, as if its movement were completely innocent of any violence in teaching or in practice. How different the strain only a few weeks past, when it was shouting in wild glee at the riots and murders in Barcelona, in which it boasted to have played a prominent part.

The only fault which one of its most noted papers, L'Humanité, could find with the Portuguese revolution was the absence of the guillotine. To scotch the serpent was not sufficient, it should have been killed outright. The French revolution itself is for Socialist literature the height of the sublime in history. "The conceptions of modern Socialism are all found in a cruder form on the streets of Paris during the revolution," says its Socialist panegyrist, the Rev. Roland Sawyer (The Call, Oct. 1, 1911); while John Edward Russell tells us in the same paper:

"They came to the work for the lust of the pay,
For blood and fire as their drink and bread.
Of the bitter crop was the fruit good? Yea,
The flame and the sword and the cap of red."

We have already quoted in a preceding article the conclusion arrived at by Kautsky in his "Ethics and the Materialist Conception of History," that the ideal Socialist morality of the present day consists in "nothing else than the complex of wishes and endeavors which are called forth by the opposition to the existing state of affairs" (p. 199). This definition certainly makes a virtue of the criminal deed which to-day justly horrifies the civilized world.

Robert Rives La Monte, in his chapter on "Marxism and Ethics," after stating that the revolutionary worker has absolutely no regard for the right of property, adds: "But knowing, as he does, that his class enemies, the capitalists, own not only the goods, but also the courts and the police, he condemns theft by a workingman as suicidal folly" (p. 65). The most, therefore, which can be said against the destruction of property is that it is inexpedient for the Socialist and his party. Any higher motive would be illogical for an orthodox Socialist, since, according to Marx, the property of capitalism merely represents the expropriation of the worker, and is not protected by any right on the part of the employer. This is the only meaning which can be given to the Marxian dictum, "Expropriate the expropriators."

La Monte, however, suggests another motive: "My statement," he says, "that the revolutionary worker abstains from crimes against property from expediency rather than from principle must not be construed into an allegation that fear of personal punishment is the only ground for abstaining from such crimes." Since social life in the present state of society would be impossible without respect for private property, he argues that crimes against this must likewise be considered "un-social." More, his philosophy cannot permit him to say which is thus summarized by him (p. 57):

"What are 'wrong,' 'right,' 'vice,' virtue,' 'bad' and 'good'?"

Mere whips to scourge the backs that naked bear
The burden of the world."

We are told in "Plays, Pleasant and Unpleasant," that a workingman, after having listened to a Socialist orator discussing morality, turned to Bernard Shaw, and showing his calloused hands, remarked, with a slight admixture of profanity, "What has a fellow with a pair of mits like these to do with morality? What I want is the goods." This is precisely the attitude any workingman must take who has no higher morality than that of the kind which Socialism can propose, when the love of God and the hope of heaven are taken from him. "They look beyond the grave and hope that there they'll be repaid, poor fools, for being good" (p. 57).

Socialists have pointed with great enthusiasm to a recent book by William D. Haywood and Frank Bohn. The former is, after Debs, the most popular Socialist speaker of the present day. The passage we are to quote has been objected to by Morris Hillquit, who fears that it may commit their party, and states likewise that it is not Socialistic. This, however, has not interfered with further advertisement of the volume in the Call, while the principal Socialist publisher speaks of it as the most important propaganda book of the year, and states that "it will put the worker on the right road." Denying the existence of conscience and God, as well as the right to profit-bearing property, it is difficult to see on what grounds except those of mere feasibility and expediency any Marxian Socialist can find fault with the principle advocated here so plainly. We give the entire passage as indicating the doctrine which has evidently been widely taught by one of the most successful Socialist agitators of our country:

"When the worker, either through experience or a study of Socialism, comes to know this truth (the economic foundation of modern ethics and jurisprudence), he acts accordingly. He retains absolutely no respect for the property 'rights' of the profit takers. He will use any weapon which will win his fight. He knows that the present laws of property are made by and for the capitalists. Therefore he does not hesitate to break them. He knows that whatever action advances the interests of the working class is right, because it will save the workers from destruction and death."—(Industrial Socialism.)

We admit that for tactical reasons, at least, it is considered by most orthodox Socialist leaders "a suicidal folly" to commit deeds of violence against property. But we have likewise seen in this entirely uncolored presentation of our case, against which no Socialist can reasonably object, how shallow are the ethical motives which are to prevent such actions where they will really prove expedient for the Socialist cause. According to the greatest authority in Marxian ethics, they will then even be demanded in the name of morality itself. We close with a passage from "Revolution," by Jack London, as it was printed with the highest approval in the International Socialist Review (August, 1909). The argument is that as the Russian government kills the revolutionists, these are justified in killing the officers of that government, where no suffrage is allowed:

"Our comrades in Russia have formed what they call 'The Fighting Organization.' This Fighting Organization accused, tried, found guilty, and condemned to death one Sipiaguin, Minister of the Interior. On April 2 he was shot and killed in the Maryinsky Palace. Two years later the Fighting Organization condemned to death and executed another Minister of the Interior, Von Plehve. Having done so it issued a document, dated July 29, 1904, setting forth the counts of its indictment of Von Plehve and its responsibility for the assassination. Now, and to the point, this document was sent out to the Socialists of the world, and by them was published everywhere in the magazines and newspapers. The point is, not that the Socialists of the world were unafraid to do it, but that they did it as a matter of routine, giving publication to what may be called an official document of the international revolutionary movement."

There is still left us abundance of matter, but we believe that we have said enough to establish our own point. A morality without divine sanction and founded upon purely human motives can depend only upon sentiment and expediency. A reckless capitalism at one extreme of our civilization and a desperate Socialism at the other are equally the products of such doctrine. The only golden mean for capital and labor is that which has been pointed out so wisely and eloquently in the Encyclicals given to the world by Pope Leo XIII.

JOSEPH HUSSLEIN, S.J.

The Whitman Myths*

One of the characteristics of the Protestant missionaries when the world was wider than it is now, and when the truth about what was happening on the other side of it could not be ascertained very easily, was an exaggerating of results not very far from unvaracity. The tendency remains. If it finds little scope for its exercise in existing things, it can, nevertheless, reproduce and augment the stories of the past.

Thus, the acquisition of Oregon, the fruit of a long, intelligent diplomacy, was connected in some way with the Presbyterian mission of which Dr. Marcus Whitman was the head. After the lapse of years the myth was invented and propagated that the Government in Washington, on the point of surrendering that country to the British, was saved from doing so by Dr. Whitman, who rode across the continent in winter, told the President and the Secretary of State how valuable the region was, how easy of access, and, to prove the latter, undertook to lead into it an immigration with wagons and cattle.

*The Acquisition of Oregon, by William I. Marshall. 2 volumes. Seattle: Lowman & Hanford Company.

The story makes Dr. Whitman a national character, and gives his mission station a national importance. Hence new myths had to be invented concerning the origin of his mission; the way he, his wife and their companions reached it; his relations with the Hudson's Bay Company, and the instigators of the massacre in which he perished. Accordingly, we have the myth of the Indian embassy to the Eastern States in search of the religion of the Book; the myth of Dr. Whitman's wagon driven through from Missouri to the neighborhood of the present Walla Walla—for, unless he had himself taken a wagon into the Oregon country, he could not have undertaken to lead others thither; the myth of the ferocious hostility of the Hudson's Bay Company, and the myth of the instigating of the Indians by the Company and the Catholic missionaries to murder Dr. Whitman and his associates. We shall say a word on each, taking them in their chronological order.

No Indians ever went in search of the religion of the Book. Early in the last century the Rocky Mountain Flatheads learned from some Christian Iroquois of the Catholic religion and the blackrobes, and in 1831 sent to Bishop Rosati in St. Louis, begging for these teachers. The Bishop had none to send; but the Indians persevered in their entreaties until, in 1840, Father De Smet led his brethren into their country. In the meantime a corrupt account, mentioning the Book indirectly, had been published in the Methodist Episcopal Christian Advocate of New York, which certainly had something to do with the origin of the Methodist and the American Board Missions. But when the leader of the former testified that the story was "highly wrought and incorrect," and Dr. Whitman wrote his account of the coming of the Indians to St. Louis without a word of the Book; when both missions passed the Flatheads by and went several hundred miles further west, the former to the Willamet Valley, the latter to the Middle Columbia, the myth was discredited and should have been left to perish. But this could not suit the authors of the fictitious Whitman, and so one Spalding, who had been the real Whitman's companion, started it afresh, sending the Indians on a formal quest of the religion of the Book, and making General Clark, of Lewis and Clark fame, responsible for turning them aside, on the absurd supposition that this Protestant and Freemason was a Catholic. The Reverend William Barrows, financial agent of Whitman College, improved Spalding's tale by giving as authentic a long speech, couched in the Fenimore Cooper style, in which the Indians are made to reproach General Clark for denying them the Book and taking them to a place where the Great Spirit was worshipped with candles. One Protestant writer after another has repeated this outrageous tale, until it has become one of the commonplaces of the missionary meeting.

Dr. Whitman drove no wagon through from Missouri to the Columbia River. He set out with two, sold one at Fort Laramie and reached Fort Hall, in southeastern Idaho, with the other. The myth, as told by Barrows and others, runs that the Hudson's Bay Company's officials there, seeing in that wagon the ruin of their rule in Oregon, urged the impossibility of taking it any further. The heroic man ignored them, took his wagon to pieces, made a cart out of one pair of wheels, packed on it the other pair, and so reached Fort Boise, in what is now southwestern Idaho, where the Snake River turns northward to the Columbia. Here, as his cattle had given out, he left the cart for a time, but soon afterwards brought it through to Fort Walla Walla. The truth is that the Hudson's Bay Company's men gave prudent, friendly advice, as the event proved. Dr. Whitman's pair of wheels never got beyond Fort Boise.

The myth of the Hudson's Bay Company's hostility is absurd. All who ever came in contact with its officials know that long residence in the wilderness and experience of its hardships made them more than hospitable to every traveler that came to their posts. Moreover, they must have known that as the title to Oregon was in dispute, Americans had as much right there as they; and it is more than probable that they recognized the futility of attempting to keep Americans out of it. Anyhow, the letters and journals of missionaries and immigrants alike are full of the favors they received at their hands. Indeed, Dr. McLaughlin, head of all the Company's establishments in Oregon, went so far beyond the mere obligations of humanity as to incur the accusation of disloyalty, and, in consequence, felt obliged to resign his honorable and lucrative post.

As for Whitman's famous ride, so much has been made of it that the truth will seem almost incredible. Whitman rode, not to save Oregon, but to save himself. The American Board of Foreign Missions, dissatisfied with his mismanagement and weary of constant quarrels between himself and his associates, had ordered him to close his station, and to procure the recall of this order he undertook his journey. It appears that he went straight to Boston, and that his visit to Washington was some months later. He had nothing to do with organizing the subsequent immigration; indeed, its leaders knew nothing about him, and made his acquaintance only when he joined them on their journey. He did not lead them into Oregon. He guided them from Fort Hall to Fort Boise, and then went on ahead, leaving them to accomplish by themselves their difficult journey. Nay, he actually injured them, for he took with him some of their young men, on whose strength they were relying.

The myth that the Hudson's Bay Company and the priests instigated the Whitman massacre may be dismissed in a few words. Spalding, the associate of Dr. Whitman, was its author also. Yet his letter to Bishop A. M. A. Blanchet of Walla Walla is extant, couched in most affectionate terms, in which he acknowledges that Father Brouillet, whom he calls his "dear friend," had saved him from Whitman's fate, and throws himself and the survivors on the protection of the Bishop and the Company. There is also extant a letter to Mr. McBean of the Company, in which he acknowledges goods given to the Indians who were standing by him, and begs a further contribution; and there is extant a letter to the Board of Missions in which he narrates the efficacious means taken by Mr. Ogden of the Company to ransom the survivors and bring them to Fort Vancouver, concluding with the words: "We owe it under kind heaven to the efforts of Mr. Ogden and Mr. Douglas that we are alive and at this place to-day."

The Whitman massacre was due to three causes. First, the commercialism of Dr. Whitman, which persuaded the Indians that he had designs upon their lands. Second, the murder of a Walla Walla Indian by Americans in California. Third, the failure of Dr. Whitman's attempts to cure those attacked by an epidemic, which, besides making him responsible in their eyes for the deaths that occurred, gave grounds to their suspicion that he was poisoning them to get possession of their land. Fourth, the machinations of Tom Hill, a Delaware who had been educated at Dartmouth College.

All this, and much more, may be read in Marshall's two volumes. How gross the Whitman myths are the genesis of those volumes proves. Mr. Marshall, after ten years in Montana, during which he traveled considerably in the Northwest, went on the lecture platform. He was a Protestant and sympathized with Protestant missions. He believed in the Whitman myths, and so it is not strange that he prepared a lecture on Whitman's saving of Oregon. Wishing to verify some of his assertions, he came across evidence pointing to the falsehood of what he had trusted. His doubts were strengthened when one who could be relied on warned him not to go into a matter which would take him much farther than he might care to go. The investigation he proposed meant, moreover, no small loss of money; but his honor was at stake, and he set to work. It lasted many years, during which he read every book, pamphlet and important article on the question. He ransacked newspaper files; studied the records in the State Department; examined, after overcoming the difficulties thrown in his way, the archives of the American Board of Foreign Missions; corresponded with or interviewed the survivors of the immigrants or their descendants, those favoring the myths and those opposing them; and then weighed the evidence and decided the question with extraordinary ability, so that, in the words of Professor Fiske, he has "done the work so thoroughly that it will not need doing again."

Mr. Marshall died in 1906. The publication of his book is due to Mr. C. B. Bagley of Seattle. There is no idea of regaining by the sale of this work the hundredth part of what it cost. It is a contribution to the cause of truth, and as such it should be in the hands of every serious student of American history. As for American Colleges and Universities and Historical Societies, their libraries are incomplete until this work is on the shelves.

HENRY WOODS, S.J.

The Sacred Congregation of Cardinals

VIII. ELECTION CAPITULATIONS.—As far as the cardinals were concerned, one hundred and fifteen years passed by before there was a successful attempt to tamper with the Lateran decree on Papal Elections. During that time three Frenchmen and a Portuguese were among those who reached the throne of Peter. As in all periods of the life of the Church, there had been days of joy and days of mourning; for the human element is always present in men and simply awaits a suitable occasion to shake off a lethargy which is more apparent than real, and to battle with the weapons of the flesh against the cause of the spirit. The electors of the Bishop of Rome had come to the conclusion that they ought to have even more influence in Church affairs. The question was, how to acquire it. When they assembled for an election in 1294, it struck some of them that if they were to draw up an agreement, an election capitulation they called it, the one among them who should be chosen would thus be bound beforehand to the course of action contained in the agreement. The first attempt of the cardinals to apply the unworthy methods of worldly politics to papal elections was a failure. So was the second; likewise the third; also the fourth. Eventually, the scheme was condemned by Pope Innocent XII, who branded it as an unwarranted infringement of the liberty of the Head of the Church.

IX. THE VETO.—During the past two hundred and sixty years, three countries, Austria, Spain and France, have claimed and repeatedly exercised the power to object efficaciously against the candidacy of some one cardinal when the Sacred College is in conclave for a papal election. This power is known as the Veto or Exclusion.

In practice, the Veto was communicated to the cardinals by a cardinal specially accredited by the sovereign and supported, if necessary, by the sovereign's ambassador near the Holy See. Even in the heyday of its Erastian glory, the power could be exercised but once by each nation and against but one candidate at an election. However, it was urged and acted upon as a principle that the candidate once excluded was excluded forever; hence, in every conclave, each of the three nations could exclude a new candidate. Thus, Cardinal Sacchetti, who had been excluded by Spain in 1644, was, in virtue of that exclusion, declared ineligible in 1655.

It has happened, however, when it was unofficially known a certain candidate was to be excluded, that the Sacred College has petitioned the Government to withdraw its Veto, and has obtained its request. It was known, for example, that France intended to exclude Cardinal Chigi in 1655; but, at the request of the Sacred College, the opposition was withdrawn and he was elected Pope Alexander VII.

Although the Veto, as understood and exercised in modern times, dates only from 1644, traces of it are found at a much earlier date. As an illustration, some cardinals would confidentially agree to dissuade the electors from making a certain choice. Again, they would so openly, yet unofficially, oppose some candidate that their intention was made known to all the electors. This plan was tried in 1549, and again in 1555, when Cardinal Caraffa became Paul IV despite the opposition of the cardinals partial to Charles V. Third, a sovereign's wish to exclude a cardinal would be officially declared to the whole Sacred College, without, however, pretending to exercise a strictly effective right to veto his election. Pope Leo XI was elected in 1605 against the express wishes of Spain.

Since 1644, however, the efficacious power of excluding from the Popedom has been arrogated to themselves by the Governments of Austria, Spain and France. If the matter were not so intimately connected with the good of religion, one might be tempted to laugh at the arguments upon which each country founds its fictitious prerogative. Austria is the heir, in this point, of the old German emperors, the advocates and protectors of the Church; France claimed the power as coming down from the days of Charlemagne; and Spain inherited it from her king who was Charles V of Germany. The truth seems to have been that the three countries, being the three great Catholic nations of the period, thought they had a good reason for interfering with papal elections; and the cardinals tolerated their meddling for fear of the evils that might otherwise come upon the Church.

During the past hundred years, Austria excluded Cardinal Severoli in 1823, and Cardinal de Gregorio in 1829; Spain excluded Cardinal Giustiniani in 1831, and in the same conclave France excluded Cardinal Macchi. In 1846, Austria had directed Cardinal Gaysruck to veto the election of Cardinal Mastai-Ferretti; but before his Eminence reached Rome, the election was over and the subject of the Veto was Pope Pius IX. The Veto pronounced by Cardinal Puzyna in the name of Austria against Cardinal Rampolla del Tindaro in 1903, it was said at the time, was requested by Italy as a member of the Triple Alliance.

Under date of January 20, 1904, Pope Pius X signed the Constitution, Commissum Nobis. He orders it to be read to all the cardinals at their first meeting after the demise of the Roman Pontiff, to be read again to them when they gather in conclave to elect his successor, and to be read to each cardinal at his creation, when he shall swear to observe it.

The paragraph which most concerns us is as follows: "Wherefore, in virtue of holy obedience, under threat of the judgment of God, and under penalty of the greater excommunication, without further declaration and specially reserved to the future Pope, We prohibit the cardinals of the Holy Roman Church, each and all, both present and future, and also the Secretary of the Sacred Congregation of Cardinals and all other persons taking part in the conclave, from accepting under any pretext from any civil power the charge of proposing the Veto or Exclusion, even as a simple wish; or from making known to the assembled Sacred College of Cardinals or to the cardinals singly, either in writing or by word of mouth, either directly and personally or indirectly and through others, a Veto or Exclusion that may have in any way come to their knowledge."

The Veto belongs to past history.

H. J. SWIFT, S.J.

The Drift of the Age

Cornelia Comer has an admirable paper in the December Atlantic on "The Vanishing Lady." Though the author is evidently directing her fire against the creedless descendants of "Cavaliers" and "Puritans," many Catholic women of the land can read the essay with great profit. Fifty years ago, observes Miss Comer, American women of the leisured class were striving to be "cultivated and Christian," but now "Christianity is nowhere and cultivation leagues behind that," while "refinement, taste and spiritual qualities are no longer thought especially desirable." The well-to-do, once the patrons and students of good literature have become the "Great Unlettered." Though education seems abundant enough, it is producing less cultivation than formerly.

"The old-fashioned lady," the essayist observes, "was the cherished mental and spiritual product of a society that held, however imperfectly, the Christian ideals," but many American women of wealth and position are now frank materialists. Few follow "the Gleam." Most ask instead, "What is there in this for me?" and regard plenty of sables and diamonds the main requirement and test of social success. "Their paganism is of the low and brutal order that might be expected as the result of degenerates from higher standards," says Miss Comer, and reminds her readers that "The pendulum of history swings a long arc from the brutality of barbarism to the brutality of decadence. For the former condition there is hope, for the latter none."

To avert such a disaster the author of "The Vanishing Lady" would have the women of the leisured classes "maintain the Puritan standard of morals and simplicity, the Cavalier's standard of courtesy, and, to add to this, the intellectual refinement of the older civilizations." It is much to be doubted, however, that the soul-corroding effect of present-day materialism and unbelief can be nullified by this prescription. For as Puritanism has had to capitulate to the "new theology," its "standard of morals and simplicity" cannot long survive; little room has been found for Cavalier courtesy in the crowded, hurried life of to-day, and Greek and Latin are now forced to give place to "useful studies."

The only power that can oppose with success the triumph of modern paganism is the Catholic Church. Nothing but the ideals which her authoritative teaching both inspires and realizes in her children can avert the catastrophe Miss Comer thinks imminent. For Catholicism still dares, as in the days of St. Paul, to treat even before pagan tribunals "of justice and chastity, and of judgment to come." For impurity, dishonesty and skepticism now, as of old, are such deep-seated maladies of our "leisured classes" and their humbler imitators that a cure can be had only when all submit, without reserve, to the Church's treatment and willingly take the remedies she provides. True ladies and real gentlemen will then be less rare. But culture and refinement that have no religious basis will prove most likely only a thin veneer, that cannot wear well. Those, however, who choose Our Lord and His Lady Mother as patterns of Christian courtesy, will find that their efforts to achieve their ideals are made effective by the power of God.

WALTER DWIGHT, S.J.

That the last vestige of religion may be effaced from the minds of the young, the revisers of text-books for French school children are reported to be especially active of late. On reading, for instance in "Francinet," a book for middle and upper classes, the words, "Lord, give me Thy light. I am the son of toilers. . . . My rich brother with idle hands, I am a son of God as much as you," the committee of revision altered them to: "Raise me up, heavy toil! Ennoble me under thy rigors. . . . My rich brother with idle hands, I am a man not less than you!" New school books are also full of lofty thoughts like these: "No belief concerning God, the origin of the world, the origin and destiny of man, can be accepted by thinking people; all that we can do in these matters is to make suppositions." "The Gospels contain moral conceptions which shock the modern conscience." "Religion is founded upon fear and upon unverifiable hypotheses." No one now pretends, however, that the public schools of France are "neutral." They are aggressively anti-Christian, and are really far more "sectarian" in favor of unbelief than the most violent Catholics ever thought of making their schools in defense of the Faith.

A non-partisan organization intended for the purpose of "upholding property rights, maintaining freedom of contract, and restricting paternal legislation," has been newly founded in New York. Its leading principle is "Self-help against State-help." The name it has chosen expresses its opposition to Socialistic aggression, while it professes to stand in full accord with labor organization, as a method of collective bargaining by which the worker is to secure his rightful earnings. It is opposed, however, to all attempts that would prevent individuals from laboring when and where they choose. "Monopoly in labor or opportunities to labor" is as severely censured by it as monopoly in the products of labor. The following are the articles submitted by the new organization as its fundamental principles:

1. As the proper function of government is to maintain equal liberty, we are opposed to all class legislation, whether directed against the rights of individuals or of corporations.

2. Every man has a right to labor at whatever useful occupation he chooses, and is entitled to all that he earns by proper mental or physical exertion.

3. It is not the duty of the government to save men from the results of their own improvidence or to make them virtuous by law.

4. Our system of taxation should not discourage the accumulation of capital by taxing the results of superior ability, industry or thrift.

5. The best results to the community are attained under such open competition and personal liberty as does not interfere with the equal liberty of others.

Edwin H. Weatherbee, president of Arnold, Constable & Co.; Henry Holt, Steinway & Sons, George Haven Putnam, Bolton Hall, Bishop Greer, Edward Holbrook, president of the Gorham Company; Irving E. Raymond, president of A. Vantine & Co.; the Rev. Dr. Henry Van Dyke and the Rev. Dr. Charles H. Parkhurst, are among the signers.

CORRESPONDENCE

Close of Rome's Exposition Failure

ROME, November 26, 1911.

Some of the European papers known to be under Jewish control keep insisting that Italy is conducting a religious war under impulse from the Vatican, in spite of the latter disavowing all interest in the war, save to deplore it. Podrecca and the Asino, with a number of Italian Masonic papers, follow suit in this part of the campaign. The Messaggero reported that the prefect apostolic at Tripoli had a Te Deum sung at solemn Mass of thanksgiving for the victories of the Italian arms. This has provoked a remonstrance from Mgr. Rossetti, stating that the Mass and Te Deum were only the function customary in colonies and missions under the protection of Italy on the king's birthday. The generality of the custom your correspondent cannot vouch for.

The Exposition is rapidly being closed up in the same desertion and atmosphere of failure in which it began and continued. The municipal council of the city opened its fall session yesterday in the ancient capitol of Rome. Mayor Nathan, presiding, delivered a statement of the condition of municipal affairs, in the course of which the trail of the serpent had to appear. He congratulated Rome on the unanimity of patriotism, where stand together "patrician, merchant, workman, Catholic and those who, once imprisoned by a paternal government within the barriers of the Ghetto, pay with their lives for the liberty they have acquired amid the cries of 'Viva l'Italia.'"

Recalling the many receptions tendered by the city during the year to visitors to the Exposition he mentions as most worthy of memory the veteran survivors of the skirmish at Villa Gloria in 1867, when the Garibaldians made an abortive attempt to enter Rome. Finally, he ridiculed the public alarm about the cholera, stating that from January to October there were in Rome only one hundred and ninety cases with one hundred and thirty deaths, a record, he said, which in a city of 600,000 inhabitants would be exceeded by that of the whooping cough.

The Socialist members of the council had prepared to discuss the address and make a point or two against the war, and they had brought some of their followers into the audience for a claque. But Nathan surprised them all by peremptorily adjourning the meeting at the close of his own speech. The leading Socialist, Della Setta, arose and clamored for a hearing, but was drowned out by cheers for Tripoli and Italy. This was the signal for an uproar. Some unfortunate Socialist retorted with a shout Hurrah for the Turks! Down with the Army! Then the row became general, chairs were thrown, heads were beaten with canes and fists.

Though Nathan implored his Socialist followers to desist—"Quietly, my good friends; enough, boys"—the scrimmage went on until the police were called in and separated the combatants. The walls of the capitol must have recognized the legitimate progeny of the rabble of ancient days. It is an old story and will be worse later: the demagogue never yet has been able to stay the violence of the unthinking passions he arouses.

On Friday announcement was made at the Vatican of the appointment of Mgr. Domenico Serafini, Bishop of Spoleto, to the assessorship of the Holy Office, to replace the new Cardinal Lugari. Mgr. Serafini is a Benedictine monk of Monte Cassino, was abbot general of his Order in 1892, was made bishop in 1900, and in 1905 was Apostolic Delegate to Mexico. At the same time Mgr. Ranuzzi di Bianchi, Bishop of Recanati, was appointed in Cardinal Bislet's place as Master of the Papal Camera. He will soon be known to American visitors, for his office controls all the audiences of the Holy Father.

The Holy Father has signed the order for the opening of the case of Blessed Joan of Arc for canonization and the Congregation of Rites will in consequence take up the examination of the evidence presented by Mgr. Touchet, Bishop of Orleans, of the miracles wrought through the intercession of the Blessed Maid.

The Chapter of St. John Lateran has just appointed a new choir master in the person of Raffaele Casimiri, a pupil of Botazzo of Capua, and himself well known in Rome, though recently he has been absent from Rome as organist in the metropolitan chapel of Vercelli.

On Wednesday, Father Tacchi-Venturi, the historian of the Society of Jesus in Italy, presented to the Holy Father the first copy of the Commentaries of Father Matthew Ricci, S.J. Father Ricci is the celebrated scientist and missionary to China, who for thirty years, at the close of the sixteenth and the beginning of the seventeenth centuries, labored in China with the full confidence of the Chinese Emperor and had charge of the Imperial Astronomical Observatory. The manuscript of his Commentaries has lain neglected in Rome since 1615. Thirty years ago at the Fourth Congress of Orientalists held at Florence the wish was expressed that Father Ricci's work should be rescued from oblivion. Now three hundred years after his death (he died in 1610) a committee has been formed to secure national honor for this apostle and geographer of China, and under the presidency of Count Compagnoni-Floriani and the patronage of Duke Tommaso of Genoa, has enabled the learned editor to publish the present volume. It is prefaced with an exhaustive history of the Commentaries, and is enriched with an abundance of erudite explanatory notes.

C. M.

Local Elections in Spain

MADRID, November 16, 1911.

The law provides for quadriennial elections throughout the country for the choice of aldermen and other municipal officers. This year the elections aroused great interest and expectation, for during the past eight years the principal cities have been in the hands of Republicans, namely, of men who are opposed not only to the monarchy, but also to the Church. They had not made a good use of their power, for instead of devoting themselves to promoting the common weal, the municipal administration had become a perfect nest of malfeasance and of sectarian hostility to the religious sentiments and beliefs of the people.

The withdrawal and abstention of monarchists and Catholics from all exercise of the suffrage caused the triumph of the enemies of religion, which brought in its train serious harm to the social and material interests of the public. It being finally realized that such methods could not go on indefinitely, the Catholics were finally stirred up to action. Election day found two camps clearly divided by a line of demarcation. On one side was revolution; on the other, order. On one side was destructive demagogism; on the other, respect for the great fundamental institutions of society.

When the day for the grand battle of ballots arrived, Catholics of all shades of political opinion combined their forces. Liberals, Democrats, Conservatives, Carlists, Integrists and Independents united in presenting an unbroken front to the enemy. On the other hand, the "antis," of high and low degree, radicals, Socialists, anarchists and what not, had joined forces for the struggle. The election resulted in a triumph for the Catholics. The principal cities, such as Madrid, Barcelona, Seville, Bilbao, and Valencia, turned out their radical governments and replaced them by men who esteem and will work for public peace and prosperity.

Two causes produced this sudden and surprising change of front. First, in spite of their attempts to unite, the various radical parties failed conspicuously and therefore left many a spot unprotected. In the second place, the public conscience revolted against the atrocities perpetrated by lawless mobs in Valencia, Cullera, and elsewhere. This second cause seems to have been the more effective, for there was a large falling off in the total radical vote.

The political consequences of the election are varied and important. Canalejas has regained what he had formerly lost through his truckling to the anti-social leaders and their followers. Then, the success of the combination among Catholics of different political persuasions will prompt them and encourage them to draw more closely together. Again, those who have hitherto been careless and remiss in fulfilling their duties at the polls have seen what a little energy and activity can accomplish, and will more readily bestir themselves at other elections. Lastly, since men of sound principles now control the municipalities, the rights and interests of the people will be safe from the rapacity of men who were without honor, or morals or conscience.

During their four or eight years of power, the radical authorities effected no great reform, and achieved no signal success, except that of looting the treasury, of piling up the taxes, of wounding the consciences of Catholics by trying to drive religion from the elementary schools, the hospitals, and the cemeteries, and even levying a tribute on church bells.

The day of the recent municipal elections seems to mark the beginning of a new era in our political life. Perhaps Spain's outburst of faith on the occasion of the Eucharistic Congress may have brought this great blessing upon us; perhaps the solemn and official consecration of our country to the Eucharistic Christ may have done a holy violence to the Sacred Heart, and may have called down this shower of mercies upon the children of Catholic Spain.

NORBERTO TORCAL.

Bigotry and Fanaticism in Jamaica

KINGSTON, JAMAICA, December 1, 1911.

To judge from the persistency of the attack by its enemies, the Catholic Church in this Island of Jamaica, must needs have achieved an importance vastly in excess of its relatively small proportion of population, which is generally said to be about two per cent. Until the returns of the late census shall have given exact figures we shall not go far wrong if we accept it. The fact, however, which really accounts for this hostility is the activity and growth in the two per cent. In Kingston, the capital, this is especially remarkable, and the converts who come to us from all ranks of society leave behind them in the church-bodies to which they belonged a sense of loss which culminates in arrant Romaphobia. One of our resident magistrates owes his gift of faith to the almost violent thrusting upon him of Littledale's "Plain Reasons." Before that he had had no temptation to inquire into the grounds of his own Anglicanism, but Littledale's assertions started him thinking, and in the hunt for verification which it entailed, grace and Father Ryder's "Points of Controversy" did the rest. Like another of our converts, an associate judge in the Supreme Court, he contends that he became a Catholic because he was a lawyer and had to examine the evidence of the other side.

For months past religious controversy has been in the air, and even the dailies resound with what one of them calls the clash of creeds. The Parish Church Monthly for June, the official Anglican organ, under the heading "Roman Errors," raked us fore and aft on Rome's restricted use of the Bible." Our own Catholic Opinion replied in its July number, and then both combatants leaped into the arena of the Daily Gleaner, where they had it out hammer and tongs for a month. Again, in the beginning of October, the Council of Evangelical Churches met in Kingston, and at one of its sessions a Wesleyan minister worked himself up to the standard Protestant Alliance rage and shouted defiance to and warning against "Romanism—the invading force which threatens our family life—which deliberately and of set purpose withholds from the family their priceless gift, the Bible—which menaces the safety of our families by the presence and work of its schools."

One of the priests of the mission came forward in defence of the Catholic cause, and once more the Daily Gleaner became the theological battleground. The names of Robertson and Speer were made to do duty as weapons by the Protestant controversialist, and he did not fail to appeal to the moral excellence of the unspeakable Verdesi and the associate converts of the American Methodist Mission in Italy. From this one may judge of the nature of the arguments employed by the Jamaica Evangelist. In his last communication he descended to personalities, calling his opponent very hard names.

The noise of this conflict was just subsiding, when lo!

above the signature R. E. Clarke appeared in the same Daily Gleaner an attack on "Romanists" and Ritualists, which was remarkable for its bigotry, religious ignorance and vulgarity. So far no Catholic priest on the Island has taken the slightest notice of the attack, although two laymen attempted, through the medium of the press, the next to useless task of calling the fanatic to order. One of them, a Protestant by the way, and unless I am greatly mistaken, an English University man, after praising the Jesuits, who, of course, have come in for Mr. Clarke's envenomed wrath, has this sentence: "If Roman Catholicism were, indeed, such a mass of festering error and evil, could it have brought forth sons such as these, men of whom the world may well be proud?" The testimony has an exceptional value from the position of the writer, Mr. Bunbury, who in another controversy which is piling up print in the columns of the Kingston Telegraph and Guardian, appears as the advocate of High Church claims against Rome.

In Jamaica, as everywhere, the school is the hope of the Church, and all along Bishop Collins has in his action put this view in the forefront. Last August our teachers from all over the Island gathered together in Kingston and assisted for a week at a series of lectures on pedagogics and religious training. It was the first Catholic convention of the kind in our part of the world, and the inspiration which started it, as well as the fatherly encouragement which made it possible, were all the bishop's own. Many of the lecturers were non-Catholics, whose high position in the educational work of Jamaica, or whose ability in the class-room was back of the desire to get the benefit of their experience and advice. The kindness and readiness with which, without exception, they put themselves at our service, have made us their lasting debtors. The Daily Gleaner and the Telegraph and Guardian both bestowed editorial and complimentary notice upon the convention. By the former it was characterized as "one of the most interesting and successful educational experiments ever attempted in this Island," and the wonder was expressed that "in such a brief period the whole groundwork of elementary education should have been so successfully traversed."

"As everybody knows," he says, "the Roman Catholic Church is par excellence the opponent of secularism in education. It regards religion as the one thing on which above all others the thoughts and affections of immortal beings should be centred; and therefore it regards religious instruction as the most important part of an elementary school training. Under such conditions no one will be surprised at the emphasis which has been laid on doctrinal matters throughout the convention. If the pupils are to receive religious instruction, the teachers must be men and women who have a grasp of religious principles, and are imbued with a truly religious spirit. Bishop Collins and the Fathers of the Jesuit Mission in this colony have accordingly spared no pains to impart to the teachers all the theological knowledge which it will be their duty to endeavor to instil into the minds of their pupils in the schools. What with the course of tuition which they have undergone and the solemn religious services which they have attended in the cathedral, it is safe to say that if the visiting teachers were good Catholics when they came up to Kingston, they will go back to their respective spheres of labor in the country better informed and more devout than ever."

PATRICK F. X. MULRY, S.J.

A M E R I C A

A • CATHOLIC • REVIEW • OF • THE • WEEK

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 16, 1911.

Entered as second-class matter, April 15th, 1909, at the Post Office at New York, N. Y., under the Act of March 3d, 1879.

Copyright, 1911, and published weekly by the America Press, New York.
 President, THOMAS J. CAMPBELL; Secretary, H. J. SWIFT;
 Treasurer, MICHAEL J. O'CONNOR.

SUBSCRIPTIONS, POSTPAID:

United States, 10 cents a copy; yearly, $3.00
 Canada, $3.50 Europe, $4.00 (16s.)

Address:

THE AMERICA PRESS, 59 East 83d Street, New York City, N. Y., U. S. A.

CABLE ADDRESS: CATHREVIEW.

Can Socialism Be Christian?

A man is not a genuine Socialist unless he agrees to what the Socialist Party of Great Britain officially express as their object: "The establishment of a system of society based upon the common ownership and democratic control of the means and instruments for producing and distributing wealth by, and in the interests of, the whole community." This is the Socialism of Bebel in Germany, of Jaurès in France, of Vandervelde in Belgium, and of Ferri in Italy; the Socialism which is common in Great Britain, and which likewise is common in the United States to the older Socialist Labor Party and the new Socialist Party. All these organizations are so far united that they possess in common the doctrine and the aim that the production and distribution of goods shall be organized by the whole society collectively, and that, as a necessary preliminary to this, all means of production, distribution and exchange shall pass from private ownership to ownership that is public or collective. And the words of Cardinal Manning are still true, that "the terms Socialistic and Socialism have an essentially ill signification," because "Socialism affects to reconstitute human society upon a new foundation and by new laws, and this, whether accomplished by force or by fallacy, is destructive of the natural and normal society. Socialism is to society what rationalism is to reasoning. It denotes an abuse, an excess, a deordination in human society, as rationalism denotes a misuse and an abuse of reason. All reasoning must be rational, that is in conformity with the laws of reason, and all legislation for human society must be both human and social by the necessity and nature of mankind. Inhuman and antisocial law is not law, but tyranny or anarchy. It implies, therefore, a laxity of thought, or, at least, of terminology, to speak of Christian Socialism or of Catholic Socialism."

"Nevertheless," says Father Ming, "we hear nowadays of Christian and even Catholic Socialism, not merely from those who treacherously undertake to put a Socialist construction on primitive Christianity, but also from such as profess the most sincere belief in Christian revelation. How can we explain the fact? We ought to bear in mind that Socialism has two different meanings, the one modern, the other older and now going out of use.

For by Socialism, as the "Standard Dictionary" says, formerly any theory or system was understood which had for its object the amelioration of society, and especially the elevation of the working class. Taken in this sense, Socialism may be truly Christian. There is, in fact, no safer basis on which society may be reformed and its enormous evils remedied than the great religious truths and moral principles made known by Christian revelation.

But modern Socialists will hear of no reform or, if they advocate any reform, it is, as the Chicago platform of 1904 informs us, because: "in so doing we are using these remedial measures as means to the one great end of cooperative commonwealth. Such measures of relief as we may be able to force from capitalism are but a preparation of the workers to seize the whole powers of government, in order that they may thereby lay hold of the whole system of industry, and thus come into their rightful inheritance." And in the little pamphlets which the Socialists distribute during the political campaign, they inform us that: "The capitalist who comes into the world nearly always has his head filled with reforms. The wage-worker knows that reforms are useless; that nothing will do but revolution. The object of a reform is to make the capitalistic system stand a little longer. The object of revolution is to end it forever."

Some Have Greatness Thrust upon Them

It is seldom that one who has achieved success in the business world draws the curtain for his fellow men and lets them see the idols or the ideals that he worships in his inner sanctuary. Mr. Carnegie's list of the world's twenty greatest men is headed by the name of William Shakespeare. Then in order follow the names of Morton, the discoverer of ether; Jenner, discoverer of vaccination; Neilson, inventor of the hot blast; Lincoln; Burns, the Scottish poet; Gutenberg, who invented printing; Edison; Siemens, inventor of the water meter; Bessemer and Mushet, both inventors of new steel processes; Columbus; Watt, who improved the steam engine; Bell, who invented the telephone; Arkwright, who first made a cotton spinning machine; Franklin; Murdock, the first to light his house with coal gas; Hargreaves, inventor of the spinning jenny; Stephenson, who invented the locomotive engine, and Symington, who devised the first steamboat fitted for practical use.

In drawing up this list the great ironmaster has graciously permitted us to know the men whom, above all others, he esteems great, among them not a few whose inventions have been of no small service in making it possible for him to become both wealthy and generous.

It is to be regretted that Mr. Carnegie, except in a few instances, does not get beyond the purely material world of steam, gas, pig-iron and electricity. "Ah, none but in this iron age would do it," said young Prince Arthur to Hubert, who would burn his eyes out. The cold steel has been quite as effective in depriving the ironmaster of the visual power to discern true greatness—the greatness that is not measured by time but by eternity, the greatness unfolded by Thomas à Kempis, rather than that suggested by Robert Burns. If the age of electricity and steel outrank every other, and if material progress be progress of the highest, then Mr. Carnegie's selection for his Hall of Fame would be less exposed to criticism. But how comes it that the steel magnate finds no place among the twenty immortals for Tubalcain, "the hammerer and artificer in every work of brass and iron"?

True greatness is not to be measured by the material progress of an age, nor are those men to be held up as truly great who have most contributed to its development. The Founder of Christianity reminds us that "for all these things do the heathen seek." The great men, as the Christian should view them, are they who seek first the Kingdom of God and His justice.

An Overturn in Spain

Piety and politics make a queer combination; business and politics are an ill-mated pair; elegant leisure and politics have little in common. Yet, what is there in piety or business or leisure that should drive one away from the polls or keep one from voting on election day?

The mystery which has always enshrouded the public life of Catholic Spain and has made the country a bundle of hopeless contradictions to the cisatlantic reader has at last been explained. Our vivacious Spanish contemporary, El Social, has solved the riddle. When the Conservative leader, Maura, made voting obligatory on the part of all who enjoyed the suffrage, he thought he had made a great stride towards awakening the Spanish voter to a realization of his rights and duties; but Maura had not taken into consideration that the law permitted the casting of blank ballots. The voters dutifully went to the polls, as by law directed, and cast blank ballots, as their caprice suggested.

The godly and the righteous retired apart and prayed in secret—but did not vote; the matter-of-fact men were so busy with every-day affairs that they left politics to the politicians—and did not vote; the leisure class were uncertain whether they were duly registered, and in consequence—did not vote. But the riffraff, the offscourings, of Spain voted early and often. Every large city in the country thus came into the control of corrupt politicians, who had no religion but the creed of loot and oppression.

Murder, arson, sacrilege, profanation of churches—all this defended, palliated or excused by men in public office—was the price paid by the mistaken pietists, the matter-of-fact business men, and the leisure class.

Then came the great awakening. Faith without works is as dead to-day as in the days of St. James. This wholesome truth finally dawned upon Spanish Catholic voters. They rallied. They organized. They went to the polls. They voted for men of known worth. Sinking their petty squabbles, stirring up their public spirit, and shaking off their lethargy, they needed but one day, the day for the local elections throughout Spain, to turn the rascals out and to vindicate for the respectable element of the population that share in the management of public affairs to which their number entitled them.

Before the November election every important city in Spain was at the mercy of a radical majority in the town council. After that election every important city in Spain was once more in the hands of the party of law and order. The radicals learned the meaning of "land-slide." May the good Catholic voters of Spain take the lesson to heart; for, having once mastered the fact that they can control their own house if they are but so disposed, they will have learned the first lesson in practical religion and politics.

What "Liberal" Scholarship Effects

Mr. Carnegie's endowment for the advancement of knowledge may not be shared by professors of an institution in which formal religious instruction is in any manner a feature of the teaching program. Formal religious teaching tends to make narrow minds, the trustees of the fund explain, and intellectual narrowness unfits men for the broad and liberal training the worthy Laird of Skibo aims to foster in our higher schools. We confess we cannot overcome a certain perplexity of judgment when we study that explanation. The mental drill that aims to make one keenly appreciative of one's true place in God's empire—that keeps him to a just sense of his dependence upon the mighty Master who has fashioned him—how can it fail to broaden one in the ways of seemly character building? Mr. Carnegie and his friends surely are not convinced that the unbridled freedom of college discipline which permits the students of Williams College to hang eagerly upon the words of Emma Goldman is more likely to produce desirable results in an educational way. The thought comes to us while reading two news items published lately reflecting upon certain happenings in schools where Mr. Carnegie's benevolence finds itself at home.

One of these tells us how, when the police of North Adams attempted to prevent Miss Goldman speaking in that town, the Williams students, whose school is in the neighboring town of Williamstown, telephoned her that they would gladly hear her, and arranged an outdoor meeting at four o'clock at the Soldiers' Monument on College hill. What a farce it must be, even to the wildest defenders of broad and liberal thought, to find the prophetic of anarchy speaking within the shadow of a Soldiers' Monument on anarchy, explaining what it stands for, and exploiting the peculiar views that cause her meetings, wherever held, to be the object of anxious police control! It would not be unwise to introduce a few chapters of the small catechism into the scholastic drill of the Williams school.

The second item tells us how the Harvard undergraduate body received a shock a day or two ago after the Williams incident, when Samuel Atkins Eliot, Jr., grandson of Harvard's president emeritus, walked into the dining room of the Harvard Union with Miss Emma Goldman, the exponent of anarchistic principles. The other diners were taken by surprise, the item naïvely states, and some left. It was, we believe, the grandfather of this youth, who proclaimed a year or two ago a new religion which "will not be based upon authority, either spiritual or temporal." Evidently, his grandson has accepted the grandsire's teaching.

It may be a note altogether out of accord with the chorus of our would-be leaders to-day, but somehow the old-fashioned discipline of the growing youth which taught him reverence and respect for law and all that law means appears to be a more seemly standard of training than that portrayed in these two news items. That old-fashioned discipline, be it said, however, will never flourish in a school from which participation in Mr. Carnegie's endowment fund shuts out religious training as a vital element in the study scheme.

Lincoln Steffens, "Near-Socialist"

In passing sentence on the McNamara brothers Judge Bordwell disavowed any intention of showing leniency to the culprits, declaring that some mitigation of the extreme penalties in consequence of the change of pleas in the case was simply in accordance with the principles of criminal jurisprudence. Mr. Lincoln Steffens, newspaper man and reformer, had been claiming for himself the credit of suggesting and practically bringing about the imposition of something lighter than the extreme penalty which the law would sanction, with the object, he said, of promoting a more favorable understanding between capital and labor.

Judge Bordwell has made it clear that he believes in no compromise that would argue moral weakness on the part of the court or be a condonement of crimes that would destroy all government, root and branch. The court, as the District Attorney had already done, expressly denied that it listened to or was influenced by Mr. Lincoln Steffens, adding by way of parenthesis that Mr. Steffens was a professed Anarchist, with the implication, of course, that any overtures from such a source might well be suspected. That he is an open and avowed, or even an occult, Anarchist Mr. Steffens will reasonably deny. Were he professedly such, it is hard to believe that any reputable paper would exploit his views on labor conditions anywhere. However, the Socialists themselves look upon Mr. Steffens as "a radical or sort of 'near-Socialist,'" while his writings here and there show a bias toward Socialism of an advanced type. At all events, his statements about workingmen and the labor question in the United States should be carefully taken and severely analyzed.

In the Globe for December 5 he maintains that to condone, at least partially, the crimes committed in the name of labor in the McNamara case would show the workman that the cause of labor is rightly understood by the owners of business; and when this is achieved both classes may reasonably be expected to work harmoniously for their common interests. An axiom, not to say a theory, of his seems to be that "the people don't want to be treated well," and by people here he means the working people. "They don't want a government that is good to them. They want a square deal in the shop and a government that understands them and their feelings." And an honest inference from what he says is that this understanding of them and their feelings will be evinced when monstrous crimes are partially condoned and leniency is shown to the culprits and their principals or abettors. He gives Tammany the credit of understanding the workingmen. "That's one reason," he says, "why the people of New York normally prefer Tammany to reform."

Mr. Steffens claims that the important thing is "to try to understand the problem of labor from labor's point of view." A business man, he contends, can never come to that understanding until he perceives "that a bomb looks to a workman very much as a bribe looks to a big business man, as a necessary means to a good end." Whatever may be said of this statement as affecting business men, it is unquestionably not true of the vast masses of workingmen in the labor unions throughout the land. The workman is not so blunted mentally as to see murder and dynamiting as necessary means for getting a square deal, nor so depraved as to make use of immoral means on the ground that the end is good. Such an assertion is a gross calumny and libel on the American workman. He knows the baseness involved in the theft of ten thousand or a million dollars which the business man may be guilty of, but unless urged thereto by Anarchistic and Socialistic doctrinaires he would never feel justified in the commission of murder.

In concluding his article, Mr. Steffens, calculating on a possible victory of the alliance of workingmen and Socialists in Los Angeles, said: "If the Socialists win, it will be made easier for men to understand the problem of labor from labor's point of view." But the election returns proclaimed that the people of Los Angeles have not lost their heads, and that for Los Angeles, at least, the expression at the polls of the good sense of law-abiding citizens will be the rule for many a day to come.

The Unions and the Courts

The McNamaras have pleaded guilty and have been sentenced. The moral to be drawn by workingmen is too obvious to need comment. But we have something to say on a collateral matter. From the moment of the criminals' arrest the leaders of the Unions labored diligently to create such an opinion in their favor as would make a real trial impossible. The McNamara button was used to force men to profess themselves believers in the innocence proclaimed from many a platform. The confession brought a change. From the platforms on which had been proclaimed the brothers' guiltlessness and a huge plot for their destruction had been insinuated came clamors for the execution of at least one of the wretched men; and the union leaders plied the judge with telegrams demanding a sentence of death. We do not suggest the motives of these hysterics. We would only point out the shocking lawlessness of the Union leaders' behavior from beginning to end. The investigation of an accused person's guilt or innocence belongs exclusively to judicial authority, which conducts it according to law. No private person may interfere; and to attempt to dictate the course to be pursued and the conclusion to be reached is a crime which, should it threaten to become common, must be provided against. In calling for a death sentence the Union leaders were as guilty of this crime as in attempting to dictate the verdict of the jury.

The Last Word

Not the least of our complaints against the "Encyclopædia Britannica" is the deception, so far as Catholics are concerned, to be found in the statement circulated in this country that "articles on particular Churches have been assigned to prominent, yet moderate, members of those Churches." Mr. Hugh Chisholm, editor of the Encyclopædia, has written to the London Tablet repudiating the statement, concerning which he says: "Such a course in the 'Encyclopædia Britannica' would be impracticable, consistently with any attempt to write history from an impartial but critical standpoint. We did not ask a Buddhist to write on Buddhism, a Mohammedan on Mohammedanism, or a Mormon on the Mormons."

In the mind, then, of the editor of the "Encyclopædia Britannica" the Catholic religion is classed with Buddhism, Mohammedanism and Mormonism. Nothing more need be said. He has given us "the last word."

Mr. Justice Charbonneau, of the Superior Court of Quebec, has granted the application for the removal of the teachers of Bourget College from the electoral lists at Rigaud, on the ground that being religious, vowed to poverty, they have no income qualification, since their earnings, however great, are not their personal property, but that of the community.

No doubt Bishop Farthing and the other Protestant ministers who cannot sleep for thinking of the Ne Temere decree are delighted at the wound suffered by the Roman adversary. We have no complaint to make, as the matter does not concern us. But we ask those agitators to consider that the decision of the court involves a much more scandalous recognition of Roman canon law than anything to be found in the Hébert case. This rested on a definite article of the Quebec constitution regarding marriage exclusively. Mr. Justice Charbonneau's decision implies a universal recognition of canon law as part of the public law of Quebec. Will Bishop Farthing take up the defense of the religious?

It may have been the old Cardinals, but somebody in Rome has remarked that America is now better represented than any other country in the Sacred College by the most typical and diverse personalities. Cardinal Gibbons they describe as a saint; Cardinal Falconio as a diplomatist; Cardinal Farley as a prince, and Cardinal O'Connell as an enlightened fighter.

LITERATURE

Important Papers on Socialism.

As noted in a previous issue, various articles on Socialism, which from time to time since 1903 have appeared in The Catholic Mind, are now being reprinted and published in one volume. The compilation is likely to prove of great service to those who are interested in one of the great issues of the day. Those who are engaged in the instruction of others will find the volume extremely valuable. Many orders for copies have been received already, showing a wide appreciation of the publication. The book is now with the printer, and will be ready for subscribers in the first week of January.

Pioneer Irish of Onondaga. By THERESA BANNAN, M.D. New York and London: G. P. Putnam's Sons.

This is the first of a series of records which the Onondaga Historical Association has undertaken for the various races that have settled in that county of New York. The story of the lives, achievements and genealogies of the early Irish settlers and families of Irish birth and affiliations in one county of New York would be deemed, ordinarily, of local rather than general interest, but these records are not ordinary in manner or in matter. The author has the art, or the heart, to impress on "the simple annals of the poor" the touch of nature that makes the world akin, and appeals to a wider audience than that relied on by her publishers, "the patriotic Irish whether they are residents of the county in question or not."

Coming to Onondaga before the Revolution—and they were much more numerous there and throughout the East than historians are generally aware of—the Irish seem to have fought to a man, or a boy, for American liberty. They also fought for other things: "Their appeals to fists was a primitive virtue. Their share in the contests of early days [and these are set faithfully down] was normal in men of superabundant energy, with local pride, fraternal loyalty, and the inborn love of combat. There are few Irish mollicoddles." Some will see a connection between the sentiments and the parentage of the author, who dedicates her book to her parents, Anastasia Nolan and Michael Bannan, of Toormevara, and Templemore, in Tipperary.

But the Irish settlers had other than fighting qualities: "They brought the sanguine temperament, the loyalty, the courage, the gaiety, the humor and the warmth of their race. They brought splendid health and strength for their pioneer labors. Their blood was pure, their vigor unimpaired. . . . They gave to the county its greatest wealth—children, God's hostages." They gradually overcame the bitter hostility to their race and creed, and their children, inheriting their qualities and the advantages secured by their heroism, are now leaders and rulers in Onondaga.

Not a few of the first settlers became leaders too. Such were Thomas McCarthy and James Lynch, both of Dublin, who were prominent in business, religion and politics a century ago. McCarthy won a daughter of the Puritans, and Lynch a lady of Knickerbocker stock, and both converted their wives and brought up their children in the Faith, though there was no church nor resident priest in the county. They supplied the want by bringing, when possible, a priest to their homes, whither the scattered Catholics would hasten over many leagues; and, assisted by the Devereuxs of Utica and others, they founded St. John the Baptist's, the first Catholic Church in the county. McCarthy's son, John, led the choir, and John's wife, the daughter of a '98 rebel, was the organist. Born in 1829, she is still young and gay. Her brown eyes have looked upon the sun for over eighty years and are still undimmed. She has borne the burden of twelve sons and daughters and is still unbowed by care." This living link with the past, who saw Bishop Dubois and the young Father McCloskey, the future Cardinal, offer Mass in her home, is an interesting reminder of Catholic growth.

There is scarcely a page of these records that is not lit up by an amusing, instructive, or pathetic incident. The salt workers at Salt Point having all become sick in 1793, except Patrick Riley, Patrick who boiled salt all day, won the hearts of the people by watching the sick at night for two months, "without a single night of intermission." We learn from the account book of Michael Leyden, from the County Clare, that though potatoes and pantaloons, corn and oxen were cheap, shoes were dear, and hence the settlers traveled bare-foot over the muddy roads to Mass or wake or dance, slinging their shoes on their shoulders. For many years the Byrnes of Lafayette walked to Syracuse and back every Sunday in order to hear Mass, and we are not surprised to learn that their family was blessed with many vocations. The first priest born in the county was William Bourke, son of Francis Bourke, of Tipperary, and he died pastor of its first church. One of the first signers for the church was Peter Caldwell, "well read and cranky," who for many years had been fighting down prejudice and hostility with tongue and fists. Michael Gleason, a quiet Tipperary man, put an end to the St. Patrick's Day riots in Syracuse. On March 17, 1840, the enemies of Ireland hung St. Patrick in effigy on the Liberty Pole, a flagstaff 150 feet high. Seeing battle gathering around the pole, Michael appealed to the civic authorities to remove the effigy. On their refusal, he bought an axe, cleared his way through the crowd, and chopped down the flagstaff, thus removing the Pole but preserving Liberty.

The Protestant Irish, among them the Clintons, who gave two Governors to New York, are recorded with equal care. There were no "Scotch-Irish" in those days, we are told, the hyphen being of later manufacture. Unaware that John Leslie, a wealthy Protestant grocer, was an Irishman, a purchaser boasted he could "lick any Irishman born." "You are going to be licked by an Irishman," said Leslie. "And he was."

Whatever their creed or distant origin, the settlers of Irish birth were "kindly Irish of the Irish," and labored together for the upbuilding of their adopted country. They cleared the forests, built the roads, dug the canals, manned the boats freighted with the fruits of their toil, turned the swamps into fruitful gardens, quarried the rock that built the houses and cities, taught school, and ministered justice, and their children are now making the laws in Onondaga. Theresa Bannan's volume has done a service not only to the Irish of her county but to American history, much of which has been made by such settlers as those of Onondaga. M. K.

In Northern Mists. By FRIDTJOF NANSEN. London: Wm. Heineman; New York: F. A. Stokes & Co.

This is a notable book by a man of merit who gives us not the story of his own brave deed, but the lore of ancient and medieval research preserved in many a forgotten volume. Nansen's plunge into the literature of early discoveries may be of even more lasting interest than his famous voyage in the Fram. With the acumen of the experienced traveler he combines the sane criticism of the fair-minded judge. His appreciations are those of a man of action who can afford to give everyone his due, and does so frankly according to his lights. We find, however, some lack of understanding in his account of the Church's activities, and the inspiration of her sons before Protestantism hampered her for good.

Nansen pictures, with an amazingly vivid touch, the ceaseless striving towards the Pole, from the time of Pytheas, about 330 B. C., to John Cabot in the fifteenth century. He dissipates fable, and confirms facts.

"The earliest voyages northward to the Arctic Circle, of which there is certain literary mention in the early Middle Ages, are the Irish monks' expedition across the sea in their small boats, whereby they discovered the Faroes and Iceland, and for a time, at all events, lived there. Of these, the Irish monk Dicuil gave an account, as early as about the year 825, in his description of the earth, 'De Mensura Orbis Terrae.'

"It is characteristic of the spiritual tendency of the Middle Ages that these remarkable voyages were not, like other voyages of discovery, undertaken from love of gain, thirst for adventure, or desire of knowledge, but chiefly from the wish to find lonely places, where these anchorites might dwell in peace, undisturbed by the turmoil and temptations of the world. In this way the unknown islands near the Arctic Ocean must have seemed to satisfy all their requirements; but their joy was short-lived; the disturbers of the North, the Vikings from Norway, soon came there also, and drove them out, or oppressed them."

Nansen fails to recognize alongside the inclination for solitude the natural wish of fervent Christians to carry Christ's banner to the remotest ends of the earth, and to serve Him in all climes. He does, however, acknowledge that in exploration the monks led the van. "In Northern Mists" is above all else concerned with the problems of life preservation that the adventurers had to face. The author's heart naturally goes out in sympathy to pioneers of his own land who dared hardships so repeatedly in the effort to pierce the dark veil that envelops the frigid North. But he admits the utter unreliability of fantastic and mythical sagas. Apart from these he establishes beyond all doubt the truth of the Norsemen's voyages in Arctic seas and their attempts to come in contact with the dread unknown. The Vikings' pre-eminence was destroyed by the Hanseatic League, but the fame of their exploits will not fade.

Nansen sees no future for the Eskimo and denies him the past attributed to him by some geographical scientists. The traces of Eskimo occupation in Greenland and other regions prove, to his mind, not the former existence of a great

Eskimo people, but the nomadic proclivities that carried them over wider areas than they haunt at the present day. "In Northern Mists" is an instructive book, on many points authoritative, and in others enthralling. * * *

P. J. Kennedy & Sons, who are to publish the "Catholic Directory" hereafter, promise to have their first issue ready early in the new year, but this, of course, cannot be done unless the various diocesan officials and heads of institutions co-operate by making prompt returns of the statistics recorded for its pages. The past value of the Directory as a book of reference has been proven over and over again, and the necessity of having its contents accurate and complete is equally manifest. For these last characteristics the publishers have to rely on the material supplied to them by those immediately interested in the figures they print. There is every evidence that the publishers are doing their part, and it would take only a little effort by those to whom they have applied for local statistical information to enable them to carry out the promise that "the 1912 Directory will be the best that has ever been issued."

"The Obedience of Christ" is a new volume of Father Henry C. Schuyler's "Virtues of Christ Series," published by Peter Reilly, of Philadelphia. Those to whom the author's little books on the "Courage" and the "Charity" of Our Divine Lord were so helpful will be glad to find what may be called Jesus' characteristic virtue similarly treated of in this volume, though the reflections on Christ's obedience to His parents and to God will naturally be somewhat familiar.

In the December Review of Reviews is an article on "The New American Cardinals," by a Jesuit, and a paper by Elbert F. Baldwin about "Pius X, and His Reign," which, in many respects, is a fair and sympathetic appreciation of the personality and achievements of the present Pontiff. The writer, however, falls into some errors. In describing the Pope's attack on Modernism, for example, Mr. Baldwin betrays considerable want of knowledge of the true nature of that heresy, and lack of familiarity with the documents condemning it. It is hard to understand how any one who had really read the "Pascendi Gregis" could say that the "Pope's encyclical condemning Modernism answered no arguments," but "simply said, 'Be silent!'" for that masterly letter is an unmasking and refutation of the whole system. Could a Pope, true to his trust, avoid banning a heresy that perverts, as does Modernism, so vital a dogma as the Divinity of Christ? Mr. Baldwin, however, is of the opinion that "the Church's attitude must change," and entertains the hope that Catholicism "will one day free itself from outworn dogma." But "semper eadem" is her proudest boast, and essential dogmas are never "outworn."

An esteemed correspondent has called our attention to the review, "The Monkeyfolk of South Africa," which appeared in our issue for November 25, 1911, and regrets that the erroneous scientific basis on which the book seems to be founded was not singled out for censure. The monkeys talk very entertainingly about themselves and their daily lives, subjects with which they are quite familiar; but they show a disposition to harp upon a system of evolution, which they accept as if it were a sort of family tradition. There is among humanfolk a painfully prevalent tendency to brag about some supposed relationship with the great and powerful of the present or of other times. In this respect, monkeys imitate men, if we may judge from their life stories, as related in the volume under consideration; but if we keep before us that they are only monkeys, so "knowing" and yet so shortsighted, we may enjoy their descriptions of monkey life, for with that they are well acquainted, and we can afford to smile at the claim of kindred with us, which they now and then advance, for it seems to fall in with their monkey philosophy. They are only monkeys, and they know no better.

A steamboat celebrating a century of steam navigation on the Mississippi reached New Orleans on March 27. The boat was a replica of the first Mississippi steamboat. Sixty years ago an Irish gentleman, going by way of the Ohio and the Mississippi, from Louisville to St. Louis, gave a graphic account of his experience before he reached the Southern waters. "We steamed for two days, on board the Forest City," he says. "On the third day the vessel got embedded on a bar, and remained there for nearly two days. . . . There were several steamers stuck on the bar at the same time, and all so close that the passengers could pass from one vessel to another. . . . The first thing done was to sound the whole river for nearly a mile so as to discover where the waters were deepest. . . . After sounding, the captain orders the men to attach two immense levers to two pillars in the fore-part of the vessel. . . . When all preparation is made, the men work the capstan so as to raise the fore-part of the vessel. The engineer then puts on full steam, the vessel is literally obliged to jump, and the operation is called 'jumping the bars.' In this jump she sometimes makes scarcely more than a few inches way, so the operation is repeated every ten minutes, and continued thus for perhaps forty hours or more. . . . At times the men are obliged to stand in the river for hours digging away the sand from the vessel's wheels, and on coming aboard they are ghosts of humanity." With the writer there were at least two hundred passengers, in addition to a crew of about thirty, all Irish, except the captain, mate and engineers. "How little knowledge," reflected the traveller, "have the people at home of all the hardships and privations endured by the poor Irish here, whilst striving to amass the sums of money sent to the old land to relieve the wants of a parent, wife or child!" Doubtless some of those who took part, on November 27, in the greeting of the Mississippi steamer at New Orleans were familiar with the story of the development of navigation on the great river and its tributaries. If they were, this knowledge added zest to their enthusiasm on the occasion which we are told was a climax to the fêtes en route.

BOOKS RECEIVED

Practical Handbook for the Study of the Bible and of Bible Literature. Including Biblical Geography, Antiquities, Introduction to the Old and New Testaments and Hermeneutics. By Dr. Michael Seisenberger. Translated from the 6th German Edition by A. M. Buchanan, M.A., and edited by the Rev. Thomas J. Gerrard. New York: Joseph F. Wagner. Net $2.00.
Sermons for Sundays and Feasts. By the Rev. Thomas White. Selected and arranged from his MSS. by the Rev. John Lingar, D.D. New York: Joseph F. Wagner. Net $1.50.
Little Sermons on the Catechism. By Cosimo Corsi, Cardinal Archbishop of Pisa. Volume II. New York: Joseph F. Wagner. Net $1.00.
John Poverty. Translated from the Spanish of Luis Coloma, S.J., by E. M. Brooks. Philadelphia: H. L. Kilner & Co. Postpaid 73 cents.
Some Problems of the Panama Canal. Address of Henry L. Stimson, Secretary of War, before the Commercial Club at Kansas City, Tuesday Evening, November 14th, 1911. Washington, D. C.

French Publications:

Pages Choiesies. Avec Fragments Inédits. Étude Biographique et Notes. Par L. A. Mollen. Deuxième Édition. Paris: Pierre Tequi, 82 Rue Bonaparte. Prix 3 fr. 50.
Entretiens Eucharistiques. Par L'Abbé Jean Vaudon. Nouvelle Édition. Paris: P. Tequi. Prix 3 fr. 50.

German Publication:

Handwerkkompass. Lehr- und Lesebuch für Kurse und Haus. M. Gladbach Volksvereinsverlag.

EDUCATION

Attention has been called before in this column to an interesting phase of educational law that has developed in Pennsylvania. Because of local conditions existing in Altoona and the adjoining district, it is especially helpful for young boys to receive a course in manual training during their stay at the grammar schools. Catholics there cannot afford the heavy expense of the necessary equipment required for this industrial training in their own schools, the burden they are already carrying in supporting excellent and fully up-to-date parochial grammar schools is a heavy one. As tax-payers they claim their children should share in the opportunity for such training existing in the splendidly equipped manual training department of the public schools of their city, and this year certain parochial school pupils formally applied for admittance to the industrial department only of the city schools, announcing that they wished to take the rest of the school subjects in the parochial schools. The school board rejected their application, claiming pupils must take all of the curriculum or none. A legal battle is now on to determine whether parochial school pupils can be thus excluded under the new educational code of Pennsylvania. The case, it is said, will be carried to the Supreme Court of the State, no matter which way the local judge may decide the controversy.

It is an unwonted experience for the writers of the Catholic press to be called upon to chronicle some special activity on the part of our ecclesiastical leaders in the cause of Catholic education. It is due above all to the loyal stand of the Bishops of the United States and to their untiring labors that the success thus far achieved in educational matters has crowned Catholic efforts in this country. Our attention was called quite recently to an unusual example of a Bishop's devotedness to the cause of sound liberal education, which in its disinterested generosity deserves to be widely known and honored. The Right Reverend Thomas D. Beaven, D.D., of Springfield, Mass., had determined to use the opportunity of the November Conferences to address his priests on the topic of Higher Catholic Education. It was no new subject with Bishop Beaven; during the long course of his successful episcopate he has been a sterling champion of Catholic training in schools. But no one, probably, of the three hundred and more of the priests of his diocese had any intimation of the turn his thoughts would take when he began his address.

At the very outset he stated that the matter to which he was to invite them to give their attention had long been a subject of his serious thought, and he considered that the time was now most opportune for placing it before them. He impressed upon them that as Bishop of Springfield he was deeply interested in the growing prestige and educational importance of Holy Cross College as a factor of higher Catholic education, an institution which for more than fifty years had been a "home-word" in every Catholic family in Massachusetts and a well-spring of benefaction and blessing. The College had now entered upon the most critical period of her career, when she must either go forward or backward. Her student roster had reached, as he had learned, the limit of accommodation, and the increase over present numbers, which the coming years surely promise, must be turned back from her doors unless the insupportable indebtedness be met by the helpfulness of many hands.

He then proposed that he and his clergy unite in one grand effort in behalf of this venerable institution of learning and present to her donations that would approximate in the aggregate $100,000, to be used for a suitable building which would commemorate their devotion and be a monument to their sacrifice in the interests of that culture for which Holy Cross had acquired a position of enviable distinction in the educational world.

This plan was heartily endorsed at Worcester, Pittsfield and Springfield, and received with such enthusiasm by all the diocesan clergy that its full realization is looked upon with perfect confidence.

As far as is known, this is the first event of its kind in the history of the Catholic Church in America; the first time the bishop and the priests of his diocese have united together in a crusade, involving no little personal sacrifice, to further the ends of higher Catholic education. For be it noted the disinterested sacrifice is not inspired by the love of the old alumni alone of Holy Cross for their college; such a generous purpose would be in no way exceptional. It is, and in this it is quite unusual, a proposal accepted by the diocesan clergy as such without reference to the school in which their training was received. Holy Cross, the largest Catholic college in the country, and centered in the very heart of the diocese, is made the object of this spirit of generous donation: but to the zealous and devoted clergy of the Springfield diocese and to Right Reverend Bishop Thomas D. Beaven, who assumes the full responsibility of the movement, is due the glory of what may be confidently regarded as the most splendid tribute of combined diocesan effort to the cause of higher Catholic education in the history of the Catholic Church in America.

The Report of the Proceedings and Addresses of the eighth annual meeting of the Catholic Educational Association held in Chicago, June 26-29, 1911, has been published. It appears as the fourth of the quarterly bulletins issued by the Association and its five hundred pages afford excellent proof of the claim put forward in the introduction to the report: "Through the medium of the Association there is developing among us a clearer understanding of the educational situation, and Catholic educators are obtaining a better grasp of the problems which they are called on to solve." The numerous carefully prepared papers contained in this extended account of the Chicago meeting present a view of the character and scope of the Association's activities that necessarily interests all of us who are concerned with the progress of Catholic schools. As will be remembered from the newspaper reports of the time the deliberations of the Chicago convention turned largely on three subjects. The first was the attitude of the Carnegie Educational Fund towards religious education and the general educational interests of the country. And the conviction was strongly voiced by the convention "that a marked tendency toward monopoly of education exists, and that methods and systems which have prevailed in American industrial life should not be introduced into the field of education." A determination to find a way to overcome the difficulty of formulating a comprehensive plan of studies which will make for better co-ordination in the whole Catholic educational system was the second significant note of the meeting; and an entire session was given to the problem of the application of Catholic schools with secular institutions. The many views ably presented at the meeting and recorded in the report will prove a substantial help in forming a united Catholic public opinion regarding this grave question.

PULPIT, PRESS AND PLATFORM

INTERNATIONAL CATHOLIC DEFENCE UNION.

I consider it advisable, says the Rev. P. J. Dowling, C.M., to set forth how the movement towards the Union stands at present.

Since the Leeds Congress, at which the project was received with such enthusiasm, the leading Catholic papers of the world have given it the greatest prominence and unstinted support. Even such distant Catholic centres as those of India and South America have warmly welcomed the Union, and are waiting to see it assume definite shape. The Catholic Herald of India writes, March 15, 1911:—"We heartily associate ourselves with the opinion expressed by the Rev. J. Connolly on Father Dowling's scheme, who, writing to the Catholic Times of January 27, says: 'His idea is certainly worthy of consideration, and if taken up by Catholics the world over in a fitting spirit, would unquestionably supply a long-felt want.'" The Hiberno-Argentine Review, Buenos Aires, commends the project most earnestly to its readers. From New Zealand I have received letters asking for the rules of the Union, etc. Lately, too, from one of the most prominent Catholics in Holland, the following letter has come to hand:—

Rijen, Netherlands, 14-7-'11.

"Rev. Father,—Being vice-president of the International Catholic Esperantist Union and vice-president of our second Catholic Congress, I come to invite you to visit 'nia Dua' in The Hague, which is to be held from 14th till 19th August next, by approval of the Bishop of Haarlem and under the Pope's benediction. It is a Catholic congress, not an Esperantist one, and only general Catholic interests will be discussed.

"The purpose of our Union is to take to heart international Catholic interests of all kinds, chiefly to defend the Church against calumnies, to make known its principles, etc. There are now national leagues in Bavaria, Saxony, Belgium, France, Spain, the Netherlands—perhaps there will soon be another in Italy.

"By means of this organization and by the facility of our intercourse, using our simple international language, we could very much help you in realizing your plan which you explained at Leeds last year, and about which we read in our newspapers. Your intention is quite ours, and therefore I should say we cannot do better than co-operate. There cannot be any reason at all to remain separated, if there is a favorable occasion to help each other as true brothers in Christ. For it is your very idea concerning a world's association of Catholics for defending their right and honor and creed which we are about to realize. It would not be necessary to create a new association if the existing ones were willing or apt to co-operate in the way as intended by you and by us. And even now our intention is not to rival, to stand in competition with those other ones, but merely to help them in a great work. As soon as they are formed we shall enter among them, and shall co-operate in one great corporation with them.

"We invite you most sincerely and insistently to visit our second Congress in The Hague, and listen to the addresses and speak to the Congress, and unfold the details of your plan to us, and lay the foundation for further co-operation. You will find these representatives of all chief European nationalities (we expect our friends from Belgium, France, Denmark, England, Ireland, Catalonia, Poland, Russia, Saxony, Bavaria, Prussia, Austria, Hungary, Switzerland, Italy, Spain, etc.), and there will be very clever men among them, quite able to give you vigorous support.

"I hope to receive very soon your favorable answer, and already joyfully foresee our fruitful co-operation. A.M.D.G.—Your brother in Christ,

"W. Lutkie."

Mr. Lutkie is one of the most prominent Catholics in Holland, head of a great publishing firm.

The Tablet of July 29 shows that the American Federation of Catholic Societies, a magnificent Union, is quite prepared to take up the work. The secretary writes:—"For some years I have been quietly advocating the formation of a World Federation. Such a movement would be in line with Father Dowling's International Catholic Defence League. I believe that the work which Father Dowling proposes to do is in line with the work which the Federations in the different countries in the world are doing. If an international bond of union could be formed amongst the existing federations of the world, an International Congress could be held within the next few years in the perfecting of such an organization, which would result in the accomplishing of much good for the Catholic cause. I do not favor the formation of a separate organization for the 'defence work,' but I believe that the existing federations are the ones to foster it."

Your readers must see that this great authority thoroughly agrees with the fundamental principle of my scheme—viz., to unify for the purpose of defence, or at least to direct for this purpose, the existing organizations instead of forming new bodies specifically for this object.

I think these testimonies from all parts are very encouraging to those who believe in international union for defence purposes. Then, since the Leeds Congress, the Bishops of England and Ireland have approved of the principle of the Union, withdrawing, however, from the scheme, the section which has a "boycotting" tendency.

I may mention that with reference to the International Masonic Union whose object is to withdraw the representatives from the Vatican, they have succeeded in inducing the Republic of Uruguay to fall in with their wishes. They also made an attempt in Holland, but the generosity of a member of Parliament who offered to defray the expenses of the delegates defeated their plans for the time being.

ECCLESIASTICAL NEWS

Advices from Rome state that Cardinal Farley will sail for New York on January 6. Preparations have begun to give him an elaborate welcome home when he lands in this city. The new cardinals had a busy week in the Eternal city. On December 5, Cardinal Farley and his suite were received in special audience by the Pope, who renewed his expressions of paternal solicitude for America and his satisfaction at the general demonstrations of gratitude over the appointment of the new cardinals. Very Rev. Dr. R. L. Burtzell, on behalf of the New York delegation, read an address to the Pope, in which emphasis was laid upon the public respect in which Cardinals Farley, Falconio and O'Connell were held in America, not only as prelates, but as public-spirited citizens by both Catholics and Protestants alike.

Mgr. Burtzell also dwelt upon the devotion of not only the New York Archbishop and his clergy, but also of all the hierarchy and the body of the faithful in the United States to the person of the Pontiff and to the Catholic faith.

Pope Pius, replying, said that long ago, when he was Patriarch of Venice, he knew of and admired the grand work of Archbishop Farley for the Church in New York.

On December 6, the cardinals attended the Advent sermon preached before the Pope and the other cardinals present in Rome, and in the afternoon were guests at a musical entertainment at the American College, given in their honor by the students. Rev. Father Doody, senior student, delivered a congratulatory address. Cardinal Farley, in a short speech of thanks, said that none of the congratulations he had received was more welcome than were those from his alma mater. He felt that the spirit of the founder of the college, Pius IX, was present to-day, and if his (the cardinal's) elevation had been the reward of his zeal, the seeds of success had been planted in the college where he was a student forty-five years ago. The cardinal told many reminiscences of the days when his character was formed there. Many American guests were present at the entertainment.

Rev. Father Dolan, formerly of New York, now rector of St. Silvester's Church in Rome, gave a dinner on December 7 in honor of the three American cardinals. Mgr. Wall proposed the health of the Pope, and expressed the gratitude of American Catholics for the creation of the three cardinals. Cardinal Vanutelli proposed the health of the Americans.

Cardinal Farley pontificated on December 8 in the American College, this being the first occasion since his elevation to the Sacred College. At a luncheon following, speeches were made to toasts in honor of the cardinal and Mgr. Kennedy, rector of the College.

Cardinal O'Connell was installed in the afternoon as Titular of the Church of San Clemente. It was his fifty-second birthday, and the American College also commemorated the fifty-second anniversary of its foundation. The former rector showed his attachment for the college by celebrating the community Mass at 7 o'clock.

At the ceremony in St. Clemente's the cardinal was met by the Prior of the Dominicans who serve in the church, and escorted to the throne. The Stars and Stripes were hoisted at the belfry. The church was crowded with Americans, including the American Ambassador and his wife. The Prior made an address, in which he viewed the history and archæology of the Church and its relics. He expressed the gratitude of the Irish Dominicans to their protector. The name O'Connell recalled that of Daniel O'Connell, whose memory was enshrined there.

The cardinal replied in Italian and English, laying emphasis on the history of St. Clemente's as giving evidence of the continuity of the Papacy. He praised Ireland's steadfast attachment to the Faith, saying that she had contributed to its propagation throughout the whole world. He was proud of his Irish forefathers. The cardinal, in concluding, asked for prayers for aid in rising to the responsibility of the cardinalate. The American Ambassador, Mr. O'Brien, warmly congratulated Cardinal O'Connell.

Cardinal Falconio celebrated pontifical high Mass for the first time at St. Anthony's Church. Representatives of all branches of the Franciscan order were present.

Cardinals Farley and O'Connell dined at the American College as the guests of Bishop Kennedy, the rector. The refectory was decorated with American and Papal flags and greenery. The students attended the dinner, but there were no formal speeches.

Cardinal O'Connell is arranging to leave Naples for Boston on January 29.

On December 10, Cardinal Farley took possession of his titular church, Santa Maria sopra Minerva. The Master-General of the Dominicans, which order has charge of the church, met him at the door, and, after the cardinal was enthroned, read a formal address of congratulation, in which he recalled the fact that the new cardinal assisted in 1875 when the late Cardinal McCloskey took possession of the same church as his titular. Nobody foresaw at that time, he said, that Cardinal Farley would succeed Cardinal McCloskey as Archbishop of New York, or that he would re-enter the same temple himself, invested with the purple and take possession of the same titular dignity.

"The new and old worlds rejoice in your promotion," he added, "and congratulate you. The Dominicans especially rejoice, because the first two Bishops of New York, Concannon and Connolly, belonged to the order on which new lustre had now been brought."

Cardinal Farley, in reply, said: "Our elevation was due to the Pope's condescension and regard, not for our deserts, but for our beloved diocese of New York and the whole United States, and his wish to reward the faith, religious spirit and attachment to the Holy See of all us Americans.

"Your thoughtful allusion to our presence in 1875 reminds us of the exceeding merits of our predecessor and of our insignificance, but God's infinite mercy willed that we should be included among the Princes of the Church, and we are in duty bound to respond to the utmost of our energy. Many favors have been granted us. We thank you for your praise for the small measure of our kindness to the Dominicans of New York. We engage to continue to them our help and protection. As this church, which was raised from pagan ruins, overcame the heresies of old, so Santa Maria will triumph over man's malice to-day, crush the enemies of her Divine Son and restore peace to the Church, triumph to the Holy See and great glory to Christ's Vicar on earth. This is our hope and our assured trust."

No one should forget the Society of St. Vincent de Paul during the holiday season. There is no better medium for the distribution of gifts that bring joy and comfort where the joyous surroundings of the Christmas tide are mournfully lacking. A very interesting booklet has just been sent out from the headquarters of the Society, 375 Lafayette Square, which shows at a glance details of the principal activities of this world-wide organization of Catholic laymen for volunteer charity work. In Manhattan and Bronx now more than $100,000 a year is being distributed by them in the homes of the worthy poor. The following figures should open many pocket books at this time of the year; they tell the story in a nutshell:—

Number of children who received a two weeks' free outing at Spring Valley last summer.....	2,317
Number of women and girls sheltered at Elizabeth's Home for Convalescents, at Spring Valley, year ending September 30, 1911.....	578
Number of dependent orphan children placed in good family homes by the Catholic Home Bureau during the past year .....	226
Number of children so placed since the Bureau was established .....	2,864
Number of children under the supervision of the Bureau, October 1, 1911.....	1,479
Four Boys' Clubs with membership of.....	3,788
Cost of maintaining the Special Works of the Society during the year.....	$27,178.98

During the visit of Cardinal Logue to Rome for the recent Consistories, he was also concerned in the promotion of the process of the Beatification of the Venerable Oliver Plunkett, Archbishop of Armagh. It is also announced that in connection with the canonization of Blessed Joan of Arc, Mgr. Touchet, Bishop of Orleans, has taken to Rome the proof of three miracles worked through the intercession of the Saint.

Some time ago a missionary at Adana, in Asiatic Turkey, where a horrible massacre had occurred, complained that no help had come from the United States. He was speaking relatively, of course, and was thinking of the boundless resources which the Protestant missions of those parts had received. Indeed, as soon as the dreadful news of the tragedy had reached this part of the world, the zealous Mgr. Freri, who is promoting with such success the work of the Propagation of the Faith, printed in 1909 5,000 copies of an illustrated pamphlet showing the devastation that followed the attack on the mission by the Turks; and the alms that eager souls contributed were immediately forwarded. In the report for instance just issued (December, 1911) of the money distributed by the Society for the Propagation of the Faith in 1911, there is a specific donation of $2,000 for the Jesuit mission of Adana. The Lazarist missions and the Sisters of Charity in Turkey in Europe were given $11,404.

Rev. Edouard Désy, S.J., of Quebec, celebrated his fiftieth anniversary as a Jesuit on November 29. Beyond the general Communion of the children in the parish church there was nothing public in the rejoicing. The Papal benediction was cabled from Rome, and letters of congratulation were received from the venerable Archbishop of Quebec, who was absent in the West, and also from the General of the Society of Jesus. The Auxiliary Bishop Mgr. Roy and the Grand Vicar Mgr. Marois were the only guests at table besides Father Désy's religious brethren, among whom were the editor of AMERICA.

and Father Hearn, S.J., of St. Ignatius Loyola's, New York. Father Désy was born on the Isle Dupas on July 8, 1841, entered the Jesuit novitiate at Sault au Recollet near Montreal in 1861. He made some of his studies in the United States, namely at Frederick, Fordham and Woodstock. Nearly all of his priestly life has been passed at Quebec, where he is one of the conspicuous figures. He inaugurated the work of closed retreats for men in that city.

Those who have visited the great Parliament Buildings which stand on a slight eminence outside the old walls of Quebec, will recall that the names of several of Canada's illustrious sons are cut in letters of gold on the façade beneath empty niches. It is pleasant to record that two of these vacancies were filled a few days ago, not by the statues of warriors or statesmen but by those of two priests; the Jesuit de Brébeuf, and the Recollet Viel; the first of whom was slain by the Iroquois, the second flung into the rapids at a place known ever since as Sault au Recollet. The Friar is seen standing in the bow of his canoe; the Jesuit is holding the crucifix aloft in his outstretched hand. This tribute to religion is noteworthy as it is a revelation of the difference of spirit which exists between the respective Governments of Old and New France.

The business men of Wheeling, W. Va., are taking an active interest in the reconstruction of the House of the Good Shepherd recently destroyed by fire. A representative committee of citizens headed by the Hon. C. C. Schmidt, Mayor of the city, has been formed for the purpose of giving financial aid to the Sisters in the huge task of beginning their work anew. Mr. J. Adam Hess, a leading merchant of Wheeling, has volunteered to pay one-third the outlay on the new building, no matter what be the amount of the total cost. Two prominent architects have offered their services gratis in drawing up the plans. The destruction of the convent is viewed as a calamity to the State and the city alike. Writing to the Hon. R. B. Naylor, Secretary of the local Board of Trade and also a member of the Citizens' Committee, Governor W. E. Glasscock of West Virginia says:

"The burning of the Home of the Good Shepherd is a great loss, not only to your city, but to the State of West Virginia. During the administration of ex-Governor White, I was a member of the board of directors of the Humane Society of this State, and shall never forget the patriotic, unselfish and loyal support we received from the good Sisters of Wheeling.

"They provided shelter at the Home of the Good Shepherd for many homeless and friendless children, many of whom were so physically defective that we could not place them elsewhere. I hope the people of your city, without regard to race or creed, will contribute to the erection of a new home."

ECONOMICS

The Thames Iron and Shipbuilding Company, the difficulties of which we mentioned lately, grew out of a private concern some seventy years ago, and is of historic interest. It constructed the Britannia tubular bridge built across the Menai Straits by Robert Stephenson, and the high level bridge across the estuary of the Tamar at Saltash, near Plymouth, designed by the younger and more famous Brunel, and known as the Royal Albert bridge. These were among the wonders of the first half of the nineteenth century. It also built the first iron-built ironclad man-of-war, the Warrior, a vessel of over 9,000 tons on the old frigate lines, and, to the unprofessional eye, one of the handsomest ships ever seen in the British navy. Unfortunately, as is often the case, its efficiency fell far short of its beauty. This fault, however, lay with the designers, not with the builders. The Warrior was followed by the Minotaur, a five-masted frigate of nearly 11,000 tons, one of three monsters for those times. Since then it has built war ships for many nations, its last being the English super-dreadnought, Thunderer.

Moreover, with the Thames Company was amalgamated the marine engineering works of John Penn & Sons, famous in the old days of trunk engines, low pressures and single expansions.

SCIENCE

The high efficiency and the proportionate economy of metallic filament incandescent lamps are recognized, and the use of these lights is increasing daily, so that the carbon filament lamp will soon be a thing of the past. A recent study of the metals of three of the more popular filaments, viz., tungsten, tantalum and molybdenum has revealed the following interesting facts: all three exhibited a low reflectivity in the visible spectrum with a rapid increase to high values in the infra-red. The reflectivity curves of tungsten and molybdenum are so closely in accord that there is little to choose between them for filaments, with the possible exception that molybdenum is somewhat tougher than the tungsten. The need of a high operating temperature for luminous efficiency was also noticed. In tungsten the low reflectivity in the visible spectrum was found to result in an emissivity of about 50 per cent.

* * *

The Kontinental Gas-Gesellschaft at Dessau has adopted a new process for the purification of illuminating gas which deserves the notice of our own gas companies. The gas is heated to a temperature of 1,200 degrees centigrade which reduces the greater bulk of the impurities. Analysis shows that from 80 to 84 per cent. of hydrogen is present after treatment. The odor of this product is very feeble, and its sensitiveness to temperature variations is far less than of the gas with all the impurities present. The price to the consumer is a trifle less than 80 cents per 1,000 cubic feet.

* * *

A novel invention for preserving furs from moths, is described in Nature. Large pelts or small ones sewn together, are stretched upon a suitable frame-work with the fur uppermost, in a large, flat-bottomed tank, which is then filled with water and brought to the freezing point. A plate of ice thus contains the pelt, and that part of it which contains the skins only is cut away with suitable machinery. What is left of the ice has only the fur. Its surface is then melted until the fur is slightly exposed, when a coating of rubber solution is applied layer after layer. When the requisite thickness of rubber is had, the ice is melted off and a large seamless pelt, in which rubber has taken the place of skin is the result. The cheapness of the method is a great recommendation.

F. TONDORF, S.J.

OBITUARY

St. Louis papers describe the funeral services of Rev. John P. Frieden, S.J., late President of St. Louis University, whose death was chronicled last week, as a demonstration of respect such as the city has not witnessed in years, if ever before in its history. Over fifteen hundred students and alumni, the teaching staff of the various university schools, the members of the advisory board of the university governing body, representatives of Washington University, principals of the city schools and members of the Board of Education, city officials and prominent business and professional men, scores of sisters of the different teaching orders and more than three hundred priests and ecclesiastics packed the nave of the spacious Jesuit Church and filled its commodious galleries. Outside an added multitude of the city's people, eager to honor the memory of the dead priest, crowded the streets about the sacred edifice. Archbishop Glennon and Bishop Janssen, of Belleville, Ill., occupied places in the sanctuary. The Office of the Dead was chanted with beautiful impressiveness by the choir of theologians and philosophers from the university's divinity school, and Very Rev. Rudolph J. Meyer, Provincial of the Missouri province of the Society of Jesus, said the low Mass, which custom and rule prescribe for the obsequies of one of its members.

Following the Mass, Archbishop Glennon paid an eloquent tribute to the memory of Father Frieden. He excused his departure from the practice of the Jesuit community to bury its dead with simple ceremony and with no word of praise, because, as his Grace affirmed, Father Frieden's death involved a grievous loss to others than those of the Jesuit Order. The whole city mourned a citizen of a type all too rare. A busy educator, Father Frieden had found it possible to show active sympathy with every movement making for a better community life, and he had found time to serve on the committees of the Civic League and to speak from a solid Catholic viewpoint for the causes which enlisted his support. The marked success that made Father Frieden a great rector of a great university sprang from his genius for association with all sorts and conditions of men. His was the tact of simplicity and straightforwardness, born of an honest purpose to do the Master's service wherever opportunity came to him. The Archbishop's address was brief, but full of an appreciative tenderness that marked his own deep affection for the man whose active and saintly career he feelingly sketched.

Testimonials to the dead priest's worth came from many whose religious belief differed widely from his own. Noteworthy among them was a memorial service during the regular morning service at the Maple Avenue Methodist Episcopal Church on the Sunday following Father Frieden's death. Its pastor, Dr. M. H. Lichter, and the late president of the university had been close friends, having been intimately associated in the work of the Civic League. He spoke in touching strain of the shock which the sudden passing of Father Frieden had been to all, and of his own keen sense of loss that must deepen as the days pass.

It is with great regret that we read of the death of Mr. W. Max Reed, of Amsterdam, N. Y. Mr. Reed was not a Catholic, but he was an ardent admirer of the old Jesuit missionaries among the Indians. It was due to his initiative that the New York State Historical Society undertook to erect a memorial on Lake George in honor of Father Isaac Jogues, its discoverer. Mr. Reed was a member of the committee entrusted with the advancement of the project, and his untiring activity succeeded in obtaining the grant of an island from the State Government. At his own expense he placed on it a temporary memorial. He was particularly desirous that the name of "Lac St. Sacrement" which Father Jogues gave to the Lake should be perpetuated, and it was with very evident satisfaction that he wrote to AMERICA a few months ago: "I have the pleasure to announce that a sign bearing the following legend has been placed on the northernmost island in Lake George between Black Mountain and Elephant Mountain:

"Isle of Lac du St. Sacrement,
Lake discovered and named by Isaac Jogues, S.J.,
May 30, 1646."

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

THE SCHOOL OF SOCIAL STUDIES.

To the Editor of AMERICA:—

Your correspondent, "J. H." (Albany) is looking for a movement among Catholics against Socialism to which he can lend his aid. I wish to call his attention to the Laymen's League for Retreats and Social Studies, founded early in the present year for just this purpose.

On Monday, November 6th, a "School of Social Studies" was opened at 140 Nassau Street, N. Y. City (Rooms of the Fordham Law School), for the purpose of training a band of Catholic men to act as lecturers on Socialism. I enclose the prospectus of the school, and shall be happy to send one to "J. H." if he will send me his address.

The Laymen's League depends for its resources upon its membership dues which are three dollars a year. It is engaged in the double task of extending the work of retreats for Laymen and of fighting Socialism. It pays no salaries, and its funds go entirely for printing, postage and interest on the mortgage given in purchase of Mount Manresa. The League needs many more members than it has to develop the works it has in hand. I would be very glad if "J. H." would enlist with us and bring his friends with him.

THOMAS F. WOODLOCK, President.

PATENS AND PATINES

To the Editor of AMERICA:—

The assumption of the writer in the Evening Post re the word "patens" or "patines" in "The Merchant of Venice," I cannot let pass unchallenged. The word occurs in what Hallam (Literature of Europe vol. III, p. 147) pronounces to be "the most sublime passage perhaps in Shakespeare." In a note to the passage, Charles Knight, the eminent Shakespearian editor and critic, furnishes the following information: "The word in the folio is spelled patens. A patine is the small flat dish used in the service of the altar."

In my copy of Velazquez Dictionary (unabridged), D. Appleton & Company, New York, 1907, I find the Spanish word "Paterna" defined,—1. A large medal worn by countrywomen. 2. Paten, a dish (sic) for the Eucharistic bread. Pateña is not there printed.

The word patine was familiar to our ancestors in the English language; and Shakespeare in using it conveyed a definite image to their minds. The word passed from the Catholic Ritual into Protestant usage. Archbishop Laud bequeaths to the Duke of Buckingham his "chalice and patine of gold." E. F. C.

THE DISCREDITED "BRITANNICA."

To the Editor of AMERICA:—

I have followed with great interest and entire approval your exposure of the alleged impartiality and accuracy of the "Encyclopædia Britannica" in matters Catholic. One would suppose, however, that in matters of science, especially biology, in which everybody dabbles to day, the editors of that egregious aggregation of near-facts would be at particular pains to select writers who would at least be abreast with current knowledge and theories. Such seems not to be the case however. In Science for the 17th inst., there is an article by Dr. Mel. T. Cook, who is probably the foremost American student of vegetable galls, especially those arising from insect attack, in which he reviews the article "Galls" in the "Britannica," and painstakingly and systematically demonstrates that it merely repeats and perpetuates errors and theories exploded thirty years ago, and that the author is totally unacquainted with the best modern work. It seems to me that by the time those who are interested in and know about the subjects treated of in that work are through, the fiction of its "reliability" and "accuracy" will be relegated to the scrap-heap along with pure Darwinism, Weissmannism, the continuity of chromosomes, and other wreckage of science.

J. R. DE LA TORRE BUENO.

White Plains, N. Y., Nov. 28.

O'BEIRNE BROTHERS

317-319 WEST 42d STREET, NEW YORK CITY

Outfitters to Schools, Institutions and Hospitals for everything in CHINA, GLASSWARE, Cutlery, Cooking Utensils and Sundries used in the dining room and kitchen. A reminder of a few necessities carried in stock:

Pails	Matches	Coffee Urns	Umbrella Stands
China	Crockery	Coffee Mills	Ice Cream Freezers
Trays	Hampers	Toilet Paper	Mops and Wringers
Scales	Fruit Jars	Jelly Moulds	Glass Candle Sticks
Brooms	Glassware	Earthenware	Ash and Garbage Cans
Dusters	Dust Pans	Woodenware	Silver and Plated Ware
Baskets	Stock Pots	Meat Presses	Agate Cooking Utensils
Brushes	Toilet Sets	Flower Vases	Aluminum " "
Sponges	Jardinieres	Meat Choppers	Steel " "
Chamois	Stone Ware	Carpet Sweepers	Fire Proof Earthenware

Your inspection is invited, or our representative will call upon request

Telephone 1177 Bryant One Block West from Broadway and Times Square Subway

Byrne & McDonnell

Members of New York Stock Exchange

Stocks, Bonds and Investment Securities

60 BROADWAY, NEW YORK

Telephone 594 Rector

BYRNE BUILDING, NEWARK, N. J.

Telephone 1890 Market

Correspondence Invited

MENEELY BELL CO.
TROY, N.Y. AND
177 BROADWAY, N.Y. CITY.

BELLS

INSTITUTION

LINEN

of all kinds, also Sheets and Pillow Cases, Blankets, Bed Spreads, etc., etc.

WRITE for SAMPLES and PRICES

H. W. BAKER LINEN CO. Dept "K"
41 WORTH ST.
Importers and Manufacturers NEW YORK CITY

DENTISTRY

Loose teeth tightened by a new process; teeth without plates. Extracting avoided. High-class and up-to-date dentistry in all branches at reasonable prices.

DRS. BURKE & BURKE
DENTISTS

1947 BROADWAY AND 65TH ST
10th St. Subway, L station and all surface cars.

CHRISTMAS GIFTS

WE CARRY A FULL LINE OF

DOLLS and TOYS

Christmas Tree Ornaments and Novelties for church fairs and parties at wholesale.

NADEL & SHIMMEL, 144 Park Row, N. Y.

NOTE THE SIMPLICITY

Of making perfect duplicates with the Daus Improved Tip Top Dupli-cator. No intricate mechanism. No printer's ink. Always ready. 100 copies from pen-written and 50 copies from type-written original. Useful in any business. Sent on Ten Days' Trial Without Deposit. Complete Dupli-cator, cap size, (prints 8-4x13 inches). Contains roll of "Dausco" Oiled Linen Back, duplicating surface which can be used over and over again. Circular of larger sizes free on request. Felix G. Daus Dupli-cator Co., Daus Building, 111 John St., New York.

$1.00 WILL BRING POSTPAID

one of our
Fine Gold Filled
5 year guaranteed
ROSARIES

In any color. Order through your jeweler or direct. Also 10 and 20 year and Gold Rosaries Catalogue free.

Dept A Wm. Purnell Co., Mfg. Jeweler, 37 Maiden Lane, N. Y.

TOUR OF EUROPE

For the Summer of 1912

A PRIVATE PARTY VISITING

IRELAND, ENGLAND, FRANCE, BELGIUM, HOLLAND, GERMANY, SWITZERLAND AND ITALY

Arrangements have been made for an Audience with the Holy Father

Itinerary sent on application . . . Address all communications to

MISS AGNES J. KELLY

3828 Spring Garden Street, West Philadelphia, Pa.

Sarony

Photographer

256 Fifth Ave., New York

Favorably known to the Clergy and Laity for many years

Sacred Heart Sanitarium

FOR REST, QUIET, RECUPERATION AND HEALTH

Unsurpassed results obtained in Nervousness, Rheumatism, Heart and Stomach troubles. No surgical, hospital nor insanity cases taken. A delightful, homelike, restful place—ideal for all run down conditions. Hydrotherapy, Electricity, Massage, Zander Gymnasium, Sun parlor; swimming pools, billiards, bowling, etc. Gaited saddle horses, large indoor riding pavilion; suspended running track connected by tunnel with bath department. 17-acre park.

A staff of five physicians give their exclusive services to the patients.

WRITE SISTER SUPERIOR FOR BOOKLET X. MILWAUKEE, WIS.

Stained Glass Windows

Mayer & Co.

..of..

Munich, London and
47 Barclay Street New York

Memorial and other Windows
Statues and Stations of the Cross

Designs and Estimates Submitted

Specimens of our work may be seen in almost every City in the United States

The Coward Shoe

"REG. U. S. PAT. OFF."

Flat-footed.

Flat-Footed Boys.

If the Assistant Superintendent of Public Schools, who is reported to be worried about the prevalence of flat feet among boys in the public schools, wants to learn all about it he can find out from my old friend James S. Coward, who knows as much about feet, arches, ankles, toes, joints and the hurts that hurt them as a whole academy of orthopædic and surgical experts. If one-third the schoolboys of New York are flat-footed they are liable to be in a bad way when they get heavier and their spinal columns and backs begin to weaken from the strain. But there is no need of one-third or one-twentieth of the boys to be flat-footed and suffer all the ills such are heir to.

Tearing Down the Arch.

Tip thinks most flat-footedness comes from boys toeing out the way so many of them do, some feet spreading like the oars of a rowboat; that's what Tip thinks, and if he is wrong practical scientist Coward will correct him. But any boy can be taught, or can learn of his own accord, to counteract this by toeing in, and he can have shoes to guide his feet forward, instead of flip-flop sideways, till he acquires the habit of not walking toed out. When you go toed out you walk on the outside edge of the foot, and sooner or later your arch breaks down. Walk flat on your feet—something you can't do if you toe out—and if your arch was any good at all to begin with it will grow stronger, not weaker, and stand up like a stone wall.

No Toe-Out Indians.

Nobody ever saw a flat-footed

Clipping from Tip's Column
New York Press, Nov. 16, 1911

Coward Arch Support Shoe and Coward Extension Heel have been made by James S. Coward, in his Custom Dept. for over 30 years.

JAMES S. COWARD 264-274 Greenwich St. NEW YORK
(Near Warren St.)

Mail Orders Filled

Sold Nowhere Else

Send for Catalogue

ONLY 75 CENTS EACH, POSTPAID

Keep every number of AMERICA in a handsome ADJUSTABLE BINDER

THE AMERICA PRESS, 59 East 83rd Street, New York

SURBRUG'S ARCADIA MIXTURE

In each pound there are three to four hundred pipe fulls—it costs $2.00 per pound—three-quarters of a cent a pipe.

If you smoke five pipes a day it's less than four cents—five hours of pleasure for four cents—certainly ARCADIA is cheap enough for you to smoke.

THE SURBRUG COMPANY
New York

Please write to Advertisers and mention AMERICA.

A Lady of experience offers her services as a guide in the Eternal City or other parts of Italy.

Correspondence Invited.

MISS RATHE

Via Paolo Emilio 28<sup>int</sup> 3. Rome, Italy

Plays, Drills, Tableaux

SUITED FOR

Catholic Schools and Churches

are contained in "HINTS," the entertainment magazine

Send for free Sample Copy

HINTS MAGAZINE, 3 W. 29th St., New York, N. Y.

ALTAR WINES

From the Jesuit Fathers
Novitiate Vineyards at
LOS GATOS, CAL.

"MALVOISIE," a light dry wine
perfectly matured.

$1.00 per Gal. $4.00 per Doz.

"NOVITIATE," a generous wine,
somewhat sweet—will keep in wood.

$1.50 per Gal. $5.25 per Doz.

Depot and Sole Agency
P. A. MAHONY BARNSTON TEA CO.

Treas.

6 Barclay St., New York

TYPEWRITER RIBBONS AND CARBON PAPERS

Especially adapted for use in Colleges and
Schools

Send for our Circular as to how we will save
you 50 per cent. on supplies

SNELLING & SON 225 34th Street,
South Brooklyn, N. Y.
Purveyors to U. S. Gov't

The Truth About "The Encyclopaedia Britannica"

BY

Rev. T. J. Campbell, S.J.

The Catholic Mind No. 15

Single numbers 5 cts. each
$4.00 per hundred

THE AMERICA PRESS

59 East 83d St.

New York

WE OWN AND OFFER AS THE HIGHEST TYPE OF CONSERVATIVE INVESTMENTS THE UNSOLD MATURITIES OF THE FOLLOWING ISSUES OF

First Mortgage $500 Serial Real Estate Notes

THE SOCIETY OF THE SISTERS OF THE HOLY NAMES OF JESUS AND MARY, Portland, Oregon.

Total issue 320 notes of \$500 each, or \$160,000. Valuation of property mortgage covers \$325,000. Rate of interest  $5\frac{1}{2}$  per cent.

Write for detail circular giving full particulars of these notes, maturities available, etc.

THE LORETTO LITERARY AND BENEVOLENT INSTITUTION OF COLORADO.

Guaranteed by The Loretto Literary and Benevolent Institution of Loretto, Kentucky. (Mother house of Order.)

Total issue 140 notes of $500 each, or $70,000. Valuation of property mortgage covers $135,000. Rate of interest 5 per cent.

Write for detail circular giving full particulars of these notes, maturities available, etc.

THE SISTERS OF THE HUMILITY OF MARY. Ottumwa, Iowa. (Mother house of Order).

Total issue 140 notes of \$500 each, or \$70,000. Valuation of property mortgage covers \$202,500. Rate of interest  $5\frac{1}{2}$  per cent.

Write for detail circular giving full particulars of these notes, maturities available, etc.

RIGHT REVEREND JOHN B. MORRIS, Bishop of Little Rock.

Total issue 140 notes of $500 each, or $70,000. Valuation of property mortgage covers $190,000. Rate of interest 5 per cent.

Write for detail circulars giving full particulars of these notes, maturities available, etc.

ST. JOSEPH CONVENT OF MERCY IN ST. LOUIS, St. Louis, Mo.

Total issue 600 notes of $500 each, or $300,000. Valuation of six different properties mortgage covers $700,000. Rate of interest 5 per cent.

Write for detail circulars giving full particulars of these notes, maturities available, etc.

The entire issues of notes referred to above have been bought outright by this company and are held as an investment until they are disposed of and thus permit us to make other loans. We will sell them at par and accrued interest. Our profit is the commission charged the borrower when making the loan. Each loan has passed the scrutiny and examination of the officers and directors of this company, who have had long experience in such work.

The Legal Department of the Mercantile Trust Company prepares all papers, passes upon the validity of the titles, authenticates each note, and holds insurance required by the mortgage for the protection of the note holders.

On request we will mail detail circulars regarding the above notes, showing the character of the moral, as well as the physical security behind them.

The notes are payable to bearer, but, if desired, may be registered in the name of the purchaser, without cost. Every facility provided non-resident purchasers.

Loans we have made and sold on this plan in the last few years include
Sisters of St. Mary, Kansas City, Mo.; Retreat of Passionist Fathers, St. Louis, Mo.; Redemptorist Fathers, Kansas City, Mo.; St. Thomas Theological Seminary, Denver, Colo.; St. Vincent's College, Cape Girardeau, Mo.; St. Anthony's Sanitarium, Amarillo, Texas; St. Vincent's Infirmary, Little Rock, Ark.; Catholic Bishop of Chicago, Chicago, Ill.; Sisters of Holy Names of Jesus and Mary, Portland, Ore.; Loretto Literary and Benevolent Institution, St. Louis, Mo.; St. Vincent's Free School, St. Louis, Mo.; St. Ann's Widows' Home, Lying-in Hospital and Foundling Asylum, St. Louis, Mo.; St. Edward's Catholic Church, Little Rock, Ark.

REAL ESTATE
LOAN DEPARTMENT

Mercantile Trust Company

Eighth and Locust Streets
ST. LOUIS, MISSOURI

FESTUS J. WADE, President.

J. B. MOBERLY, Real Estate Loan Officer.

Capital and surplus Nine and One-half Million Dollars.

CHRISTMAS

The weeks preceding the Yuletide season are always perplexing ones to the gift-seeker. Let us help you with a timely suggestion: A gift inexpensive yet invaluable; a gift that will last.

"PIONEER PRIESTS OF NORTH AMERICA"

BY THE REV. THOMAS J. CAMPBELL, S.J.

SPECIAL COMBINATION OFFER

VOLUME I

Among the Iroquois

His Eminence, Cardinal Farley, says:

"Will fill a want often felt by so many of the clergy and laity who love to learn everything about the genesis of the Church in our State."

His Eminence, Cardinal Falconio, says:

"From it our people will learn how to appreciate the great work done by those noble and saintly pioneers."

VOLUME II

Among the Hurons

Current Literature says:

"Father Campbell does not confine himself to perfunctory narrative. He tells with vivid pen of reckless risks, hair-breadth escapes, captures, and incredible sufferings, each following another in quick succession. . . . These men, and a host of others, counted it a privilege to die for their faith."

VOLUME III

Among the Algonquins

N. Y. Evening Sun:

"Altogether it is a splendid volume that Father Campbell has produced. To those of the same faith as the pioneer priests whose lives it relates, it should prove no less edifying than absorbing. But even to those of other persuasion, 'Among the Algonquins' offers an opportunity for serious and interesting reading, where solid historical worth is matched by charm of style and vigor of conception."

These Three Volumes, $5.00 prepaid

MARY ALOYSIA HARDEY, Religious of the Sacred Heart, 1809—1886

With an Introduction by the REV. THOMAS J. CAMPBELL, S.J.

440 Pages. 16 Illustrations. Price, $2.00 prepaid.

"A book sure to do good and sure to give pleasure."—The Ave Maria.

"A book of special religious interest."—N. Y. World.

PILGRIM WALKS IN ROME

THIRD EDITION ENLARGED.

A Guide to the Holy Places and Vicinity

By P. J. CHANDLERY, S.J.

There are eighty illustrations. The book contains now 504 pages, twenty of which are given to an exhaustive index. A map of the city of Rome and plans of the old St. Peter's and of the present basilica are very valuable to the tourist. Press-work, paper, binding, illustrations, are all that can be desired. The book must become the classical guide-book for Rome, and those who may never have the good fortune to visit the holy city should learn to make pilgrimages to its temples and shrines by the aid of "Pilgrim Walks."

$1.25 Prepaid

ISAAC JOGUES

Discoverer of Lake George

By the Rev. THOMAS J. CAMPBELL, S.J.

Aside from its Historical value it presents a vivid pen picture of a saintly and heroic missionary, with all the stirring setting of early pioneer days.

55 PAGES

9 ILLUSTRATIONS

EDITION DE LUXE

Full flexible green cowhide, stamped with gold, gilt top, deckled edge.

$1.10 Prepaid

BOUND VOLUMES OF AMERICA

In an attractive and durable binding. Complete set: Volumes I, II, III, IV, V—prepaid.....$14.00
Single volumes, prepaid, $3.00.

SPECIAL OFFER

Any volume of "Pioneer Priests of North America" and one copy of "Mary Aloysia Hardey," prepaid .....$3.75

THE AMERICA PRESS,

59 East 83rd Street, New York City

THE FOOD AND TONIC VALUES

of ripened Barley when properly malted and fermented with Saazar Hops is very great. Hence the fame of

ANHEUSER BUSCH'S
Malt-Nutrine

It is not only a liquid food, but when taken with meals produces the fermentation necessary for the digestion of other foods. It conquers Insomnia when taken before retiring.

Pronounced by U.S. Revenue Department a Pure Malt Product and NOT an alcoholic beverage

SOLD BY
All Druggists and Grocers

ANHEUSER - BUSCH
St. Louis, Mo.

THE CATHOLIC MIND

A periodical published on the eighth and twenty-second of the month.

Each number contains an article of permanent value, entire or in part, on some question of the day, given in popular style.

These articles are taken from the best sources, and the rule of selection is: one at a time and the best to be had, so that subscribers may keep each number for frequent reading and reference.

$1.00 a Year (24 numbers)
5 cents a number

THE AMERICA PRESS

59 East 83d Street

New York City

Tracts for the Times

IMPORTANT PAPERS ON

SOCIALISM

Various articles on Socialism, which from time to time since 1903 have appeared in The Catholic Mind, are now being reprinted and published in one volume. The compilation will be of special service to those who are interested in the great issue of the day. Those who are engaged in the instruction of others will find the volume extremely valuable. The book will be ready for subscribers in the first week of January.

Price 50 Cents

THE AMERICA PRESS

59 East 83rd Street

New York City

DIRECTORY OF COLLEGES AND ACADEMIES

Georgetown University WASHINGTON, D. C.

Directory for Catalogues or Information

The College (Graduates and Undergraduates Schools)
The Registrar, 37th & O Sts., N. W.

The School of Medicine
The Dean, 920 H St., N. W.

The Training School for Nurses
Georgetown University Hospital

The School of Dentistry
The Dean, 920 H St., N. W.

The School of Law
The Dean, 506 E. St., N. W.

The Astronomical Observatory
The Director, Georgetown University

Rev. Joseph Himmel, S.J., President

College of St. Catherine, St. Paul, Minn.

A Catholic College for Girls.
Accredited by the Minnesota State Board of Public Instruction and by several prominent Universities.

Seventy Acre Campus. Fireproof Buildings.

COMPLETE COURSES IN THESE DEPARTMENTS.
THE COLLEGIATE, leading to the degree of Bachelor of Arts. THE ACADEMIC OR COLLEGE PREPARATORY. MUSIC AND PAINTING in their various branches. DOMESTIC ART, HOUSEHOLD SCIENCE AND COOKING. Year Book Forwarded on Application. Address: THE SECRETARY.

Academy of St. Joseph In-the-Pines

BRENTWOOD, N. Y.
A Boarding School for Young Ladies,
Affiliated with the State University
PROSPECTUS EXPLAINS THE TERMS, ETC.

College & Academy of the Incarnate Word ALAMO HEIGHTS, SAN ANTONIO TEXAS

For the Higher Education of Young Ladies

Conducted by the Sisters of Charity of the Incarnate Word

COLLEGE—Four years' course, degrees B.A. & B.L.
ACADEMY—Three years' High School course.
COMMERCIAL—Three years' course.
PREPARATORY DEPT.—Eight years, equivalent to primary schools.

Studios of Music and other Fine Arts

Ideal location for students whose health demands climatic advantages. Building new and thoroughly equipped. Steam heating. Electric light.

For illustrated catalog address, SUPERIORESS.

Convent of the Holy Child SHARON HILL, DELAWARE COUNTY, PA. 15 Minutes from Philadelphia

ACADEMY FOR YOUNG LADIES
Highest English Course. French, Drawing, Music by Certified Teachers. Preparation for foreign travel. As the numbers are limited, special care can be given to the formation of character and training of each child.
Address Mother Superior

MT. ST. JOSEPH ON THE WISSAHICKON

For illustrated catalogue address MOTHER SUPERIOR, Chestnut Hill, Philadelphia, Pa.

HOLY CROSS COLLEGE WORCESTER MASS.

Conducted by the Jesuit Fathers.

Largest Catholic College in America

Extensive grounds and exceedingly healthy location. New buildings, large gymnasium, indoor running track, hot and cold baths, modern conveniences. Easily reached on main line from Albany or New York to Boston via Springfield. Board, tuition, washing and mending, use of gymnasium, library and reading room, physical instruction and medical attendance, $260 a year. Furnished room and attendance extra. Send for catalogue to
PREFECT OF STUDIES.

Seton Hall College

FOUNDED 1856

South Orange, New Jersey

COLLEGE AND HIGH SCHOOL

Bayley Hall for Students of Grammar Course

FOR CATALOGUE ADDRESS
Very Rev. James F. Mooney, D.D., Pres.

Georgetown Visitation Convent

A boarding and day School for Young Ladies and Little Girls

Delightfully Situated on Georgetown Heights
WASHINGTON, D. C.

Founded in 1799 Address Sister Directress

For advertising rates, address "MANAGER" AMERICA, a Catholic Review of the Week
59 East 83d Street, New York City

St. Mary's College

St. Marys, Kansas

BOARDING COLLEGE

Under the Jesuit Fathers

Two Courses of Study:
Classical and Commercial

For Catalogue, send to

REV. ALOYSIUS A. BRENN, S.J., President

St. Joseph College Bardstown, Ky.

CONDUCTED BY XAVERIAN BROTHERS

Preparatory, Academic, Commercial and Collegiate Courses.

A Catholic home-like institution for boys and young men. Send for prospectus.

CATHOLIC COLLEGE FOR WOMEN
situated in the romantic Valley of the Wissahickon. Degrees conferred. Also Academic, Commercial, Intermediate and Elementary Departments. Very special advantages in Music and Art. The piano student possesses superior opportunities in the use of the Virgil Clavier Method pursued throughout the course. The Art Studio is admirably equipped, and every attention is given to the study of Art, both in theory and practice. Gymnasium perfectly equipped. Outdoor exercise, tennis, basket ball, fencing, etc.

HELEN AUGUSTA HAYES VOCAL INSTRUCTOR

64 East 34th St., New York City

Private Summer Tour to Europe

Carlton Academy

SUMMIT, N. J.

Select School for boys with perfectly equipped faculty of Catholic Laymen.
Terms $700 and $800.

Charles H. Schultz, A.M., Headmaster.

St. Mary's College & Academy

MONROE, MICHIGAN

FOR YOUNG WOMEN AND GIRLS

CONDUCTED by the Sisters of the Immaculate Heart. Beautifully located between Detroit and Toledo. A high standard maintained for sixty-five years in Culture, Education and Discipline. Courses include Collegiate, Academic and Preparatory. Special attention given to Music, Art, Expression and Domestic Science University affiliation. Separate department for little girls.

For illustrated prospectus apply to Mother Superior

IMMACULATA SEMINARY

Mount Marian, Washington, D.C.

Select School for Girls. Situated in the Suburbs

Classical, Literary and Special Courses.

Two-Year Course for High School Graduates.

Music and Art. Abundant outdoor exercise.

Sightseeing with experienced Chaperons.

For Year Book address, Sister Secretary

ST. MARY - OF - WOODS

COLLEGE

For Young Women. 71st Year
4 Years. Degrees, B.A., B.S., Ph.B.

Academic — College Preparatory — and Grammar Departments. Elective Courses. Conservatory of Music, Vocal and Instrumental. Art Studios. Natatorium, Gymnasium, Bowling, etc. Out-of-Door Sports, Horseback Riding, Boating, Archery, Tennis. For Bulletins, Address, Sister Secretary, Box 70, St. Mary-of-the-Woods, Vigo County, Indiana.

AMERICA

A CATHOLIC REVIEW OF THE WEEK

Vol. VI, No. 11 (Price 10 Cents) DECEMBER 23, 1911 ($3.00 a year) Whole No. 141

CHRONICLE

Russian Treaty Abrogated—Against Federal Control—Riotous Peace Meeting—Republican National Convention—Sun Has New Owner—Canada—Great Britain—Ireland—Mexico—France—Belgium—Italy—Germany—Austria—Spain—Persia—China .....241-244

QUESTIONS OF THE DAY

The Poet of Christmastide—Cambridge University and the "Encyclopædia Britannica"—The Ketteler Centenary—The Deaf and Dumb, 245-250

CORRESPONDENCE

Cambridge Disowns the "Britannica"—A Lesson from Limerick—Paris Workmen and the Sisters of the Assumption—The Portuguese Upheaval, 250-253

EDITORIAL

A Little Child Shall Lead Them—A New Knight-Errant—The French Parliament—The Colonel in the Bowery—Post-Cards—One Reason of Crime—The Sherwood Pension Bill—Notes...254-258

IRENICON .....258

LITERATURE

Some Christmas Magazines—English-Irish Phrase Dictionary—John Poverty—The Poems of Henry Van Dyke—Mother—Recherches sur les Superstitions en Chine—Books Received.....259-260

EDUCATION

Annual Report to Trustees of Catholic University—Catholic Educational Association to Meet Next in Pittsburgh—Present Educational Problems, 261-262

SOCIOLOGY

Reformation in the Direction of the Observance of the Ten Commandments Needed.....262

PULPIT, PRESS AND PLATFORM

A Story That Was Interesting.....262-263

MUSIC IN THE DIOCESE OF PITTSBURGH, 263

ECCLESIASTICAL NEWS

St. Patrick's Day—Civil Suits Against Ecclesiastics—Welcome Home for Cardinal Farley—A Knock Down Blow for a Bigot—Anti-Clerical Pamphlet Condemned in Canada.....264

OBITUARY

Most Rev. Ambrose Agius, O.S.B.—Mrs. Mary McCabe .....264

CHRONICLE

Russian Treaty Abrogated.—By a vote of 300 to 1 the House in Washington adopted the Sulzer resolution demanding the termination of the treaty of 1832 between the United States and Russia, because of the latter country's refusal to honor the passports of American citizens of Jewish birth. As a similar resolution was pending in the Senate, the Russian Ambassador conveyed to the President an informal intimation that Russia would regard the adoption of the Sulzer resolution, as worded, as an unfriendly act. The Ambassador was informed that there had at no time been any intention on the part of the Senate of adopting the resolution in its objectionable form. The President, however, to avoid possible complications in the relations between the two governments exercised his constitutional prerogative and notified Russia that the treaty, because obsolete, would be terminated at the expiration of one year from Jan. 1, 1912. This will probably mean the proximate negotiation of a new treaty, the difficulties of American travelers in the meantime remaining the same.

Against Federal Control.—The Railroad Securities Commission, headed by President Hadley of Yale, has reported that any attempt by Congress to adopt the policy of federal regulation of railroad stock issues, to the exclusion of State regulation, would be premature; that, for the present, State authorities should make a concerted effort to harmonize existing requirements, and that Congress should prepare for the future by giving consideration to a federal incorporation act which would permit interstate railroads to exchange their State charters for national ones. The chief recommendation made is that full publicity shall be given by railroads issuing new securities. The commission of inquiry was created in 1910 as a compromise, when the Senate refused to accept a House amendment to the pending railroad bill providing that all future issues of railroad securities be placed under control of the Interstate Commerce Commission. The commission began work in the autumn of 1910. Public hearings were held, and Chairman Hadley studied the problem abroad. The commission is distinctly adverse to the legislation proposed in the railroad bill. President Taft, in transmitting the report to Congress, declared that he heartily concurred in this.

Riotous Peace Meeting.—A mass meeting was held in Carnegie Hall, New York, December 13, in support of the ratification of the treaties pending with Great Britain and France. Joseph H. Choate, former Ambassador to England, was the presiding officer. He explained that it was the idea of the Citizens' National Committee to arrange for similar gatherings in all parts of the United States to demonstrate to the United States Senate that the people of the country were almost unanimously in favor of adopting the general arbitration treaties with Great Britain and France now before the Senate. The meeting, however, broke up in wild disorder over a declaration presented by Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler, President of Columbia University, following a long address for peace by Colonel Henry Watterson. Alphonse G. Koelble, president of the German American Citizens' League, presented as an amendment to Dr. Butler's resolution, that the meeting should "indorse the report of the majority of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, which says that the proposed treaties are breeders of war, and not of peace." Some three hundred persons in the galleries supported the amendment, and began a demonstration which lasted long enough to prevent the continuance of the meeting. Mr. John D. Bristol saved the day so far as formalities went by shouting a proposal that all in favor of Dr. Butler's resolution signify their assent by rising. The approval given showed that the opponents of the resolution were not even a large minority. By the sudden outburst the prospective speeches of Andrew Carnegie and Frederic R. Coudert were not delivered.

Republican National Convention.—The Republican National Committee decided to hold the national convention in Chicago, beginning June 18. The meeting was harmonious, and the program of Mr. Taft's friends was adopted without opposition. There was no talk of candidates at the meeting, but as the supporters of the President were in full control, the action of the National Committee is taken as a foreshadowing of what is practically certain to happen at the Republican convention.

"Sun" Has New Owner.—The controlling interest in the New York Sun property has been acquired by William C. Reick, for the past five years general manager of the New York Times and for nineteen years previously with the New York Herald. The purchase includes the Sun, the Evening Sun, the Laffan News Bureau, a distributing news agency, and certain parcels of real estate. Mr. Reick will direct the property in future as president and publisher. The Sun was established in 1833 and passed in 1868 into the hands of Charles A. Dana. On the death of Mr. Dana, in 1897, the paper was edited by Paul Dana, his son, who sold out to Mr. William Laffan, the business manager, in 1900. Since Mr. Laffan's death, on November 19, 1909, a majority of the stock has been held by Mrs. Laffan. In going to the Sun Mr. Reick has sold his Times stock and severed all connection with that paper and with the Philadelphia Ledger, which is allied to it.

Canada.—The provincial elections in Ontario went, as a matter of course, in favor of the Conservatives, but whatever hopes they had of increasing their majority were disappointed. They gained six seats from the Liberals, but lost eleven. The final result is a net gain of four seats by the Liberals, and the reduction of the Conservative majority from 68 to 60.—The Duke and Duchess of Connaught paid an official visit to Montreal. The mixture of royal state and democratic manners at their reception in the City Hall reminds one of the last days of Louis XVI and of the early days of Louis Philippe.—It is said that when Parliament meets again the Liberals will put forward a scheme of tariff reduction which will involve a relative increase in imperial preference, hoping to embarrass the ministry.—Colonel Hughes, Minister of Militia, speaking in Quebec, derided the notion of divisions in the Cabinet, saying that as its members agree on so many things they could ignore the points on which they disagree.—The C. P. R. Pacific liner, Empress of China, after having been on the rocks near Yokohama for four and a half months, was floated and taken to Yokohama for repairs.

Great Britain.—There was considerable anxiety about the King's safety during the Durbar week on account of the fires which had broken out in the camp before his coming. These were hardly accidental; hence the railways, roads and the Durbar camp itself were guarded most rigorously.—The political favors which the advanced Indian party pretended to expect were not granted at the proclaiming of the King-Emperor. For education £1,600,000 was given, which will not go very far to fulfil the demand for universal education. For the rest, the Government, living up to the idea that India can be ruled by sentiment, has made Delhi, the seat of the old Mogul empire, the capital, instead of Calcutta, which seems a piece of madness. Calcutta, built by the English, was the outward sign of British supremacy: Delhi is the sign of native supremacy. Indian soldiers have been made capable of receiving the Victoria cross, and everybody has been given half a month's pay.—By a strange coincidence, while the world was anxious about possible danger to the King and Queen at Delhi, the King's sister, her husband, the Duke of Fife, and her two daughters were in real danger on the steamship Delhi, which went ashore on the Morocco coast while on the way to Egypt. The passengers were all saved, though the weather was bad, but they suffered somewhat from exposure.—It appears that the picked crew for the Medina, which carried the King and Queen to India, virtually deserted before sailing, and had to be replaced by another. The insufficient accommodations provided for them was the cause alleged.—The House of Lords protested against the short time allowed them to discuss the Insurance Bill, and the certainty that any action of theirs would be ignored by the Government, and therefore allowed it to pass. They rejected the Naval Prize Bill, in order to prevent the adoption of the Declaration of London concerning naval warfare. Both measures are disapproved of in the navy and among merchants, as they put British commerce at a great disadvantage.

Ireland.—The Provincial Assize Courts of Leinster, Munster and Connaught, opening December 1, found very little business on the calendars. Justice Gibson congratulated the twelve counties of Leinster on the general absence of crime serious or otherwise. Wexford and Carlow supplied no cases. Chief Justice O'Brien passed a similar judgment on Munster, finding no cases in Waterford and Tipperary. Justice Dodd found no serious crime in Connaught and none of any kind in Leitrim, Sligo and Roscommon. The decrease of intemperance, especially in Cork and Dublin, was commented on. For this the Pioneer Temperance Movement, propagated by

The Messenger of the Sacred Heart, is largely responsible.—Lord MacDonnell delivered an address in Dublin on "The Finance of the Irish Government," advocating that Irish Customs and Excise should be collected by England, and then handed over to the Irish Government. Ireland's contribution should be fixed by both parliaments. England should restore to Ireland a substantial portion of the overcharges since the Union, which amount to some seventeen billion dollars. Messrs. Kettle and Oldham, professors of economics, insisted that fiscal autonomy was essential for the successful working of an Irish Parliament. Mr. Erskine Childers has written a book on the question, showing that Ireland's control of Customs and Excise and all taxation within her borders is as necessary from an economic and political standpoint to England as to Ireland. The persistent demand for this control in Ireland and the advocacy of such authorities in England as Messrs. Childers and Lough, M.P., are apparently having effect. The writer of political notes in the Times reports that the Financial Relations Committee have recommended that Ireland should be given Customs and Excise but debarred from putting a tariff on British goods.—Systematic organization against the importation and sale of evil literature has now extended over the three southern provinces. Vigilance Committees have been formed in every town and all public bodies are supporting the movement.—Soon after Cardinal Logue's audience with the Holy Father, the news reached Ireland that Pius X had granted the continuance of St. Patrick's Day as a holy day of obligation.

Mexico.—Much interest is felt in the whereabouts of General Reyes, who is said to be in St. Louis, in various parts of Texas, and in the familiar mountains of Nuevo León. Mexican troops are closely guarding the border, so that if he is in Mexico he may fall into their hands should he try to escape to the United States.—Contraband shipments of arms and ammunition from a point on the Mississippi below New Orleans have intensified the unrest and uncertainty.—Complaints are frequent and loud against the arbitrary conduct of Government officials in different parts of the republic.—The promise to divide large estates on the success of the revolution has caused an outbreak in the State of Durango, where the people insisted on an immediate division. The President is one of the largest landholders in the country. The country is threatened with martial law.

France.—Each new disclosure of the nature of the agreement between Germany and France adds to the discontent in Parliament, and the unpopularity of the Government is growing greater every day. The speech of Count de Mun condemning secret treaties and the cession of the Congo, and demanding more light on the conference between Germany and France was enthusiastically applauded, but his motion to defer the discussion was lost by a large majority. The resignation of de Selves is thought to be imminent.

Belgium.—Van der Velde, the Socialist leader, introduced a bill in Parliament providing for an investigation into the condition of the natives in the Congo, and the enforcement of reforms in that country. He alleges that several Catholic missions are evading the law with regard to the manufacture and sale of alcoholic liquors; that a Scheut missionary, charged with killing a chief and acquitted for irresponsibility, was allowed afterwards to return to the mission; that the Jesuits were kidnapping and retaining native children and also chaining and flogging the natives; that many of the territorial Governors were violating the laws about elephant hunting; that many of the natives were performing compulsory labor; and that the high administrative authorities of the Congo do not consider that a strict enforcement of the laws should be observed.

The Minister of the Colonies, Renkin, against whom these charges were directed, replied that the sale of alcohol had been forbidden, that the missionary who had killed the chief was duly acquitted as not responsible, and that, though sent back to the Congo after the recovery of his mind, was confined to interior work; that the punishment of natives was not done by priests, but by catechists, and, finally, that the whole set of charges was made up for electioneering purposes; whereupon Van der Velde made the amazing declaration that he had not made any charges, but had simply put some questions. The accusations about maladministration, forced labor, and the execution of prisoners were likewise refuted. Van der Velde again said, "but I don't accuse you," whereupon the Minister properly protested against such a method of procedure. At the end of the discussion Renkin received a long ovation from the Right.

Italy.—The cost of the war is estimated to be two million lire a day, but it is insisted that Italy has enough money to finance the expedition for a year. On December 14 there was a report through Turkish channels of a defeat of the Italians at Bengazi. Six hundred were said to be killed and many wounded. On the following day the Italians made an advance of about eight miles along the coast and took possession of the oasis of Tadjura, in which were eight small villages. They found the bodies of many Italian soldiers horribly mutilated. The Turks are gathering around Bengazi, Homs, Derna and Tobruk, and the Italians are reinforcing Bengazi and Derna. Their progress inland will meet with serious difficulties.—An attack was made by the Turks on the advanced Italian lines at Bengazi on December 11, but without success. Bengazi was occupied by the Italians on October 19 after a bombardment for three hours by thirteen Italian warships. The Turks have repeatedly endeavored to retake the place but have always been repulsed. A number of Italian ships are in the Red Sea, occasionally bombarding villages and forts. An American liner from New York, the Martha Washington, and a British steamer, the Baron Polworth, have been fired upon by Italian warships, but by mistake.

Germany.—The trial of five spies before the Imperial Court has afforded startling evidence of a system of espionage conducted in the service of the British information bureau. The confessions of an English ship broker revealed the fact that German ship yards, machine shops and coast defences had been under constant observation by an organized agency. The plans of the war ships under construction, the data regarding the German submarines, and even the service to be rendered in case of war by the steamers of the Hamburg-American line, and the North German Lloyd, and other important navy secrets were divulged to the English bureau. The five spies received sentences of from two to twelve years of severe penal servitude.—The rubber goods manufacturers of Germany have given publicity in the Frankfurter Zeitung to a statement that a boycott has been instigated by Italian physicians against German medical supplies, whose high quality is everywhere acknowledged. The boycott is beginning to extend itself likewise to other articles of commerce. The reason assigned by the Italians, according to this statement, is the want of sympathy on the part of the German press and public towards the Italian campaign and the methods employed in it. The criticism which has at times appeared in German papers is especially resented in Italy.—The Reichstag has been formally dissolved and the elections for the new parliament will take place on January 12.—The strike of fifty thousand women garment makers and three thousand tailors in Berlin, which began November 23, has now been discontinued as a lost cause. The labor leaders urged the workers to return to their industries and wait for a more favorable opportunity to renew their demands.—The introduction of obligatory military service for women was advocated by Professor Witzel, at Düsseldorf, before the Patriotic Women's League. The suggestion met with enthusiastic reception from the women suffragists. They believe that by such a measure woman suffrage would be assured in Germany.

Austria.—The Minister of Finance, v. Zaleski, has given a very depressing account in the Chamber of Deputies regarding the depleted condition of the state treasury. He demanded that provision should be made for a larger revenue. The Italians and their sympathizers, however, immediately obstructed all further action. Their object is to force a measure permitting the establishment of an Italian law faculty in some German city, a project which has been strongly opposed by the German Nationalverband in view of the present attitude of Italy towards Austria.

Spain.—The unspeakable Nakens, who is notorious for his warfare against all religion and government, recently published some highly offensive anticlerical cartoons in his newspaper. For this he was haled before the Madrid police court and fined. He appealed and carried the matter to the supreme court, which confirmed the sentence, declared that he had no grounds for an appeal from the first decision, and sentenced him to pay all the costs.—Emigration agents are so active in the province of Galicia and are so heedless of the law governing their calling that a formal protest has been laid before the President of the Council.—“The Women's League of Catholic Action,” of Barcelona, has begun the publication of a monthly magazine for the furtherance of their work.—In the same city a “Young Strangers' Club” has been opened for the express purpose of forming a place of meeting and rational amusement for the youths who are serving their time in the army.—Monsignor Lauri, who took the biretta to Cardinal Cos y Macho, Archbishop of Valladolid, gave out in an interview that at the approaching Consistory, when the Cardinal will go to Rome to receive the red hat, it is likely that there will be another creation of Cardinals, including two or three from Latin America.

Persia.—Mr. Shuster, the American Treasurer General, still holds his place. A more ultimate “ultimatum” from Russia extended the time for the Persian Parliament to deliberate, and the 4,000 Cossacks that had been dispatched from Teheran, halted at Kasbin, four days' march from the capital. The Cabinet was ready to sacrifice Mr. Shuster but the Parliament refused to dismiss him. Lord Grey, the head of the British Foreign Office has supported Russia in its demands, and insists that Persia should employ no foreigners as ministers without leave from her two “guardians.” The Moslem clergy are rallying to the support of Shuster, and he is determined to keep his post till the Russian troops force him to resign.

China.—Dr. Sun Yat Sen, the foreign emissary and financial agent of the Revolution, who had been in America and Europe collecting money and awakening interest, has returned to China. Delegates from ten disaffected provinces are reported to have met and framed a constitution similar to ours. Nanking is to be the capital of the new republic and Dr. Sun its George Washington. The call of the “Six Companies” for a loan of $2,000,000 to finance the experiment has met with a prompt response from patriotic Chinese in this country and Canada, while Dr. Wu Ting Fang, the rebel leader, has been trying to persuade Great Britain and the United States to lend the Manchu dynasty no money. Yuan Shi Kai, the prime minister, continues to pause, though an imperial decree has been issued permitting the removal of the cue, the badge of servitude, imposed on the Chinese by their conquerors three hundred years ago.

QUESTIONS OF THE DAY

The Poet of Christmastide

"The Christian Virgil" is the classic appellation of Sedulius. In 494, within half a century of his death, Pope St. Gelasius, with Saints Augustine and Ambrose before his mind, singled out "the admirable Sedulius" as the chief of Christian poets. Fortunatus, author of "Vexilla Regis" and "Pange Lingua"; Bede, Alcuin, and a host of his eulogists down to our own day, had chiefly in mind the "Carmen Paschale," which remained for eight centuries the greatest of Christian epics, and is still supreme among the heroic poems of which Christ, the Saviour of men, is always the central theme. Of the five books that sing in some 2,000 heroic lines the incidents of man's Redemption, the second, which pictures the glories of the new-born Child and His Virgin Mother, has the distinction of having some of its verses incorporated, with other lines of Sedulius on the same theme, in the sacred liturgy of the Church. For fifteen centuries his poems have been enshrined in the Divine Office during the octaves of Christmas and Epiphany, and one of these, his famous apostrophe to Our Lady, enjoys the unparalleled honor of forming an integral portion of the Ritual of the Mass. It is for this reason we regard Sedulius as the consecrated poet of Christmas.

His rapturous outburst on the birth of the Saviour is classic in diction and tenderly loving in sentiment. We give the thought, but in this as in other versions we do not pretend to render the blended power and sweetness with which the poet images in pregnant Latin the might and the melting mercy of the Saviour:

Bright the new light on the earth and the sheen in the sky and the glory
When from the pure womb of Mary Christ issued forth in new splendor
Fair beyond children of men like a spouse from his bridals rejoicing.
Radiant His form, but more winsome the grace from His lips ever flowing.
Facile His love condescending! To shatter the yoke that fast bound us
Servile to sin's domination, the Lord took our servitude on Him:
Who from the dawning of time was the Master of birth and of being Hides in the swathings of childhood; and He, Whom nor depths of the ocean
Nor the wide orb of the earth nor the high halls of heaven can compass.
Chains down His might to the frame of a Child, and Omnipotence sleeps in a manger!

Having sung the praises of the Child, the poet forgets not the mother. Indeed he forgets her nowhere, and St. Alphonsus' "Glories of Mary" contain no warmer outpourings of the heart than Sedulius wrote of her and to her in the first half of the fifth century. His "Salva Sancta Parens," following immediately the lines translated above, far transcend Wordsworth's lines on Our Lady, and competent critics have pronounced it not inferior to Dante's. The vocal music of the words and the waves of soft yet stately cadences that run through the lines, ascending and descending in many chords and meanings, can be valued only in the original. We translate the lines from which the Church has taken the Introit of the Mass of Our Lady:

Hail! Holy Mother of the new-born King
Whose empire runs for aye, encompassing
The orbs of earth and sky, and binding all
The circlings of eternity in thrall.
Hail, thou of women blest, whose wondrous womb
Held mother's joys and virgin's flowering bloom!
Thy like ne'er was nor will be. Thou alone
Hast filled the pleasure of thy God, thy Son.

The Church has conferred unusual distinction on this apostrophe, some of its lines forming also the Antiphon of the Christmas Lauds. To a hymn of Sedulius she has given still further honor, using one portion of it in the Lauds of Christmas and of the Vigil of Epiphany, while another forms Epiphany's Vesper Hymn. It consists of twenty-three abecedarian stanzas in iambic tetrameters, but embodies many verse forms unknown to Horace. Gaelic assonance, alliteration and end rhymes abound, linking verse to verse and emphasis to emphasis in a cunning chain of melody. Wedding to Roman measures the intricate metrical system of ancient Ireland, the poet would seem to have concentrated the dual resources of his art on the weaving of a wreath for Mary's Child. This should suffice, were extrinsic evidence wanting, to fix the nationality of Sedulius Scotus. Pope Urban VIII's revisers, unaware of the interwoven system, changed the line "Parvoque lacte pastus est" to "Et lacte modico," etc., thus destroying the alliterative assonance of the Gael. The following are the verses of the Christmas Lauds commencing,

"A SOLIS ORTUS CARDINE."

From where the sun-gates ope to morn
Unto the broad earth's farthest rim
Let us to Christ, our Chieftain, hymn,
Our King of Mary Virgin born.

The Author blest of things create
Assumed the body of a slave
From death to save the lives He gave
And flesh by Flesh emancipate.

The stainless breast of maiden chaste
Hath new celestial favors wooed,
And secrets sealed to virginhood
A virgin's hallowed womb have graced.

Her God from Heaven's high throne she won
To make her heart's pure home His shrine;
And lo, a maid, by gift divine,
Immaculate conceived a Son!

And He is born of Mother-maid,
Whom Gabriel had prophesied,
Whom John exulting had descried
Within the virgin cloister laid.

He brooked the lowly crib and grot,
And shrank not from the bed of straw;
A little milk fed Him whose law
Ensures that birdlings hunger not.

The angels to the Child-God sing
And Heaven's exultant choirs resound:
A Shepherd have the shepherds found,
Creator of all things and King.

After events gave significance to the strange coincidence that while Patrick, a stranger, was preaching Christ in Ireland, Sedulius, an exile from Ireland, was hymning Him abroad. Having besought toward the end of the "Carmen Paschale" that his name be written "last on the list of the freemen of God," he adds, in what some may discern Irish fashion:

Great things I ask, but great art wont to give Thou Whom the faint in hope alone aggrieve.

Hosts of his countrymen were soon to follow him, and, with a like boldness and humility of faith, to exemplify in their lives and engrave deep on the heart of the continent the love of Christ that inspired the epilogue of his Paschal Song:

O Christ! I pray Thee, grave within my heart
Thy Truths Eternal which my verses chart,
That seeking aye Thy will, Thou aiding me,
I may find Heaven's joys, my Chief, with Thee!

M. KENNY, S.J.

Cambridge University and the "Encyclopædia Britannica"

The Senate of the University of Cambridge met last week to appoint a number of its members to serve on the Committee, or to use the accepted title, "the Syndicate," of the University Press. The Syndicate is responsible for the direction of all the publishing and printing work done under the auspices of the University.

Seven members of the Senate have taken the strong course of publicly appealing to their colleagues not to elect as a member of the Syndicate for the coming year "anyone who has shared the responsibility of the Syndicate in undertaking the publication of the 'Encyclopædia Britannica.'" Archdeacon Cunningham, of Trinity, invites other members of the Senate to join in this protest. He and his colleagues, who have taken this action, point out that the reelection of any of those who have been associated with the issuing of the new edition of the "Encyclopædia" from the University Press "might be regarded as the formal acceptance by the Senate of a policy which we believe is very generally condemned by members of the University and against which we desire to protest."

This development will come as a surprise to the public, which has certainly been led to believe that the new edition of the "Encyclopædia" represented a work on which a world famous University was proud to have set its seal. This idea has been a great factor in securing subscriptions to the work. But Archdeacon Cunningham and his six fellow-members of the Senate are anxious to repudiate any responsibility for the work as belonging to the University, and complain that no clear statement has been issued of the basis on which the Syndicate agreed to its being issued from their Press. To quote the words of the protest:

"No information has been given as to the rights which the University has acquired and the obligations which the University has incurred, but the publication of this work, although it has been undertaken by the Syndicate on their own authority, has not been treated as a transaction in the ordinary course of their business. It has been represented as the direct act of the University in its corporate capacity. Statements have been put forward that the University has undertaken the publication as part of a definite educational policy, and the prefatory note prefixed to the first volume, and dated from Cambridge, suggests to anyone, who is not acquainted with the facts, that the University is responsible for the preparation and production of the work. We believe that the reputation of the University has been injured by the representations which have been made, that this reputation has suffered and is suffering by the methods taken to advertise the work, and on these grounds we enter our protest."

This is strong language. The members of the Senate responsible for the arrangement will hardly be able to avoid telling in their own defence the story of the transaction with the promoters of the "Encyclopædia," about which there is so far a strange obscurity.

To understand something of what has happened one must go back a few years. The first edition of the "Encyclopædia Britannica" was issued at Edinburgh, in three volumes, more than a century ago. It grew in bulk and scope in successive editions, and was entirely recast and rewritten in the Ninth Edition, edited for Messrs. Black, of Edinburgh, by Professors T. S. Baynes and W. Robertson Smith, of which the first volume was issued in 1875, and the twenty-fourth and last in 1888. An index volume was added in the following year.

It had a large sale among subscribers, but the inevitable result of the publication having been spread over thirteen years was that by the time it was completed much of the matter in the earlier volumes was out of date, and this militated against the further sale of the book. Messrs. Black had a large stock of remainders on hand, besides a set of stereo plates. They were approached by a speculative American group, of which the centre was a Mr. Hooper. He entered into an arrangement for taking over this dead stock and the stereos, and began a splendidly organized advertising campaign for the sale of the work on the instalment plan in the United States. The "Encyclopædia" was boomed with advertisements and circulars and "follows up," that made men feel they could not live happily without the twenty-four volumes and the big index. The sale went even beyond the expectations of the promoters. They had to use their stereos to reprint.

Having exhausted the field of buyers in America they planned a similar campaign in England. By a new stroke of genius Mr. Hooper associated the London Times with his enterprise. The work was so well pushed that subscriptions rolled in, despite the protests of critics, who pointed out that much of the book was out of date, that—for instance—the article on Africa spoke of Livingstone being last heard of somewhere beyond Tanganyika, and the map of Africa showed a blank where Johannesburg had arisen since it was printed, while the article on Electricity spoke of electric lighting being still in the pioneer stage. The Times met these criticisms by promising a series of supplementary volumes. These were issued, about a dozen of them, as the "Tenth Edition," with an atlas and a general index. For these a new subscription list was opened, and naturally most of those who had subscribed to the old volumes put their names down for them. Otherwise they would have been left with an out-of-date work of reference encumbering their shelves.

At last the field of possible buyers had been covered. The Hooper group had done exceedingly well from a business point of view. But they dreamed of new worlds to conquer. Suddenly paragraphs in the newspapers announced that a completely new edition of the famous "Encyclopædia" was in preparation, a work that would sum up the science and scholarship of the twentieth century. The Times had been used to restart the sale of the old Ninth Edition. But there was a still better sponsor found for the Eleventh. It was announced that it would be printed at the University Press, at Cambridge, and issued from the publishing office of Cambridge University in London. The average member of the public naturally concluded that the new edition was hall-marked with the official approval of the University—that it was in fact its work.

What really had happened appears to have been that the promoters of the "Encyclopædia" had simply persuaded the directors of the Press at Cambridge to do the printing and their business staff in London to handle the issue to the subscribers and booksellers. The "Encyclopædia" is certainly not the property of the University. It is, I believe, the property of a registered joint stock company representing the old Hooper group, that so successfully engineered the sale of the old Ninth Edition and its supplement. They have used precisely the same methods to "boom" the sale, and they boast that it has been enormous. The clever way in which the impression has been created that the publication is part of a great educational movement prompted by the University of Cambridge has helped to produce this result, but it is now clear that a considerable party in the University Senate resents this association of their time-honored institution with this advertising boom, and is not flattered by the much-vaunted "Encyclopædia" being represented as the essence of Cambridge scholarship.

A. HILLIARD ATTERIDGE.

The Ketteler Centenary

Wilhelm Emmanuel von Ketteler, the illustrious Bishop of Mainz, the pioneer of the Catholic social movement, was born at Münster on Christmas Day, 1811. Emmanuel the grateful parents called him, in honor of the Word made flesh. Little did they know how precious was to be that Christmas gift of theirs, not merely for themselves, but for the German people, and indeed for the whole Catholic world. The light of the star of Bethlehem which shone upon the cradle of that little one was never to fade from his life. His love for the poor and afflicted was a spark enkindled in his heart by the Christ-Child. He, too, was to be a high priest of Christ's people, and the first words he addressed to his flock were a public "vow of poverty": the avoidance of all superfluity in his belongings, and the consecration to charity of himself and of all that he could spare from his episcopal income. This pledge he solemnly kept, and when he died his death was like that fore-shadowed at the crib. There was nothing that he could leave to the world except his blessing and the result of his labors.

Of magnificent and commanding presence, with clear-cut features and kindly yet penetrating glance, Bishop Ketteler exercised an irresistible power wherever he appeared. His voice could sway the largest audiences, and his written word was eloquently expressive of his great personality. Of the many "claims of reverence" that met in him we can here consider only one: his position as the founder and the leader of the Catholic social movement.

His first utterance turned the eyes of all Germany upon him. It was in the memorable year 1848, when as pastor of Hopsten and representative of the Frankfurt Parliament he was called upon to speak at the grave of two deputies who had been brutally slain by a furious mob: "Who," he asked, "are the murderers of our friends? Not altogether the frenzied men who have so mercilessly killed and mangled their victims, but rather they who have plucked the Faith from the hearts of the people." He pointed to the appalling contrasts of poverty and greed, of misery and voluptuousness in the life about him, and to those false leaders who already had begun to set the poor against the rich, and who instead of striving to heal the wounds of society were only engaged in tearing them open more widely. There was in his voice neither terror nor despair, but only a strong, unconquerable hope in Christ and in His Church, the one salvation of mankind.

That same year he delivered his six famous sermons on the "Social Questions of the Day" in the Cathedral of Mainz. He showed the supreme importance of the social problem, which neither politics nor change of government could ever solve. In clear, masterly phrase, he demonstrated how incompatible with the safe, orderly and peaceful management of industry is the false Communism, whose heir is the Socialism of to-day. He con-trusted with it the true Christian Communism, by which the rich are taught the salutary lesson that to God alone, and not to them, belongs the absolute possession of the goods which are entrusted to them. They were the stewards of the Lord charged with serious duties towards the laborer and the poor.

Unlike the false leaders, whose popularity depends upon flattering the vanity and pandering to the passions of the multitude, in strong but gentle language he re-proved the faults of the poor themselves. The expression "Property is theft" he denounced as a monstrous lie but admitted that it contained a terrible truth. "We must labor entirely to destroy the truth in it," he said, "that it may once more become totally a lie." The purpose of God in permitting inequality of earthly goods was that charity and all the virtues of the social life might be practiced.

It was in the year 1848, a few weeks before the French revolution, that Marx flung upon the labor world the Communist manifesto, that contains in principle all subsequent Socialist developments. The contrast between the founders of the two opposing social movements, the Socialistic and the Catholic, presents a picture of absorbing interest.

Both were working simultaneously, independently, and from different points of view, at the solution of the same problem. Both were born leaders of most remarkable gifts, of originality in thought, of boundless capacity for work, of fiery temperament, of utter fearlessness in the enunciation of their principles. Each was supreme in his field. "Marx stood higher, saw farther, took a wider, clearer, quicker survey than all of us," said Engels, his co-laborer; "Marx was a genius, we others were, at best, men of talent." Ketteler, on the other hand, was no less unquestionably the greatest prelate in the social sphere. Marx, inspired with the hatred of the lost archangel, casting off all religion and belief in God, fulminated his thunders against the entire state of existing Society. Confusing abuses with inherent evils, he strove, under cover of materialistic evolution, to set class against class in a deadly conflict, lifting up the battle cry which was to arouse every latent passion of envy, greed and hatred in the hearts of his followers. "Expropriate the expropriators!" was his summons to the people. Ketteler, on the contrary, urged on by the Spirit of God, came to bring peace and blessing to the world. With all the power of his high office, his majestic presence and his stirring eloquence he fearlessly set his face against the oppression of the poor, the injustice of the law, the godlessness of the schools, and the usurpation of the authority of the Church by the State. To these last two causes he rightly attributed in largest measure the abject poverty of the masses. He came to minister spiritually and temporally to the wants of the poor and to reorganize the working classes. That many of the conditions he describes no longer exist is due to his initiative, and the future development both of industry and of organization, which he clearly foretold, has introduced mighty changes in the social problem.

According to Marxian philosophy, the root of all the world's evil, of vice as well as of poverty, is purely economic, and therefore a state of prosperity and universal virtue can be effected only by economic causes. This is the essential doctrine of the Marxian theory; for if men remain such as they are the Socialistic commonwealth must clearly be impossible. The Socialists themselves confess it. Ketteler's mind saw further. He too recognized the economic causes and pointed them out; but beneath them all, in the soil untouched by Marx or Engels, he found the real root of all disorder, original sin.

"How is it possible," he asked, "that on the one hand we see rich men, in the face of the most elementary laws of nature and without a qualm of conscience, wasting their substance riotously, while the poor are starving and the children degenerate? How is it possible for us to relish superfluities whilst our brothers are in want of the barest necessities of life? How is it possible that our hearts do not break in the midst of revelry and song when we think of the sick poor who in the heat of the fever are stretching out their hands for refreshment and no one is by to give it to them?" Then after describing the saddest of all sights, the little children growing up in vice and sin, he continues: "And on the other hand, how is it possible that the poor and their godless seducers, contrary to all natural right and all common sense, embrace the absurd theory of false Communism, and look to it for salvation, though it is so evident that it would drag all humanity down to its ruin?" The answer, he says is to be found in the doctrine of original sin, without which man must remain a mystery to himself. Christ and His Church alone can afford the remedy.

When Ketteler was raised to the dignity of Bishop of Mainz, a new sphere of usefulness was thrown open to him. He soon showed that he was not, like Marx, a mere theorist; nor, like Lassalle, a utopian agitator. He was practical even to the least detail. He understood that the first conditions for social regeneration were the religious life, the Catholic school and the Catholic press. After a bitter fight against the surviving Josephism and kindred state oppression he succeeded in founding within his diocese a truly Catholic seminary. He allowed himself no rest until he had introduced all the religious orders necessary for the countless charitable and educational works projected by him. He organized Christian labor associations of the most varied kinds and spread those already in existence, and towards the end of his life was actively engaged in planning the foundation of a society for the erection of workingmen's homes. He even desired to test the advantages of voluntary cooperative labor; but although he communicated with Lassallé upon this subject his work was not to be based upon Lassallian principles. A voluntary Christian Communism was an ideal which he always dearly cherished.

Perhaps most remarkable was the wisdom shown in his proposed legislative enactments. We quote from the draft of a political program drawn up by him in which he makes the following demands on the Government:

- "1. Reorganization of the craft and labor classes.
- "2. Legal protection for working children and women against capitalistic greed.
- "3. Labor protection by laws to restrict the hours of labor and establish the Sunday rest.
- "4. Legal protection to provide for the health and morality of laborers in their places of work.
- "5. Appointment of inspectors to supervise these protective laws enacted in favor of labor."

Each of these regulations, down to definite practical details elsewhere indicated by him, has actually been adopted by the Government, and if Germany to-day stands foremost among the nations of Europe for her intelligent labor legislation it is largely due to the wisdom and enterprise of Bishop Ketteler. He himself was a member of the Centre Party until, owing to existing circumstances, he deemed it more consonant with his episcopal dignity to withdraw from the conflicts of parliamentary debates. Yet what is most admirable and what most endears him to our hearts is the fact that amid all these great undertakings he could always find time for his ceaseless visits to the poor and the afflicted. His means, his time and all his strength he looked upon, in the spirit of a divine and apostolic Communism, as belonging to them.

"He was my great precursor in the social field," the "Pope of the workingmen," Leo XIII, could truly say of him upon whose grave the Catholic laborers of Germany in tender affection placed their wreath this year, with the inscription: "The Bishop of the Workingmen."

JOSEPH HUSSLEIN, S.J.

The Deaf and Dumb

After reading the editorial on the "Britannica and the Deaf Mutes" in AMERICA of November 18, and Father McCarthy's letter on "Perverting St. Augustine" in the same number, I was sorely puzzled. Father McCarthy had spent "a reasonable" time over "the eleven ponderous tomes of the saint" and found but one reference to the deaf and dumb, which indeed, far from regarding them as desperately deficient, refers to their method of communication with praise. The Rev. Arnold Paine, M.A., of Oxford, after a month of search and inquiry, was unable to find the offensive quotation; he frankly admitted that he had copied it from a previous edition of the "Britannica." Now, what puzzled me was this: where did the author of the article in the ninth edition find the quotation? He or the person from whom he got it could not, surely, have invented it. The great doctor must have made some statement or other similar to the one attributed to him, otherwise it could not have occurred to anyone to quote him in support of it.

I took down the index volume to Canon Caillau's edition of St. Augustine's works and found, as Father McCarthy had found, but one reference to the deaf and dumb—Liber de Quantitate Animæ, chap. 18. St. Augustine asks Evodius: "Didn't you see the handsome and polished young man at Milan who is dumb, and so deaf that he cannot understand others except by the movement of the body, and makes himself understood in no other way?"

I next turned to Herder's "Kirchenlexikon." In the article entitled "Taubstummenunterricht" (Instruction of Deaf Mutes) Habingsreither tells us that in ancient times little or no attention was given to deaf mutes. "Aristotle," he says, "regards hearing as the sense through which education is received; hence he is of opinion that those born blind can be more easily educated than those born deaf and dumb (De Sensu et Sensibili, I, 9). Consequently he does not look on the education of deaf mutes as something impossible. St. Augustine follows the same opinion. Interpreting the text Rom. X, 17 he says (Contra Julianum, III, chap. 4): 'This defect (of being born blind) impedes faith,' for one born deaf cannot acquire knowledge for himself."

I looked up the reference to Aristotle's peri aistheseos kai aistheton and found that, although some liberties had been taken with the original, it was in the main correct. Aristotle does not say that "hearing is the sense through which education is received," but that "in an accidental manner hearing is of the greatest importance for the exercise of the intellect."

Having fared well thus far, I proceeded to verify the quotation from St. Augustine. His Contra Julianum Pelagianum, Lib. III, c. 4 does not contain even the shadow of a reference to deaf mutes or to St. Paul's "faith cometh by hearing." Thinking that perhaps the Opus Imperfectum contra Julianum was meant, I searched for the reference there, but with equal ill success. (Herder's "Konversationslexikon" gives the same false reference as the "Kirchenlexikon.") So I set to work to read the whole of the third book of the Contra Julianum Pelagianum. My patience was soon rewarded. Chapter X contained the "incriminating" passage. Julian had maintained that men were endowed with the dower of innocence at their birth. "We agree with you," Augustine answers, "as far as personal sins are concerned: but since you, (and the Pelagians) deny that they are subject to original sin, tell me whose fault is it that such great innocence is sometimes born blind, sometimes deaf? The latter defect hinders even faith itself, according to the testimony of the Apostle, who says: 'Faith then cometh by hearing.'" (Quod vitium etiam ipsam impedit fidem, Apostolo testante qui dicit: Igitur fides ex auditu.)

What does St. Augustine say in this passage, in which he is supposed to have "erred so amazingly"? Merely this: Corporal defects and infirmities are consequences of Original Sin. One of the greatest of these defects is deafness, because it is an impediment to the faith. The saint does not say that deafness makes the reception of faith impossible. As every student of Latin knows, impedire is the opposite of expedire and literally means "to entangle one's feet in a snare." On the use of this word the famous German philologist, Dr. Hermann Menge, says: "Impedire signifies to make more difficult, to prevent a thing from going forward; to place an obstacle in the way: impedire aliquem in jure suo, alicuius profectionem, opus, studia." (Lat. Synonymik No. 75.)

It need hardly be mentioned that neither St. Paul nor St. Augustine speaks of faith in infants, but of faith in adults, viz., assent to the truths of revelation, which are ordinarily proposed to us by word of mouth. Words are merely symbols of ideas, but by no means the only symbols. Hence St. Paul does not say that faith comes by hearing only. St. Augustine knew right well that deaf mutes were not inaccessible to instruction, for he positively says in the passage quoted above from the treatise De Quantitate Animæ that the young man whom he had seen in Milan could understand others and make himself understood by means of signs.

To sum up:

1) St. Augustine did not declare "that the deaf could have no faith," since "faith comes by hearing only." He says that deafness from birth puts an obstacle in the way of faith—an assertion which no one in his senses will contest.

2) He does not make his statement as an interpretation of Rom. X, 17, as the "Kirchenlexicon" would have us believe. He merely quotes a well-known text of St. Paul in support of his contention that to be born deaf is a great defect, and an impediment to the reception of the Faith.

3) He had seen a young man at Milan "honestissimi corporis et elegantissimæ urbanitatis" who, though deaf and dumb, could communicate with others by signs. Hence it is absurd to say that he "doomed all those born deaf to a life of darkness and ignorance."

4) St. Augustine does not quote St. Paul as saying that "faith comes by hearing alone"; he was no interpolator of texts, and he probably took his texts at first hand, not from "foolish comments of subsequent writers."

5) Aristotle did not think that "the deaf could not acquire knowledge." He says that "the blind are more intelligent than the deaf and dumb."

6) Even if St. Augustine had believed that those born deaf and dumb could never come to the knowledge of God and His Revelation, and the means of salvation, this would by no means imply that he damned them to Hell. As a good Catholic he would have argued thus: These deaf mutes buried here were either baptized as children, and then, remaining children all their lives as far as moral responsibility is concerned, they went straight to Heaven when they died; or they were not baptized, and in that case they will go where all the unbaptized children go. If they were not baptized in their infancy, they could have been baptized at any time later on, and confirmed too, and thus attained eternal salvation. If the deaf and dumb are "doomed to a life of darkness and ignorance here," it is simply impossible for them to be eternally damned hereafter. But, thank God, they can come to the knowledge and the love of the truth, and thanks to devoted priests like Father McCarthy the number of deaf mutes perfectly instructed in their holy religion is increasing from day to day.

GEORGE METLAKE.

CORRESPONDENCE

Cambridge Disowns the "Britannica"

LONDON, December 8, 1911.

I sent you last week the protest made by a group of prominent members of the University of Cambridge against the reelection to the University Press Syndicate of any of the Syndics who had been concerned in the publication of the "Encyclopædia Britannica." On Tuesday last the promoters of the protest issued the following announcement:

"In a protest which we circulated last Friday we stated that we feared that the reappointment of anyone who had shared in the responsibility of the Syndicate in connection with the publication of the 'Encyclopædia Britannica' might be regarded as the formal acceptance of a policy which we believed to be very generally condemned by members of the University, and while raising no question as to the character of the work, we invited other members of the Senate to join in this protest against the action of the Syndics.

"We write now to thank those who have done so, and to inform them that there is no need for further action, as no proposal is made for the reappointment of the Syndics who are retiring. We have learned from the letters that have reached us that there is a deep and widespread feeling in Cambridge, and outside Cambridge, with regard to the question which we raised; and the accuracy of our statements has not been called in question. Our protest has already served its purpose; it has made clear to the public that the responsibility for the publication and advertisement of the 'Encyclopædia Britannica' rests with the Syndics, and not with the University: it has prevented the possibility of any misinterpretation of the Senate's attitude, which would have been natural, if the reappointment of any Syndic had been proposed and tacitly accepted."

A public discussion has been thus avoided by the members of the Press Syndicate not asking for reelection. If they had done so there would have been a very striking revelation of the strength of University opinion behind the protest movement.

It must be noted that the objection raised is not to the contents of the "Encyclopædia," but to the action of the Press Syndics in allowing responsibility, for what it had taken no official part in producing, to be thrust on the University, and its honored name to be utilized in the organization of an advertising campaign. In this campaign there is no doubt that the impression was conveyed that the new edition of the "Encyclopædia" was an official publication of the University of Cambridge.

As a sample of the way in which this propaganda was worked we may take the letter addressed to the London Spectator by the Secretary of the University Press Syndicate in September, 1910, on the eve of the publication of the work. He spoke of the coming issue of the book as an epoch-making event, pointed out that it marked a new development of university work, the modern university, through the medium of the printing press, establishing direct relations with the English-speaking world, and went on to say:

"This eleventh edition, which has been eight years in preparation, is a fresh and original survey of the world's knowledge. . . . It will therefore be offered to the public by the University of Cambridge in the hope and belief that it will be found a trustworthy guide to sound learning, and an instrument of culture of world-wide influence."

It was talk like this that made the English-speaking public not unnaturally conclude that the "Encyclopædia" was something more than the speculation of a mere publishing company—that it had been planned, organized, carried through and given to the public by a great university with its official guarantee that it represented the sum of contemporary scholarship and science. No wonder there was a rush of orders, amounting, we are told, to the total value of over a million sterling in the first six months.

But the "Encyclopædia" was really complete except for the final touches on the proof sheets when it established a first connection with Cambridge by the arrangement for printing and publishing. The eight years of editorial work were all over. All details had been settled, down to the choice of paper for printing. It is even said that a great part of the book was already in the form of stereotype plates. And it was not till July 31, 1910, that the negotiations with the University Press were concluded and the work was handed over to the Press for production. Then began the advertising boom, with the dexterous parading of the university in the forefront of it all. No wonder that there has been a growing protest in the university against such tactics. The wonder is that it did not come to a head much sooner.

A. H. A.

A Lesson from Limerick

Leo XIII declared a Catholic newspaper in a parish a continual mission for good, and it follows that an anti-Catholic or immoral newspaper is a continual mission for evil. Unfortunately the missionaries of evil are immeasurably more numerous and aggressive, and not infrequently they have the parish all to themselves. These statements are threadbare from iteration. Pulpits, lecture halls and conventions have been echoing them in a hundred forms as long as we remember, and all the while the literature of evil has been growing worse and more widespread and the Catholic press spending much of its energy in a perennial struggle for existence.

Conditions in England seem to be even worse. The National Vigilance Association of London, a non-sectarian body, has just issued a pamphlet deploring the myriad "publication of unwholesome garbage, the daily and weekly collection of everything of news of a sensational, prurient and horrible nature" by papers which, "depending for their existence on fostering a vitiated taste and the creation of an appetite for the dreadful and uncleanly suggestive, find their way in hundreds of thousands of copies into English homes." Analyzing the contents of five of these "Sunday" papers, it finds the average: 12 columns, divorce cases; 6½ columns, murders; 2 columns, scandals; 2 columns, matrimonial cases; 2 columns, sexual crimes and "painful cases"; and it asks: "What can be done to check this vampire press that enriches itself by the unearthing of all the foul occurrences which stain humanity, serving them spiced and embellished for their misguided readers?"

New legislation was suggested, but the president of the Association, Lord Aberdeen, the Irish Viceroy, hesitated to tell them of a better remedy he had found in Ireland. The people of Limerick had "rallied for the protection of their homes against the importation of objectionable papers from the other side of the channel" and had proved "that there is no need for any community to submit tamely to the injurious incursions of an evil trade." Limerick, he declared, had stopped this trade in a week or two, and we have since learned that all Ireland is copying its methods. The manner of its doing should prove instructive.

Among the consequences of proximity to England, the corrupt British press, which Lord Aberdeen denounces, can reach Ireland on the date of publication before its people are awake. As the "Sunday" paper is not an Irish institution, the British purveyors had the field to themselves. They supplied the market liberally, and the market created the demand. Over 40,000 copies of this "vampire press" were distributed in Dublin, and in Limerick and other cities and towns in like proportion. The priests denounced them, of course, and so did the Gaelic League; agents were visited here and there, and not a few promised to discontinue the sale, but under the pressure of competition they generally relapsed. The Catholic Truth Society spread its excellent publications and the annual Conferences passed strong resolutions against pernicious literature, but still this worst form of "Anglicisation" was growing in volume and effect. Nearly all the papers and addresses at the last Truth Society Conference in Dublin warned the people against this danger, but there was not much hope of better results than such warnings had produced before.

A few days later, before all the delegates had returned to their homes, there was a surprising change. When some men were discussing measures to be taken against the Sunday paper inundation in Limerick, Father O'Connor, a young priest who had given much attention to the matter said: "The way to stop it, is to stop it." He outlined a plan of campaign, named a Vigilance Committee of Gaelic Leaguers and Catholic pressmen who had proved themselves zealous and resolute, and set them to work. Though trainloads of unclean literature were wont to be distributed every Sunday, in two weeks no objectionable paper could be bought or sold in Limerick.

The committee having visited the news agents and vendors, and received from each a pledge to receive or sell none of the papers listed as objectionable, proceeded to see to it that the promises were kept. Meanwhile the clergy, with the earnest approval of the Bishop, were working on the lever of public opinion. This was ready to their hand, for Limerick is probably the most intensely Catholic city in Ireland. The numerous churches, secular and regular, may be seen filled with men kneeling around the confessionals on a Saturday evening, but the most striking evidence of masculine Catholicity is noticeable in the fine church of the Redemptorists, known locally as "the holy fathers." They have a men's Confraternity that numbers over five thousand, who assemble every Monday night to recite the Rosary and Office of our Lady and sing to the Lord in unison. Long before the Gaelic League was started the director of the Confraternity was a Gaelic speaker, as is the present General of the Redemptorists, and so it happened that Gaelic became the official language of the Confraternity. On a certain Sunday sermons were preached in every church against corrupt literature, and Father Gleason, C.S.S.R., addressed his Confraternity in Gaelic, urging them in the name of Padruig and Brigid and Columcille to purge Limerick of the poison that came to them in the language of the Gall.

Practical steps were taken to give permanent effect to the spirit that was aroused. The newsboys were formed into a Guild of the Confraternity, and having received Communion in a body, were each given a badge of membership. The men promised to buy from, and the local newspapers to supply, only venders who wore the badge of the guild. The boys proved loyal, with the exception of one who was temporarily lured by a British agent's promises of a suit of clothes and a gold watch, but soon repenting, he repudiated the contract and returned to the ranks of the faithful. Thirty newsdealers having signed the pledge proffered by the committee, received the shop notice: "We sell clean literature only." The British companies tried to secure Protestants and Jews as agents but without avail. Their wares could not even be unloaded. The committee, accompanied by some hundreds of sturdy men, met the Sunday morning trains and advised the agents to readdress the huge newspaper consignments to London. Their advice was followed. Some soldiers got hold of the papers sent to the barracks, but only for a moment. The papers were torn up, and it was regarded as a remarkable proof of the people's self-control that the soldiers were not molested. Limerick was made absolutely clean of newspaper garbage.

Measures were also taken to keep it so. There were distributed at the churches some 20,000 pledge-cards to this effect: "I promise and pledge (1), not to buy, receive, read, or allow in my house any books, periodicals or newspapers that spread, foster or encourage vice; (2), to support the Catholic press and have introduced into my house at least one Catholic weekly newspaper, or one Catholic magazine." A like number of leaflets were also distributed containing a list of Catholic papers and magazines, and blanks for applications and subscriptions. These leaflets when filled up were returned to the churches, which handed them over to the newsagents or newsboys, whose duty it will be to deliver the papers weekly to the subscribers. All these methods have been copied in Dublin, Wexford, Clonmel, Waterford and various other centres, and it will be well to ponder the results.

First, the importation of immoral newspapers has been stopped, at least for the present. Second, the news venders have more than recouped their losses by the sale of clean literature. The Catholic papers have become firmly established and are actually, as Pope Leo desired, "a continual mission in every parish." Catholic and truly Irish papers are given an opportunity to increase their value and content, and the Gaelic League, which is mainly an organization for the preservation and diffusion of Catholic thought, literature and traditions, has obtained a new and powerful leverage for the attainment of its ideals. Encouraged by this turn of events, they are devising a scheme for advertising suitable reading matter of a national and Catholic character, and the kindred industrial associations have published a circular urging Irish publishers to issue cheap publications of this nature in the interest of Irish trade. Third, a few

Irish dailies, which have been copying the methods of the proscribed British journals, have been given notice that if they do not quickly discard such practices, they will be similarly dealt with by the Vigilance Committees.

A lockout was recently proclaimed by British executives. It was not very effective in Ireland, but sufficiently striking to afford an estimate of its efficiency when properly applied. The Irish methods of suppression cannot be employed in the United States; but the positive methods of supporting Catholic literature are well within the power of every Catholic community. Clergy and laity, pastors, Catholic Federationists, and all who are interested in the preservation of Christian purity should take them into thoughtful and earnest consideration. To the Limerick pledge-cards and leaflets were attached the mottoes: "The most religious people in the world, if they only read bad newspapers, will at the end of thirty years become a nation of unbelievers." (Cardinal Pie.) "I would make any sacrifice, even to the pawning of my ring, pectoral cross and soutane, in order to support a Catholic newspaper." (Pope Pius X.)

MICEAL MACDIARMUID.

Paris Workmen and the Sisters of the Assumption

PARIS, December 6, 1911.

During the last fortnight the Catholic workmen of Paris have given a lesson of steady, persevering energy to their fellow Catholics. Readers of AMERICA are aware that, with the brutality that characterized its proceedings whenever religious are concerned, the Government sent adrift the Little Sisters of the Assumption at Lyons, a large body of policemen being employed to expel these devoted women from houses that are their rightful property.

These "Little Sisters," as they are affectionately called by their clients, were founded forty years ago and are an offshoot of the flourishing Congregation of the Assumption. They are literally the "general servants" of the poor. It is they who, when the mother of a family is incapacitated by illness, cook the dinner, wash and dress the children, tidy the poor dwelling; they go wherever they are asked, except to the rich, and work from morning to night with a sweetness, a cheerfulness and an efficiency that are common to them all.

Their institute has developed with extraordinary rapidity; they have houses in all the big French towns, in England, in Rome, in the United States, in South America, etc. Though vocations are plentiful, demands for new foundations are more plentiful still, and have to be regretfully put aside by the heads of this Congregation. When news reached the Paris faubourgs of the expulsion at Lyons, the workmen whose wives and children have been nursed by the Little Sisters took fright. Many of these men are converts, whom the active charity of a Sister has brought back to the practice of their long-forgotten religious duties; they are banded together in "Brotherhoods" and meet, once a month, in the Sisters' Chapel to perform certain devotions in common. On hearing that the scenes enacted at Lyons were to be repeated in Paris, they decided to defend their own Sisters, and it was a curious and touching sight to see with what energy and perseverance they laid their plans. The Paris workman, at his best, is singularly quick witted, receptive and generous, and these men, to whom "time is money," now forgot their own interests to throw themselves heart and soul into the struggle.

Placards were posted on the walls of the faubourgs, petitions were circulated and were promptly covered with thousands of signatures; deputies and ministers were interviewed, and, while their campaign was being carried on, the threatened convents were assiduously watched by their humble friends.

Those who had occasion to see the workmen of Grenelle, Puteaux and Levallois during those anxious days will not easily forget the experience. The Mother House of the Little Sisters is at Grenelle; it is there that their founders are buried, that their novices are trained, and there, too, the old and infirm Sisters come back to die. The Grenelle workmen would hardly bear to lose sight of the big white house that lay under the shadow of so cruel a trial. They came at five in the morning to see if all was quiet, and again after their day's work was over to offer their services to the nuns and to organize proceedings for the morrow. "If they turn you out, ma soeur, all our homes are open to receive you," they said, and the poorest among them would have been proud to receive the fugitives had things come to the worst.

To the prompt and energetic action of the working classes was added a general protest in the French papers. With the exception of one or two rabid, low-class papers, the press was unanimous in blaming the Government's action at Lyons as unwise and needlessly brutal. Pierre Loti, the well-known Academician, an avowed unbeliever, several leading Protestants, and even the chief Jewish Rabbi in Paris, joined their protestations to those of the Catholics. Placing themselves on the standpoint of humanity and of individual liberty, they boldly attacked the cowardly campaign carried on against women whose only offense is that they are religious; women who minister to the wants of the poor regardless of their creed—indeed, if the Little Sisters have a preference it is for those to whose physical miseries are added the unhappiness and rebellion born of unbelief. It is to these that they most willingly tender their loving service, and if, as generally happens, the Socialistic or free-thinking workmen became their friends, the change is the result of their sweet charity, never of their preaching.

There can be no doubt that if the Little Sisters of the Assumption escape destruction in Paris, it will be owing to the joint action of the French press and of the Catholic workmen. But the campaign will also be of use to the latter; they will have realized what a group of active, tenacious, united and fearless Catholics may accomplish in the defence of justice and religion, and their attitude in the future will be all the stronger because of this realization.

ANGLO-FRENCH CATHOLIC.

The Portuguese Upheaval

Among the champions of the Catholic cause in South America, the last place is surely not to be assigned to El Pueblo of Buenos Aires, from whose columns we take the following serious reflections on Portuguese affairs. We give it for what it is worth:

"If after the first intoxication the men of the Portuguese republic had been able to free themselves from the fumes of anti-clericalism and the choice viands of Freemasonry, the new régime would have had nothing to fear from outside enemies and would have had only friends in Portugal. Much has been said about the Portuguese uprising, but little has been said about its true causes, for those mentioned, such as the debts of King Carlos and the effects of the republican propaganda, were superficial episodes which would signify nothing in a country where there were not deepseated causes of unrest and discontent. What ruined the dynasty of the Braganças and what makes its restoration impossible was the way in which the property of the State was squandered. It is hard to form a notion of what the monarchist parties which took turns in office were capable of perpetrating. Being a poor and not very productive country, yet prodigal in spending, Portugal could not save its politicians without recourse to foreign countries. Now, when the resources of a country are squandered, and it becomes poor while fattening foreign companies, discontent must come, and after discontent, disgust.

"When visiting that country a few years ago, I perceived a silent hostility not against the ministry but against the king. There was no particular sympathy for a republic, but there was great antipathy towards the reigning house. The secret societies knew how to profit by the circumstances and especially they knew how to control the king, for they took advantage of his financial straits to make him a virtual prisoner and to lead him to perdition. Whoever does not know Portugal, a country which is very little known even in Europe, may believe in the restoration of the monarchy by the Catholic party and may also believe the stories spread by the present government about an attempted restoration by the Catholics. The new government is bound to justify in some way its wholesale confiscation of Church property, which, we may say in parenthesis, has already, in great part, disappeared in the shape of rewards to revolutionists and of sacrifice sales, and therefore it harps upon the clerical peril as if there were such a thing. For my part, I believe that Portugal has seen the end of the monarchy, at least of the house of Bragança, not so much on account of young Manoel as on account of the tendencies of his house.

"The most striking phenomenon of the Portuguese revolution was the adhesion of a great part of the clergy to the republic. During the first months that fact caused great astonishment in Europe and prompted many a newspaper man, who did not understand the case, to pronounce it a blow at the Vatican. On the contrary, if the republic had not hurled itself into the anti-clerical pit, it would have found its strongest support among the Catholics.

"During the last years of Dom Carlos the two parties, Moderates and Progressists, both of which made a disgraceful use of power, found themselves face to face with an angered people. It was then that, to save themselves, they could think of nothing better than anti-clerical laws, timid at first and then barefaced. But these laws always had two characteristics, one of which was a seeming curb on clericalism and the other, which never failed, was some solid advantage for the cabinet. Few of the true Catholics were with the monarchy, for, such was the powerlessness of the Braganças, they had been cast into the maws of the sects for the sake of saving the dynasty. If Franco could have continued long enough in power to proceed against ex-ministers for crimes committed in office, he might have saved the day; but it was too late.

"Such being the state of affairs, those who wish the restoration of the monarchy are not the people in general; they are those who found in the monarchy the furtherance of their personal interests, those who shine less to-day than yesterday. This is a great lesson taught by history, and it ought not to be lost upon the remaining Latin kingdoms."

A M E R I C A

A · CATHOLIC · REVIEW · OF · THE · WEEK

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 23, 1911.

Entered as second-class matter, April 15th, 1909, at the Post Office at New York, N. Y., under the Act of March 3d, 1879.

Copyright, 1911, and published weekly by the America Press, New York.
President, THOMAS J. CAMPBELL; Secretary, H. J. SWIFT;
Treasurer, MICHAEL J. O'CONNOR.

SUBSCRIPTIONS, POSTPAID:

United States, 10 cents a copy; yearly, $3.00
Canada, $3.50 Europe, $4.00 (16s.)

Address:

THE AMERICA PRESS, 59 East 83d Street, New York City, N. Y., U. S. A.

CABLE ADDRESS: CATHREVIEW.

A Little Child Shall Lead Them

The majestic words with which the Roman Martyrology announces the birth of the Man-God are like a solemn roll-call in the courts of heaven! Patriarch and Prophet and King are summoned to the cradle of the Expected of nations and the Desired of the everlasting hills. Ages and centuries hover for a moment over the lowly crib of the new-born Babe. Time itself stops in its flight by the lonely cave on Bethlehem's slopes, and bows before the Eternal, now clothed in the frail vesture of our mortality. What child of the Cæsars was ever welcomed into the world with such lordly phrase, with such imperial heraldings! The Child of prophecy comes. The heavens open and rain down the Just. The mysterious cycle of years is complete. A Virgin conceives and brings forth a Son. A Cæsar? In the halls of Augustus? In the palaces of kings? In power? In glory? Not there. Where, then, shall we find Him?

Look and see. Go to Bethlehem. There He lies, the Promised One, the hope of Israel and of the world. A bleak hillside! A rocky cave! A stable! A village Maid! A poor carpenter! A helpless Babe! There is our King! There is our God! Let us not marvel too much! Let not our faith be staggered at the awful sight! Let us not falter in our adoration and our love! We adore that Child, for He is the Son of God. He is the Ancient of days. He is the Beginning and the End, the Alpha and the Omega. Born in time, He is before time was. A Virgin's Son, made of a woman, He it is "by whom all things were made." His infant frame is fashioned of the clay of which Adam was moulded, but He is the Creator and Lord of all! Voiceless and dumb, save for the feeble wail of suffering; helpless infancy, He is the Wisdom of God, the inspiration of Prophet and holy Seer. His infant cry will thrill the heart of humanity. His voice will silence the demons and the lying oracles of the pagan world, and reecho down the aisles of time, with majestic harmonies and the tidings of an undying hope and a deathless love. He is the Word of God.

He comes into the world like a poor man's son, helpless, unheeded, unknown. But for four thousand years Earth has longed for Him. From the mountain-tops of vision, sun-lit with the radiance of another world, the Prophets have strained their unwearied eyes for the splendors of His dawning. In the schools of Athens and Rome, in the forests of Germany, by the banks of the Euphrates, dimly, indistinctly, suffering humanity murmured His name. He is the unknown God whom Athenians worshipped on the hill of Mars. He is the Adonai, Jehovah, whose hallowed name His chosen people dared not speak. A helpless babe, He clasps His hands around Mary's neck, as He fondly clings to the loving shelter of that virginal bosom and that mother's heart. Yet those hands have laid the bases and carved the buttresses of the everlasting hills; they can fling open the portals of life and death.

"He came unto His own, and His own received Him not." His people reject Him. Bethlehem, the city of His fathers, bars its homes against Him. But lo! The dromedaries of Madian and Ephraim from Arabia's desert and Sabœa's shores swing bravely on across the waste of sand. The bronzed faces of the Wise Men are lifted to the heavens watching for the star,—His star, the star of Jacob, now flashing its brightness upon the world. Soon the kings of the East are at His feet, and adore Him. They kneel where humble shepherds came to worship and to pray. Rejected and outcast though He be, that Child becomes humanity's leader. He has already begun His conquests; He has conquered the mighty, He has won the lowly and the poor. Of His kingship over the heart of man there will be no end. The Child of Bethlehem, the Man of Nazareth and of Golgotha will pass down the long avenues of time. All that is noblest in humanity will acclaim Him as its Lord and its God. He will stand in the gloom of the catacombs, in the dust and blood of the arena, and martyr and maid and gray-haired sire, pontiff and priest, for His sweet sake, for the radiant beauty and majesty of His thorn-crowned yet kingly brow, for His goodness, for His love, will suffer and bleed and die. He will go to the youth in the flush of pride, to the virgin in the splendor of her innocence, and, putting His cross on their shoulders, say but one word, "Follow Me," and with Him they will climb the rugged crest of another Calvary. For the Child of Bethlehem will genius unfold the secrets of nature and of the Heart of God. For Him will the poet's lyre be attuned to seraphic harmonies, the orator's lips anointed with sacred fire. To Him kings and warriors will dedicate their jeweled crown and their conquering sword. To the outcast of the crib the sorrowing and the poor will turn in their loneliness and agony. He is their brother, their God, their friend. He is theirs; for His palace is a stable, His sceptre poverty.

The Church does well, then, to herald the coming of her infant King with such stately and solemn proclamation. For Christ is "yesterday, to-day, the same forever." Time and eternity are His. The centuries are called after Him. Even His enemies must date their birth and the hours of their ephemeral victories from the day and the year of His coming. He is the world's central figure, its central fact. He is the Fount of Truth, the Flower and the Crown of Holiness. He is the keystone of the arch of time. He is the light of the world, the supreme revelation of God to man, the supreme manifestation of God's power and love. He is Emmanuel, God with His people. "And the Word was made flesh and dwelt amongst us."

A New Knight-Errant

The Protestant ministers, having no longer any definite Gospel to preach, have been discoursing much on the McNamaras. The minister of Calvary Baptist Church, New York, had a more intimate theme a Sunday or two ago. He has been commissioned by his sect to remonstrate with the Czar on the persecution of the Baptists in Russia, and so he took his mission as his text. That mission, he told his hearers, is unique. He is an ambassador of peace, a prophet of good-will, a friend of humanity, a messenger of liberty—in one word, a rare bird so far as Russia is concerned. Whether he is a special ambassador from the United States or only from the Baptists, he did not say. Unlike ministers of diplomatic service, Protestant ministers are not particular about their credentials. The reason is, many think, because they have none, and therefore make up in self-assertion for what they lack in that respect.

Still, whoever is sending him, he admitted that it would not do to be too hard on the Czar. That his hearers might understand this the better, he sketched with easy hand the origin and development of Russian autocracy, beginning with the mythical Hyperboreans and taking a glance on the way at the Scythians. He stated that the Czar looks upon himself as the vicegerent of "Jehovah," and that he rules over a nation of idolaters. The first assertion went without proof, a defect made up for generously with regard to the second. Russians worship icons: icons are images: a worshipper of images is an idolater. Q. E. D. Poor minister! Poor Calvary Baptists!

As Baptists are on intimate terms with "Jehovah," it is strange that the minister should anticipate any difficulty in dealing with "Jehovah's" vicegerent. The idolaters will be a hard nut to crack; but besides them there is the Russian Church, which shows a strange antipathy to Baptists. But whether it be that Russian Baptists are few, or that, notwithstanding forty years and more of service in Calvary Church, like another Moses, he retains the vigor of youth, the minister is ready for more than his mission calls for. He promises to take the Jews under his protection, and will extend his patronage even to Catholics, whom he has had to rebuke so often for their failings.

We do not know whether the Russian Government will trouble itself about the vaporings of a Baptist minister, although the Russian consul in New York may think it his duty to send a report on this amazing discourse. The Czar is a gentleman, whatever else he may be, and holds the maxim, noblesse oblige. He will probably receive the ambassador of the Baptists as his great namesake received the Quakers who went to lecture him—did the minister know history he would not have suggested that there never was a mission similar to his—but the address in Calvary Church will not help the ambassador to gain his object.

The French Parliament.

Everybody who knows anything about recent French happenings has heard of Maître Labori. He is "maître" because he is a lawyer. Members of the bar in France are distinguished by that title. But he is not "maître" merely by courtesy. He is one of the master minds among the French juris consults. He was famous in many a cause célèbre for years past, but by none was he made more conspicuous, at least to the outside world, than by the Dreyfus trial. Not only his eloquence and legal ability centered all eyes upon him in that memorable political battle, but sympathy and indignation were joined with admiration when he was shot in the back on his way to court. Later on, he gave evidence of splendid courage by resuming his case when he had sufficiently recovered his strength. He has had many famous wretches to defend, as, for instance, the assassins, Duval and Chevalereau; the anarchist, Pini, and the dynamiter Vailant and the infamous Zola, but all of these forensic battles only seemed to bring greater ability. It is a pity, however, he had not better subjects to work on. But not only is he a great lawyer. He has also achieved distinction in the domain of letters. He undertook the publication of an Encyclopedia of French Law, founded La Grande Revue, La Revue du Palais, and was Editor-in-chief of La Gazette du Palais. In 1906 he determined to enter political life and was elected to serve with the crowd of Deputies who draw their salaries in the Palais Bourbon without doing much for their country. He now turns his back on his political associates in supreme disgust, and has recently given the world his opinion about the way his country is governed.

"Four years," he says, "were enough to convince me that there is no room for men of good will and correct mentality in Parliament. The members are tools and individual effort can achieve nothing. Things go on at haphazard, without order and often without sincerity. Even the opposition is gagged by the bosses, and the administration grows more ineffective day by day. Both Parliament and the Government are tossed about from pillar to post between the demands of an exacting and imperious democracy and the struggles of a financial oligarchy, which is fighting for its own interests and not those of the State."

A French critic draws attention to the fact that this governmental chaos is remarkably like that which preceded the French Revolution and suggests a similar upheaval soon to follow. Of course, Labori cannot be accused of clericalism. Indeed, the "Qui êtes vous?" the French "Who's Who?" tells us that the Mâitre belongs to the Prieuré des Basses-Loges, which we suppose means that he is a conspicuous Freemason. So we may take his word for it that Republican France is committing suicide. Besides its incompetent legislators and its constantly vanishing Ministers, it has at present a Minister of Foreign Affairs, who confessed to the mob in Parliament the other day that he did not know the first thing about his own Department. And yet any day, by some official act, he may plunge his country into disastrous war. Poor France cannot have a very Merry Christmas this year, or indeed, for many a year to come.

The Colonel in the Bowery

A few nights ago, Colonel Roosevelt, unheralded and unexpected, made a sudden apparition in the famous old New York Bowery, side by side with three Irish-American Catholic priests, Fathers Rafter, Curry and Lynch. The Colonel always had a predilection for names like Kelly, Burke and Shea. His purpose, of course, was not to see the sights. He knew them well enough, for he had been often busy suppressing some of them when he was New York's popular and efficient Police Commissioner. He was merely taking a look in at a Bowery mission, and along with the priests who had charge of it he walked into the midst of the waifs and strays, the down-and-outs of society, some of whom, the papers informed us, were saying their prayers in the little chapel, though by far the greater number, and that is more likely, were scattered through the rooms playing cards, smoking rank tobacco, or reeling off long complaints about their hard luck, or the grievances they had against the world in general, and its rough unsympathetic ways.

Paralyzed at first into dumbness at the unexpected vision in the door-way, they could not utter a syllable, from sheer surprise. They could only stare. For some minutes a dead silence prevailed, though the presence of the Colonel does not usually provoke a calm. At last, recovering themselves and their breath, when they recognized his ready smile and his hearty companionableness, they broke out into a roar of welcome that drowned the rumble of the elevated railroad outside the windows.

It was a good thing and a large-minded thing for a former President to go down into those lower strata without appearance of favor or condescension, and to let the homeless and friendless wanderers he found there know that, dilapidated and battered though they were, through their own or someone else's fault, yet they were men for a' that and somebody cared for them. Were other representatives of success and prosperity to do likewise now and then and endeavor to show a little consideration for the disinherited of fortune there would be fewer sparks flying from the wheels that make the world go round.

It was particularly pleasant to see the Colonel arm in arm, or at least shoulder to shoulder, with those three earnest and ardent Catholic priests who were such finished products of that terrible "ecclesiastical tyranny" and "medieval superstition" which the Contributing Editor of The Outlook had been so vociferously thundering against a week or so before. We are sure that he did not mean all that his words in that offensive article which he somewhat facetiously styled, "The Reverent Search for Truth" would seem to imply, and possibly it is only because the room was stuffy, or the Editor-in-chief was insistent, or the air was hot, or because he forgot to revise his proofs, that the ebullition succeeded in getting through before it had sufficient time to simmer down. It was served hot. The Colonel does not usually talk that way. Very likely the seclusion of the sanctum is unsuited to his generous and exuberant temperament. He is more himself in the open. In any case people are beginning to say that his irruption into the Bowery that night may make the politicians ponder profoundly and ask questions.

Post-Cards

"I am sending you," a correspondent writes, "some samples of the picture postals that the children of a great city on their way to school are invited to inspect, purchase and pass on to others. Many of the most offensive, a 'respectable' drug store had on exhibition. Bad, however, as the enclosed cards are, they are by no means the worst that children can buy. What is to become of our boys and girls if this goes on?"

A mere glance at the post-cards in question is all that is needed to make any decent person share our correspondent's concern for the morals of the children who gaze at such pictures. With regard to the utter absence in the post-cards submitted of everything that is uplifting, ennobling and refining, there is scarcely need to speak. Nothing could be more garish, ugly or vulgar, nothing better calculated to create or develop low and depraved tastes.

This danger alone might well cause parents' anxiety. But when we also assure them that many of the cards children, not yet in their teens critically examine, are so foul and disgusting in inscriptions or designs that they cannot but defile the imagination of those who see them and must prove for most children direct temptations to grievous sins, we wonder why fathers and mothers do not have the exhibition and sale of such pictures effectually stopped.

It is high time that repressive measures should be taken, for these post-cards have yearly been growing more and more offensive. Catholics in particular should protest with vigor against indecent pictures being set forth for school children to purchase. The attention of the police authorities should be called to these flagrant offenses and patronage ought to be withdrawn from merchants who persist in displaying and selling them.

More effective means, too, should be found for excluding them from the mails. What Mr. D. A. Campbell, Chicago's postmaster, has done to prevent the transmission of indecent postals could profitably be imitated by others cities. At each district post-office he appointed censors to bar from distribution these different kinds of suggestive pictures. "For each objectionable card which is delivered," said Mr. Campbell, "the superintendent of the sub-station will receive ten demerits, or one point. When he has received forty-one points off his rating his salary will be reduced. When his rating falls below thirty points he will be discharged." As a result of this wise ruling the number of such cards was soon reduced one-half, to the manifest improvement, no doubt, of the city's morals.

All lovers of children whom the spirit of Christmas fills with a desire to keep unstained the hearts of our little ones should labor to suppress these indecent picture postals.

One Reason of Crime

Twenty months ago a crime was committed here in New York, describing which, in his opinion confirming the verdict of the jury, Justice Willard Bartlett of the Court of Appeals uses these words: "The details of the crime are so horrible as to preclude any restatement of them here further than is absolutely necessary," and the proof "points unerringly to the defendant as the perpetrator of the crime." Whence, then, comes the reason of delay in carrying out the sentence imposed?

The young murderer whose appeal is rejected by Judge Bartlett was condemned within a month following his crime. His trial had been a just and fair one, his lawyer bitterly contesting every step taken by the prosecuting attorneys. How does it happen that it is possible for a convicted murderer's lawyer to protract the period of appeal, as has been done in this case? Judge Bartlett declares that the delay was "inexcusable." Surely the community has rights which ought to make inexcusable delay impossible in the punishment of crime so revolting.

"The Ethics of Shopping" forms an instructive article in the December Month. The writer points out that much of the real hardship and suffering of shop-assistants is caused by the lack of consideration or of Christian charity on the part of buyers. The evil is more prevalent in large centres like London and New York, and the remedy more difficult to apply. The fundamental requirement is an awakening of the social conscience among the men and women in reference to those numerous small obligations, failure in which entails so much inconvenience and even suffering on others. Christian charity should suggest to Catholics the duty of thinking of others, however humble they may be, of being courteous and considerate in all their daily dealings—a duty all admit in theory, but yet are lamentably neglectful of in practice. There is everywhere a tendency to regard whole classes of people as mere machines, paid to perform certain functions in an existence, but with whom no sort of human relationship need be cultivated. The Christmas and New Year shopping is the occasion annually of exhausting labor, which is unnecessarily prolonged beyond the proper time limit.

The Sherwood Pension Bill

The Civil War ended nearly half a century ago, yet if the so-called "Dollar-a-day" Pension Service bill advocated by Congressman Sherwood, and recently passed by the House of Representatives, is accepted by the Senate and signed by the President, the citizens of the country to-day will still be facing an annual burden of $234,842,287 to meet its expenses. The pension roll for 1911 called for $159,842,287, and the amount necessary to satisfy the additional sum added by the Sherwood bill will mount up to $75,000,000, if Secretary of the Interior Fisher's statement be a reliable one.

One hundred thousand pensioners have died in the last six years, and yet the pension budget swells. "We have paid," says the New York Times, "four billions to pensioners of the Civil War, a large percentage of whom never saw service; a larger percentage served briefly, never fought or incurred disability." Does it not seem that a prudent economy ought to suggest a halt in such extravagance?

A well-known Catholic journal proudly called its readers' attention, some time ago, to the fact that the publisher of Collier's The National Weekly, belongs to the fold. A pretty lullaby on Our Lady and a good paper on the new cardinals which appear in the Christmas Collier's may indicate the management's sympathy with the Church, but on the other hand their "breadth of view" is doubtless shown by the pantheistic and anarchistic verses which the "poetess of passion" contributes to the number, and particularly by Gouverneur Morris's suggestive story with its indecent illustrations. This is not the first time, let Catholics remember, that such stories and pictures have appeared in Collier's. Its editorial utterances, moreover, are frequently most un-Christian. Even if its publisher is a Catholic, this periodical is no more fit than many other magazines of the day to enter Catholic homes.

—•••—

The Living Church takes such an interest in our new cardinals that it gives them considerable attention in the way of remarks and criticisms, which will surely drive its intelligent readers to seek information from better informed sources. This is encouraging. Some forty years ago one, now a fairly well-known Catholic, broke the ice by asking a bishop whom he met on a steamer, to tell him what a domestic prelate is. Others, thanks to the Living Church, will now break the ice with inquiries as to why Cardinal Farley or Cardinal O'Connell is a cardinal of the Holy Roman Church, not of the Holy Catholic Church. Our good God has many ways of bringing men and women into the one true fold.

IRENICON

English literature—and that means Protestantism—has had its way with the Catholic Church for three centuries. The result is a mass of falsehood, misrepresentation and half-truths calculated to madden the most philosophic scholar.

"Litera scripta manet." No matter how often or how well a spicy calumny is refuted it goes its evil way rejoicing. But in this case the calumny has been wholesale. It has, so far as the general reading public is concerned, invested the old Faith in a garb so repulsive, falsified its history to such a degree, and travestied its liturgy and holy customs so cunningly that no thinking Catholic can be surprised that the Protestants of a past generation hated it so intensely.

Thus has been established a false public opinion that has been and to some extent still is the authoritative encyclopædia for speakers and writers. Lies have been foisted on the world as axioms. Books which by virtue of their genius and incomparable beauty of style are the mental intimates of every cultured mind bristle with errors and insinuations against the Truth. Stories that will charm mankind as long as our language endures are marred by spots of bitter prejudice. Outrageous statements are embalmed in the liquid amber of classics and so perpetuated.

With all the charity we may bring to the survey, it must be admitted that hundreds of books have been written in cold malice by men and women who intended to defame the Church. A generous measure of toleration may fittingly be accorded to the literary Protestant who has wandered without chart or compass in the spacious country of Catholicism and then attempted to tell the world what he saw there. But when mayhem is brutally committed on the classics of our Faith, when quotations are mutilated and essential statements omitted, there can be no palliation for the malefactor. Only unreasoning hate could drive men, otherwise honorable and fairminded, to such deeds of shame.

But with the great majority of writers it is simply a case of false atmosphere and ignorance. The venerable falsehoods have been their household words for generations. To disturb them would mean an intellectual revolution. Any non-Catholic writer who has not a passion for accuracy and a burning thirst for original sources is certain to err egregiously whenever he essays Catholic topics. The members of the Fold generally fail to sense the vastness and pervading quality of their religious atmosphere. They do not realize the immense amount of information about the Faith which they have absorbed unconsciously. Nor do they realize to what extent non-Catholics are ignorant of these facts and insulated from their influence.

This accounts in great part for the numberless instances of stupid insult and outrageous liberties taken with the truth that deface books dealing with Catholic life and history written by well-meaning but slipshod outsiders. As a matter of fact, the average cultured Protestant is no more competent to treat of Catholic subjects than a South Sea islander to write a treatise on palaeography. However, the said Protestant believes himself perfectly equipped for the work, and with his head filled with odds and ends and hearsay perpetrates one solecism after another gaily.

Hence a condition confronts us. Books are being issued right and left, nine-tenths of them appalling in their misinformation wherever Catholic matters are touched upon. What are we to do about it? Write to the daily papers? No one will read the letters even if they are printed. Urge Catholic editors to mordant criticism? No one reads this except Catholics who do not need the criticism.

It is futile to battle single-handed against established prejudice, and equally vain to scold authors in papers they never see. Some wise men wrote that a blessing awaited him who made two blades of grass grow where only one grew before. May not a blessing also await him who takes the care to uproot one small, noxious literary weed?

It is a foundation principle of our criminal procedure that the accused is presumed innocent until proven guilty. The same grace may well be extended to many writers who are responsible for statements offensive to Catholic eyes and minds. They may welcome correction.

Let this be considered too irenic by far, let me recount an experience in this line. Some weeks ago a short story about Italian peasants appeared in one of the most famous of our magazines. It was a dainty bit of writing evincing sympathy with and insight into the Italian character. But it contained a statement concerning the Last Sacraments so grotesque that I wondered how the author could possibly be so badly informed.

Deciding to test my theory, I wrote a kindly letter to the writer in question, and it finally reached its destination in Italy. Here in part is the reply:

"I want to thank you for the exceedingly courteous way in which you take me to task for the glaring fault which I committed in regard to the Last Sacraments for the dying. I hope to publish this story and others of the kind finally in book form, and I will see that the correction you suggest in this is made before it reaches permanent shape."

The writer of the above lines is famous in more than one line of artistic endeavor and exceedingly busy. There would have been small room for surprise had my letter been passed over in silence or occasioned irritation. Instead came a message of thanks and a promise of correction.

I do not believe this a rare experience. I think it is merely characteristic of the talented men and women who do so much to divert us in our hours of ease. At the risk of appearing boastful of a passing acquaintance with literary wights, I state that within the past few months I have been consulted on Catholic topics by two writers of fiction whose books sell by the hundred thousand. But these would have made mistakes fully as absurd as that of the writer on Italy, had they not asked a few simple questions whose answers are a commonplace to any educated Catholic.

The next time you read in book or magazine some statement that causes your gorge to rise, remember that Protestantism has had possession of English literature for a long time. Give the writer the benefit of the doubt and offer him a chance to make correction. There is nothing that abates prejudice and demolishes error like facts presented smilingly.

LITERATURE

Some Christmas Magazines.

Though magazine publishers still strive to issue for Christmas an especially attractive number, it is a regrettable fact that, for some years past, the d'stinctively Christian spirit of the season has been pervading less and less the stories, verses and illustrations with which the December periodicals are filled. Pictures of the Madonna and Child are no longer common. Rather, there is a tendency, when Christmas is mentioned at all, to regard the day merely as a feast for the enjoyment of good cheer or the holding of a children's festival—as indeed it is, but by no means primarily or exclusively. For all Christian people the world over are full of joy and gladness on December 25th, and try in various ways to share these feelings with others, because—

"This is the month, and this the happy morn
Wherein the Son of Heaven's eternal King,
Of wedded Maid and Virgin Mother born,
Our great redemption from above did bring."

Of the secular magazines which the reviewer has seen, the current Century has about it perhaps most of the old-fashioned Christmas. The frontispiece, however, which shows a Puritan family seated round the hearth on Christmas Eve, listening to the Bible, is not a particularly appropriate illustration, when old New England's attitude toward the feast is remembered. The verses accompanying the picture protest, indeed that—

"No priestly and no pagan rite Shall desecrate Thy holy night."

Nor "Thy day," either, if Puritanism could prevent it, as may be feelingly recollected by Massachusetts Catholics of only forty years ago, who were expected to observe Christmas by going, as usual, to work or to school.

Further on in this magazine, Horatio Parker puts to music some lines, with the genuine Noël note, as for instance:

"There's a Tumult of Joy
O'er the wonderful birth,
For the Virgin's Sweet Boy
Is the Lord of the earth.
"Ay, the star rains its fire,
And the beautiful sing,
For the Manger of Bethlehem
Cradles a King."

"Marley's Ghost Appearing to Scrooge" makes a good picture, as does John La Farge's "Museum of Painting," while a hitherto unpublished farce of the late Sir William Gilbert, called, "Trying a Dramatist," is very amusing.

Though the December Harper's has among its contributors many well-known names, there is little in it "proper of the season," save "A Christmas Gift, a Memory of the Old South," by Virginia Boyle, and some far from reverent verses by Carolyn Wells. Inez Haynes Gilmore's "The Homeliest Child," is a pretty story, and the "Unconquered Air" is a good poem.

A trapper crouching over a fire, the first picture, in this month's Scribner's is called "His Christmas Fireside," to be sure, and Jessie Wilcox Smith has painted admirably some of the children in Dickens, who wrote, it may be remembered, several Christmas stories. But whether two such features would be sufficient to entitle a December magazine to be considered a Christmas number is a matter for grave doctors to decide. There are those, it is true, who hold that every December magazine is ipso facto a Christmas number, notwithstanding the absence from its pages of all references or allusions to Christmas itself. But, out of respect for more conservative authorities, the reviewer is of the opinion that a Christmas number, to deserve the name, should have at least one story and one poem relating directly to Christmas.

The latest Atlantic meets both these requirements, for it has a real Christmas story from Charles Egbert Craddock, and this quatrain by Edward Eyre Hunt:

"That love may light the eyes of them
Who keep the season of His Birth,
Till to the starry hosts our earth
Shall be the Star of Bethlehem."

The Catholic monthlies, as is to be expected, abound in Yule-tide literature. The Magnificat for December is particularly rich in Christmas verse, and prose, and pictures. Father Matthew Russell, John Ayscough, Father Blunt, Georgina Pell Curtis and (very fittingly) Grace V. Christmas are among its contributors. The Catholic World, too, besides its usual appetizing fare, has seasonable verses by Edward F. Garesché, S.J., and Charles L. O'Donnell, C.S.P., and a good Christmas story by Katherine Tynan.

On the cover of Extension is a new picture of the Nativity, and, just within, a talk from the editor about "The Law of Giving," which is followed by several well-told tales and a poem on the "Holy Night."

A December magazine could hardly have more about Christmas in it than Benziger's. Pictures, verse, music, stories and descriptive articles, with Our Divine Redeemer's Birthday as their subject or occasion, will make this number especially welcome in Catholic homes.

The January issue of the Messenger of the Sacred Heart, its readers will remember, is made the Christmas number. This year that bright little magazine has among its attractions a contribution from Father James J. Daly, S.J., who writes beautifully about Christmas Communion; a paper from Father Coppens, on the Holy Name; a poem by Mr. Earls, and several Yule-tide stories. The editor writes the January intention, and starts with this number "The Question Box," a new department. A half-dozen appropriate pictures in color will delight the children. As 165,000 copies, last month's circulation of this popular magazine, will not be sufficient to meet the demands for the Christmas number, a January issue of 200,000 has been printed.

WALTER DWIGHT, S.J.

English-Irish Phrase Dictionary. By REV. L. McKENNA, S.J., M.A. Dublin: M. H. Gill & Son.

This is the right book, written at the right time. When thousands are endeavoring to learn Irish, hundreds are discouraged by the lack of phrase books corresponding to the practical guides which accompany the learners of almost every other modern tongue. Father McKenna has done a laborious but inspiring piece of work. He has built up an accurate treasury of Irish idiom and phrase out of some dozen of the recognized masters of Gaelic speech-writing to-day. Details of arrangement there may be which give the work a half-finished appearance, but it is safe to say that the reader who has read and digested its contents will be able to take up any piece of modern Irish and not come amiss. Of the scholarship the scholars will judge, but as a practical addition to the study of Irish from the point of view of the Gaelic Leaguer, Father McKenna has accomplished a work such as must have been often sought for during the past ten years, of the Irish revival. Luck and blessing attend the pen, which seems destined to do as great service as Father Hogan, of the Society of Jesus, achieved for the scholarship of Ireland.

SHANE LESLIE.

John Poverty. Translation from the Spanish of LUIS COLOMA, S.J., by E. M. BROOKES. Philadelphia: H. L. Kilner.

"Whatever incommodes me is unjust, and I am not obliged to do it; whatever I do not understand is false, and I am not obliged to believe it." Thus, like many an infidel revolutionist, reasons Lopijillo, the villain of this story by the well-known Spanish Jesuit. The scene is laid in a town of Andalusia, during the political upheavals of the sixties, nearly all the characters are poor peasants, and the atmosphere, as is usual with Father Coloma, is thoroughly Catholic. The novel is a sombre tragedy, but their faith enables the amiable characters in the book to bear their misfortunes bravely. Mariana dies broken-hearted; John Poverty, her lover, escapes the gallows to become a hermit of Cordova, but Lopijillo dies, unrepentant. The author's pious reflections, however, are not always skilfully interwoven, and some of the situations in the story are not very probable. The translation seems a good one.

* * *

The Poems of Henry Van Dyke. New York: Charles Scribner's Sons.

Magazine readers, whom Dr. Van Dyke's verses have long been delighting, will be glad to find collected in this volume all the poems from his pen that have appeared before, and many besides hitherto unpublished. The author tells us in his foreword that he had planned a whole life devoted to the art of poetry, but a "long silent interval between the earlier and later poems was filled with hard work at the call of duty."

Dr. Van Dyke is at his best in "The Songs Out of Doors," but verses like "Hesper," in his "Lyrics of Labor and Romance," are full of sweet poetry, too, while the lines, "To Joseph Jefferson," are particularly felicitous. How varied is this poet's muse may be gathered from the fact that his volume also contains a four-act drama, "The House of Rimmon," about Naaman and the Maid of Israel, and a prayer that Blessed Jeanne D'Arc may "give a heart to France," and there are verses to Our Saviour like these:

"Could every time-worn heart but see Thee once again,
A happy human child, among the homes of men,
The age of doubt would pass—the vision of Thy face
Would silently restore the childhood of the race."

* * *

Mother. By KATHLEEN NORRIS. New York: The McMillan Co.

A gentleman who became wealthy as a purveyor of amusement, tells us that what most takes with men and women are the pastimes that delighted them as children. The truth contained in this statement discloses one of the first claims to popularity put forward by Kathleen Norris' novel, "Mother." This little book will irresistibly carry the reader back to his Louisa Alcott days. The Marchs' house was filled with children—mostly rampant; so, too, is the little home presided over by "Mother" Paget. Aunt Jo—our dear Aunt Jo of days gone by—was ever a girl of "ideas" and convictions. How like her in this respect is Margaret Paget! Aunt Jo went to New York, to a wealthy family, as wealth was measured in those days, to act as governess to two little girls. While engaged in this duty, she met Dr. Bhaer, by whose lovable and simple qualities her wild heart was won and tamed. Miss Paget seeks the metropolis as a secretary to Mrs. Carr-Boldt, who queens it in society there. Here the young secretary meets her Professor Tenison, and love for him dispels the stubborn "ideas" that had swayed her up to that time. The last scene in the book reveals Margaret in her true character. No one who has loved a sweet mother will read the chapter without at least winking hard. Incidentally, it stamps Miss Norris as a writer of no small power.

